Fourthly, He ſeeth all things together, not ſucceſſively, or one thing after another; he that is all eye ſeeth all at once, all as one (Acts 15. 18.) Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world. He knew his works before they were wrought, and ſo he knows ours. He knows them in their cauſes; he doth not only know what is, but what hath been, yea what ſhall be at one view, and that in himſelf. He declareth the end from the beginning (Iſa. 46. 10.) that is, he ſeeth what the end or iſſue of every thing will be, not only when we begin or undertake it; but from the beginning of all things, yea before any thing had a beginning. Is and was, and is to come, are alike to God, who (ſtrictly) neither was, nor is to come, but ever is. Man ſeeth all that he ſeeth, ſucceſſively, and by ſucceſſion. Man cannot ſee all that is together, neither can he ſee any thing at all that is not, or hath not been. Man may ſee backward by Hiſtory, and he may ſee forward by propheſie; but of himſelf he cannot ſee a day before him, no nor what ſhall be on the ſame day (Pro. 27. 1.) Boaſt not thy ſelf of to morrow, for thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth. Every day is in travel, and bringeth forth ſome birth; but we know not how or what to name the child, whether good or evil, whether Benjamin or Benoni, joy or ſorrow, till we ſee it brought forth. As God only looketh to the ends of the Earth, ſo he only ſeeth the end of all things which ſhall be done upon the Earth, and he ſeeth all theſe things and their ends together, and that from the beginning.

Hence take two Inferences; the firſt ſerving for the inſtruction and conſolation of all who know and fear God; and the ſecond for conviction and terror to the wicked.

Firſt, Seeing all things are under the eye, care and ſuper-intendency of God, let the people of God be quiet and at reſt in all the motions of this world. Thus David catechiſeth his own Soul (Pſ. 42. 5.) Why art thou caſt down O my Soul? and why art thou diſquieted in me? hope thou in God, for I ſhall yet praiſe him for the help of his countenance. As if he had ſaid, God who looketh to the ends of the Earth, will ſurely look to me, and he who ſeeth under the whole Heaven, will ſee to and take care of me. His countenance will help me, or he will ſo far countenance me and my cauſe, as to give me help. One beam from his pleaſant countenance, one gracious caſt of his eye who ſeeth all my diſquietments and the cauſes of them, will work my eſtabliſhment; the eſtabliſhment of my heart againſt inward trouble, and the eſtabliſhment of my eſtate againſt that which is outward. And again he ſpeaks as to the general ſtate of the Church (Pſal. 46. 1,2.) God is our refuge and ſtrength, a very preſent help in trouble, therefore will not we fear though the Earth be moved, &c. And ſee how God repreſſes all tumultuatings of Spirit in the greateſt worldly tumults and viciſſitudes (v. 10.) Be ſtill, and know that I am God. Men are not God, they cannot ſee what to do, nor do what they ſee. But I who am God can ſee under the whole Heaven what is doing, and what to do, and I can do whatſoever I ſee needful to be done. Therefore be ſtill, be not ye hurried either with diſcontents at what is doing, nor with fear of what may be done, for, know I am God, I look to the ends of the Earth, and what I ſay muſt be done; and what is juſt for all men, and beſt for you who are my people, ſhall be done. Here's the true ground of courage, and of quietneſs: They that fear God, have no reaſon either to be afraid, or to be diſcontented. He that looks to the ends of the Earth, is their friend and their father; therefore he will look to them, and ſee that all ſhall go well with them, or end well for them. When nothing appeareth to us but confuſion, we may reſt aſſured that All is in the moſt proper and righteſt method for us, becauſe he ſeeth under the whole Heaven, who ſitteth in Heaven and judgeth rightly of all things, and righteouſly of all perſons.

Secondly, This truth may cauſe the wicked and unjuſt to tremble; the Lord ſeeth what they are doing, and that their end is coming. (Pſal. 10. 13, 14.) Wherefore doth the wicked contemn God? (he can give no more reaſon for doing ſo, then for ſaying what follows) He hath ſaid in his heart, thou wilt not require it. Thou haſt ſeen it, for thou beholdeſt miſchief and ſpite, to requite it with thy hand. The wicked ſlight the Lord, as if he either did not ſee what they do, or would do nothing to them whatſoever he ſeeth; but the Pſalmiſt was of another opinion, or faith, rather, in both particulars; he knew, God ſaw them, Thou haſt ſeen it (ſaith he) and he knew God would not take what he ſaw at their hands, but would reckon with them for it; therefore he adds, Thou beholdeſt miſchief and ſpite (that is, how miſchievouſly and ſpitefully they act) with a purpoſe to requite it with thy hand. As the Lord ſeeth what they do, ſo he ſeeth it for this very end, to requite them according to their deeds. And becauſe the Lord ſeeth theſe things to requite them (as he once ſaid, I have ſeen, I have ſeen, or I have ſurely ſeen the affliction of my people that are in Egypt (Exod. 3. 7.) And, as he ſaid (2 Kings 9. 26.) I have ſeen, I have ſeen, or ſurely I have ſeen yeſterday ('tis as freſh in mine eye as if it had been ſhed but a day agoe) the blood of Naboth the Jezreelite, and of his Sons; becauſe, I ſay, the Lord ſeeth theſe things, miſchief and ſpite to requite them with his hand) therefore as it followeth in the ſame verſe of the tenth Pſalm, The poor committeth himſelf to him, He is the helper of the fatherleſs. He ſees how helpleſs the fatherleſs are, and ſo he becomes their Helper. This principle, The Lord looketh to the ends of the Earth, ſhould remove wickedneſs out of the Earth, and 'tis an aſſurance that he will rebuke all the wicked of the Earth. For he beholdeth miſchief and ſpite, that he may requite it with his hand, what heart or hand ſo ever is filled and defiled with it.

VERS. 25, 26, 27.

To make the weight for the windes, and he weigheth the waters by meaſure.
When he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder.
Then did he ſee it, and declare it, he prepared and ſearched it out.

JOB having purſued his ſearch for wiſdome, and propoſed the queſtion (Where ſhall wiſdome be found?) throughout the whole Creation found no anſwer, but a diſclaimer from men and Angels, from the depth and from the Sea, from the living and from the dead, till his thoughts arrived at and ſate down in God himſelf; as was ſhewed from the former verſe; God underſtandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof; for he looketh to the ends of the Earth, &c.

In this context Job proceeds to give proof, that, wiſdome is with God; and he gives a great and noble one for it, from that compoſure and wonderful order in which God ſet the world at firſt by his creating power, and hath ever ſince diſpoſed of and preſerved it in by his providential or governing power. In confirmation whereof, he gives an Induction of ſome ſpecial eminent inſtances of the works and workings of God in nature (which are to be underſtood, by a Synechdoche, as including the reſt) all joyntly and lowdly ſounding out the praiſes of his unſearchable wiſdome.

Tota creatura per partē ſignificatur. August.

And Job makes inſtance in thoſe works of nature which ſeem to lie moſt out of the diſpoſure of God, and about which his wiſdome (in vulgar opinion) is little engaged, or doth leaſt, the motion of the winds, and waters, the fall of rain, and the furious going forth of lightning and of thunder. He begins with the winds.

Verſ. 25. To make the weight for the winds, &c.

There is a twofold making of the things of this world; firſt, original, by creation; ſecondly, occaſional, by providence: We may underſtand both here, though the current of the Text ſeems rather to carry it to the latter.

The word which we render a weight, is uſed in the verb Metaphorically, to ſignifie the moſt ſerious and intentive conſideration of any matter or buſineſs before us. We commonly ſay when any thing of difficulty or importance is propoſed to us, we will weigh, that is, conſider it. That ſpecial coin among the Jews, ſo often mentioned in the old Teſtament, The Shekel, is ſo called from this word, which ſignifies to weigh, becauſe that being ſuch a known weight, was the rule of reckoning the weight of all things ponderous and commonly weighable among them.

To make a weight, notes art and induſtry; and to make a weight for the winds is ſuch a piece of art as never entred into the head, nor was acted by the hand of man. We properly weigh only heavy bodies; winds move very heavy bodies, but themſelves are a very light body, light to a proverb; and where ſhall the ſkale and ballance be found into which that vaſt ſubtile and diffuſive body may be gathered and therein poyſed. This only is the Lords doing, and (as many other things which he doth) 'tis marvellous in our eyes, and a miſtery to our underſtanding. He makes a weight for the winds; that is, he orders and delivers them out as by weight.

There is a threefold reading of this clauſe.

Firſt, Some tranſlate, To make a weight for the Air.

Secondly, Others, To make a weight for the ſpirit or breath.

Thirdly, As we, To make a weight for the wind.

The Hebrew word is indifferently applyed to all three. And theſe three may concur in one ſentence; the wind is that breath or ſpirit which moves in the air. Or, the wind moves the air, and is the breath or ſpirit of it. And the Lord makes a weight as much for the air, as for the wind in the air. So ſome render the ſence of the place, He maketh the air to keep its due proportion, and likewiſe the water. This Element, the air, is of it ſelf ſo thin and fluid a body, that it paſſeth into all places, penetrateth or gets into all bodies, and will not ſuffer any (vacuum or) emptineſs in nature, yet, even this the Lord weigheth. But I rather take it for that impetuous meteor which moves in the air, The wind. And when 'tis ſaid, God makes a weight for the winds; the meaning is, he orders them as exactly as if he weighed them. And that may be called the weight of the winds, which turns and ſets them this or that way, to this or that, or t'other coaſt of the Earth, or point of the Heavens. As that which inclines or turns mans mind this or that way, to this or that thing, is rightly called the weight of it (whence both Moraliſts and Divines ſay, that Love is the weight of the Soul, becauſe love is that which inclines us to this or that thing; which way ſo ever our affections go, the mind goes, and action follows) ſo that which which carrieth the wind any way is the weight of the wind. And uſually the inclination of all things, whether they be light or heavy, to their natural or proper place, is called the weight of them. Thus when Job ſpeaks of the weight of the wind, we are not to underſtand it literally, as if the winds were formally weighed, but the weight of the winds is that bent which through the power and appointment of God the winds have to blow from or to any corner of the world, ſometimes with greater, ſometimes with leſſer force and violence. The Scripture ſpeaks but of four winds, Eaſt, Weſt, North and South. Theſe the ancients called Cardinal winds; after Ages diſtinguiſhed them into eight, others into twelve. But our modern Navigator's have diſtinguiſhed them into thirty-two, according to ſo many points in the Sea-card or Compaſs; every one of which hath its weight, that is, a ſecret propenſion or impulſion, carrying it forth its own way. The Latine Etymologiſts, derive the word which ſignifies wind from a word ſignifying force (or which being joyned with the former doth more fully declare the nature of it) from a word which ſignifies to come; becauſe the wind cometh forcibly or with an impetuous vehemence. The material cauſe of the winds (as Philoſophers teach) is a hot and dry exhalation ariſing not only out of the Earth, but out of the Waters, out of the Seas and Snows, which being ſo thin that it cannot be condenſed into a Cloud, quickly becometh wind. This light wandring and unconſtant Creature the Lord doth ſo regulate, as if all its motions were not only bounded, but counterpoyſed and weighed. To this Text in Job ſome conceive that paſſage hath relation mentioned in the Book of Wiſdome (which though it be Apocryphal, yet is ſtored with many excellent truths) God hath ordered all things in number, weight, and meaſure (Wiſd. 11. 17.) The Lord maketh a weight for that which hath no weight. He maketh the weight for the winds.

Hence Obſerve, The motion or inclination of the winds this or that way, is from the ſpecial deſignation or diſpoſe of God.

Naturaliſts aſcribe the efficient cauſe of the winds to the Sun and other heavenly bodyes, or to the cold of the middle Region of the Air, which repelling or thruſting back that aſcending exhalation, cauſeth it to glance ſlantingly and violently through the air. Again, Aſtrologers aſcribe the motion of the winds to ſpecial Planets; the Eaſt-wind they aſcribe to the Sun, the Weſt-wind to the Moon, the South-wind to Mars, the North-wind to Jupiter; but the truth is, Jehovah, the living God is the ſupream cauſe and director of them all; he made the weight for the winds in Creation, and he hangs on the weight for the winds in providence every day. The Scripture deſcribeth the Lord flying upon the wings of the wind (Pſal. 18. 10.) and walking upon the wings of the wind. (Pſ. 104. 3.) He who made all Creatures may make what uſe he pleaſeth of any Creature. The winds are elegantly ſaid to have wings, becauſe of their ſwiftneſs; and the Lord is ſaid to fly or walk upon the wings of the winds, to ſhew that as he declares his power by them, ſo they are continually acted and governed by his power. In the ſtronger and more violent motions of the wind he may be ſaid moſt properly to fly, and in thoſe more gentle and temperate motions of the wind to walk upon their wings. There are many diſtinct acts of God ſpoken of in Scripture concerning the wind. Firſt, he is ſaid to create it, that is, to give it a Being (Amos 4. 13.) Loe he that formeth the mountains and createth the wind. Secondly, he is ſaid to prepare the wind, that is, to make it ready for any particular ſervice (Jon. 4. 8.) And it came to paſs when the Sun did ariſe that God prepared a vehement Eaſt-wind. Thirdly, he is ſaid to command the wind, that is, to give it actual commiſſion to ſerve his purpoſes. And this command is twofold; firſt, for the raiſing; ſecondly, for the ſtopping or allaying of the winds. The former (Pſal. 78. 26.) He cauſed an Eaſtwind to blow in the Heavens, and by his power he brought in the South-wind. And in the moſt Rhetorical deſcription of a Storm at Sea (Pſal. 107. 23, 24, 25, 26.) They that go down into the Ships, that do buſineſs in great waters: Theſe ſee the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep; for he commandeth, and raiſeth the ſtormy wind, which lifteth up the waves thereof; they mount up to the Heaven: They go down again to the depths, their Soul is melted becauſe of trouble. They reel to and fro, and ſtagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits end. Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their diſtreſſes. Then follows the ſecond part of the Lords commanding power over the winds (verſ. 29.) He maketh a calm, ſo that the waves thereof are ſtill. Then are they glad, becauſe they be quiet: So he bringeth them to their deſired Haven. The fierceſt and wildeſt Meteors, as well as the tameſt and gentleſt Creatures, muſt acknowledg and ſhall feel the Lords ſoveraignty over them. (Pſal. 148. 8.) Fire and hail, ſnow and vapours, ſtormy wind fulfilling his word. When we ſee the winds go forth in rageing ſtorms, they go upon Gods errand. When Jonah roſe up to flee unto Tarſhiſh from the preſence of the Lord, the Lord ſends a Meſſenger, a Purſevant to arreſt and attach him, and what was it? Read (Chap. 1. v. 4.) But the Lord ſent a great wind into the Sea, and there was a mighty Tempeſt in the Sea. The wind is ſent as a Servant to do his Maſters will; the Lord (as that Centurion in the Goſpel) ſaith to one wind go and it goeth, to another come, and it cometh, to a third, do this, and it doth it. He commands the wind to cleanſe and fan the air, and it cleanſeth it (Jer. 4. 11.) He that ſaith to his people and to Jeruſalem, a dry wind of the high places in the wilderneſs toward the daughter of my people, not to fan, nor to cleanſe, can command the wind to fan and cleanſe. He commands the wind to bring rain, and it bringeth it (2 Kings 18. 45.) or to drive rain away, and it driveth it (Pro. 25. 23.) He can command the wind to dry up the waters, and they are dryed up (Gen. 8. 1.) The Lord can command the wind to divide the waters of the Sea, and they are divided (Exod. 14. 21.) He can command the wind ſafely to waft whole Navies of Ships over the Sea, and they do it, as frequent experience teacheth; and if he command, the winds will quickly wrack and ſink the mightieſt Navies. (Pſ. 48. 7.) Thou breakeſt the ſhips of Tarſhiſh with an Eaſt-wind. For all theſe and many other ſervices, the winds are at Gods command, and as 'tis ſaid (Pſ. 135. 7.) He cauſeth the vapours to aſcend from the ends of the Earth, he maketh rain, he bringeth the wind out of his treaſures. The Lord hath a Magazine of winds, which he can lock or open, ſhut up or let out in favour or in wrath, in mercy or in judgment, as he pleaſeth. Agur puts this queſtion among many others (Pro. 30. 4.) Who hath aſcended up into Heaven, or deſcended? Who hath gathered the winds in his fiſts? Tell me who? What is his name, or what is his ſons name, if thou canſt tell me? God hath the wind in his own keeping, as a man hath that which he holdeth in his fiſt; when he openeth his fiſt the winds iſſue forth, and return not, till he call them in again. When Chriſt ſaith to Nicodemus (John 3. 8.) The wind bloweth where it liſteth, his meaning is, that the wind is not at all under the power of man, either to ſend it out or to reſtrain it, all the power in the world cannot bridle the wind, it bloweth where it liſteth for all us; but it doth not blow where it liſteth in regard of God, but where and when, as he liſteth. Chriſt indeed intends that ſpeech of the ſpiritual wind, or of the holy Spirit, who is as wind both in the freeneſs of his motion, and in the force of it; as 'tis ſaid of that wonderful gift of the holy Ghoſt (Acts 2. 2.) Suddenly there came a ſound from Heaven, as a mighty ruſhing wind, and it filled all the houſe where they were ſitting. This wind can blow with ſuch force that none can reſiſt it, and it alwayes blows with ſuch freedome, that it bloweth only where it liſteth; which is true alſo, in the ſence explained, of the natural wind. And that which followeth, hath a truth in it alſo in reference to the natural wind, Thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but knoweſt not whence it cometh, or whither it goeth. For though we know the general place from whence the wind cometh, Eaſt, Weſt, North or South; yet no man knoweth the ſpecial or determinate place, either whence it taketh its riſe and beginneth its motion, or where it ſitteth down or concludes it.

Yet more diſtinctly, take the exactneſs of the Lords care and the fulneſs of his power in diſpoſing of the winds in theſe three particulars.

Firſt, God appointeth where or in what coaſt the wind ſhall blow. There are ſome places of the world where the wind blows conſtantly one way (as Navigators have long obſerved) and ſome are called ſtated or ſetled aniverſary winds, which riſe and blow alwayes at ſuch a time or ſeaſon of the year. Such is the Eteſian wind, and ſuch the Cheledonian, ariſing at the firſt coming of ſwallows. Yet theſe are ſtated by a law of God upon nature. He hath bound them by a decree to hold their way and keep their times without variation for the ſervice of his own providence towards the ſons of men. But as to moſt parts of the world the wind receives new laws for the change of its motion, almoſt, every day, and, not ſeldome, for many changes of its motion in one day; yea ſo diſcriminating are the Lords appointments to the wind, that there is oftentimes a ſtorm in one Country, and a calm in another, a Tempeſt in one Sea, and a proſperous Gale in another at the ſame inſtant. In one Country and Sea there's a larg wind, and in another at the ſame time not a breath to move a leaf, or in the leaſt to ſtrain a ſail. Some have more wind then they know what to do with, while others muſt lye at Hull, and can do nothing for want of wind. What the Lord ſpake by the Prophet Amos concerning the rain (Chap. 4.7. I cauſed it to rain upon one City, and cauſed it not to rain upon another City) is as true concerning the Lords ſoveraignty in diſpoſing of the wind, he cauſeth it to go forth and blow in one Country, and he cauſeth it not to go forth nor blow in another Country; as not a drop of rain falls, ſo not a breath of wind blows any where but by the leave of God firſt obtained, or but by his rule and direction.

Statos ſive aniverſarios vocant ventos quæ ſingulis annis certo tempore redeunt, et ſtato tempore ſpirare ſolent. Tales ſunt Etheſiæ. Garcæ. Meteorolog.

Secondly, As the place and the coaſt, ſo the quantity and degree is at his diſpoſe; how much ſhall go out, and with what ſtrength, how large or how ſcant the wind ſhall be is from his word. It is ſaid (Exod. 14.24.) The Lord cauſed the Sea to go back by a ſtrong Eaſt-wind; the Lord did not only order from what part of Heaven that wind ſhould blow, or that it ſhould be an Eaſt-wind, but he ordered the ſtrength and force of it, in a due proportion to that miraculous diſpenſation. The Lord did not only ſend out a wind, but a great wind into the Sea after Jonah, which made a mighty Tempeſt (Chap. 1.4.) and he prepared not only an Eaſt-wind, but a vehement Eaſt-wind to afflict him (Chap. 4.8.) He indeed made a weight for that wind which preſſed him ſore; and he makes the weight of every wind more or leſs, according to the work which it is ſent about.

Thus as he directs from what point of the Heavens the wind ſhall blow, ſo in what degree, whether it ſhall be much or little, whether a Storm or a Calm. And he can with one word turn the Calm into a Storm, and the Storm into a Calm. We read that there aroſe a great Tempeſt in the Sea, inſomuch that the Ship (wherein Chriſt and his Diſciples were embarqued) was covered with the waves; and the Diſciples were ſo affrighted, that they came to Chriſt (being aſleep) and awoke him, ſaying, Lord ſave us, we periſh. Then (ſaith the Text, Mat. 8.26.) he aroſe, and rebuked the wind and Sea, and there was a great calm. He ſpake to the winds as a Nurce to a froward Child, peace, be ſtill; and ſo it was; ſo that, The men marvelled, ſaying, what manner of man is this, that even the winds and the Sea obey him? The moſt enraged winds cannot ſtand before the rebukes of God; and if once he rebuke them, their rage is down; God layes his Law upon the moſt lawleſs Creatures, even then when they ſeem to act moſt lawleſsly, and to have broken all bounds of moderation.

Thirdly, The Lord orders when the wind ſhall riſe, and how long it ſhall continue in any corner. He appoints how long the Eaſt-wind ſhall blow, and how long the Weſt, how long it ſhall lodg in the North, or in the South, is limited by a divine command. Now, as the winds acknowledg the ſoveraignty of God by obeying him, ſo man ſhould much more acknowledg the ſoveraignty of God over the winds, when he ſees them obedient. They eſpecially who have great buſineſs upon the waters and with the winds (Merchants and Mariners) ſhould take notice of this power of God, and honour him in the reverential acknowledgment of it. The heathens who parted the World to their Idol Gods, had a God for the winds; for even they had this notion, that the winds were under the dominion of ſome ſupreme power. This honour they gave to Æolus, who as they blindly believed bound and ſhut up the winds at his pleaſure. And ſhall not we honour the true and living God, by depending upon him and praying to him, for the binding and upbinding of the winds, for the withholding or allaying of ſtorms? When the Merchant hath his Ship broken and wrackt, let him ſay, the Lord hath done it; for he breaks the Ships of Tarſhiſh with an Eaſt-wind (Pſal. 48.7.) And when his Ship comes ſafe home to Harbour, let him ſay the Lord hath done it; for he bringeth them to their deſired Haven (Pſal. 107.30.) Some go to Witches for winds, and others when a Storm is up, ſay, there's conjuring abroad. I know the Devil hath great power in the air, and he can do great things in that Territory; he is the Prince of the power of the air (Eph. 2.2.) He can raiſe Storms or do miſchief at Sea or Land; he overthrew the houſe where Jobs Children were feaſting by a great wind that came from the wilderneſs (Chap. 1. 19.) yet his is only a derivative and permiſſive power; God hath the ſupream power there; and we ſhould own him in it. The Sorcerers in Moſes time could do miracles; but it was a limited power, the Lord checkt it when he pleaſed. And therefore (as one of the ancients ſpeaks) The power of the Magicians failed in lice, God ſtopped them there to ſhew that he could have ſtopped them in the firſt. And though they did not confeſs the finger of God till then, yet the hand of God was in all. And what ever Storms and Tempeſts are raiſed by the Devil, he therein acts the counſel of God (though not at all intentionally) more then his own malice. As the Devil, together with the Magicians and Sorcerers, his Servants, were confounded, and could not make a lowſe, when God took away their commiſſion and reſtrained their power; ſo neither can all the Devils in Hell, nor Witches upon Earth, make a breath of wind to move a feather, if the Lord do but hold up his finger and ſupercede their power. There is no greater argument of ſpiritualneſs, then to honour God in naturals. He is an holy man indeed that is holy in dealing about civil things; and he is a ſpiritual man indeed that ſees God in natural things; He maketh a weight for the winds, Luctantes ventos tempeſtateſque ſonoras, Imperio premit ac vinculis ac carcere frænat. Virg. Ænid. l. 1.

Magorum potentia defecit in muſcis.

And he weigheth the waters by meaſure.

The word ſignifieth to Weigh in a ballance. The Prophet (Iſa. 40.12.) ſetting forth the glorious power and greatneſs of God, ſaith, He weigheth the Mountains in ſcales, and the Hills in a ballance. Here we have a like argument of his power, He weigheth the waters; and (as was touched before, upon the former clauſe, a weight for the winds) the word here alſo uſed, to weigh, ſignifies not only to take the weight of a thing in a ballance, but by any way or means to attain the due knowledg of it. Weighing, in a metaphorical or alluſive ſence, is an act of the underſtanding, 'tis the higheſt and nobleſt act of the underſtanding, even our internal diſcourſe concerning the worth and truth of any propoſition or action, upon which we make up a judgment either pro or con, affirmatively or negatively. So the word is uſed and applyed by Hannah in her ſong of praiſe for that ſon who was as much the fruit of prayer as of her womb (1 Sam. 2.3.) Talk no more ſo exceeding proudly, let not arrogance come out of your mouth: For the Lord is a God of knowledg, and by him actions are weighed. God hath a weight and a ballance for all the works of man; and he weigheth them to a grain; yea he weigheth not only our works, but our words and thoughts; ſo ſome render that place, with a change alſo of the verb. To him thoughts are prepared, that is, he ſees what they are before they are, to him they are prepared before they are prepared by us. But rather as we render, by him actions (the iſſues of thoughts) are weighed; that is, he ſees what they are, and what they are worth, whether they be vain light and fooliſh thoughts, or holy ſerious and reverential thoughts. He weigheth them, and as their weight is, he accordingly rewards them. The Lord brings in the Jews charging him, as if he had not weighed his own actions; ſo he beſpeaks the Prophet (Ezek. 33.17.) The Children of thy people ſay, the way of the Lord is not equal: But as for them their way is not equal. Thus he retorts it upon them. The word is the ſame uſed here by Job; Ye ſay the way of the Lord is not weighed; as if the Lord had acted at random or at a venture as men often do. The wayes of thoſe who do ſo, are unweighed wayes, they are not equal

(as we tranſlate the Metaphor elegantly and clearly to the ſcope of the Text) that is, they are not juſt or right. And though he that doth not weigh his actions, may poſſibly do that which is right, yet he doth not chooſe that which is right. There is no election without conſideration. But to the point in hand, we ſee, both in common and Scripture-language, that to weigh a thing is to take an exact account of it, whether we ſpeak of weighing in a proper or in a tropical acceptation. As therefore when in other places the Lord is ſaid to weigh Actions, whether his own or the actions of others, it informs us, that he hath a very diſtinct and perfect knowledge of them ; ſo here, when he is ſaid to weigh the waters, the meaning is, that he keepeth that fluid and boyſterous Element to as ſtrict terms of order, and to as due a decorum with his own will and command, as if he weighed it out by the Ounce, or drop by drop.

He weigheth the waters.

What waters? We may extend this work of providence to all ſorts of waters. Moſes makes a diſtribution of waters into thoſe below and above (Gen.1.7.) And God made the Firmament, and divided the waters which were un-the Firmament from the waters which were above the Firmament : and it was ſo. The word rendered Firmament, in the Hebrew ſignifies an expanſion, or a thing ſpread out and extended like a Tent or Curtain ; and ſo thoſe higher Heavens where the Stars are fixed or move, are called the Firmament (at leaſt in vulgar ſence) above which, there is no water ; but the Firmament there ſpoken of by Moſes, is the out-ſpread Air from the Earth to the Clouds, in which as in great Heavenly Veſſels upper waters, or the waters above the Firmament, are contained ; as the lower waters, or as waters under the Firmament, are contained and kept in earthly Veſſels, or channels of the Earth.

He weigheth the waters by meaſure.

A meaſure is moſt proper for water ; but to weigh waters by meaſure, may ſeem improper. Numbers are told or reckoned ; heavy things are poyzed or weighed ; and liquids are commonly meaſured. But Job aſcribes both weight and meaſure to the waters. He weigheth the waters by meaſure. We meaſure things of two ſorts ; Firſt, Such as are of a continued quantity ; thus we meaſure Lands and Houſes, and Cloath of all ſorts. Secondly, Such things as are of a diſcrete quantity and bodyes aggregated; thus we meaſure Grain and Seeds of all ſorts, and thus we meaſure water and all ſorts of liquids. Time alſo hath a kind of meaſure ; and ſo it is expreſſed in the ſeventh Chapter of this Book at the fourth Verſe ; where Job bemoaning his reſtleſs condition, ſpeaks thus ; When I lye down, I ſay, When ſhall I ariſe, and the Night be gone ? The Hebrew is (as we put in the Margin) When will the Evening be meaſured ? To weigh any thing, implies an exact Obſervation of it ; and to meaſure any thing, implies an exact Obſervation of it; but when both theſe are joyned, as here God is ſaid both to weigh and meaſure the waters, or to weigh them by meaſure, this implies the utmoſt imaginable exactneſs, yea in this thing an unimaginable and unconceiveable exactneſs of Obſervation.

Hence Note, The waters are in the hand and power of God.

He keeps as ſtrict a hand and watch over them in all their motions, as if he weighed them to a grain, and meaſured them to a drop. The windes and the waters are very unruly Creatures ; yet they are under rule ; the Lord orders and commands them both. Agur (which Text was toucht upon in the former part of this Verſe) puts the Queſtion about them both, while he was making an humble confeſſion of his Faith (Pro. 30.4.) Who hath gathered the wind in his fiſts ? Who hath bound the waters in a garment ? Here are winds and waters, the former gathered, the latter bound to obedience. The word and power of the Lord, or his powerful word and decree, are the fiſts into which the wind is gathered, and the garment in which the waters are bound. The Prophet puts a parallel Queſtion, and to the ſame purpoſe, (Iſa. 40. 12.) Who hath meaſured the waters in the hollow of his hand ? When he enquired, who ? He did not at all doubt, who : His very Queſtion is a determination, that no Creature, but God alone hath done it. And to ſhew the Lords ſoveraignty over the waters, David ſaith in a direct affirmation (Pſal. 29. 10.) The Lord ſitteth upon a flood : yea the Lord ſitteth King for ever. This flood upon which the Lord ſitteth may be underſtood two wayes ; and ſo alſo may his ſitting upon it; the flood upon which the Lord ſitteth, may be underſtood,

Firſt, Plainly and properly for the inundation and confluence of many waters which make a flood. The Lord ſits upon this flood, not only when 'tis calm and quiet, but when it ſwells and rageth, when 'tis moſt turbulent and unruly.

Secondly, The flood may be taken figuratively or myſtically (ſo I conceive the Pſalm is chiefly to be expounded throughout, though there be a cleare and a glorious truth in the outſide and proper terms of it, but I ſay, the flood upon which the Lord ſitteth, may be taken figuratively,) for the People and Nations of the World, when they gather together as a flood : upon this flood or confluence of many waters the Lord ſitteth, and his ſitting there implyeth two things. Firſt, His fixedneſs and ſtability ; He is as ſure upon the flood as upon a rock, he ſits faſt, he is immoveable upon that which is moveable ; and ſits upon that which cannot ſtand, a flood of people. Secondly, His ſitting notes his State and Soveraignty ; he ſits upon the flood as a Lord and Governour upon his Throne, or in a Chair of State, and gives out the Rule according to the pleaſure of his own will. This Expoſition of the waters, and of ſitting upon the waters too, was given to John in viſion (though in far different caſe) by the holy Angel (Rev. 17. 15.) And he ſaid unto me, The waters which thou ſaweſt, where the Whore ſitteth, are Peoples, and Multitudes, and Nations, and Tongues. And (Verſ. 18.) the Woman which thou ſaweſt is that great City, which reigneth over the Kings of the Earth. The Woman, the Whore of Babylon, ſat upon the waters, that is, ſhe ruled Kingdoms and People and Nations. And as ſhe had a Soveraignty over them, ſo ſhe was confident of her ſtability, for (Chap. 18.7.) She ſaid in her heart, I ſit a Queen, and am no Widdow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow. Thus the Lord ſitteth indeed upon the floods ; he ſitteth upon the proper floods, his power and Soveraignty is over and upon all Seas and waters throughout the whole compaſs of the World : and he ſits upon the figurative floods, upon Nations and People, to Rule and Govern them. There (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks) he ſitteth a King for ever.

That, God ſits upon the natural waters, is a comfortable conſideration to us all, to thoſe eſpecially that have to do upon the waters, and whoſe buſineſs is upon the Seas. And as 'tis good for good men, that floods and waters are at the command of God, ſo it may be a terror to the wicked. Eliphaz aſſures Job (Chap. 5.23.) that if he were godly he ſhould be in League with the Stones of the Field, and the Beaſts of the Field ſhould be at peace with him. The godly alſo are in League with the winds, and the waters of the Sea are at peace with them. But wo to the wicked and all ungodly men, for they having no league nor peace with God, yea being at enmity againſt him, cannot be at peace with winds and waters, but have reaſon to fear leſt the Lord give them commiſſion every moment (as executioners of his wrath) to deſtroy and ſwallow them up. They who have not God to friend, have no aſſurance to have the Creatures (which are God's hoſt) to friend.

Secondly, It is a great comfort alſo to Saints and godly men, that the Lord ſitteth upon the myſtical or figurative waters, Multitudes, and People, and Nations. David putteth both theſe together, or rather expounds the one by the other. (Pſal.65.7.) Which ſtilleth the noiſe of the Seas, the noiſe of their waves, and the tumult of the People ; that is, the Lord ſtilleth the People when they fluctuate and tumultuate like the waves of the Sea, roaring and making a noiſe in a mighty Tempeſt. The ſtorms which ariſe in the Spirits of the multitude, are often more terrible and have more dreadful effects then any ſtorm at Sea ; and is not this ſweet to remember that the Lord can ſtill thoſe tempeſts with a caſt of his eye, or a word ſpeaking ? He can rebuke the company of Spear-men, the multitude of the Bulls, with the Calves of the People, as David elegantly expreſſed the roaring rage and brutiſh folly of the many (Pſal. 68. 30.) and deliver his, as David confeſſed God had delivered him, (Pſal.18.43.) from the ſtrivings of the People.

Further, There are three things not only conſiderable, but wonderful in the Natural waters.

Firſt, Their greatneſs and vaſtneſs, the Sea is called the great Deep; and as it is deep, ſo 'tis large, that the bounds of it have not been fully meaſured nor diſcovered to this day. When Job expoſtulates about God's ſevere dealing with him, he makes two Queries (Chap. 7. 12.) Am I a Sea, or a Whale, that thou ſetteſt a watch over me? The Sea is the hugeſt part, except the Earth, of the inanimate lower Creation; and the Whale, without exception of any, is the greateſt of the animate; and as theſe are greateſt, ſo moſt forceable and dangerous, which is the ſpecial reaſon why Job adds, that thou ſetteſt a watch over me.

Secondly, The ſcituation of the waters is alſo wonderful, the ſuperficies or ſurface of the Sea ſwelling ſpherically (as ſome Naturaliſts both diſpute and aſſert) higher then the ſurface of the Earth, at leaſt in ſome places. So that as there are waters above our heads, a Sea, a vaſt Ocean in the Air, wrapt up in Clouds which hang and move over us; ſo many of thoſe waters which are below, do (as it were) hold up their head above the Land, or are higher then the ſuperficies of the Earth: yet the mighty power of God, more then banks and cliſts, keeps them within bounds, which they cannot paſs to overflow and cover us.

Thirdly, The diſtribution or diviſion of the waters hath wonders in it, God hath cut out channels for the water through and about the whole Earth. He hath diſtributed it into Springs under the earth, and by Rivers and Rivu'ets upon the face of the Earth. (Pſal. 104. 10.) He ſendeth the Springs into the Valleyes, which run among the Hills. And he hath every where made the Sea full of Ports and Creeks and Bayes and Havens, fit for reception and ſafety of Shipping.

Laſtly, Take one inſtance more of a divine Government over the Natural waters. They are not encreaſed or diminiſhed in any ſpecial place, without the meaſuring power and wiſdom of God, He cauſeth his wind to blow, and the waters flow (Pſal. 147. 18.) that is, They flow beyond their ordinary courſe and marks; and again he cauſeth his wind to blow, and they return to their wonted courſe and channel. We find this moſt clearly expreſſed, in that meditation upon and deſcription of the mighty powerful providence of God (Pſal. 104. 6, 7, 8, 9.) Thou coveredſt it (that is, the Earth) with the deep as with a garment; the waters ſtood above the Mountains. At thy rebuke they fled; at the voice of thy Thunder they haſted away; they go up by the Mountains, they go down by the Valleyes to the place which thou haſt appointed for them: Thou haſt ſet a bound, that they cannot paſs over: that they turn not again to cover the Earth. Unleſs the Lord did reſtrain thoſe mighty waters, and keep them as it were under Lock and Key, under his own power and command, they would quickly turn again like an enemy over the Earth. All theſe Acts of providence about the waters are but the expoſition of Job's Text, He weigheth the waters by meaſure.

Verſ. 26. When he made a decree for the Rain, and a way for the Lightning of the Thunder.

Job having ſpoken of the wiſdom of God in winds and Earthly waters, proceeds to ſpeak of the wiſdom of God in ſending the waters of Heaven, or Rain-waters upon the Earth.

As before 'twas ſaid he made a weight for the wind, ſo here 'tis ſaid, He made a decree for the Rain. The word which we render, decree, ſignifies, in the root, to write or engrave, and thence to make Statutes and Decrees, becauſe they uſe to be written or engraven, and ſo to remain upon record for future Ages. So that, it imports two things; Firſt, The Authority of a Law; Secondly, The permanency of a record. Such an Authoritative and permanent decree hath God made for the Rain.

I will not ſtay here upon Philoſophical diſcourſe about Rain, either how that Meteor is generated and formed, how iſſued and ſent forth, either about the conception or birth of it. There will be a more fit occaſion offered in this Book to open thoſe works of Nature, or rather of God in Nature, if he ſhall pleaſe to lengthen out this work ſo far.

He made a decree for the Rain.

As the Lord according to his abſolute and uncontroleable ſoveraignty, hath made Decrees and Statutes concerning man, the chief of all Earthly Creatures, both as to his end and all thoſe means which lead thereunto; ſo he hath made a decree concerning all other Creatures, even the meaneſt Creatures, by which they are regulated in all their motions toward man; and among the reſt, He hath made a decree for the Rain by name.

Hence Note, Natural Rain is under a divine Law.

The Rain is formed and falls from Heaven upon the Earth by Statute, even by the Statute of the great God of Heaven and Earth. The Rain is under a decree in a fourfold reſpect. Firſt, For the time when it ſhall begin to Rain, (Gen. 7. 1.) Secondly, For the continuance, how long it ſhall Rain, (Gen. 7. 12.) Thirdly, For the quantity, in what meaſure and degree it ſhall Rain, (1 Kings 18. 45.) Fourthly, For the places and perſons, where and upon whom ſhall it Rain, (Amos 4. 7.) I cauſed it to Rain upon one City, and cauſed it not to Rain upon another City. The Scripture is exceeding plentiful and frequent in giving God the Glory of this decree. Eliah ſpeaks as if the Rain had been in his power (1 Kings 17. 1.) As the Lord God of Iſrael liveth, before whom I ſtand, there ſhall be neither dew nor rain theſe years, but according to my word. But that word was not his own, but the word of God. As if he had ſaid; there ſhall be no Rain but as I have declared, or as God ſhall declare by his word in my Miniſtery. Thus David ſings the praiſes of God (Pſal. 65. 9, 10.) Thou viſiteſt the Earth (ſc. with Rain, when it is as it were ſick (of a Feaver through abundance of heat) and thirſty, ſo it follows) and watereſt it: thou greatly inricheſt it with the River of God, which is full of water. But Rain water is not River water, why then doth he ſpeak here of a River? I anſwer, Rain is a River above, as a River is Rain below. Rain from the Clouds ſtreams, like a River, and doth the ſervice of a River to the Earth. And 'tis called not barely a River, but the River of God: Which may be expounded either by that common Hebraiſm, a great and wonderful River. Or Rain is called the River of God, becauſe it comes more immediately (at leaſt to appearance) from God, and is of a different riſe and Original from common Rivers; with this River, ſaith David, Thou enricheſt the Earth. And (as it follows in the ſame Pſalm) Thou prepareſt them Corn, when thou haſt ſo provided for it; thou watereſt the ridges thereof abundantly: Thou ſettleſt the furrows thereof, thou makeſt it ſoft with ſhowers; thou bleſſeſt the Spring thereof. All this is true of Gods diſpencing Rain in a proper ſence; though, the Pſalmiſt doubtleſs intends it chiefly of that ſpiritual and myſtical Rain or River of God, the Word and Spirit, by which the Church or People of God have their Souls watered refreſhed and made fruitful, according to thoſe Propheſies, Joel 2. 28. Chap. 3. 18. Ezek. 47. 1, 9. But, to return to the Natural Rain. The Apoſtle makes it one of Gods witneſſes in the darkeſt times and places of the World. (Acts 14. 17.) where having granted, that in times paſt God ſuffered all Nations to walk in their own wayes (v. 16.) that is, he did not ſend them the powerful means and light of the Goſpel to convert them from wicked wayes; he adds, God did enough to leave them without excuſe; Nevertheleſs (ſaith the Apoſtle) He left not himſelf without witneſs, in that he did good, and gave us Rain from Heaven, and fruitful Seaſons. Again (Matth. 5. 45.) He maketh his Sun to riſe on the evil and on the good, and ſendeth Rain on the unjuſt and on the juſt. Thus the Rain is Gods bounty, He gives it, 'tis a token of his care for his great Family; he ſends it, that they may have bread and be ſatisfied. The Prophet Jeremiah is much upon this point of providence (Chap. 5. 24.) Neither ſay they in their heart, let us now fear the Lord our God, that giveth Rain, both the former and the latter in his Seaſon. He would have them know that as Rain is the gift of God, ſo 'tis a gift which men ought not lightly to paſs by, and therefore he wonders that they did not fear the Lord, at the firſt coming and ſight of it. Neither have they ſaid in their hearts, let us fear the Lord that giveth Rain. The ſame Prophet deſcribes the Rain aſſembling like an Army at the call of God, at the ſound of his Trumpet, (Jer. 10. 13.) When he uttereth his voice, there is a multitude of waters in the Heavens, and he cauſeth the vapours to aſcend from the ends of the Earth: he maketh lightnings with with Rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treaſures. Here we have (all which this Text in Job takes in) the Lords power over and upon Waters, Vapours, Lightnings, Rain and Wind. The Waters gather like troops, the Vapours aſcend like ſmoak, the Lightnings iſſue forth, the Rain falleth, and the Wind riſeth at his All-commanding word and decree.

And if the Lord make a decree for the Natural Rain, doth he not much more make a decree for the Spiritual, for the Rain of the Goſpel? Holy Doctrine is often called Rain in Scripture. And the ſame word in the Hebrew ſignifies to Rain and to inſtruct; Moſes puts both together (Deut. 23. 2.) My Doctrine ſhall drop as the Rain, my ſpeech ſhall diſtil as the dew, as the ſmall Rain upon the tender Herb, and as the ſhowers upon the Graſs. Rain makes the Earth fruitful through the bleſſing of God, and ſo doth the Word our Souls. He that waters the Earth and makes it fruitful, that it may miniſter ſeed to the Sower, and bread to the Eater, doth much more water the Soul, that it may bring forth fruit meet for his own uſe, or that himſelf may come into the garden of the Church, and eat his pleaſant fruits. When the Apoſtle had quoted that good old Law of Moſes (1 Cor. 9. 9.) Thou ſhalt not muzzel the mouth of the Ox that treadeth out the Corn, preſently inferſ this Queſtion, or rather a reproof from it, doth God take care for the Ox? The Lord doth take care for labouring Oxen; but he takes care much more, that thoſe labouring Oxen, the faithful and painful Miniſters of his Word, ſhould have food convenient for them. So here, doth the Lord take care to ſend the ſhowers of Heaven in ſeaſon upon the Earth? Surely he doth much more take care to ſend ſhowers of Heavenly truth in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) upon the Souls of his precious ſervants. He gives order when, and where, and how to diſtil Word-rain upon us: and as we ſhould take heed of being unthankful for, ſo of being unfruitful under it. (Heb. 6. 7, 8.) The Earth which drinketh in the Rain, that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth Herbs meet for them by whom it is dreſſed, receiveth bleſſing from God: But that which beareth Thorns and Briars, is rejected, and is nigh unto curſing, whoſe end is to be burned. 'Tis ſad when God makes a decree againſt this Rain, and ſaith to a People as David to the Mountains of Gilboa, (2 Sam. 1. 21.) Let there be no dew, neither let there be Rain upon you. But 'tis more ſad when after we have had many ſweet Goſpel dews, and Soaking-doctrine-rains, we either bring forth no uſeful fruit, or that which is hurtful, Briars and Thorns. He made a decree for the rain,

And a way for the Lightning of the Thunder.

Here Job gives another inſtance of the mighty power of God in the works of Nature; Lightning and Thunder.

He maketh a way for the Lightning.

The word which we render Lightning, comes either from, or comes near to a Verb which ſignifies to ſee; becauſe Lightning is either ſo eaſily and quickly ſeen, or becauſe it is uſually ſeen before the Thunder is heard. Lightning is of ſo piercing and penetrating a Nature, that if it find not, it will makes its own way. Yet becauſe this penetrating power of Lightning is from God, he is ſaid to make a way, as it were a trodden path-way, for the Lightning; even the Lightning had never found its way, if the Lord had not made it: or the Lord is ſaid to make a way for every flaſh of Lightning, becauſe though it be a moſt ſubtile and violent impreſſion, and ſtrikes through the whole Air in a moment, yet it ſtirs not, it moves not a foot this or that way without his order and direction.

He maketh a way for the Lightning of the Thunder.

That is, for the Lightning which is accompanied with Thunder; For when it Lightens, it uſually Thunders too, though ſometimes we do not hear it; or 'tis called the Lightning of the Thunder, becauſe Lightning is not only a concomitant, but a cauſe of the Thunder. The word here rendered Thunder, in the Hebrew is voices. And Thunder is therefore ſo called, becauſe though we cannot ſay of it, as we ſay of ſome Creatures, That, it is a voice, and more then that, nothing; (for it hath ſome very uſeful and very terrible effects) yet ſuch a mighty voice, ſuch a dreadful ſound goes out with Thunder, that it is both elegantly and moſt ſignificantly called a voice, yea not only by Heathen Authors, but by the Scripture, The voice of God (Pſal. 29. 3.) The voice of the Lord is upon the waters, The God of glory Thundreth, The Lord is upon many waters, the voice of the Lord is powerful (or, in power) the voice of the Lord is full of Majeſty (or, in Majeſty) the voice of the Lord breaketh the Cedars, &c. John the Baptiſt was called in the Propheſie (Iſa. 40. 3.) and he calleth himſelf in the Goſpel (John 1. 23.) A voice: Being asked, Who art thou? He anſwered, I am the voice of one crying in the Wilderneſs. And he was called a voice, becauſe his office and errand was to bore the ears of the Jews with Preaching repentance and preparing the way of the Lord, as it were with Thunder. And beſides, thoſe rouzing and awakening Preachers of the Goſpel, James, and John the Brother of James, were ſurnamed by Chriſt himſelf (Mark 3. 17.) Boanerges, which is the Sons of Thunder. Now if theſe men of voice, were called Sons of Thunder, and the Thundering Baptiſt, a voice well may Thunder it ſelf be called a voice. And it is here put Plurally, the Lightning of the Thunders or voices, becauſe God doth (as it were) diſcharge many of theſe great Cannons near together from the Clouds, and the Artillery of Heaven goeth off clap after clap. When it Lightens we may ſay, God gives fire; and when it Thunders we hear the report of it. For though the Thunder be in order of Nature before, or at leaſt contemporary with the Lightning, yet in order of time we ſee the coruſcation or flaſhes of Lightning, before we hear the ſound or voice of Thunder, or the Thunder which is a voice. And the reaſon is, becauſe the eye is nimbler at its work then the ear; the eye taking in its object by a direct line, but the ear by a gyration from ſeveral angles. Daily experience teacheth us, that when any Gun great or ſmall is diſcharged, we ſee the light of the fire a diſtinct ſpace before we hear the ſound of the report; eſpecially if we are at any conſiderable diſtance; and ſo at every ſtroak of an Ax or Hammer, we ſee the fall of the ſtroak, before we hear the ſound of it. And therefore Job doth rightly put the Lightning before the Thunder, becauſe though that Colliſion of the Clouds, which we call Thunder, be firſt, yet that brightneſs in the Clouds, which we call Lightning, is ſeen firſt. Naturaliſts diſcourſe largely of theſe two Meteors, Lightning and Thunder; the former, is an exhalation which by frequent motion takes fire like Tow or Stubble, and breaking the ſides of the Cloud flaſheth with a ſudden brightneſs thorough the Air. The latter is, That ſound or voice in the Air which that hot and dry exhalation makes by a violent renting of the Cloud, whoſe thickneſs and coldneſs ſtops its paſſage and hinders it from aſcending higher. Hence it hath its name in Latine either from terrifying, or from ſounding and ruſhing; we may joyn both derivations together, becauſe ruſhing with an amazing ſound through the Cloud, it terrifieth thoſe that hear it. This is a work in Nature: but Job who was a divine Philoſopher, calls it better, The work of God. He makes a way for the lightning of the Thunder.

Hence Obſerve, Lightning and Thunder call us to acknowledge the power and preſence of God.

The Heathen gave this as a Title of Honour to Jupiter, The Thunderer. David conſidering this work of God invites us to adore and worſhip God, (Pſal. 29. 1, 2, 3.) Give unto the Lord, (O ye mighty) give unto the Lord glory and ſtrength; give unto the Lord glory due unto his Name; worſhip the Lord in the beauty of Holineſs. The voice of the Lord is upon the waters, the God of glory Thundreth, &c. As if he had ſaid, When we hear the God of Glory thundering, or becauſe the God of Glory thundereth, we ought to give him glory, and to worſhip him in the holyeſt manner, even in the beauty of Holineſs, or (as the Margin hath it) in his glorious Sanctuary. Epicurus of old (as Atheiſts of a later date) argued that to fear God, or to have the awe and impreſſion of a divine power upon our Spirits when we ſee the Lightning and hear the Thunder, or feel the Thunderbolts, was childiſh, vain and groundleſs, becauſe Thunder and Lightning proceeded from Natural cauſes. But beſides the wickedneſs and irreligion which always lies at the bottom, and is ſometimes held out uppermoſt in theſe kind of arguings, it is eaſie to convince it of ſenſleſneſs and irrationality; for may not the ſame effect be aſcribed to God, as the ſupream or firſt, and yet confeſſed to

to have ſubordinate and ſecond cauſes in nature, according to the Law and Rule of its production by God Originally ſet and aſſigned? And ſeeing God is the Author of Nature(as ſome have ſeen by the common light of Nature) is not God as much to be feared and honoured in thoſe things which he doth mediately by natural cauſes, as in thoſe which he wrought by his immediate hand and power? And therefore though Lightning and Thunder be a work of Nature, yet it is not only in part, but chiefly to be aſcribed to God. Yea doubtleſs, as God ordered nature to produce theſe aſtoniſhing effects for natural ends; Namely, Firſt (as learned Meteorologiſts tell us) to purge the Air and ſpend thoſe noxious vapours which are apt to taint the blood and bodyes of men with peſtilential diſeaſes; and Secondly, To ſqueeze thoſe ſponges the Cloudes, and provoke them to give Rain for the refreſhing of the Earth, as we ſee in experience Rain following the Thunder. Now I ſay, as God hath ordered Nature this work, for theſe and the like natural ends, ſo alſo for ends Sacred and Spiritual; as firſt, to ſtrike men with an aw of his Majeſty; Secondly, To ſtir them up to repentance; Thirdly, To abate their pride and humble them; Fourthly, to puniſh the proud and unhumbled, who Warring againſt Heaven, he Proclaims War againſt them from Heaven, and ſometimes actually ſhoots them dead with his Thunderbolts, or blaſts them with his Lightning.

But ſome object; if God makes a way for the Lightening of the Thunder; how comes it to paſs that the Lightning and Thunder ſeem ſo often to miſs or miſtake their way? Whence is it that they ſometimes ſtrike good men either in their perſons or goods; and that the wicked moſt times eſcape the ſtroak and danger of them? I anſwer; God hath not appointed any of his outward diſpenſations, whether of good or evil, to be the mark of a diſtinction between good and evil men. Solomon thus determin'd this Queſtion (Eccl. 9. 1.) No man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them: and (though all men are not alike, yet) all things come alike to all; there is the ſame event to the righteous and to the wicked. God would have us learn to make a difference of men, by what we ſee of God in them, and by their walking according to the mind of God, not by what himſelf is pleaſed to do upon them, or with them. And therefore he makes the way of the Thunder lye ſometimes to the Houſe and Perſon of the righteous, that men may not find his way, but fear and honour him both for his word and works. Lightning and Thunderbolts do not fly at random (as Bullets in a Battle do not) nor ſtrike without direction at hap-hazzard him that is next, (as ſome Heathens thought) but are guided by an unerring hand to their mark, when we are ready to ſay they have miſſed their mark. And thus much ſome Heathens have acknowledged, Thunderbolts (ſaith one of them) go not by chance, but by a certain guidance, order and decree; the works or workings of the Thunder are wonderfull, if thou wilt but ſeriouſly conſider them, and leave not the leaſt ſcruple in the mind, concerning this aſſertion, that there is a divine power in them. The lowdneſs, the ſwiftneſs, the forceableneſs, the marvellous effects of Lightning and Thunder, do all Proclaim the glorious Name of God. And therefore as Thunder is a great work of God in Nature, ſo the greateſt works of God in providence have been done in Thunder, or expreſſed by it. The Law was given in Thunder and Lightning, ſo that all the People that were in the Camp trembled (Exod. 19. 16.) God ſhewing at the publication of the Law, how terrible he would be to the tranſgreſſors of it. Yea when God gave teſtimony to his Son from Heaven (Luke 9. 35.) There came a voice out of the Cloud, ſaying, This is my beloved Son, hear him. This ſpeaking from the Cloud, the Jews call (בת קול) The daughter of a voice, it being as it were a mild or whiſpring Thunder. And when a like voice came from Heaven (in anſwer to Chriſt's prayer, Father glorifie thy Name) ſaying, I have both glorified it, and will glorifie it again; the People that ſtood by and heard it, ſaid that it thundered. (John 12. 28, 29.) Thus alſo the great things which God will do in the World are given out by Thunder. (Rev. 10. 3.) The Seven Thunders uttered their voices; and (Chap. 11. 19.) When the Temple of God was opened in Heaven, there were Lightnings and voices and Thunderings. Signifying, what dreadfull things God would do, what terrible things in righteouſneſs againſt the World, as alſo for the vindication of his own Name and People.

Fortuitos iſtus, bruta fulmina, quæ nulla veniant naturæ ratione, cenſet. Plinius. Fato non ire fulmina, ſed ferri. Mira fulminis ſi intueri velis opera ſunt, nec quicquam dubij relinquentia quin divina inſit illis et ſubtilis potentia. Seneca.

Take two or three Notes more general from theſe two Verſes, as they hold out the works of God in Nature.

First, We ſhould acquaint our ſelves with the appearances of God in his works all the Creation over.

(Pſal. 92. 5.) O Lord, how great are thy works! And thy thoughts are very deep. A brutiſh man knoweth not: neither doth a fool underſtand this. They are brutiſh indeed who underſtand not, that thoſe things are done and diſpoſed by more then a humane wiſdom, which the wiſdom of man cannot reach nor underſtand. Yet ſome cannot get out of the circle of Nature. And becauſe they can give ſome account from reaſon, why and how the windes blow, the waters flow, the ſhowers fall, the Thunder and Lightning are generated and brought forth, therefore they ceaſe to wonder, and will not take notice of God in them. But though theſe things have an order in Nature, yet who but God could put Nature in ſuch an order? Who could make ſuch a weight for the Windes, ſuch a meaſure for the Waters, ſuch a way for the Lightning of the Thunder but God himſelf? Who appointed the windes to cool and attemper the Air, but God? Who appointed the Rain to moyſten and refreſh the Earth but God? Who laid thoſe Pipes under ground which conveigh water to ſerve all the World? And who made thoſe channels and ciſterns in which it is conveighed and kept above ground for the uſe of man, but God? Who commanded the Thunder to rent and tear the Clouds, and the fiery Lightning to fill the Air, but God? When any of theſe come forth for Judgment, may they not ſay Rabſhakeh, (Iſa. 36. 10.) Are we come up without the Lord againſt this Land to deſtroy it? The Lord ſaid unto us, go againſt this Land and deſtroy it.

Nemo tam rudis eſt ut non intelligat quin id quod mirabili ratione conſtat, conſilio aliquo majori ſit inſtructum. Lact. lib. 1. Inſtit. cap. 2

Secondly, The leaſt motions of the Creature are under the hand of God as well as the greateſt.

When Job ſaith, God made a weight for the windes, we may underſtand it of the lighteſt windes, of the leaſt puff or breath of wind, as well as of the weightieſt ſtorms which preſs all down before them. And when he ſaith, The Lord weigheth the waters by meaſure, this care extendeth to the ſmalleſt rivulet, as well as to the main or mighty Ocean; and makes a decree for the dewing drops, as well as for the drowning ſhowers. He makes way for the weakeſt as well as the ſtrongeſt claps of Thunder; the craſhing, hiſſing, whiſpering, puffing Thunder, (ſo Naturaliſts diſtinguiſh) is of God, as well as the roaring, rouzing, tearing, aſtoniſhing, killing claps of Thunder. As God is able to do the greateſt things, ſo the leaſt are not done without him. And it is his honour as much that he will and doth order ſmall things, as that he can order and diſpoſe the greateſt.

Thirdly, Thoſe things which are moſt boyſterous, violent and furious, are yet at the ordering and under the hand of God.

If Winds are under order, if the Waters are under order, if Thunder and Lightning are under order, then the moſt diſorderly things are under order, and the moſt untruly muſt obſerve the Rule of God. (Pſal. 32. 9.) Be not as the Horſe and Mule which have no underſtanding, whoſe mouth muſt be held in with Bit and Bridle, leſt they come near unto thee. As thoſe living Creatures which are moſt head-ſtrong and dangerous, are yet mannaged by men; we have a Bit and Bridle, a Whip and Spur for the Horſe and Mule, and can bind them to their good behaviour. So thoſe inanimate Creatures, which moſt endanger the life of man, are guided and curbed as a Horſe with Bit and Bridle by the all-powerfull hand of God. The Winds and Thunders which exceed Lions and Bears in wildneſs and fierceneſs, the Lord can tame and make as gentle as a Lamb. Winds and Thunder which are able to overthrow the talleſt Cedars in Lebanon, and root up the ſtrongeſt Oakes of Baſhan, which ſhake, yea ſhiver the beſt founded Towers, and make the Mountains tremble, theſe the Lord can confine and impriſon in their proper places, ſo that a leaf of a Tree ſhall not ſhake, nor a feather, nor the lighteſt Thiſtle-down be lifted up into or move in the Air. As the wrath of man ſhall praiſe God, and the remainder of wrath (that is, ſo much of it, how much ſo ever it is, as is not likely to turn or be ſerviceable unto his praiſe) he will reſtrain (Pſal. 76. 10.) ſo the wrath and rage and violence of winds and waters, of lightning and of thunder ſhall praiſe God, as for the remainder of it, or whatſoever is not ſubſervient to that great end, he will and can reſtrain it at his pleaſure ; for, he hath made a weight for the wind, &c.

Fourthly, Thoſe things which are moſt uſeful and comfortable for us, are in the power and diſpoſe of God.

What's more univerſally comfortable and uſeful then water, rain and wind? We cannot live long without the two former, nor at all without the latter. A man may live without any manner of food many dayes, but no man can live an hour altogether without air or wind ; and when we are but ſtraiten'd either for wind or water, our lives are rendred very unpleaſant to us. Is it not then a priviledg to the Children of God, that the weight and meaſure and decree of all theſe things is made by their Father? And that they may have them for the asking?

Laſtly, Here being many words to ſet out the wiſdome and power of God in diſpoſing theſe Creatures, weighing, meaſuring, decreeing, making a way;

Note, The care and providence of God concerning man is perfect and diſtinct.

What elſe or what leſs can this heap of words import? When we ſee a man making or providing himſelf with weights and meaſures, we cannot but conclude him a wary man in his buſineſs, and that he means not to deal or do things raſhly or by gueſs. That which a man weighs and meaſures, that which he doth by a decree, and not upon a guſt of paſſion, how punctually is it done? When the Lord ſhewed Ezekiel in viſion (Chap. 4. 10, 11.) That the Children of Iſrael ſhould eat their meat by weight, and drink their water by meaſure, it notes the ſtrickneſs of their dyet, not as from temperance (ſo 'tis alwayes to eat and drink as it were by meaſure) but as from famine ; not from ſobriety, as to the uſe, but from ſcarcity, as to the enjoyment of thoſe outward comforts (and ſo 'tis a puniſhment to eat by weight, and drink by meaſure) which, I ſay, implyes ſuch ſtrictneſs in dyet, that they might not exceed (in the leaſt, not in an ounce, not in a ſpoonful) their appointed proportion of meat and drink ; they muſt in the one keep to the allotted weight, and in the other to the allotted meaſure. So then, as to do a thing in print, ſo to do it by weight or meaſure, may be a proverbial ſpeech for doing it skilfully and exactly. As he that walks by rule walks ſafely, ſo he that works by rule, works unerringly ; now if men are exact in thoſe things which they weigh, meaſure, and decree, how exact are the works of God when he is ſaid to do them by weight, meaſure, and decree? Yet theſe are not attributed to God, as if he ſtood weighing and meaſuring ; no, he hath the compaſs and proſpect of all things alwayes before, or rather in himſelf. He hath no need of deliberation, nor doth he ever deliberate about any work. But acts of deliberation attributed to God ſhew an exactneſs beyond all imaginable deliberation in all his works.

And if the Lord be thus punctual and exact in diſpenſing winds and waters, thunder and lightning, much more is he ſo in ordering the Nations and Governments, the States and Affairs of the world. If he weigh the winds and meaſure the waters, will he not weigh the works and meaſure the wayes of the Sons of men! Did not he weigh Belſhazzar in the ballance, and found him wanting? (Dan. 5. 27.) Did not the Lord ſtand and meaſure the Earth? (Hab. 3. 6.) Did he not meaſure the holy City, and all that appertained to it? (Ezek. 40. 2, 3, 4, 5. & 42. 16.) Did he not meaſure the Temple and the Altar, and them that worſhip therein, but left the outward Court unmeaſured? (Rev. 11. 1, 2.) And was not all this to ſhew his utmoſt exactneſs about the matters of his worſhip, and the concernments of his people? And hath he not made a decree which cannot be broken for the good of his inheritance?

How ſhould all this quiet our hearts and reſt our ſpirits in the infinite wiſdome of God, whatſoever we ſee him doing in this world or in the Churches ; for ſeeing, he orders the courſe of the world in its natural capacity by weight and meaſure, ſurely he will order the courſe of the world in its civil capacity, much more the courſe of the Church in its ſpiritual capacity, by weight and meaſure, that is, in higheſt prudence, and by unerring providence ; the Lord will not fail a grain as to weight, nor a hairs breadth as to meaſure, in all the changes and turnings here below. Be aſſured the Lord is weighing, and the Lord is meaſuring at this day among us, ſay then, it is the Lord, let him do whatſoever is good in his own eyes, and that's alwayes the beſt for all thoſe that can ſpiritually ſay ſo.

Job having ſhewed how God manifeſted his wiſdome in the diſpoſe of theſe naturals, draws up all in the Twenty-ſeventh verſe.

Then did he ſee it, &c.

What did he ſee? He ſaw that wiſdome, which lay out of the ſight of all Creatures, Which the Vultures eye never ſaw, and which was hid from the eyes of all living, and kept cloſe from the fowls of the air.

Verſ. 27. Then did he ſee it, and declare it, and prepared it, yea and ſearched it out.

So then this verſe 27. cloſeth the former point, upon which Job had long inſiſted ; for having made an inquiry after wiſdome all the Creation over, and not finding it, he told us where wiſdome is to be had (v. 23.) God underſtandeth the way thereof, and knoweth the place thereof ; he gave alſo a reaſon or demonſtration, that God knoweth the place thereof (v. 24.) for he looketh to the ends of the Earth, and ſeeth under the whole Heavens, to make the weight for the winds, and he weigheth the waters by meaſure ; when he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder.

Then did he ſee it.] This whole verſe hath a twofold reading.

Firſt, As of a Thing.

Secondly, As of a Perſon.

Our tranſlation runs in the former ſence, Then did he ſee It. Which It is four times repeated, together with four diſtinct acts of God about it. Whereof the firſt in order of the Text, is, his ſight of it.

Then did he ſee it.] There are three Queries to be anſwered concerning this ſight of God.

Firſt, It may be enquired about the time, when did he ſee it?

Secondly, About the place, where did he ſee it?

Thirdly, About the manner, how did he ſee it?

To the firſt Querie, the anſwer (aa I touched before) is plain in verſe 26 ; When he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder, then did he ſee it ; then, that is, from the beginning of the world ; yet we muſt not reſtrain it to that beginning ſtrictly taken, as if the firſt ſight that God had of wiſdome was when he began to make the world ; for he had the ſight of it from everlaſting, we can put no other date upon that act but eternity. The particle of time, Then, doth not denote a time wherein God began to ſee, or to take notice of wiſdome, but it implyes and imports thus much, that God had alwayes acquaintance with it, only he did not explain or hold it forth, he did not give it out, as it were, to the view of the world, till the beginning of time, when he Created the world, then he made a weight for the wind, and a decree for the rain, then was the time when God ſaw it ſo, as (which follows in the Text) to declare it ; then did he ſee it, and declare it ; that is, then did he ſee it to declare it, or give teſtimony and demonſtration of it. The wiſdome of God is eternal, and therefore his ſight of it muſt needs be eternal.

Illud jam tum non principium temporis que cæperit eſſe in deo ſapientia ſignificat, ſed cum ab æterno eam habuerit tum demum explicuiſſe, cum res quas ſapientiſſimè effecit cæpit condere. Merc.

Secondly, Where did he ſee it? Or where was wiſdome ſeen? At verſe 23. it is ſaid, God underſtandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof ; but where is the place in which God ſaw it? I anſwer, God ſaw it in himſelf : This wiſdome is in God, yea this wiſdome is God, we are to throw off the leaſt imagination that God ſaw this excellent and glorious wiſdome, or underſtood it in any place or way extrinſecal or diſtant from himſelf. By this wiſdome he made all things that were made. The actual contemplation of it in himſelf was the production of the world, as to its being in Creation, and as to its order and well-being under the government of his providence.

Tunc, ſc. quando ſaticebat Creaturas vidit illam i. e. ſapientiam in ſeipſo in quantum per actualem ſuæ ſapientiæ co'ſi'lerationem res in eſſe producit. Aquin.

Thirdly, It may be queſtioned ; How ſaw he it? To ſee, in a proper ſence, is a ſenſitive act of the bodily eye ; but as God is a Spirit, whom no eye hath ſeen nor can ſee, ſo being ing a Spirit he doth not ſee with the eye. His ſight of wiſdome is his knowledg, fruition, and enjoyment of it; 'tis his moſt intimate acquaintance with, and poſſeſſion of it. Thus wiſdome expounds the ſight of God by poſſeſſion, in the place before cited (*Pro.*8.22.) The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way before his works of old.

Further, Some expound this wiſdome, not of the object ſeen, but of the medium or light by which God ſaw all things. And thus the Text is carried in all the four parts of it; Then did he ſee (all things) by it, and then he did declare (all things) by it, then did he prepare (all things) by it, and then did he ſearch (all things) by it; that is, what ever God did, he did by his infinite hidden unſearchable wiſdome. Thus much for the clearing of Jobs firſt ſſertion, then did he ſee it.

Hence Obſerve, God ſaw all things, all the works of wiſdome, and all the wiſdome of his works from eternity in himſelf.

He ſaw wiſdome, and he ſaw all things by that wiſdome: As God ſaw every thing that he had made, and behold, it was very good (Gen. 1. 31.) ſo God ſaw every thing before he made it: He had, as it were, the platform, the mould, the Idea of all his works of Creation, and of all his works of Providence alwayes before him. Not that God needed to draw a platform of things to work after. When men have a great building to ſet up, they draw the pattern or plot of it, and keep it by them, that the whole work may go up ſutably, the Lord is infinitely above ſuch poor helps as theſe, he doth all things infinitely more exactly then men, who work by models and forms without them; God had the form of all that himſelf purpoſed to do, and of all things that were or are to be done in the world in himſelf before they were. Thus he ſpake by the Holy Prophet (*Iſa.*46. 10.) Remember the former things of old, for I am God, and there is none elſe, I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from antient times the things that are not yet done. If the Lord had not a clear ſight of all things, from the end to the beginning, he could not make them known, nor declare the end, that is, what the concluſion or iſſues of all things ſhall be from the beginning; and when 'tis ſaid he declareth the end, we muſt take in all the intermediate acts and ſecond cauſes which concur to the making up of that concluſion. It is the priviledg of God alone to be able to declare the end from the beginning. 'Tis commonly ſaid when any great buſineſs is undertaken; We have ſeen the beginning of it, but who can tell the end of it? We have ſeen the beginning of Wars and Troubles in this Nation, and we have ſeen a great Progreſs, but we know not what the furtheſt end may be; and who could believe they would have come to ſuch an end as now they are at? But God ſaw the end that is now, and what the end will be to the end from the beginning; this is his glory, and it is his peculiar glory. Man cannot ſee what ſhall be done to morrow, nor can he ſee the end or iſſue of what is doing this day. Man cannot ſee a day before him, but God can ſee thouſands and thouſands of years before him; Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world (Acts 15.18.) Where ſtill remember that, thoſe words, from the beginning of the world, are not to be underſtood as if the Lord began to know all things at the beginning of the world, and did not know them before the world began: But the Scripture ſpeaks ſo, becauſe, the beginning of the world, was the firſt or beginning of time, and ſo to know from the beginning of the world leads us to this conſideration, that the knowledg of God, as himſelf, is eternal or from eternity.

Auguſtinus lib. 5. de Geneſi ad literam.

One of the Ancients brings this place of Job, to prove that all things, before they were or had any being themſelves, had a being in the fore-knowledg of God, and that they were infinitely more perfect in the foreknowledg of God, then in their created exiſtencies, becauſe there they are in their fountain and original. What David ſpake (*Pſal.*139. 15,16.) concerning this Body, we may take up in reference to all man, Soul and Body, yea in reference to all things with their iſſues and operations; Their ſubſtance was not hid from him when they were made in ſecret, and curiouſly wrought in the loweſt parts of the Earth. His eye did ſee their ſubſtance, yet being unperfect, and in his Book all their members were written, which in continuance were faſhioned; when as yet there was none of them. God had (as it were) a ſcheme of all the limbs and lineaments of mans Body, before his Body was; before there was any one bone joynt or member, the whole was in the knowledg of God. And may we not we ſpeak thus alſo concerning the whole Body of humane affaires, and divine providences? The ſubſtance of all theſe great things is not hid from God, when men are forming them in ſecret. There is a cloſe contriving and faſhioning of matters in the brain of man; there is as a contriving, ſo a ſhaping up of this Body of actions, and the other Body of actions, the ſubſtance of all which is not hid from God, when as yet there is nothing of them appearing above-board unto men. The Prophet (Iſa. 29. 15.) denounceth a woe unto them that dig deep to hide their counſel from God, and their works are in the dark, and they ſay, who ſeeth us? who knoweth us? But the Lord ſeeth both the ſubſtance and the circumſtances of their works, even while they are imperfect; he ſeeth them not only when they come forth faſhioned and made up, but when they are rude and unpoliſht, yea God ſeeth them not only when they are imperfect in the heads and hearts of men, but even before they come into their heads or hearts: when as yet there was no ſuch thing in the remoteſt imagination of man, he ſaw them in all their ſhapes and colours and compleateſt conſtitutions.

For the cloſe of this point, we may note five properties of this ſight of God.

Firſt, It is intellectual; as God cannot be ſeen, ſo he ſeeth not with bodily eyes.

Secondly, This ſight is full and perfect, he hath not a glimps or glimmering repreſentation of things, he ſeeth not darkly as in a glaſs, but face to face, the face of every thing comes before his face; as we can ſee only the Back-parts of God, ſo we uſually ſee no more but the back-parts of thoſe things which are done by men, yea our ſight is often deceived, and we think we ſee that which indeed we ſee not: but the ſight of God is infallible, he ſeeth every thing (without error) as it is.

Thirdly, This ſight is univerſal, Gods ſight is not bounded by any object, it reacheth all things, not only great but ſmall, even the ſmalleſt, not only the fall of a Prince, but of a Sparrow on the ground (*Mat.*10.29.) not only things neere at hand, but things afar off, things fartheſt off are within the ſight of God. And indeed whereſoever any thing is, it cannot be far from God, who himſelf is not far from every one of us (Acts 17. 27.)

Fourthly, The ſight of God is from everlaſting; God did not begin to ſee, as he did not begin to be. And as this ſight is from everlaſting, ſo it is to everlaſting; as he did not begin to ſee, ſo he doth not ceaſe to ſee that which he ſeeth. As himſelf is, ſo he beholdeth all things by one pure Act.

Fifthly, The ſight of God is operative; God is not a bare ſpectator, his ſight of things gives them their effect, as will appear further in that which followeth. So much of the firſt Act, Then did he ſee it; The ſecond is.

And declare it.] The word which we tranſlate to declare, ſignifies alſo to number, I ſhall touch upon it in both ſignifications, both being made uſe of by interpreters upon the place; firſt as we.

Angelis. Aquin. Primo homini. Cajet. Hanc deus ipſe narravit tunc cum admirabilis rerum ſpecias humanis oculis propoſuit, quæ deum ſapientem eſſe prædicarunt, qui ſciret & potentem qui poſſit egregium illud opus è nihilo producere. Sanct.

Then did he declare it.] To declare a thing notes the manifeſtation of it to others; and here the queſtion is, to whom did God declare it? Some anſwer, he declared it to Angels. Others he declared it to the firſt man, and ſo in him as a common perſon, and the repreſentative of mankind, to all men who ſhould follow.

But it may be queſtioned again, how did God declare it?

I anſwer, There is a two-fold declaration of a thing; firſt, formal; ſecondly, vertual. God declareth formally when he ſpeaks out any matter in ſo many words; and there is no doubt but God did thus declare his wiſdome both to Angels and to men at the beginning of the world. He made alſo a vertual declaration of it by ſuch ſignes and ſignal teſtimonies as made it known and plain beyond words, or as plain as words could make it. Thus the Lord declared his wiſdome, in ſetting up the frame of the world, and in making ſo many wonderful and excellent ſorts of Creatures, to adorne and inhabit it. All theſe declared, as the power of God, that he was able, ſo the wiſdome of God, that he

he knew how to contrive and bring forth ſuch a vaſt and ſtupendious fabrick, with the furniture of it. The Lord made a real declaration of his wiſdome, when he made that which muſt needs declare, yea proclaime and trumpet out the Author of them infinitely wiſe. That wiſdome which lay in the mind of God from Eternity, he did expreſs, ſtamp and print upon viſible things, in the work of Creation, yea and he gives as it were a new and freſh edition of that infinite wiſdome in the works of his providence every day. Then did he declare it.

Hence Note, God hath made known his wiſdome from the beginning of the world.

God declares himſelf three-wayes.
Firſt, By his Word, to the ear.
Secondly, By his Spirit, to the heart.
Thirdly, By his works, to the eye : and theſe are either works of Creation, or Providence. David wonders at the declaration, which is made by the works of God (*Pſ.*19.1.) The Heavens declare the glory of God (it is this word) we cannot want a preacher of the wiſdome of God, while we behold the Heavens) and the firmament ſheweth his handy-work (ſuch work as no hand but his could do) day unto day uttereth ſpeech, night unto night ſheweth knowledg; that is, night and day ſhew the wiſdome and knowledg of God in creating and ordering the motions and ſtations of the Creature.

Learn the wiſdome of God from his works, from what he once did, and from what he hath done ever ſince, and is dayly doing. For even the works of God are ſuch a diſcovery of the wiſdome of God, as will leave all men without excuſe; as the Apoſtle concludes in his firſt Chapter to the Romans. Though the Creatures cannot make ſuch a diſcovery of God to us as will ſave us; yet they make ſuch a diſcovery of God as will convince us, and ſtop our mouths for ever, if by their teaching alone we glorifie him not as God, nor are thankful, but become vain in our imaginations, and our fooliſh hearts are darkned. The Apoſtle there enforms us how ſorely and ſeverely God revenged the neglect of the declaration of his wiſdome by his works; and if ſo, how ſeverely will he revenge the neglect of the declaration of his wiſdome by his word, that word which he hath declared by his ſubſtantial word, his Son Jeſus Chriſt? (Heb. 1.1.) God who at ſundry times, and in divers manners, ſpake in time paſt unto the fathers by the Prophets, hath in theſe laſt dayes ſpoken to us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom alſo he made the world; who being the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himſelf purged our ſins, ſate down at the right hand of the Majeſtie on high. And as this Chriſt the Son of God, is the brightneſs of his Fathers glory, ſo the light of the knowledg of the glory of God ſhineth to us in the face of Jeſus Chriſt (2 Cor. 4.6.) That is, the wiſdome, goodneſs, and mercy of God, which are his glory, are made known to us in the perſon and offices of Jeſus Chriſt. Now, I ſay, if God proceeded ſo ſeverely with thoſe who did not make uſe of that vertual declaration of his wiſdome in the Creature, what will he do to thoſe who ſlight or do not improve what he hath formally declared in the perſon of his Son, and what he declareth daily in the preaching of the Goſpel? Then did he declare it.

Secondly, The word which we render to declare, ſignifies alſo to number, or account, and ſo 'tis uſed in this conjugation (*Pſ.*22. 17.) I may tell (or number) all my bones; the bones of a man may be numbered at any time; but the bones of a man in health and full of fleſh cannot be ſeen diſtinctly, and ſo cannot be told; therefore David, as a type of Chriſt, ſpake thus, to ſhew how he was worn and conſumed with ſorrow, even ſo conſumed, that (as we ſay of a macerated lean man) he might tell or number all his bones, they (as it follows in the ſame verſe) even looked and ſtared upon him. Thus alſo did God tell or number wiſdome, that is the ſeveral wayes and acts of wiſdome. He declared them Arithmetically, or had an exact account of them, how many they were, or how many he purpoſed to put forth among the children of men. God took the number of all things that he would make, and of all that he would do; not that God needs to keep accounts, as men do; but he is ſaid to do ſo, that we may know aſſuredly he knows the number of them as particularly as if he kept a Book of Accounts, and ſet down the number of them.

Hence Note, God had a perfect account in himſelf from the beginning what he would do, and what ever ſhould be done or come to paſs in the world.

He reckoned how many Creatures he would make, and of what ſorts, he alſo reckoned what ſhould be acted in the ſeveral ages of the world, and how every thing ſhould be diſpoſed of; this is beyond our comprehenſion, but the Lord is able to comprehend all things, himſelf being the comprehenſion of all things, All and One is (as we ſay) all one to him, who is himſelf more then all, yea to whom all things are as nothing. The Scripture tells us more then once how the divine Arithmetick numbers thoſe things that are to us innumerable. The Lord ſaith to Abraham, Lift up now thine eyes, and look now towards Heaven, and tell the Stars if thou be able to number them; and he ſaid unto him, ſo ſhall thy ſeed be; that is, they ſhall (as to man) be innumerable or without number : but the Lord knows the number of the Stars (Pſ. 147.4.) He telleth the number of the Stars, he calleth them all by their names. The old Aſtronomers could hardly tell them to eleven hundred, and the Moderns with their moſt artificial glaſſes are as far from numbring, as they are from governing them; but the Lord telleth them, as a Shepheard doth his Flock, or a Maſter his Family, and calleth them all by their names; which implyes, as a diſtinct knowledg of them, ſo a putting of them into their ſeveral imployments. We think the hairs of our head cannot be numbered, yet Chriſt ſaith (Mat. 10. 30.) The hairs of your head are all numbred. Which he ſpake, to aſſure his Diſciples that nothing ſhould befall them but what he had reckoned upon before. Thou numbreſt my ſteps (ſaith Job Ch. 14. 16.) And again (Ch. 31. 4.) Doth not he count all my ſteps? Yea ſaith David (Pſ. 56. 8.) Thou telleſt my wandrings. God hath the number of all our actions, which Job calls his ſteps; and of all our afflictions and perſecutions, which David calls his wandrings, becauſe they gave him many troubleſome and uncertain removes. As the Lord knows the particular account of all that himſelf will do, ſo of all that we do or ſuffer. He is (as we put in the Margin, Dan. 8.13.) The number of ſecrets; or the wonderful numberer. The word Palmoni there uſed by the Prophet, being compounded of Pala, which ſignifies wonderful, and Manah to number, is moſt properly applicable to Chriſt the word and wiſdome of the Father, to whoſe truſt all the ſecrets of providence are committed, and from him tranſlated by ſuch inſtruments as he raiſeth up and ſendeth forth to execute all the Fathers appointments. The Father hath numbered them to him as Mediator and King of Saints, and he fulfils them according to their number, not one of them ſhall be miſſing or ſhall fail. Then did he declare or number it.

Aptavit, diſpoſuit, ſtabilivit

And prepared it.] That's the third Act.

This word alſo hath a twofold ſignification in Scripture, and both very appliable to this place.

Firſt, As we tranſlate, to prepare, to fit, to diſpoſe a thing for ſuch and ſuch a buſineſs, or uſe, to ſuch and ſuch an end or deſign.

Secondly, To eſtabliſh, to confirm, or ſettle; and it is uſeful for us to conſider the Text under both theſe readings.

Firſt, He prepared it, He diſpoſed or directed it; God doth not provide before-hand, for any buſineſs, as men do, that he may have things in readineſs when he hath occaſion to uſe them: As it is ſaid of David, that he made a preparation for the building of the Temple, and laid up vaſt Stores and Treaſures towards the finiſhing of that work by Solomon. But when 'tis ſaid the Lord prepared it, the meaning is, that the wiſdome of God was in a readineſs for all his works both of Creation and Providence, even as if he had been a long time providing and preparing materials for them. The Lord who hath all things alwayes in his hand, doth not (as men) prepare things afore-hand for what himſelf means to do. The ſignification of his pleaſure is ſufficient to put thoſe things into act, which as to us and all ſecond cauſes have not the leaſt appearance of the remoteſt poſſibility.

Hence Note, God from everlaſting did moſt wiſely order and diſpoſe all things to and for their ſeveral ends and iſſues.

All things were ready to be from everlaſting, though they began to be in time. They were prepared to appear, though we can hardly ſay there was any preparation for them, when they did appear. The Temple of Solomon was the more ſpeedily ſet up, becauſe as the Gold and Silver was provided by David, ſo the Timber and Stones were prepared before in the Mountains and Forreſts of Lebanon. All being ready the Fabrick was quickly put together and raiſed. God ſet up this Gate-houſe, the World, in ſix dayes, he could have done it in ſix houres, yea in one moment; there was but a Fiat given, a Word ſpoken, and every thing came forth according to its kind. 'Tis ſo alſo in providentials; the Lord is alwayes ready. We read of a great Prince, who was called The unready, becauſe he was ever unprepared for action; 'tis often ſo with men, they have not things at hand or at a call, but are unprepared and to ſeek when they ſhould do their work; their Inſtrument is out of tune when muſick is look'd for, and they are ſo long a making ready for their buſineſs, that they loſe it, and their expectants are tired inſtead of being relieved. But all things are fit to ſerve Gods deſign, even when nothing ſeems to fit it. When we ſee means in their rudeſt heaps, a very Chaos of confuſion, then are they in a fitneſs and preparedneſs to ſerve Gods appointment and command. What one of the antients ſpake, both truly and comfortably, concerning the grace of God, It knows no tedious preparations (the grace of God is alwayes ready, he is ready to pardon the guilty, and ready to comfort ſorrowful Souls; he is ſo ready and prepared to ſhew mercy, that he prepares us (when unready.) to receive mercy; now as the grace and ſpiritual mercies of God) ſo alſo the external works or providences of God, are alwayes ready, they know no ſluggiſh nor lazy delayes; God can be as quick as he will in all his diſpatches. And as the things of this World are prepared, ſo alſo are thoſe of the World to come. The Kingdome, which is the portion of Saints, is a Kingdome prepared. Then ſhall the King ſay unto them on his right hand, come ye bleſſed of my Father inherit the Kingdome prepared for you from the foundation of the world (Mat. 25. 34.) That form of ſpeaking from the foundation of the World, doth not import as if then it was prepared; for it was prepared from everlaſting, it was ever ready. But as 'tis called a Kingdome prepared, to ſhew the excellency of it; and as 'tis called a Kingdome prepared for them, to ſhew the ſutableneſs of it to all their deſires and needs; ſo 'tis ſaid to be prepared for them before the foundation of the World, to ſhew the freeneſs of Gods grace in beſtowing it upon them. That was prepared for them, before they had any preparation in themſelves for it; only the ſame free grace which prepared it for them before time, did in due time prepare them for it. And thus likewiſe the unquenchable fire, which ſhall be the portion of the wicked, is ſaid to be a fire prepared; go ye curſed into everlaſting fire prepared for the Devil and his Angels. God hath his puniſhments for ſinners, and his reward for Saints in a readineſs. David profeſſeth (Pſ. 108. 1.) O God, my heart is fixed: I will ſing and give praiſe, even with my glory: It is the ſame word uſed in the Text, we tranſlate, my heart is fixed, others render, prepared. A godly man would be alwayes ready to ſerve God; and it is moſt certain God is alwayes ready to ſave and do him good. Comforts and Croſſes, Mercies and Judgments, are determined; and God hath them all in ſtore by him. The Pſalmiſt cryes out in a holy pang or paſſion of joy and thankfulneſs at the remembrance of this; O how great is thy goodneſs, that thou haſt laid up for thoſe that fear thee, which thou haſt wrought for thoſe that truſt in thee before the Sons of men! (Pſal. 31. 19.) God hath treaſures of mercies for his people, as of Snares, Fire and Brimſtone, to rain upon the wicked, as the portion of their cup (Pſal. 11. 6.)

Neſcit tarda molimina ſpiritus ſancti gratia.

Secondly, As the word ſignifies, to confirm, and eſtabliſh, Learn,

God hath ſurely ſettled and eſtabliſhed all the wayes and iſſues of his divine wiſdome from the beginning to the end of the World.

And according to this eſtabliſhment, he ſettles or unſettles all the purpoſes and projects of the ſons of men. The Prophet reports the work of God in both (Iſa. 44. 25, 26.) He fruſtrates the token of the lyars, and maketh diviners mad; he turneth wiſe men backward, and maketh their knowledg fooliſh. And why ſo? becauſe they divine or propheſie of things to come beſides the purpoſe of God; lyars would fruſtrate the truth of God, and therefore he will fruſtrate their tokens, and make them mad with rage to ſee their dreams and predictions croſt. But he confirmeth the word of his Servant, why? becauſe he hath put a word into his Servants mouth, to ſhew what is in his own heart to do; he therefore confirmeth the word of his Servant, becauſe it is a confirmation of his own word; and he performeth the counſel of his Meſſengers, becauſe that is the performance of his own counſel; for ſaith the Lord by the ſame Prophet in purſuance of this great and comfortable truth (Iſa. 64. 10.) My counſel ſhall ſtand, and I will do all my pleaſure. Let men thruſt and ſhove as hard as they will, they cannot put my counſel a hairs breadth out of its place, no nor make it move in its place, it ſhall ſtand (with a non obſtante) notwithſtanding all their ſtirrings and ſtrugglings with it or againſt it; and let men, the greateſt, the wiſeſt of men, be as much diſpleaſed as they will at what I do, I will (and ask them no leave) do all my pleaſure. And thus David ſhews at once the ſtability of Gods counſel, and the inſtability of theirs who either give or take counſel contrary to his (Pſal. 33. 10, 11.) The Lord bringeth the counſel of the Heathen to nought (or, as the Margin hath it, maketh it fruſtrate) he maketh the devices of the people (their fineſt and moſt artificial contrivances) of none effect. The counſel of the Lord ſtandeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all Generations; that is, whatſoever he hath thought, ſhall be done in its proper time and generation. As man periſheth, ſo his thoughts periſh too; that which he hath been ſpinning out and weaving together into a plot many years together may periſh in a moment; but as God himſelf is infinitely removed from the leaſt ſhadow of turning, ſo much more of periſhing, and ſo are his thoughts. The thoughts of God, as God himſelf, abide for ever. The thoughts of God are the proceed of his infinite and eternal wiſdome, of which Job affirms, Then did he prepare or eſtabliſh it, yea this preparation was its eſtabliſhment. That's his Third act concerning wiſdome.

The Fourth and laſt act is thus expreſſed.

And hath ſearched it out.

The word notes a very diligent inquiry after or ſcrutiny about thoſe things that are ſecret and remote. But is any thing remote from or a ſecret unto God? I anſwer; there is a twofold ſearching; firſt, proper, or in kind; ſecondly, improper, or in figure. God doth not ſearch properly as men do for that which they have not; God ſearcheth wiſdome, but he doth not ſearch for it, he alwayes hath it, yea he alwayes is it. Men ſearch upon three grounds; firſt, to get what they never had; ſecondly, to find what they once had, but have loſt; thirdly, to be informed of that they know not. David ſaith (Pſal. 139. 1.) O Lord, thou haſt ſearched and known me. God knows without ſearching, but he is ſaid to ſearch and know becauſe he knoweth as perfectly, yea unconceivably more perfectly then we do by our exacteſt ſearchings. This expreſſion, and ſearched it out, imports not any antecedent imperfection, but the preſent perfection of the knowledg of God. The things that we have ſearched and laboured to be fully acquainted with, of thoſe we have a perfect knowledg; the Lord hath as clear a knowledg of all things as if he had ſearched and ſifted them to the Bran. Zophar ſaith, Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? No, but God can find out all things without ſearching; He that hath all the depths and hights, all the ſecrets and myſteries of wiſdome in his own breaſt, needs not ſearch after it. God often poſes and puzzles us with the things that we hear and ſee, they are as riddles to us; but as the hardeſt things are eaſie to the power of God, ſo ſo the darkeſt things are light, and the moſt intricate plain to the knowledge of God. There are ſome things, that when we do our beſt in ſearching, yet we cannot find. David was upon the croſs point of providence to this which ſtumbled Job; He was troubled to ſee God diſtribute good to evil men, as here Job was to ſee evil diſtributed to good men. And there being (according to the ancient rule) the ſame reaſon of contraries, it muſt needs be, that a man ſhould be alike ſtumbled, to ſee evil befal good men, as to ſee good befal wicked men (Pſal. 73. 16, 17.) When I thought to know this it was too painful for me; I thought to know it, but I was not able to reach it, Until I went into the Sanctuary of God, then underſtood I their end; that is, how matters would end or conclude with them; I uſed holy means to ſee this, I plowed with Gods Heifer to find out Gods Riddle (as Sampſon ſaid to the Philiſtines) and ſo I learned the meaning of it. David had never been able to find out the Riddle, had he not gone into the Sanctuary of God; that is, enquired of God; our knowledge of the ſecrets of God is the gift of God, and that gift comes out of the Sanctuary. And yet there are ſome ſecrets, ſome private boxes in the Providence of God, which though you go to the Sanctuary you ſhall never be able to find out, nor get opened to you. God will keep us in the dark about ſome things, but there is nothing dark to God. The darkneſs is no darkneſs unto him; hidden and plain, dark and light, make no difference with him, Who is light, and in whom there is no darkneſs at all. I ſhall not inſiſt further upon this point, having been led to it upon other paſſages of this Book.

Only take notice that here are many words, a heap of words, not a rude heap, but a moſt divinely rhetorical heap, He ſaw, he declared, he prepared, and he ſearched it out; and all theſe to one and the ſame purpoſe, to ſhew that the diſpenſations of God, though a ſecret to us, are as clearly, fully, and certainly known to him, as thoſe things which are moſt familiar to us, even as the things which we ſee and ſpeak of continually, or as the things which we have long prepared, yea, and ſearched to the bottom. The Apoſtle John, to ſhew the certainty of Chriſts manifeſtation in the fleſh in the fulneſs of time, uſeth a very parallel form of ſpeaking with this in the Text (1 Epiſt. Chap. 1. v. 1, 3.) That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have ſeen with our eyes (that is, undoubtedly ſeen) which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the Word of life, that which we have ſeen and heard declare we unto you, that ye alſo may have fellowſhip with us, namely, in the ſame faith of the Goſpel: Here are three of the five Senſes called to bear their teſtimony to the truth of Chriſts Incarnation, Hearing, Seeing, Feeling, each of the latter carrying a ſtronger teſtimony then the former, to ſee is more then to hear, and to feel is more then to ſee: And to make the truth yet more ſure, both the comparatively weaker teſtimonies are twice repeated, and the ſtronger of the two though not four times yet more then thrice. Hearing is twice repeated, That which we have heard (ver. 1.) That which we have heard (ver. 3.) and ſeeing (I ſay) is more then thrice repeated; for we have, That which we have ſeen (ver. 1.) and That which we have ſeen (ver. 3.) and a third time we have an act of the ſame ſenſe repeated, by a word which (I ſay) ſignifies more then to ſee (ver. 1.) That which we have looked upon; to ſee may be but a tranſient ſudden act, but to look upon is a very fixed and deliberate act; a very pleaſing and delightful act; we looked upon him as the rareſt object, as the very deſire of our eyes; yet this was not all; as we have heard and ſeen, yea, looked upon him; ſo which is yet a ſurer ſenſe, Our hands have handled the Word of life. They handled or touched him, before his reſurrection and after it. Now as the Apoſtle John gathers theſe four words together, hearing, ſeeing, looking, handling, to ſhew the certainty of Chriſts being (who is the Wiſdom of the Father) among them; ſo Job here gathers four words together, to ſhew the certainty of Wiſdoms being with God (which Wiſdom, as I ſhall touch by and by, being perſonally conſidered, is the ſame Chriſt in his Godhead ſpoken of by John) He ſaw it, he declared it, he prepared it, and ſearched it out.

Laſtly, From the complication, and chaining together of all theſe acts of God about that Wiſdom which at firſt made the World, and now diſpoſeth and orders all things in the World, take theſe Corolaries or Deductions.

Firſt, Then, Nothing comes by chance, or fortune.

God hath ſeen and declared, he hath prepared and ſearched that Wiſdom which orders and determines all the motions of the creature; therefore he hath a hand, an over-ruling hand in all, and he will leave nothing to hazzard.

Secondly, Own the Wiſdom of God in all that is done in the world.

Though we ſee much of the folly of men in many things which are done in the world, yet the Wiſdom of God is in them too. While men ſhew forth their luſts, their pride, covetouſneſs, ſelf-ſeeking, yet the Holineſs and Juſtice, the Righteouſneſs and Goodneſs of God are at work too, and will appear in perfect beauty at laſt, through all the deformities and miſ-ſhapeneſs of the works of men.

Thirdly, Do not murmur at, be not impatient under any of the diſpenſations of God.

There is as much preſumption in our diſſatisfactions at the works of providence in governing the World, as there would be in our diſſatisfactions at the work of creation in making the World: And to pick quarrels at what God doth, is not only as unchriſtian like, but as uncreature-like, as to pick quarrels at what God hath made. God hath ſeen and declared his Wiſdom alike in both works, and therefore woe to thoſe who diſlike or would mend his workmanſhip in either.

Fourthly, Then all things ſhall work for good to them that are good and love God.

For nothing works but what God hath ſeen and prepared, and ſearched out in Wiſdom: If a man be once aſſured that nothing ſhall paſs concerning him, but what a wiſe and cordial friend hath ſeen and prepared, ſurely he will never fear that any hurt ſhall befal him; 'tis ſo in this caſe, all that is done in the world God hath ſeen, and ſearched, and prepared it; all paſſeth through his hand and heart, therefore fear not O ye that are upright in heart; for though ye know not what your outward portion may be, or whether your lot will fall in a fair or foul place, as to the eye of ſenſe; yet you may certainly know, and ſee by an eye of faith, that your portion ſhall be good, and your line fall in the faireſt and fitteſt place that the Wiſdom of God could chuſe and pick out for you.

Fifthly, Pray much.

All is in the diſpoſe of God; his Will muſt be done, and his Wiſdom will ſee it done; therefore in all the petitions which you make, let your aim be more at the fulfilling of the Will of God, then at the fulfilling of your own. All is already prepared and in his eye, which he will do for you; and God will not be put out of his own purpoſes, no not by the prayers of his own people; therefore pray that your deſires and the will of God may meet together in prayer. A godly man may pray (as Luther did) O God let my will be done, becauſe his will is reſolved into the will of God. And though he may ſometimes ask that (ſo Chriſt himſelf did, Matth. 20.) which is not the will of God to give him, yet all his askings are according to the will of God; and he would have nothing at any time but what the wiſdom of God hath ſeen, and declared, and prepared, and ſearched out for him before all time; even that wiſdom of which Job teſtifieth, Then did he ſee it, and declare it, he prepared it, and ſearched it out. I have done with this verſe in the firſt reading.

I ſhall now briefly paſs through it again in the ſecond, as this Wiſdom is expounded perſonally; Then he ſaw her, and ſhewed her, and ſettled her, and ſearched her; ſo Maſter Broughton tranſlates. I might ſpeak much about This perſonal Wiſdom, which is no other then Jeſus Chriſt the eternal Son of God; ſo many Interpreters expound this place: For as Job is not at all ſpeaking of that ray or ſhadow of Wiſdom which is in man; ſo neither doth he treat only of that Wiſdom which is an Attribute of God, but he treats of God, The Wiſdom, that is, of that Perſon who is ſpecially called Wiſdom, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. The Wiſdom here treated of by Job is, The Word treated of by the Evangeliſt John (Chap. 1. 1, 2, 3.) In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God, the ſame was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was nothing made that was made.

Hence Note, That, The Son of God is the eternal Wiſdom of God.

This fundamental Article of Faith is diſcourſed of and aſſerted by Solomon at large, in the eighth Chapter of the Proverbs, from the twenty-ſecond to the thirty-ſecond verſe. There he declares, Firſt, The eternity of his Being to the thirtieth verſe: Secondly, The happineſs of his being (v. 31, 32.) and he doth it very near in the language of Job; Solomon brings in wiſdom, perſonal wiſdom ſpeaking thus; The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way: A way is that whereby we go forth, and in which we appear openly to the view of others. And ſo the beginning of Gods way, was the Creation; for in and by that God did (as it were) ſhew himſelf openly, or made himſelf viſible, who is in himſelf altogether inviſible. This is the Apoſtles expreſs Doctrine (Rom. 1. 20.) The inviſible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal Power and Godhead. Thus the Creation was the firſt diſcovery of God; and then, in the beginning, God poſſeſſed that Wiſdom which is without beginning; and which was (as the Text in the Proverbs ſaith further) before his works of old; that is, before his oldeſt works, or before ever he had ſet any impreſſion or ſtamp of his Power and Godhead upon any of his works. Wiſdom was at home with God, or (as the Goſpel ſpeaks) in his boſom, before God went abroad, as being one with him. This eternal being of Wiſdom is aſſerted further (ver. 23.) I was ſet up from everlaſting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was; that is, before that lump or chaos was, of which Moſes ſaith, It was without form and void (Gen. 1. 1.) It was in the laſt times that the Son of God, the eternal Wiſdom, was ſent out to us, but he was ſet up from everlaſting. Chriſt hath now ſet up an everlaſting Kingdom; but he was ſet up as King from everlaſting. Hear Wiſdom affirming this eternity. Solomon to prove the eternity of Wiſdom, or of the Son of God, having ſaid that he was before the earth, as at firſt a rude heap, proceeds to prove the ſame point by an induction of thoſe ſeveral parts into which the earth was divided, and the forms into which it was ſhapen, to all which Wiſdom challenges precedency in time. And thoſe particulars are very worthy to be touched upon for the illuſtration as well as confirmation of this great point of faith. And firſt he begins with depths and fountains (ver. 24.) When there were no depths I was brought forth, when there were no fountains abounding with water: Depths are thoſe channels, thoſe vaſt veſſels or ciſterns, wherein the waters are conveyed or contained, which otherwiſe would overflow the earth, and make it unuſeful both for man and beaſt. Fountains (as the Hebrew word elegantly implyes) are thoſe eyes by which the Seas look out here and there among the hills. And ſuch is the fathomleſs depth of many waters, ſuch the continual flowing of ſome Fountains, that they may ſeem to have flowed continually, even from everlaſting; yet there was a time when there was no depths, all things being wrapt up in that unconceiveable deep of Gods infinity. There was a time when there were no Fountains, the will of God having ſealed up himſelf to himſelf who is the Fountain of all things; yet even before the birth either of Depths or Fountains, by the Wiſdom of God, was the Wiſdom, the eternal Wiſdom of God brought forth. From Depths and Fountains he proceeds to the Hills and Mountains (ver. 25.) Before the Mountains were ſetled, before the Hills, was I brought forth. Of which he ſaith, that they were ſetled, or (as the Hebrew elegancy hath it) drowned, becauſe the roots and bottoms of them are laid ſo deep out of ſight that they cannot be diſcovered, as a drowned Land cannot. Having ſpoken of the Earth in its rude unformed maſs (ver. 23.) he mentions the Earth again as ſeparated and formed (ver. 26.) While as yet he had not made the Earth, nor the Fields, nor the higheſt part of the duſt of the World; that is, the open Fields, Plains, and Champions, which are fitted for Corn and Graſs, for tillage or for travel; theſe he calleth, The higheſt part (or head) of the duſt of the World, where indeed all the duſt is raiſed, and moſt of the buſineſſes which concern mans life are tranſacted and done. Now as in theſe former paſſages, Wiſdom, or the Son of God, ſhewed the exiſtence of his Perſon eternally before the Creation, ſo in the twenty-ſevenrh, twenty-eighth, and twenty-ninth verſes following, he declares his preſence at, yea, and efficiency in the whole work of creation, and he in them makes mention of four parts of that mighty work: Firſt, Of the Heavens: Secondly, Of the Air: Thirdly, Of the Waters: Fourthly, Of the Earth. When he prepared the Heavens, I was there; when he ſet a compaſs upon the face of the Depth (the Heavens compaſs about all the inferiour bodies both of water and earth) when he eſtabliſhed the Clouds above (that they ſhould not break nor diſſolve into Rain, but by his order) when he ſtrengthened the Fountains of the deep (that is, when he gave a law to the waters under ground, not to iſſue themſelves immoderately, but only for the uſe and benefit of man) when he gave to the Sea his decree, that the waters ſhould not paſs his commandment. Here he ſpecifies the waters upon the earth, to which (they being ſo vaſt and unruly a body) he by an unalterable Decree ſets liſts and limits, leſt they ſhould overwhelm the dry Land, and all the Inhabitants of it. Laſtly, He ſpeaks of the eſtabliſhment of the Earth, when he appointed the foundations of the earth (that is, made it ſo firm that it ſhould remain perpetually unmoveable, as it were, upon its baſis) then I was by him, as one brought up with him: As if he had ſaid, I the eternal Son was ever with the eternal Father, and I was daily (or day day, that is, continually) his delight, or delights, for the Hebrew word is plural without a ſingular, as the Latine word deliciæ is. Nothing can make up a fit delight for God, but the contemplation of his own Wiſdom, Power, Goodneſs, Eſſence, and Perfection, and that is the perfection or a plurality of delights. Rejoycing (or, as the word imports, ſporting) alwayes before him. The Son is the joy of the Father, and the Father is the joy of the Son; and yet the Son hath another joy, as it follows in the Text, rejoycing in the habitable part of his earth, and my delights were with the ſons of men; that is, taking pleaſure in the whole work of creation, but eſpecially in the ſons of men, both as they were all at firſt formed and faſhioned in Adam, and in him bearing the ſtamp of Gods Image in their original righteouſneſs and integrity, as alſo foreſeeing that bleſſed eſtate to which they ſhould be reſtored after the fall, by his own manifeſtation in the fleſh, in which, both by doing and ſuffering he was fore-ordained to accompliſh the work of mans redemption, and to conform by a new creation all his redeemed ones to himſelf; yea, to make them one with himſelf through the mighty operation of his Spirit. Thus we ſee a large proof of the priority of Wiſdom, or of the Son of God, before all Creatures, and of his joynt work with the Father and the Spirit in the framing, making, and eſtabliſhing of all things. And this is the ſame truth which is often aſſerted in the new Teſtament and writings of the holy Apoſtles, eſpecially in that (Col. 1. 16, 17.) For by him were all things created, that are in heaven and that are in earth, viſible and inviſible, whether they be thrones or dominions, or principalities or powers, all things were created by him and for him; and he is before all things, and in him all things conſiſt. He is alſo called, The beginning of the creation of God (Rev. 3. 14.) Not the paſſive beginning, or he that was firſt created, but the active beginning, or he by whom the creation was begun. This perſonal Wiſdom is truly and properly the only begotten Son of God, as himſelf teſtified (John 5. 18.) Therefore the Jews ſought the more to kill him, not only becauſe he had broken the Sabbath, but ſaid alſo that God was his Father, making himſelf equal with God.

Πατέρα ἴδιον ἔλεγε τὸν Θεὸν.

Firſt, He is Gods own Son (Rom. 8. 32.) His Son not only as Socinians ſay, becauſe his conception was by the holy Ghoſt; but he is the Son of God by an eternal, unſpeakable generation: Nor is he,

Secondly, The Son of God only, as they teach, becauſe he was ſet apart in a ſpecial manner for the work of mediation (John 10. 36.) Say ye of him whom the Father hath ſanctified, and ſent into the world, thou blaſphemeſt, becauſe I ſaid, I am the Son of God.

Nor is he called the Son of God only in the third place, becauſe of that ſpecial love that God bare unto him (Matth. 3. 17.) And lo a voice from Heaven, ſaying, that is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed.

Nor is he the Son of God only in the fourth place, becauſe of his reſurrection, in which he was mightily declared to be the Son of God (Rom. 1. 4.)

Neither fifthly is he the Son of God only, becauſe of his high exaltation (Heb. 5. 5.) as Socinians grant. But Chriſt is the Son of God, becauſe begotten of God from everlaſting. He is the Son of God by nature, as Believers are his Sons by adoption and grace, or by the grace of adoption. Him God ſaw, and by him God did declare, and prepare, and ſearch out all things.

This Doctrine of the eternity of perſonal Wiſdom, or that Jeſus Chriſt is the eternal Son of God, is the pillar of our Chriſtian faith. And Chriſt himſelf intending to inſtruct his Diſciples in this fundamental truth, propoſeth two Queſtions to them: Firſt, What opinion others had of him (Matth. 16. 13.) Whom do men ſay, that I, the Son of man am? The Diſciples anſwer (ver. 14.) Some ſay, thou art John the Baptiſt, ſome Elias, and others Jeremiah, or one of the Prophets. When Chriſt heard of theſe various apprehenſions which were abroad concerning him, he preſently asks his Diſciples a ſecond queſtion (ver. 15.) But whom ſay ye that I am? Peter in the name and as the mouth of the reſt gives anſwer (ver. 16.) Thou art Chriſt the Son of the living God. Chriſt was ſo highly ſatisfied with this anſwer, that firſt he pronounceth him bleſſed (ver. 17.) and ſecondly declares, That this confeſſion is the rock upon which the Church is built; and aſſures him, that, Againſt this rock the gates of Hell ſhall never prevail (ver. 18.) The underſtanding muſt be ſet right as well as the affections about the things of God, and not only to know that there is a Chriſt, but alſo to know who Chriſt is, is of abſolute neceſſity to ſalvation.

Job having ſhewed that there is an unſearchable Wiſdom in the works of God, and that they were wrought by this unſearchable Wiſdom, leaſt it ſhould be thought that man is ſhortened in point of wiſdom, and kept in the dark, therefore he proceeds to ſhew, that as firſt there is a natural wiſdom common to all men; and ſecondly, a divine wiſdom proper unto God; ſo thirdly, there is a ſpiritual and heavenly wiſdom, that is common to all godly men. And unto man he ſaid, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom, &c.

VERS. 28.

And unto man he ſaid, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom, and to depart from evil that is underſtanding.

IT hath been ſhewed in the opening of this Chapter, that Job diſcourſeth of a threefold Wiſdom.

Firſt, That which is converſant in the finding out the ſecrets of Nature, the Gold and Silver, the Iron and the precious Stones, which are ſtowed and ſtored in the bowels of the Earth.

Secondly, That Wiſdom which ſecretly, yet efficaciouſly orders and diſpoſeth all the affairs and changes of this world.

Thirdly, That Wiſdom which conſiſts in the worſhip and ſervice of God, whether internal or external.

The firſt ſort of Wiſdom is common to and attainable by all men, whether good or bad, holy or prophane, who have but the light of Nature and the uſe of Reaſon.

The ſecond ſort of Wiſdom is God, or reſerved to God himſelf alone.

The third ſort of Wiſdom is peculiar to the Saints, to thoſe who are holy and believing, and that's the Wiſdom diſcovered in this verſe.

Verſe 28. And unto man he ſaid, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom, &c.

As if he had ſaid, O man, though thou art ſhut out of the ſecrets of God, though thou art not able to dive into the depth of thoſe myſteries of providence, or give an account of thoſe various diſpenſations which thou ſeeſt here in the world, yet thou needeſt not complain that thou art at a loſs for wiſdom; do not think, becauſe thou haſt not this piece of wiſdom, that therefore there's no wiſdom left for thee; thou mayeſt be wiſe enough, even wiſe to ſalvation, though thou haſt not the compaſs of this ſort of wiſdom. Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom, &c. That's the general ſcope and tendency of theſe words.

And unto man he ſaid.

Some read, But unto man he ſaid; it is an indefinite ſpeech, and is therefore in this place (being in a neceſſary matter) rightly underſtood univerſally; unto man, that is, unto all men; and ſo it ſtands in oppoſition to a threefold reſtriction.

Firſt, Not to the firſt man only, as ſome expound, reſtraining the words to the perſon of Adam, who was firſt created; as if this were the firſt leſſon that ever God taught man in the perſon of the firſt man Adam (That word which was the proper name of the firſt man, is become appellative to his poſterity) 'Tis, doubtleſs, a truth that God ſaid unto Adam, as ſoon as created, if not expreſly yet equivalently, The fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom: And 'tis as true, that the Devil by his Agent the Serpent preached other doctrine to Adam, he taught Adam to get wiſdom by caſting off the fear of the Lord; or aſſured him that he ſhould be wiſe, if he would not fear to tranſgreſs the Commandment of the Lord: The Lord hath ſaid indeed, thou muſt not eat of this tree of the knowledge of good and evil, and he hath ſcared thee with a threatening, that in the day that thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt dye the death; but ſaith Satan, Eat, and thou ſhalt be as God, knowing good and evil. Yet I conceive this interpretation too narrow for the Text, if taken preciſely or excluſively: This leſſon, That the fear of God is wiſdom, is extendible to all mankind; and therefore,

Secondly, Theſe words, To man, are oppoſed alſo to this or that particular man of Adam's poſterity; God did not ſay this unto one, or two, to a third, or a fourth, as if it were a doctrine for ſome men, but he ſaid it to man, to men univerſally, The fear of God, this is wiſdom.

Thirdly, He ſaid it unto man; that is, not to this or that ſort of men, but to men of all ſorts: He hath not ſaid this to the rich, or to the poor alone, nor to the great, or to the ſmall alone, he hath not ſaid this to Maſters alone, or to Servants alone, he hath not ſaid this to Parents alone, or to Children alone, but he hath ſaid it to man, even to all the ſons of Adam, of what ſort or condition, of what quality or degree ſoever. Sometimes this phraſe, The children or ſons of Adam, is put by way of difference or ſpecialty for men of low degree, or for inferiours (Pſal. 49. 2.) Give ear all ye Inhabitants of the earth, both low and high. The Hebrew is, Sons of Iſh; that is, thoſe that are high and mighty, and Sons of Adam, that is, thoſe that are low and mean. Yet ſome doctrines which ſerve properly for one man, or for ſome one ſort of men, will not ſerve for, nor ſuit another man, or ſort of men; there are ſome Commands peculiar to the rich, and ſome to the poor; ſome to Magiſtrates, and ſome to Subjects; what God enjoyns one of theſe, he doth not enjoyn the other; but when God ſaith, The fear of the Lord is wiſdom, this leſſon is given (Le-Adam) 'tis for man. 'Tis a catholick doctrine, not only in regard of the truth of it, but of the uſefulneſs and extent of it. He ſaith it to Parents as well as to Children, to Maſters as well as to Servants, to the Rich as well as to the Poor, to the Magiſtrate as well as to the Subject.

But though it be a doctrine fitted to the capacity of all ſorts of men, yet we find it more emphatically applyed to great men, or more eſpecially Calculated for the Meridian of Magiſtracy: To Magiſtrates, to men in power, who ſhould be the beſt men, and Chiefs in wiſdom, as well as in authority, God ſaith, This is your wiſdom to fear me, and ſtand in aw of my dreadful Majeſty. When Jethro, perceiving the burden of government too heavy for the ſhoulders of Moſes alone, adviſed Moſes to divide it, he gave this among other characters of men fit for that office (Exod. 18. 21.) Thou ſhalt provide out of all the people, able men, ſuch as fear God, men of truth, and hating covetouſneſs, and place ſuch over them, to be Rulers of thouſands, &c. By how much Magiſtrates are lifted up above the fear of men, and by how much all other men ought to fear them, by ſo much ſhould they be carried out more then other men in the fear of God. David who was the chief Magiſtrate in Iſrael, layes this down as the rule of Magiſtracy (2 Sam. 23. 1, 2.) He that ruleth among men muſt be juſt, ruling in the fear of God. That man was a ſtrange piece of Magiſtracy, of whom it is ſaid (Luke 18. 4.) that He neither feared God, nor regarded man: That Scripture is a Parable of the unjuſt Judge, and of the diſtreſſed Widow, begging for redreſs of her wrongs, and deliverance from the oppreſſion of her Adverſary, but he had no regard to her trouble, only her clamour and importunity troubled him. They who are in power and fear not God, will have very little regard of men: Therefore this is a doctrine for the higheſt in authority. They who have the greateſt name among men, have the greateſt reaſon to fear the Name of God. That Name which is to be feared by all men, ought eſpecially to be feared by them whom all men fear: So then though this be not a Doctrine for ſome men, or for ſome ſorts of men only, yet it chiefly belongs to thoſe who are above other men.

And unto man he ſaid.

Who ſaid it? The Lord himſelf ſaid it; he is the Author and principal Teacher of this Doctrine; all holy Doctrine cometh from God as the Author, and he is the Teacher of it; if not by his own mouth, yet by the mouths of his Meſſengers and Miniſters. Job doth not ſay unto man, I ſay, fear the Lord, this is my counſel unto man, but (unto man he, that is, the Lord ſaid) the fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom: The Lord himſelf is the Publiſher of this truth.

But how did the Lord ſay it? We may expound it three wayes.

Firſt, He ſaid it in the beginning of time to the ear of the firſt Man, who ſoon after hoped and attempted to get wiſdom by diſobeying him, which is to caſt off this fear.

Secondly, The Lord hath ſaid it to the eye of Man, in proceſs of time, cauſing it to be written in his Book, and kept upon everlaſting record: This golden ſentence is a Scripture treaſure, The fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom.

Thirdly, The Lord hath ſaid it to the heart and conſcience of Men; he hath ſaid it, and ſaid it often by his Spirit; he hath made many to own this doctrine, to ſee and walk in the power of this truth, to do all under the command of this truth; the fear of the Lord is upon them in all they do or ſay; And unto man he ſaid,

Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom.

The word Behold, is ſet before this divine ſentence, to awaken attention, and rouſe up the ſleepy ſpirit of man: When this Doctrine was preached by God, he, as it were, ſounded a Trumpet before it, and called mankind to ſee as well as to hear this truth.

Behold, the fear of the Lord.

But what is this fear of the Lord? We are not to underſtand it of that fear which the Lord feareth, for in a ſtrict ſence the Lord, whom all muſt fear, feareth nothing; he is infinitely above all fear. We read indeed, the Lord ſometimes expreſſing himſelf, as having a fear for us, but he is never afraid of us. Thus Moſes repreſents the Lord almoſt reſolving, and yet fearing the iſſue of what he had reſolved upon concerning his people (Deut. 32. 26, 27.) I ſaid I would ſcatter them into corners, I would make the remembrance of them to ceaſe from among men, were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy. How did the Lord fear the wrath of the Enemy? Was he afraid of the Enemies of the people of Iſrael, leſt they ſhould enter upon his Dominions, or hurt him in his Eſtate? Did the Lord thus fear the wrath of the Enemies of his people? Not at all! He never feared any Enemy, he never feared any ſuch fear; but when he ſaith, Were it not that I feared the wrath of the Enemy, he feared it for his peoples ſake, or he feared it, not as if the wrath of the Enemy could hurt him, or impede his happineſs; but leſt they ſhould have an occaſion to darken the glory of what he ſhould do righteouſly in afflicting his people, as if not his juſtice but their power had done it, or leſt they ſhould over-do it; and as he ſpeaks (Zach. 1. 15.) When he was a little diſpleaſed, they ſhould help forward the affliction. As his meaning is clearly explained in the words which follow in Deuteronomy; Leſt their Adverſaries ſhould behave themſelves ſtrangely, and leſt they ſhould ſay our hand is high, and the Lord hath not done all this. As if he had ſaid, If I give my people up to their Enemies, they will inſult and trample on them without mercy or meaſure, and ſay, Where is now their God? Or, 'Tis not God but we who have brought them down: Of this blaſphemy againſt himſelf, and tyranny over his people, the Lord himſelf was afraid; he is ſometimes afraid for man, but he is never afraid of man. He is ſometimes afraid (to ſpeak after the manner of men) to put an occaſion into the hands of wicked men to vent their malice and their luſts; but he is never afraid of any detriment which the higheſt actings of their malice and of their luſts can do to him. And as for this Text in Job, it ſpeaketh not of any fear at all which the Lord (in any ſence) feareth, but of a fear wherewith the Lord is to be feared. And thus in a twofold ſence it is called, the fear of the Lord.

First, Becauſe he is the object of it, or the perſon to be feared.

Genitivus objecti & efficientis.

Secondly, Becauſe he is the giver of it; it is he alone that works this fear, and puts it into the hearts of his people. For as true ſaving faith is a faith of the operation of God (Col. 2. 12.) ſo alſo is true-Goſpel fear. And as there is a kind of faith which is but a humane faith, a faith received by rradition, or wrought by the example and perſwaſion of man; ſo there is a fear which is not the fear of the operation of God; it is a fear wrought either by humane compulſion, by the laws and commands of men, or at beſt by the appearances and revelation of the wrath of God againſt ſinners; not by the operation of the Spirit of God in turning the heart from ſin. But this holy fear is called the fear of the Lord, becauſe the Lord works it, as he promiſeth to do in the Covenant of grace; I will put my fear into their hearts, and they ſhall never depart from me (Jer. 32. 40.) Slaviſh fear makes us run from God; holy fear keeps us cloſe to God: That fear which comes from God will not ſuffer us to depart from God: Holy fear is the fear of the Lord, both as he is the Object of it, and as he is the Author of it.

The fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom.

The fear of the Lord is not wiſdom formally, for ſo wiſdom is one thing, and fear is another; but the fear of the Lord is wiſdom vertually; or as ſome ſpeak, it is the way to wiſdom, or a means leading to it.

But what kind of wiſdom is this fear? He doth not mean, firſt, the wiſdom of Philoſophers; nor ſecondly, the wiſdom of the Politicians and Princes of this world; for uſually the fear of the Lord is a ſtranger to, or very ſeldom found among them. Their great deſign is to be feared as if they were Gods, who are leaſt acquainted with the fear of God.

So then ſpiritual wiſdom, holy wiſdom, the wiſdom of Saints, wiſdom to ſalvation, only that wiſdom which looks to and provides for an eternal Intereſt, is the fear of the Lord. And unto man he ſaid, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom.

Again, Fear is not to be taken here excluſively, as if it were ſolitary and alone, without the ſociety of other graces: This fear cannot go alone, where any one grace is, there are all graces in the ſeed, and matter of them; for though all graces do not act alike in every Saint, yet all graces are in every Saint; there is a formation of every grace, though not an equal operation of every grace, at leaſt not an apparent operation of every grace alike in every regenerate perſon. Some one grace operates ſo ſtrongly in this or that perſon, that it carrieth the name of all; in ſome faith operates ſo eminently, that they are renowned only for their faith; in others fear operates ſo powerfully, that they are taken notice of only for their fear; in a third ſort, patience hath ſuch a perfect work, that they are recorded only for their patience. In Abraham faith was chief, and therefore he is called faithful Abraham (Gal. 3. 9.) He is not there called faithful, becauſe true to the truſt committed him by God, as Moſes is ſaid to be faithful in all his houſe (Heb. 3. 2.) but becauſe he truſted ſo ſtrongly to receive that which God had promiſed him. Job's patience was wonderful, that, as if he had no other grace to be remembred or reported, it is only ſaid, Te have heard of the patience of Job (James 5. 11.) Obadiah was ſo much in the exerciſe of holy fear, that all his graces are expreſſed by that one (1 Kings 18. 3.) Now Obadiah feared the Lord greatly, and all that he profeſſed of himſelf as to godlineſs was no more but this (ver. 12.) I thy ſervant (ſaid he to Eliah) feared the Lord from my youth. Now as Abraham had all graces as well as faith, and Job all graces as well as patience, and Obadiah all graces as well as fear; ſo all graces concur to the making up of true wiſdom: Yet becauſe holy fear is ſo ſpecial an ingredient in true wiſdom, and the opinion which the Wiſe men of this world have of it, is, that 'tis a very ſimple thing, and almoſt inconſiſtent with wiſdom, therefore the Spirit of God, not to exclude or diſparage other graces, as faith, love, ſelf-denial, &c. But to give a reputation to this which is ſo ſubject to diſreſpect, or (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks in another caſe, 1 Cor. 12. 23.) that what we think leſs honourable, upon that he might beſtow more abundant honour: He hath put this crown of honour upon the head of holy fear; The fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom; he doth not ſay, Fear is wiſdom, but the fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom. And therefore that we may diſtinguiſh the Point and Doctrine a little more clearly, πιστοὶ dicuntur non tam qui fidem datam ſervant, quam qui credant Dei promiſſis. Bez. in Matth. 6. 31.

Note, Firſt, There is a fear which is not our wiſdom.

Job ſpeaks of a particular and ſignal fear (Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom) He doth beſtow this elogium or high commendation upon fear in general; but reſtrains it to the fear of the Lord, or to holy fear. Some fear is baſe and ignoble, 'tis folly, madneſs, 'tis torment and vexation; but the fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom; and it will not be unprofitable a little to open that, and to ſhew that there is a fear, yea, ſeveral ſorts of fear which are unworthy of a wiſe man, much more of this excellent ſtile or title, To be called wiſdom.

Firſt, There is a meer natural fear, which at beſt is but a paſſion, and moſtly it proves a perturbation; if good things be preſent they cauſe joy, and if abſent ſorrow: Evil, as preſent, cauſeth ſorrow, as abſent, fear; this is not the wiſdom here ſpoken of; Natural fear is nothing elſe but a trouble of mind ariſing from the apprehenſion of ſome approaching evil, or impendent danger: This is an unſeparable companion of mans nature ever ſince man ſinned, man cannot ſhake it off; and I may ſay of it, though it be not alwayes ſinful, yet, as things ſtand now with us, it is alwayes an effect of ſin, as ſickneſs is; to be ſick is not a ſin, but it is an effect of ſin; to be aſham'd of doing evil is not a ſin, but it is an effect of ſin; to be ſorrowful is not a ſin, but ſorrow is an effect of ſin; ſo there is a natural fear which is not a ſin, but yet it is an effect of ſin; and therefore Chriſt himſelf, when he took upon him our nature, and was cloathed with our fleſh, he was not exempted from natural fear, but as it degenerates into, and is mingled with ſinful fear. Man, who is himſelf degenerate, ſeldom fears naturally without fearing ſinfully (ſin mingles with our holy actions, much more and more eaſily with our natural paſſions) but Chriſt knew no ſin, though he knew fear; when he was retired in the Garden at prayer, the Text ſaith (Mark 14. 33, 34.) He began to be ſore amazed, and to be very heavy, and ſaith unto them (that is, to his three Diſciples) My ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful unto death. This natural fear, with ſuch like unpleaſant affections, Chriſt ſubmitted to take up, when he took fleſh, being made like unto us in all things, yet without ſin. And if Chriſt who was ſo holy that he knew no ſin, then much more may we and the holieſt of Saints, who are yet ſinful, fall under the ſurpriſals of this fear. When Jacob's Meſſengers returned with a report of his Brother Eſau's march towards him with four hundred men, the Text ſaith (Gen. 32. 7.) Then Jacob was greatly afraid and diſtreſſed. And again at the eleventh verſe, he prayeth, Deliver me from the hand of my Brother, from the hand of Eſau, for I fear him, leſt he will come and ſmite me, and the Mother with the Children. We find Moſes in a fit of fear upon a like account (Exod. 2. 14.) he having ſought to reconcile the two Iſraelites that were fallen out, ſaying, Why do ye wrong one another, ſeeing ye are Brethren? One of them ſaid unto him, Who made thee a Prince and a Judge over us? Intendeſt thou to kill me as thou didſt the Egyptian? And Moſes feared and ſaid, Surely the thing is known. And preſently he fled upon it, not daring to abide the danger of that diſcovery. Samuel was a man eminent for godlineſs and integrity, yet we read that he was in fear (1 Sam. 16. 2.) when God bid him go and anoint David King in the room of Saul, he ſtartled at the employment and ſaid, If Saul hear it he will kill me: As if he had ſaid, Should I adventure upon this ſervice and anoint David openly, I ſhall endanger my life to the wrath of Saul. All theſe holy men were afraid at the appearance of danger, and, I ſuppoſe, ſinned not in fearing. Seeing we may charitably conclude, that they feared not ſo much (if at all) becauſe they were afraid to dye, as becauſe they deſired to do yet more ſervice for God and his people with their lives.

Secondly, There is a fear which is not only a fruit of ſin, but ſinful fruit. Such is all fear (how great ſoever the danger is) when 'tis immoderate and diſtruſtful. 'Tis not ſinful to fear danger ſo, as to uſe lawful means to avoid it; but 'tis alwayes ſinful to fear danger, either ſo much as ſinks our ſpirits under it, or makes us utterly deſpair of avoiding it. Such was the fear of the Iſraelites (Exod. 14. 11, 12, 13.) who though they had been newly delivered out of Egypt by the mighty hand of God, yet when they ſaw Pharaoh behind them, and the red Sea before them, they preſently gave themſelves for loſt and dead, and could neither think nor ſpeak of any thing but their graves, not preparingly (as all, at all times, eſpecially at ſuch times ought) but deſpairingly, which none, in their ſence, at any time ſhould (ver. 11.) And they ſaid unto Moſes, becauſe there were no graves in Egypt, haſt thou taken us away to dye in the Wilderneſs. Wherefore haſt thou dealt thus with us, to carry us forth out of Egypt, it had been better for us to ſerve the Egyptians, then to dye in the Wilderneſs. Words ſo full of unmanly fear, and ungodly infidelity, that nothing can be ſaid worſe of them then they are. Therefore Moſes rebukes their cowardiſe and diſtruſt (ver. 13.) Fear ye not, ſtand ſtill, behold the ſalvation of the Lord: As if he had ſaid, For ſhame be not thus afraid, did God but the other day deliver you out of the hand of Pharaoh and his Egyptians, by working ten wonders, yea, miracles, and can ye not believe that he will (if need be) work one more to keep you out of their hands? Such alſo was the fear which King Ahaz was arreſted with, upon the report of an hoſtile Invaſion intended againſt him (Iſai. 7. 2.) It was told the houſe of David, ſaying, Syria is confederate with Ephraim, and his heart was moved, and the heart of his people were ſhaken as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind: Therefore the Lord diſpatched the Prophet to him with this meſſage; Go, meet Ahaz, and ſay unto him, be ſtill and be quiet, fear not; away with this fear, it is ſinful. Such alſo was the fear of the Diſciples (Math. 8. 26.) as ſoon as the ſtorm was up, their fears were up, and they were in as much hazzard of being overſet with their own boyſterous paſſions, as the veſſel was with the winds: They forgot that the Lord High Admiral of all the Ocean, and Commander of thoſe Winds was aboard the Ship: For though they applyed to Chriſt to keep them from ſinking, yet their faith was much ſunk, as his anſwer imports; Firſt, rebuking their fears, and then the winds, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Thus he rebuked the tempeſt within, and then the tempeſt without; firſt he calm'd their hearts, and then the Sea. The leſs acquaintance any have with God, the more acquaintance they have with this fear, and the bondage of it. And the Heathen, who were altogether ignorant of God in Chriſt, were ſo deeply affected, yea, tormented with it, that, as ſome of the Ancients inform us, they worſhipped it as a God. This fear is ſo far from being our wiſdom, that it is our folly, our ſhame and ſin. Yet

Thirdly, There is a fear more fooliſh and ſinful then this, called ſuperſtitious fear. If a Hare croſs their way, if a Mouſe gnaw their clothes, if the Salt at table fall towards them, if they bleed three drops at the Noſe, they account theſe ominous preſages of ſome ſad diſaſter, and ſo are miſerably diſcompoſed with fears of it. Yea, there is a very vain and wicked humour in ſome to know their own (as they term it) fortunes; and therefore not reſting in the will of God concerning themſelves in his providences and proviſions for them, they will needs be prying into ſecrets, and attempt to know what God hath no where revealed. To ſatisfie this ungodly curioſity, ſome venture to conſult with Witches and Wizards, with Sooth-ſayers (as they call them, though indeed Falſe-ſayers, or Lye-ſayers) and Aſtrologers (which kind of Artiſans (and I look upon it as a ſad ſign of Apoſtacy from the power of Godlineſs) are much traded with in theſe dayes.) And from theſe their Clients hear ſometimes very unpleaſing predictions, and are told that they ſhall have many croſſes, that the Heavens do not favour them, that they were born under the Aſpect of ſome malignant Planet. Theſe uncomfortable bodements fill their heads with many diſtracting cares, and their hearts with perplexing fears, which afflict them alwayes with a ſenſe of that (which if truly foreſpoken) they can but once or at laſt feel. We have a clear inſtance of this in Saul, who having heard his own fatal overthrow foretold by that counterfeit Samuel, the Devil in Samuel's appearance and mantle, the Text ſaith (1 Sam. 28. 20,) Saul fell ſtraightway all along on the earth, and was ſore afraid, becauſe of the words of Samuel. We read the like reports in Suetonius Herodian, and other Hiſtorians, of the diſmal diſtractions of ſome of the Roman Emperours, Severus, Adrian, Domitian, who conſulting with men skilful in thoſe curious, but helliſh Arts, were told either when they ſhould dye, or what calamities they ſhould meet with in their lives. Thus alſo were many of the Heathens diſtempered and drunk with fears, when they had applyed to their cozening Oracles, which were indeed the Devil's Prophets. Some of our modern Writers teſtifie, that in their travels into the Eaſtern Countreys, they found the Inhabitants miſerably tortured upon the rack of theſe ſuperſtitious fears; yea, giving ſo much credit to their fooliſh Diviners, that whatſoever they foretold was taken for granted, and that the iſſue would aſſuredly anſwer their predictions; ſo that if they were foretold of ſickneſs, they would be ſick with conceit, and dye, as they were foretold: Their opinion was ſo fixed, and their ſinful faith ſo ſtrong, that it often pull'd upon them the evil apprehended, and verified the uncertain judgings of their Wizards with their own deſtruction.

All of all theſe ſorts (as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Pſ. 53. 5.) Feared where no fear was; and ſo (as Solomon tells us, Prov. 10. 4.) That which they feared came upon them: And God the living and true God, concluded concerning theſe Adorers of Idols, or dunghil Gods, as he did in ſomewhat a like caſe againſt his ancient People turning to Idolatry (Iſa. 66. 4.) I alſo have choſen their deluſions, and have brought their fears upon them.

Now as the beſt of theſe fears, hitherto toucht upon, is but natural, ſome ſinful, and others diabolical, and ſo at furtheſt diſtance from that fear of that Lord, in the Text, which is our wiſdom: So

Fourthly, We may go one ſtep further in the negative, to ſhew, that there is a fear of the Lord, which is not our wiſdom, the wiſdom intended here by Job. For though God be the object of it, though it may be called a fear of God, yet 'tis not ſuch a fear as God calls his People to, or a fear purely according to the mind of God.

But what is this fear, or how may we diſtinguiſh it from that fear of the Lord which is our wiſdom?

I anſwer, 'Tis that fear of the Lord, I mean, which is commonly called ſlaviſh fear; when we fear God only as a Judge, and as a Revenger, ſuch a fear of the Lord is not ſtrictly our wiſdom, though poſſibly it may be a means, or at leaſt an occaſion to lead us to that which is. Of this fear the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 8. 15.) Ye have not received the ſpirit of bondage again to fear; that is, to fear like Slaves or Malefactors, as formerly ye did. And again (1 John 4. 18.) There is no fear in love, but perfect love caſteth out fear. What fear doth perfect love caſt out? The next words reſolve us, Becauſe fear hath torment. He that fears God ſlaviſhly, is tormented in every duty he performs to God. When he prayes he is tormented; when he hears he is tormented; when he doth but think of God he is tormented. And that firſt, In the very act of the duty, he hath no ſutableneſs to it, no comfort in it. Secondly, As to the iſſue of the duty, he doubts whether ever he ſhall have an anſwer, or any benefit by it. But the fear of the Text (which is our wiſdom) is in love; love mingles with it, and is co-natural to it. The more we love the Lord as his Children, the more we fear him; and the more we fear him, the more we love him; there is not only a reciprocation, but an increaſe between theſe two. Love hath much holy fear with it; but it hath no ſervile or tormenting fear in it: None find more love from God then they that fear him moſt. And where the pure love of God moves and acts the ſoul in duty, there's no lodging left for baſe and ſlaviſh fear, or if the principle of it lodge there, yet the prevalency of it doth not, nor can it either overpower the ſoul, or deſtroy its peace.

We find frequent inſtance and reproof of that tormenting fear in Scripture. We read, how, That terrible ſtate, in which the Law was publiſhed upon Mount Sinai, did much amaze the Iſraelites (Exod. 20. 18, 19.) And all the people ſaw the thunderings, and the lightenings, and the noiſe of the trumpet, and the mountain ſmoaking, and when the people ſaw it, they removed and ſtood afar off; and they ſaid unto Moſes, Speak thou with us, and we will hear; but let not God ſpeak to us leaſt we dye. Moſes (at the twentieth verſe) returns this anſwer; Fear not: As if he had ſaid, I ſee you are ſurpriſed with a wonderful fear at this appearance of God, ſpeaking to you with ſuch dreadful Majeſty in thunderings and lightenings; but lay down this fear, and I will tell you of another fear, which you ought to take up; For God is come to prove you, and that his fear may be before your eyes that you ſin not. This may ſeem a ſtrange way of comforting them; to remove the fear which was upon them by telling them of another fear, which they were to take in. This looks like the curing of a diſeaſe by increaſing it. But though Moſes his words have the ſame ſound in the ear, yet they are very diſſonant and diſtinct to the underſtanding. We ſay one heat drives out another; and 'tis moſt true, that one fear will drive out another. When Moſes ſaith, Fear not, he would remove that fear of God meerly as a revenger of ſin. And when he ſaith, He is come that his fear may be before your eyes, he means it of that fear only, which would keep them from ſinning; as is expreſs in the Text; God is come to prove you (as his Sons, not to deſtroy you as Slaves) and that his fear may be before your eyes, that ye ſin not. His aim is not to put you in a continual fear of ſufferings, but that you may alwayes fear to ſin. So that as the Apoſtle ſpeaks about the bringing in of a better hope (Heb. 7. 19.) ſo Moſes here about the bringing in of a better fear; of which we may ſay as the Apoſtle there of that better hope (or Covenant of Grace, or Chriſt in the Covenant, who is the ground of our hope) that by it we draw nigh unto God. Slaviſh fear drives us from God; but of Son-like fear we may ſay, that by it we draw nigh to God, and delight to live alwayes nigh to God. Samuel goes the ſame way, and uſeth the ſame method in dealing with the Conſciences of the Iſraelites (1 Sam. 12. 20.) where having reproved that people, laying their ſins home to their hearts, and terrifying them with, almoſt, a miraculous ſtorm of rain and thunder (when they ſo importunately deſired a change of the ancient government, or to have a King) he ſteps in (at the twentieth verſe) and revives their fainting and fearful ſpirits, with this dehortation, Fear not, ye have done all this wickedneſs, yet turn not aſide from following the Lord. They were afraid of the Lords Judgments, and yet it was ſuch a fear as he ſaw would not ſerve to keep them from turning aſide from following the Lord: It would cauſe them to run from God, not to keep cloſe to him; therefore ſaith he, Fear not; yet he adds (at the twenty-fourth verſe) Only fear the Lord, and ſerve him in truth with all your heart, &c. He even with the ſame breath forbids their fear, and bids them fear; Fear not, only fear the Lord: Now you fear the Lord, becauſe you ſee how terribly he declares himſelf againſt your folly and ſin; but this fear will not keep your hearts cloſe in obedience, while you fear him only in regard of his Greatneſs and Sovereignty: Therefore fear the Lord with a better fear, then that which was blown up by a ſtorm, and thoſe angry diſpenſations of God towards you.

There may be (I grant) a profitable uſe of a ſlaviſh fear; for as perfect love caſteth out tormenting fear; ſo tormenting fear may be preparatory to the bringing in of perfect love; even as the Needle (ſo the alluſion hath been made, and not unfitly) makes way for the Thred to follow it. Our trembling at the thunder of divine wrath, may render us (through the working of the Spirit in it) more ready to receive the Sun-ſhine of Divine love; yet this is not that fear of the Lord which we are to chuſe, much leſs to reſt in, nor indeed can we take reſt in it. Nor is this that fear of the Lord which Job here calls our wiſdom; nor can it alone ever make us wiſe, either to obedience, or to bleſſedneſs and ſalvation. And therefore having ſhewed what that fear is, which is only a fruit of ſin, and what that fear is, which is in it ſelf ſinful; as alſo what that fear of the Lord is which is not our wiſdom; I ſhall now more directly ſhew what that fear of the Lord is, which is the wiſdom of man, the wiſdom of all men. And I ſhall take liberty to do it a little more largely then is ſutable to the ſtrictneſs of an expoſition; for ſeeing this fear hath received ſo high a Teſtimony from Job, in ſaying, it is our wiſdom; and becauſe what the Woman ſaid upon a falſe ſuggeſtion concerning the forbidden Tree of Knowledge (Gen. 3. 6.) may moſt truly be ſuggeſted concerning this Tree of Wiſdom, holy fear, It is a Tree to be deſired to make one wiſe. (True wiſdom is moſt deſirable, and therefore every thing is to be deſired which makes us truly wiſe.) Foraſmuch (I ſay) as this fear is ſo uſeful and influential upon the right ordering of our whole courſe through this world in wiſdom, it will neither be improper, nor unprofitable, to inſiſt a while upon the diſcovery of it.

Spititual and holy fear; That fear of God which is the wiſdom of man, is taken two wayes in Scripture.

Firſt, For the pure worſhip of God, as was ſhewed in opening the firſt verſe of this whole Book; all that I ſhall ſay of it here, is, that to fear God thus, or to worſhip him purely, is a high point and part of wiſdom. They who mingle their own inventions with the inſtitutions of God in worſhip, and make to themſelves a graven Image, theſe think themſelves wiſe, the only men of knowledge as well as of zeal about the things of God: But as the Apoſtle concludes of the old Gentiles, who never received the pattern of any inſtituted worſhip from God; yet when through their natural blindneſs they were led to a falſe worſhip, They (ſaith he, Rom. 1. 22.) profeſſing themſelves wiſe, became fools: So we may much more conclude, that how wiſe ſoever thoſe falſe worſhippers (who have received a pattern from God, and yet ſet up their own) do either profeſs themſelves to be, or how wiſe ſoever they may be in the opinion and reputation of others, yet in deed, and in Gods account they are become very fools. None are ſo fooliſh as they who will needs be wiſe above that which is written; yea, to be wiſe beſide what is written, as to matters of faith and worſhip, is very fooliſhneſs. And therefore as fear comes under this firſt notion, the pure worſhip of God, ſo 'tis the wiſdom of man. Not only are we to worſhip the Lord with fear. (Heb. 12. 28.) But the worſhip of the Lord is fear, while we keep cloſe to the rule; and I conceive one chief reaſon why the worſhip of God is called fear, is, becauſe we ſhould be continually afraid of ſwerving and departing from that rule of worſhip which himſelf hath appointed. No man is wiſe enough to know what will pleaſe God further then God reveals it. And if ſo, then to worſhip God only as he hath revealed is our wiſdom, for to pleaſe him is ſo. And hence David puts both theſe together (Pſal. 2. 10, 11.) Be wiſe, O ye Kings, ſerve the Lord with fear.

Secondly, The fear of the Lord, which is our wiſdom, is taken more generally; for, That holy awe which dwells upon our ſpirits, and regulates them under all the ſpeakings and diſpenſations of God towards us, as alſo in all our actings both toward God and toward one another. To worſhip God aright, and to walk before God in uprightneſs, are the two Poles upon which the whole body of a heavenly life is turned. And our wiſdom is complicated and made up of theſe two fears, which though we may diſtinguiſh in notion, yet we muſt not ſever in practice. Solomon reproves the neglect of this fear (Prov. 1. 29.) They hated knowledge, and did not chuſe the fear of the Lord. Holineſs ſhould be our choice, not our refuge. We ſhould pitch our election upon that before all things in the world, not ſerve our turns by it when we are forſaken and rejected of all worldly things and hopes. David opens a School, as a Profeſſor of this Science (Pſal. 34. 11.) Come ye Children, hearken unto me; I will teach you the fear of the Lord. This is the great Leſſon of divine Philoſophy, learn this, and you are wiſe and knowing enough. The Apoſtle (Phil. 2. 12.) preſſeth the perpetual uſe of it upon the beſt of Saints. As a Saint ought to do all his works in love, ſo in this fear; Work out your ſalvation with fear and trembling; that is, work on in the wayes of ſalvation, till you come to the laſt ſtroke and ſtitch. Chriſt hath wrought our ſalvation, By delivering us out of the hand of all our enemies, that we ſhould ſerve him without fear (of Men or Devils, as alſo without fear of refuſal, or non-acceptance at the hand of God) in holineſs and righteouſneſs all our dayes (Luke 1. 71, 72.) But though he hath wrought our ſalvation ſo, that we need not fear the iſſue, yet he would have us work out our ſalvation with much fear, leſt we ſhould fail in duty as to the way and means of aſſuring it, and entring into it. The chief grace expreſly promiſed in the new Covenant, the Covenant of grace, is this bleſſed fear (Jer. 32. 39, 40.) I will give them one heart and one way, that they may fear me for ever for their good, and for the good of their children after them, and I will make an everlaſting Covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good, but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart from me. Here is fear twice mentioned; Firſt, As the deſign of the Covenant, or that which the Covenant expects from us. Secondly, As the Promiſe of the Covenant, or that which God in the Covenant will beſtow upon us. The Covenant puts it upon fear, not upon faith, I will put my fear into their hearts; which is not at all excluſive of faith; for we can do nothing of duty which the Covenant requires, nor can we receive any thing of mercy which the Covenant promiſeth, without faith; but becauſe fear might ſeem to be a grace leſs concern'd in the Covenant then faith, therefore 'tis named rather then faith. All are ready to grant that faith will keep the heart cloſe to God (for as an evil heart of unbelief is that by which we depart from the living God (Heb. 3. 12.) So faith in the heart will not ſuffer us to depart from God, all, I ſay, are ready to grant this) but few think that fear hath ſuch an effect in it: And therefore the Lord as he often honours faith in this, ſo here he honours fear, and doth not ſay, I will put faith, but I will put my fear into their hearts, and they ſhall not depart from me. And we find in Scripture, that thoſe Saints which have been moſt eminently noted for cloſe walking with God, are cryed up for their fear as much as for their faith. When Abraham had ſpent many years as a Probationer in the School of Faith, and had given notable proofs of his proficiency in that Grace, and in his laſt tryal, the ſacrificing of his Son Iſaac, had given the higheſt and ſtrongeſt proof of it, that ever any man before him did; yet when God himſelf comes to give teſtimony concerning that act, he doth not ſay, now I know that thou believeſt on me; but, Now I know that thou feareſt me, ſeeing thou haſt not withheld thy Son, thine only Son from me (Gen. 22. 12.) Abraham received ſo many marks of ſpecial favour from God, and returned ſo many offices of real affection unto God, that the Scripture doubts not to call him, The Friend of God (a moſt familiar title, James 2. 23.) yet when he was ready to offer God that token of his love (a greater then which he had not among all his Jewels) His only Son, his Son Iſaac whom he loved, the Lord doth not ſay, Abraham, now I know thou loveſt me, but, Now I know thou feareſt me. So that holy fear (we ſee) carried the day both againſt faith and love, in a buſineſs, wherein both the one and the other, even both together, did put forth their ſtrength even to the utmoſt. How glorious was fear that day, when it bare away the Garland from thoſe two renowned Graces, and was not only one of the three, but the firſt of the three, and the only one of the three which God was pleaſed to take notice of by name; Now I know that thou feareſt me. And though the All ſufficiency and Faithfulneſs of God call for our faith, and his Goodneſs condiſcendeth to our love; yet the Greatneſs, Majeſty, and Holineſs of God do rather invite our fear, as being that affection which is moſt ſutable in a creature toward the Creator. O God (ſaith David, Pſal. 68. 35.) thou art terrible (or much to be feared) out of thy holy places. And again (Pſal. 89. 7.) God is greatly to be feared in the aſſembly of his Saints: And why? Becauſe there his holineſs doth greatly appear. And as we have moſt reaſon to fear God where moſt of his holineſs appears; ſo they who are moſt holy, cannot but fear him moſt.

More diſtinctly, This fear of the Lord may be conſidered three wayes.

Firſt, In reference unto the Word of God (Iſa. 66. 2.) To him will I look, that is of an humble and contrite ſpirit, and that trembles at my Word. When the heart is once in a trembling frame at the Word of God, it will quickly come to a ſettled frame at the Work of God; and becauſe there is ſo little trembling at the Word of God, there is but little ſetling to the Work of God. Moſt Hearers tremble and move no more at the Word, then the ſeats they ſit on, or the ſtones they ſtand upon; and ſo inſtead of being (as the Apoſtle exhorts, 1 Cor. 15. 58.) Unmoveable in the work of the Lord, they are not at all moved to it. Holy fear hath a reſpect to the Word, as it falls under a threefold conſideration.

Firſt, As it is a Word of threatening; and ſo the Word carries (as it were) a command of fear; when God like a Lyon roars in his threatenings againſt ſinners, they who among men are as the beaſts of the field, have alwayes cauſe to, and often cannot chuſe but tremble: When the Lord ſpeaks blood, and wrath, and hell, and flames of fire, how can ſinners but be over-awed? Yea, as they are admoniſhed (Pſal. 4. 4.) Stand in aw and not ſin. Yet this fear is ſtirred not only at the voice of threatenings, but Secondly, Of Commands, which are ſo holy and pure, that the report of them may ſoon make thoſe who are holieſt and moſt pure tremble before the Lord. Yea, every Law and Command of God bears not only an impreſſion of his Holineſs and Purity, but of his Authority and Soveraignty: Who would not fear that word which comes out from the King of Kings, the King of Nations?

Thirdly, This holy fear works alſo in the heart of Believers at the word of promiſe, which though it be full of, and drop down ſweetneſs like the honey-comb, which faith is continually ſucking for the refreſhing of the ſoul, yet fear is not a ſtranger to it, nor idle about it. Hence the Apoſtle grounds his exhortation (2 Cor. 7. 1.) Having theſe promiſes, let us cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of God. He doth not ſay, having theſe promiſes let us perfect holineſs in the faith or love of the Lord (though that be true) but in the fear of the Lord. As the Lord is fearful in praiſes (Exod. 15. 11.) that is, he ought to be praiſed with a reverential fear when he hath performed the promiſes; ſo he is to be believed with a reverential fear as he gives us promiſes. Thus fear acts in reference to the word in this threefold conſideration. The threatenings are ſo terrible, the commands are ſo holy, the promiſes are ſo ſweet, that each of them alone, much more all of them together, may juſtly expect and ſutably draw out this divine fear. And thus to fear the Lord and his Word, or the Lord in his Word is our wiſdom.

Now that fear of the Lord which works kindly at the voice of his Word, eſpecially of his threatenings, doth theſe three things in us.

Firſt, It rouzeth and wakens careleſs and ſecure ſinners; it opens their eyes, and makes them look about them, to view that black Cloud of Judgment, whether perſonal or national, that hangs over their heads, and lowres dreadfully upon them. When the Lord acquainted Noah with his purpoſe of ſending a deluge of water upon the World; it is ſaid (Heb. 11. 7.) He was moved with fear: That holy man had a deep ſenſe of that threatening, and was exceedingly affected with it.

Secondly, This fear which is our wiſdom, puts us upon enquiry, what to do that we may eſcape the wrath threatened. Carnal fear never made any man a good counſellor, but ſpiritual fear may, and it cauſeth every man, who hath it, to ask good counſel, and ſeek means to avoid an impendent danger. When the Jews at the hearing of Peter's Sermon were prickt at the heart, and ſtrucken with ſome beginnings of this fear, as ſeeing themſelves in the ſuburbs of Hell, they preſently went to counſel in the caſe, Saying to Peter and the reſt of the Apoſtles, Men and Brethren what ſhall we do (Acts 2. 37.) O give us your advice, tell us how we may prevent our eternal miſery. And when Saul was ſmitten down (Acts 9. 6.) He trembling and aſtoniſhed ſaid, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? There's nothing more inquiſitive then fear is.

Thirdly, This fear puts us upon an Application to all thoſe means, which we are adviſed to, for our anſwering the duty commanded for our obtaining the mercy promiſed, or for our avoiding the evil threatened. Holy fear makes the head ſerious and the hand induſtrious: 'Tis a great ſervant to faith, a ſharp ſpur to prayer; when once faith ſees our dangers, fear haſtens remedies. Deſpair of the end makes careleſs of the means; but fear of an evil which is coming, makes us careful either to keep it from coming, or to get above the reach of it when it is come. As Noah was moved with fear when he heard of the flood; ſo being moved with fear he prepared an Ark, in which himſelf and family were ſaved from the flood.

Secondly, 'Tis wiſdom to fear the Lord in reference to his works; and theſe, firſt, his common ordinary works of providence; and it argues by ſo much a more ſingular holineſs wrought in us, by how much we the more fear the Lord upon the obſervation of what he commonly works. (Jer. 5. 22, 23, 24.) We find the Lord not only expecting that his people ſhould, but even wondering that they did not fear him in that reſpect, Fear ye not me (ſaith the Lord) will you not tremble at my preſence, which have placed the ſand for the bound of the Sea, by a perpetual decree, that it cannot paſs it, and though the waves thereof toſs themſelves, yet they cannot prevail; though they roar, yet can they not paſs over it? But this people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone: Neither ſay they in their heart, let us now fear the Lord our God that giveth rain, both the former and the latter rain in its ſeaſon. Here are two things inſtanced in; Firſt, The bounding the Sea; which was ſo from the beginning, and is therefore a work of an old date, and as ordinary as the Sea-ſhore. Secondly, The giving of rain; which is alſo a common work of providence, it hath continued from the Creation, and will to the diſſolution of the World; yet we ought to fear and tremble before the Lord, while we conſider theſe every dayes experiences of his Power and Greatneſs. And the more ſpiritual our hearts are, the more will they be affected with the fear of the Lord by the ſight and contemplation of theſe common providences. God is the more to be admired and feared in his doing that often or alwayes, which to do but once calls both for our fear and admiration. And thus we ſhould reaſon with our ſelves; what cannot God do for us in a time of ſpecial need, who at all times doth greater things for us then any which we can need? Every good thing is the better by how much the more common it is, whether as to times or perſons; and therefore the commonneſs of them ſhould not at all (though it often doth) abate our eſtimation of them, or our thankfulneſs to God for them. Yet

Secondly, we ſhould fear the Lord more then ordinarily for and in his extraordinary providences, whether they bear the face of Judgments, or of Mercies. When thy Judgments are in the earth (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 26. 9.) the Inhabitants of the world will learn righteouſneſs; that is, they ought to do ſo; and if ever they will do it, they will do it then; and I (ſaith the Prophet) do even prophecy to others, and promiſe to my ſelf, that then they will do it. Now no man can learn righteouſneſs, or do right indeed, but he that hath learned this fear of the Lord. 'Tis ſaid of Job (Chap. 1. 1.) That man was perfect and upright (or righteous) fearing God. Judgments work fear, and fear works righteouſneſs. We muſt not ſport with the Judgments of God, nor play with his thunder-bolts, but tremble before him (Pſal. 55. 19.) Becauſe they have no changes, therefore they fear not God; that is, there's no new thing among them, no extraordinary providential turns, no judiciary changes, their proſperity keeps a ſettled courſe; and becauſe they find all things going on in the old courſe of providence, therefore they go on in their old courſe of ſinfulneſs, they fear not God; intimating that as ſuch changes alwayes ſhould, ſo uſually they do awaken fear: And that, if the Lord would but change, and toſs, and tuumble them about, by various troubleſome diſpenſations (as we have been toſſed in this Nation) ſurely they would fear him. The Saints in the Revelation (Chap. 15. 4.) ſinging the Song of Moſes for their victory over the Beaſt, make a very emphatical inference of this fear from the then appearance of the judgments of God upon Babylon, Who would not fear thee, O Lord, and glorifie thy Name, for thy judgments are made manifeſt:

As if they had ſaid, Thou, O Lord, haſt given all men cauſe or ground ſufficient to fear thee, ſeeing thou haſt made the juſtice of thy proceedings againſt thine enemies ſo plain to all men; thy Judgments are great, yet no greater then they have deſerved. Who, or where's the man that hears or ſees theſe things, and doth not fear thee?

Secondly, As works of judgments ſo of mercy ſhould actuate this holy fear in us. Some read that (Pſal. 55. 19.) to this ſence fully, rendring the words thus, With whom (although there be) no changes, yet they fear not God. And ſo their want of the fear of God is made (not as the place was expounded even now, an effect of their having no troubles, but) an aggravation of their wickedneſs in the midſt of ſuch long continued and (without any interruption) enjoyed mercies. The Apoſtle (Rom. 12. 1.) beſeeches the Saints at Rome by the mercies of God to preſent their bodies (which we are to underſtand ſynechdochically for their whole man) a living ſacrifice, holy acceptable unto God, which (ſaith he) is your reaſonable ſervice; and which ſervice (I may ſay) is the pureſt acting of our filial fear. This is propheſied as the character of the beſt men in the beſt of times (Hoſ. 3. 5.) The children of Iſrael ſhall return and ſeek the Lord their God, and David (that is, Chriſt) their King, and ſhall fear the Lord and his goodneſs in the latter dayes. Thoſe latter dayes will be all holy dayes, for then there will be the moſt plentiful pouring out of the holy Spirit that ever the people of God were under; then the goodneſs of God will moſt appear, and then men ſhall not only fear the Lord, who is good, but the Lord and his goodneſs, or the Lord for his goodneſs; and that, not only for the goodneſs of his nature, but for his goodneſs declared and communicated to them in his works. The good and great things that God doth for his people, beſpeak a kind of aw in their hearts; and the more they taſt his goodneſs to them, the more and the more ſpiritual is their fear. When Peter had been toyling all night and could take nothing, yet at Chriſts command letting down the Net, he encloſed a great multitude of Fiſhes; 'tis a word from Chriſt makes our work ſucceſsful. Now (ſaith the Text, Luke 5. 8, 9.) When Simon Peter ſaw it, he fell down at Chriſts feet, ſaying, Depart from me, for I am a ſinful man, O Lord; for he was aſtoniſhed, and all that were with him, at the draught of the Fiſhes which they had taken. And at the twenty-ſixth verſe of the ſame Chapter, when Chriſt wrought another miracle in healing one that was ſick of the Palſie, the Text ſaith, They were all amazed and glorified God, and were filled with fear, ſaying, We have ſeen ſtrange things to day. What ſtrange things? The killing of men? No, the healing of a man; when Chriſt had declared as much good and mercy as power in healing that diſeaſed perſon, they were all filled with fear. 'Tis a great diſcovery of our holineſs and ſpiritualneſs to fear God greatly, when God doth great things in mercy. That's very remarkable in the holy Chronicle concerning the Churches (Acts 9. 31.) when God had wrought a ſtrange thing, given peace to his people; How did this work in them? The Text tells us, Then had the Churches reſt throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria, and were edified, and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comforts of the holy Ghoſt were multiplied: This was a wonder[illegible] as well as a merciful providence. 'Tis rare that the Churches have reſt: And thoſe Churches had been lately worried by Wolves and Lyons; they had been diſperſt and ſcattered by grievous perſecutions. But when the Churches had reſt, what was the fruit of this goodneſs of God to them? Even this, They walked in the fear of the Lord, as well as in the joyes of the holy Ghoſt. As ſoon as they were freed and delivered from the fear of men, they walked more then ever in the fear of the Lord. As all the Nations of the earth ſhall fear and tremble (ſaith the Prophet, Jer. 33. 9.) For all the goodneſs and all the proſperity that the Lord procureth unto his people. So likewiſe ſhall his people themſelves; though, firſt, upon other grounds; and ſecondly, in another manner then the Nations of the earth ſhall fear him. The Nations ſhall fear that it will go ill with them, when God doth ſo much good for his people. The proſperity of the Church is formidable to the world. And as to the manner, The Nations fear tremblingly, but the People of God fear rejoycingly; the former fear and deſpair, but the latter fear and believe.

We have ſeen much of this goodneſs of God, but little of this fruit, holy fear, hath as yet been ſeen among us. For firſt, Some ſlight or make little reckoning of the goodneſs of God, where then is their fear? Secondly, Others grow wanton with the goodneſs of God; firſt, with the doctrine of his goodneſs; ſecondly, with the acts of it; Where then is their fear? Thirdly, Not a few harden themſelves in doing evil becauſe God is good (Rom. 2. 4.) and whereas ſome ſaid, Let us do evil that good may come of it (Rom. 3. 8.) theſe ſay, Let us do evil becauſe good is come: O how far are theſe from the fear of the Lord! I ſhall leave but two words with this ſort of men, Firſt, 'Tis very ſinful not to fear the Lord and his judgments, the Lord and his wrath; much more not to fear the Lord and his goodneſs, the Lord and his mercy; 'tis very ſinful not to be bettered by the goodneſs of God, what is it then to grow worſe by it? Secondly, They who will not fear the Lord and his goodneſs, ſhall be forced at laſt, whether they will or no, to fear the Lord and his judgments, the Lord and his wrath, in all the dreadful tokens and manifeſtations of it.

Thirdly, As this fear of the Lord acts in reference to his word and works, both ordinary and extraordinary, of mercy and of judgment; ſo it is exerciſed about all that we our ſelves are doing or ſpeaking, about our words and works. Hanani is thus deſcribed (Nehem. 7. 2.) He was a faithful man, and feared God above many: He was a faithful man in all his dealings; faithful in his word, and faithful in his works above many; for he feared God above many. Solomon (Eccleſ. 9. 2.) ſpeaks of different ſorts of men, to whom yet there is the ſame courſe or likeneſs of diſpenſations from God, All things come alike to all, there is one eve[illegible] the righteous and to the wicked, as is the good, ſo is the [illegible]; and he that ſweareth as he that feareth an oath. There is a twofold fearing of an Oath; Firſt, A fearing to ſwear; And ſecondly, A fearing when we ſwear; the firſt reſpects raſh Oaths, and falſe Oaths: A godly man feareth an Oath; that is, all ſuch kind of Oaths; but that's not all his fearing of an Oath; As he feareth, yea, abhorreth at all to ſwear ſome Oaths: ſo ſecondly, He feareth, when he doth ſwear that Oath which he is not at all afraid to ſwear; that is, when he ſweareth a right and true Oath, or when he ſweareth in truth and righteouſneſs. He feareth ſuch an Oath; that is, takes it religiouſly, as knowing that it is an appeal to God, who is the ſearcher of hearts, and that it is a great part of divine worſhip; he conſidereth well what he ſweareth, and keeps himſelf cloſe to what he hath ſworn. Holy fear examines every work, every word, yea, every thought, every ſingle thought (if that be poſſible) much more thoſe thoughts which are brought and wrought up together into counſels, purpoſes, and reſolutions. Holy fear examines firſt, Of what ſort they are, and whence they are; it examines ſecondly, Whether they are going, and what they tend to: Holy fear is the ſouls keeper, and it hath a very quick and jealous eye upon all our wayes, it obſerves what goes in and comes out, it is full of enquiries, about what we have done, and about what we are doing, yea, about what we purpoſe to do. He that feareth God cannot think what he liſts, nor ſpeak what he liſts, nor do what he liſts; he finds himſelf under a Law, and is freely ſubject to it. This is that fear of the Lord of which the Lord ſaith unto man, The fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom.

Hence we may infer, That moral honeſty without the fear of the Lord, is not our wiſdom.

A meer Heathen, yea, an Atheiſt, may do honeſt and vertuous things, even with a love to vertue; For there is a beauty and an amability in juſt and righteous actions to the eye of natural reaſon; But no Heathen can, much leſs can any Atheiſt do that which is good and honeſt in the fear of the Lord: And until a man doth good and avoids evil in this fear of the Lord, all the good he doth, and the evil he avoids, will not prove him a truly wiſe man: Some vertues may be acted without this fear, but no grace can; and the beſt of thoſe actions which are done without this grace, will at laſt be found but ſhining ſins, and beautiful iniquities. And therefore Solomon concludes (Eccleſ. 12. 13.) Fear God, and keep his Commandments, for this is the whole duty of man: As if he had ſaid, If any man ſhould keep the Commandments, and not in the fear of the Lord, he hath done but half (at moſt) of the duty of man, and nothing at all as a gracious man.

And becauſe this holy fear is ſo precious in it ſelf, and ſo rarely found among the children of men; I ſhall firſt diſcover, where it is; and ſecondly, whence it comes to paſs, that 'tis ſo rarely found among them.

The tree (ſaith Chriſt) is known by its fruits; and where this tree of a holy life grows, will be known by the fruits or effects of it; ſuch as theſe.

Firſt, The fear of the Lord is clean (Pſal. 19.9.) 'Tis clean, Firſt, Subjectively, or in it ſelf: Fear is a pure chryſtal orient Grace, there's no ſpot in it. Secondly, 'Tis clean effectively, 'tis a cleanſer: Fear is a ſcouring purifying Grace. Let us cleanſe our ſelves (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 7.1.) from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of the Lord. Theſe two go ſtill together, Fear the Lord and depart from evil (Prov. 3.7.) Yea, The fear of the Lord is a fountain of life to depart from the ſnares of death (Prov. 14.27.) He means it either of ſin, which is a ſpiritual death, or of damnation, which is an everlaſting death. Again, (Prov. 8.13.) The fear of the Lord is to depart from evil. The very (formalis ratio, or) definition of holy fear, conſiſts in our averſation from that which is unholy. Once more (Prov. 16.6.) By the fear of the Lord men depart from evil. They depart from evil by the help of this good fear: Firſt, So, as not to do what is forbidden: Secondly, So, as not to feel what is threatened. When Joſeph perceived his Brethren ſuſpitious that he would deal rigorouſly with them, he uſes no other argument to quiet their minds, and aſſure their hearts againſt that fear, but only this, I fear God ([illegible].42.18.) As if he had ſaid, Ye need not fear that I wi[illegible] you any wrong, or give you any hard meaſure, whi[illegible] fear of God forbids me. Abraham reaſons on the other hand (Gen. 20.11.) Surely the fear of the Lord is not in this place, and they will ſlay me for my Wives ſake. Nothing can ſtop their hands from any wickedneſs which they have a mind to (but the want of power and opportunity) who have not the fear of God before their eyes. The Prophet reſolves all the Apoſtacy of the Jews from God and his Law into the abſence of this fear (Jer. 5.24.) This people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart, they are revolted and gone: Why ſo? Neither ſay they in their heart (poſſibly they ſaid and profeſſed it with their lips) let us fear the Lord our God. Fear is the bank which keeps the black and dead ſea of ſin from overflowing: 'Tis the golden bridle which checks our headſtrong luſts, when they would either run us out of the ſtrait way of life, or run us into the broad way of death and deſtruction. We may ſhut up this with David's Concluſion (Pſal. 36.1.) The tranſgreſſion of the wicked ſaith in my heart (that is, I beholding their tranſgreſſion am as fully perſwaded of it, as if they ſpake it out and told me ſo in ſo many words) there is no fear of God before their eyes. Durſt any mock God with flouriſhes and formalities in Religion, if they feared him? Durſt any provoke God to his face by real and open wickedneſſes, if they feared him? Durſt any ſin with the judgments of God freſh bleeding before their eyes, if they feared the Lord and his wrath? Durſt they ſin with heaps of precious mercy before their eyes, if they feared the Lord and his goodneſs? Durſt any flatter either others or themſelves with hopes of impunity in their ſin, if they feared the Lord and his truth? Durſt any ſlight their own promiſes, profeſſions, proteſtations, oaths, or deſign the entangling of others by them, rather then the binding of themſelves, did they fear the Lord and his faithfulneſs, even the Lord who keepeth covenant and promiſe for ever? All theſe and many more tranſgreſſions of the wicked (all theſe wayes of tranſgreſſion are found among the wicked, it were well if none of them were found among thoſe who have a name of godlineſs (I ſay) all theſe tranſgreſſions of the wicked) ſay, there is no fear of God before their eyes. Yea, do not theſe ſay with the fool in their hearts (Pſal. 14.1.) There is no God to be feared; or no God but whom fooliſh fear hath made.

Secondly, This fear of the Lord which is our wiſdom, doth arm and antidote the ſoul againſt the power and poyſon of all other fears. Firſt, Againſt the fear of ſuffering evil: Secondly, Againſt fear in doing good. Theſe two fears fall often into one, ſeeing one reaſon why many forbear to do the good which God commands, is for fear of ſuffering thoſe evils which either men threaten, or they ſuſpect will enſue. But as he that fears the Lord, feareth to do evil; ſo he that feareth to do ſinful evils, doth not fear the ſuffering of any penal evil: He neither troubleth himſelf aforehand with the fearful thoughts of that evil which he may ſuffer; nor is he much troubled (if at all) with the ſenſe of thoſe which he doth ſuffer. The wicked flee (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 28.1.) when no man purſueth (they are afraid of conceited dangers) but the righteous are bold as a Lyon, they are not afraid of real dangers. They are bold as a Lyon; not firſt, with a natural boldneſs as a Lyon; not ſecondly, with a proud boldneſs as a Lyon, preſuming and going forth upon their own ſtrength; nor thirdly, with an ignorant beaſtial boldneſs, as a Lyon, who knows not his own danger, nor is apprehenſive of it; but they are bold with a ſpiritual, humble, well-grounded boldneſs as a Lyon: Firſt, In the ſtrength of Chriſt for God: Secondly, In the righteouſneſs of Chriſt with God. The troubles of the righteous are many, but their fears are few. The Prophet preſcribes this fear of the Lord as the beſt medicine againſt all other fears (Iſa. 8.12,13.) And ſo doth Chriſt himſelf (Luke 12.4,5.) I ſay unto you my friends, be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom you ſhall fear; fear him, which after he hath killed hath power to caſt into hell; yea, I ſay unto you, fear him: As if he had ſaid, As you ought not, ſo if you fear God, you will not much fear man. He fears nothing elſe, who fears that one thing, to ſin: And he fears none elſe, who fears that One, who is more then All, God. That which we tranſlate, Able men (Exod. 8.21.) the Geneva renders, Men of courage fearing God. Thus fear dwells with courage, and is the ſpring of it. A Magiſtrate fearing God will do right and juſtice, let who will be diſpleaſed with it, or concerned in it. Moſt Magiſtrates know what is right, and ſome have a good mind to do it, but there are not a few who dare not, a Lyon is in the way: Some are as eaſily brib'd with fear, as others are with hopes, or as any are with gifts in hand. If there be any thing in the world that deſerves to be called cowardiſe, this is it: All that I ſhall ſay to ſuch cowards (whether they be ſuch as for fear forbear to do good in wayes of righteouſneſs towards men, or in wayes of holineſs and pure Religion towards God; all that I ſhall ſay to them) is this, read and tremble at that which is written (Rev. 21.8.) Without are the fearful; none ſhall come into Heaven but they who fear God; nor ſhall any, who throw up their known duty for fear of man.

Thirdly, Holy fear keeps the heart tender and humble; and hence we find this fear oppoſed both to hardneſs and pride of heart. Bleſſed is the man that feareth alwayes (Prov. 28.14. that is, who feareth alwayes to ſin, and who feareth that all times he may be overtaken with ſin, and is therefore watchful over himſelf) but, as it follows, he that hardeneth his heart ſhall fall into miſchief. The Church complaineth ſadly to the Lord (Iſa. 63.17.) Why haſt thou hardened our heart from thy fear. As there is a natural hardneſs which every man brings into the world with him, and an additional voluntary, yea, affected hardneſs (ſuch was that ſpoken of in the Proverbs) which wicked men bring upon themſelves; ſo there is a judiciary or inflicted hardneſs, which God by withdrawing his mollifying ſoftning Spirit, leaves his own people ſometimes to, and which God by leaving wicked men (as he did Pharoah) to the natural hardneſs of their own ſpirits, gives them up to. And as they who are hardened in the firſt and ſecond, and in the laſt branch of the third ſence, do caſt off the fear of God; ſo they who are but hardened according to the former branch of it, as the Church ſpoken of in the Prophet did, find a ſenſible abſence of that holy awe and fear of God from their hearts. Where fear is, it ſoftens the hard heart, and when the heart is hardened, it either puts away divine fear, or finds the failing of it. We may ſay the ſame of pride as the Apoſtles counſel imports (Rom. 11:20.) Be not high minded, but fear. 'Tis our duty to mind thoſe things which are above, or on high, but to be high minded is our ſin: And holy fear will either keep the mind lowly and humble; or pride and high-mindedneſs will keep out holy fear; A proud man, and a man fearing God, are a contradiction. There is pride in the heart of a man fearing God; but he that feareth God is daily bewailing and mortifying the pride of his own heart; and therefore he cannot be a proud man.

Fourthly, Holy fear enlargeth the heart (Iſa. 60. 5.) Thy heart ſhall fear and be enlarged. Fear enlargeth the heart: Firſt, Unto duty. Eliphaz ſaid rightly (though amiſs to Job, Chap. 14. 4.) Thou caſteſt off fear, and reſtraineſt prayer before God. As if he had ſaid, Thou doſt not care for prayer, or haſt no heart to it, having caſt the fear of God out of thine heart. To fear God is internal worſhip, yea, the external worſhip of God is called fear; and therefore they can have no mind to worſhip God, who have none of this fear; and they who have much of this fear, cannot but be much in worſhip: For as fear enlargeth the heart to duty; ſo, Secondly, It enlargeth the heart in duty. Natural fear ſhrivels and ſhrinks up the heart; ſpiritual fear opens and widens it; and the reaſon is, becauſe this fear is alwayes accompanied and eſpouſed with faith, and faith cauſes joy, and joy is the dilatation of the heart: So that though fear doth not immediately or from its own proper act enlarge the heart, yet as conſidered with its train and concomitants it doth. A man ſurpriſed with carnal fear, is made leſs then he was in all his abilities, and he ſeldom, in that fit, hath the uſe of any, but of thoſe which diſcover his weakneſs. The fear of man (that is, either a meer humane fear, or the fear of meer humane things, ſaith Solomon, Prov. 29. 25.) bringeth a ſnare; and a ſnare bringeth a man into ſtraits. What can a man do that is in a ſnare? In that caſe he is not maſter of himſelf, and therefore muſt act at a lower and leſſer rate then himſelf: But godly fear bringeth a man out of all creature-ſnares, and therefore maketh him more then he was for God, and for all good purpoſes.

Thus I have given a taſt of ſome of the effects of this noble fear, by which we may diſcover where it is: And if any ſhould enquire, which was

The ſecond point propoſed, Whence it is that this fear is ſo little; and works ſo little in the heart and hand of man, I ſhall anſwer it in three things.

Firſt, The fear of the Lord is caſt off upon a preſumption of the mercy of the Lord. As the want of faith is alwayes followed with carnal and diſtruſtful fear; ſo the abounding of preſumption will not admit nor receive holy fear. As Believers plead mercy to ſtrengthen their hearts in this bleſſed aſſurance, that their ſins committed ſhall be pardoned; ſo preſumers plead mercy to harden their hearts in this curſed aſſurance, that though they commit ſin they ſhall not be puniſhed. Thus the preſumptuous perſon is deſcribed, even while he is hearing the word of the curſe (Deut. 29. 19.) Bleſſing himſelf in his heart, and ſaying, I ſhall have peace though I walk in the imagination of mine heart, to add drunkenneſs to thirſt. Which may be underſtood either ſpecially for immoderate or exceſſive drinking; ſome when they are thirſty, never think they have drunk enough, till they have drunk too much, nor are they ever ſatisfied (nor then neither) till they are overwhelmed and drowned in drink; or we may expound that ſpeech of adding drunkenneſs to thirſt generally, as ſignifying the eager purſuit of any ſin. Deſire is the thirſt of the ſoul; and as a godly man is ſaid to hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs (Matth. 5. 6.) becauſe that's the deſire of his ſoul; ſo the ungodly thirſt after wickedneſs, and when they have done it abundantly, may well be ſaid to add drunkenneſs to thirſt.

Secondly, As theſe ſhew no fear of God, becauſe they have a ſtrong confidence (though a very vain one) that God will ſhew mercy to ſinners hereafter; ſo others do it becauſe they have a clear experience that God exerciſeth much patience towards ſinners at preſent. Becauſe the Lord is ſlow to bring evil, therefore they are ſwift to do it. The Preacher is expreſs in this (Eccleſ. 8. 11.) Becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not executed ſpeedily, therefore the heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil. When once the heart is full, not only bent and inclined, but ſet and reſolved to do a thing, then 'tis far enough from any fear in doing it. And when ſome men have ventured to ſin once, and come off (as to any ſenſible hurt) ſafe, they will venture again and again, and ſo often, till at laſt they are perſwaded, there is no venture in ſinning; and that there's no more (poſſibly not ſo much) of hazzard in tranſgreſſing as in obeying.

A third ſort have no true fear of the Lord, becauſe they have no true knowledge of the Lord; they ſee not the danger of ſin, and therefore conclude there is none. We read of theſe two put together (Prov. 1. 29.) They hated knowledge, and did not chuſe the fear of the Lord. Nor can they who have not the knowledge of the Lord, chuſe his fear; for ſeeing knowledge is the guide of election, there cannot be a good choice in the will, where there wants a true light in the underſtanding.

I have thus far diſcovered what and where, or in whom that fear of the Lord is, which is our wiſdom; I ſhall now briefly ſhew that it is our wiſdom to fear the Lord. In the former diſcourſe the emphaſis lay upon fear; in this the emphaſis lyeth upon wiſdom.

That it is our wiſdom to fear the Lord, David aſſerts with Job in ſo many words (Pſal. 111. 10.) The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom. A good underſtanding have all they that do his Commandments. He calleth it the beginning of wiſdom, not as if it were only the A, B, C, the firſt rudiment, element, or principle of Wiſdom; for indeed it is the perfection, the head, the higheſt principle of Wiſdom. And the word, in the Pſalm, which we tranſlate beginning, ſignifyeth alſo the head, the chief, or uppermoſt part of a thing; and ſo here, the head, the ſum, the top of Wiſdom: As there are degrees of Wiſdom, ſo of the fear of the Lord: But there is no degree of this fear ſo inferiour or low, but it is a beginning (at leaſt) of Wiſdom; and there is no degree of Wiſdom ſo high or perfect, but it hath its root in or beginning from this fear. Solomon affirms the ſame thing (Prov. 1. 7.) The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge, but fools deſpiſe wiſdom and inſtruction. Natural fools are defective in the principles of Reaſon; ſpiritual fools are defective in the principles of Religion, in this grand principle eſpecially, the fear of the Lord. Fools deſpiſe Wiſdom in every notion of it, but moſt of all in this: But how much ſoever they deſpiſe all Wiſdom, and are unſatisfied that the fear of the Lord is any part of it, yet 'tis ſo in it ſelf, and to the wiſe it appears ſo, upon theſe following Demonſtrations.

Firſt, To fear the Lord is an argument that we know the Lord, and that knowledge is pureſt wiſdom. Pharoah ſaid, Who is the Lord? I know not the Lord. And therefore he hardened his heart againſt the fear of the Lord. He never feared what God threatened, till he felt what God inflicted; and though he felt that often, yet as ſoon as it was off, he ceaſed to fear, and ſo brought it on again, till at laſt he was utterly overthrown. Pharaoh ſaid to his grave and great Councellers, concerning the Iſraelites (Exod. 1. 11.) Come let us deal wiſely with them, leſt they multiply. But not knowing the Lord who dealt with him by Moſes for their deliverance, he neither feared what he had ſaid, nor what he had done, till himſelf and his Egyptians were paſt deliverance. They who fear the Lord know him; and they who know him will not provoke him at all, but to their utmoſt keep peace with him, which is our wiſdom.

Secondly, To fear the Lord is an argument that we know our duty (Eccleſ. 12. 13.) Let us hear the concluſion of the whole matter, Fear God, and keep his Commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. And is it not our wiſdom to know our duty? Solomon ſaith (Prov. 14. 8.) The wiſdom of the prudent is to underſtand his way. What way? The way of his duty, what he ought to do, and how he ought to walk, as in every thing, ſo in every relation; the fear of the Lord is the grand and great duty, the moſt comprehenſive duty, the duty into which all other duties empty themſelves, therefore to fear the Lord is our wiſdom.

Thirdly, To fear the Lord is an argument that we know our own intereſt, what is good, yea, what is beſt for us: To know that is our wiſdom; and none but the wiſe, the ſpiritually wiſe, have ever attained to this knowledge, that their greateſt intereſt lyes in the fear of the Lord. That is our beſt intereſt to which all good is aſſured and annexed by promiſe; and ſo 'tis to the fear of the Lord (Pſal. 34. 9.) O fear the Lord ye his Saints, for there is no want to them that fear him. Who can deſire to be in a better condition, then to be above or beyond the fear of want? And that's their condition who fear the Lord. He doth not ſay, they that fear the Lord have all things; but there is no want of any good thing to them that fear the Lord: It's poſſible for a man not to have many things, and yet to want nothing; and not to want is a great deal better then barely to have; and yet the fear of the Lord hath not only a promiſe of freedom from want, but of the beſt enjoyments (Pſal. 128. 1, 2, 3.) Bleſſed is every one that feareth the Lord, that walketh in his way; for thou ſhalt eat the labour of thy hands, happy ſhalt thou be, and it ſhall be well with thee; thy Wife ſhall be as a fruitful Vine by the ſide of thy houſe, thy Children like Olive plants round about thy table: Behold that thus ſhall the man be bleſſed that feareth the Lord. As Haman cauſed it to be proclaimed (Heſt. 6.9.) Thus ſhall it be done to the man that the King delighteth to honour. So here, Behold, thus ſhall the man be bleſſed that feareth the Lord: He ſhall be bleſſed in his Wife, and bleſſed in his Children, ſo bleſſed in both, that the Pſalmiſt calls all to behold it, as a rare, beautiful, yea, wonderful ſight, Behold, thus ſhall the man be bleſſed. And yet the man fearing God ſhall be bleſſed more then thus; his bleſſing ſhall come in the beſt way (ver. 5.) The Lord ſhall bleſs thee out of Sion: His temporal mercies ſhall come in a ſpiritual way, yea, he ſhall have ſpiritual bleſſings, He ſhall bleſs thee out of Sion: And he ſhall have bleſſings beyond his own walls: Thou ſhalt ſee the good of Jeruſalem all the dayes of thy life; thou ſhalt ſee thy Childrens Children, and peace upon Iſrael. Sometimes a good man can take no content in his family-mercies, becauſe of the Churches afflictions; he prefers Jeruſalem before his chief joy (Pſal. 137. 6.) and while that is mourning he cannot but be ſorrowing, though his own houſe be full of joy: And ſometimes a mans own family is ſo afflicted, and his houſe ſo full of ſorrow, that he cannot but mourn, even when Jeruſalem rejoyceth, and Sion is glad. But when a good man looks home to his own houſe and ſees good there, when alſo he looks abroad to Jeruſalem and ſees good there too, How full is his joy? How compleat is his bleſſedneſs? And behold, thus the man is bleſſed that feareth the Lord. We have ſtore of ſuch Promiſes in the Proverbs (Chap. 22. 4.) By humility and the fear of the Lord are riches, and honour, and life; that is, they who truly fear the Lord, have a promiſe of riches, and a promiſe of honour, and a promiſe of life. What an intereſt is here! Riches are a great intereſt; ſome think if they can get riches enough they have enough; others are hungry after honour, power, and dignity; a third ſort, who have both the former, have yet hungers after life, they are afraid death will remove them from their riches and honour, and to live in that fear is a continual death; But they who have riches, and honour, and life, what can they deſire more? Yea, the Text is plural, riches, honour, and lives: He that feareth the Lord hath a promiſe of many lives, of all ſorts of life, natural life, ſpiritual life, and eternal life are his; he is bound up in the bundle of lives (Prov. 19. 23.) The fear of the Lord tendeth to life, and he that hath it ſhall abide ſatisfied. Fear tends to life: To what life? It is ſpiritual life, and it hath as a tendency to the prolonging and ſweetning of natural life, ſo an aſſurance of or tye upon the enjoyment of eternal life; and he that hath it ſhall abide ſatisfied: Satiſfaction is the higheſt intereſt of all; it is poſſible for a man to have honour, riches, and life, yet not to be ſatisfied. Some who have all theſe at preſent, have yet many empty corners in their ſouls; they have as much riches, as much honour, as much health as they can tell what to do with, yet they are not ſatisfied; yea, they know not what to do with all theſe. But they that fear the Lord ſhall abide ſatisfied: though they have but little in the world, though they have nothing that can be accounted honour, nothing that can be called riches, though they ſcarce live while they are in the world, yet they are ſatisfied in the loving kindneſs of the Lord whom they fear, and that is better not only then riches and honour, but better then life (Pſal. 63.3.) To all theſe add that precious ſpiritual promiſe (Mal. 4. 2.) But unto you that fear my Name, ſhall the Sun of Righteouſneſs ariſe with healing in his wings, and ye ſhall go forth and grow up as Calves of the ſtall. Is not then the fear of the Lord our intereſt, and our profit? Is it not the all that we can poſſibly have in this world, and for the next? And is it not then our wiſdom? He is a wiſe man that knoweth his intereſt; and he is wiſeſt that knoweth this for his intereſt. This was the counſel of Moſes to Iſrael concerning the Statutes of the Lord which he had taught them (Deut. 4.6.) Keep therefore and do them (that is, the Statutes of the Lord, to keep which is the fear of the Lord) for this is your wiſdom and underſtanding in the ſight of the Nations, which ſhall hear all theſe Statutes and ſay, Surely this is a wiſe and underſtanding people. There is nothing to be feared more then this, that we ſhould fear any thing more then God; and there is nothing to be deſired more then this, that we we ſhould fear God above all things. For, that doth not only make us wiſe, but is our wiſdom, above all things: The fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom;

And to depart from evil is underſtanding.

For the clearing of theſe words, I ſhall ſhew three things.

Firſt, What is meant by evil.

Secondly, What it is to depart from evil.

Thirdly, How our departing from evil is our underſtanding.

To the firſt Query I anſwer, There are two ſorts of evil.

Firſt, Evil done.

Secondly, Evil ſuffered; or according to the moſt uſual terms of diſtinction, there is the evil of ſin, and the evil of puniſhment. Here in the Text when Job ſaith, To depart from evil is underſtanding, we are to underſtand it of the evil of ſin, of that evil either done, or which we are tempted to do. And as by evil we are to underſtand ſin in general, ſo that we may take the full compaſs of what we are to depart from; we may conſider ſin under a five-fold notion. The word being indefinite, implyeth a departure from evil univerſally. As Firſt, A departure from all kinds or ſorts of ſinful evil; under what title or diſtinction ſoever ſin appears, we muſt depart from it, whether it be a ſinful evil of the heart, or a ſinful evil of the hand, or a ſinful evil of the tongue; whether it be a ſinful evil in the omiſſion of that good which is commanded, or in the commiſſion of that evil which is forbidden. When the Text ſaith, To depart from evil is underſtanding, we muſt underſtand evil in this latitude, not this or that, but every ſinful evil.

Secondly, We are to underſtand it of ſinful evils of all degrees and meaſures. We muſt depart not only from groſs and palpable evils, but from thoſe which are ſpun with ſo fine a thred that they are almoſt indiſcernable, not only from open prophaneneſs, but cloſeſt hypocriſie; not only from thoſe ſins which lay waſt our hope, which devour our faith, and make ſhipwrack of a good conſcience, not only from monſtrous ſins, from ſins of the firſt magnitude, but we are to depart from the leaſt and loweſt, the meaneſt and ſmalleſt ſins. The leaſt ſinful evil, and the leaſt of it is too big and too bad for our company, we muſt depart from it. Indeed he makes conſcience of no ſin, who makes not conſcience of all; and he is in danger of the greateſt, who departs not from the leaſt.

Thirdly, We muſt depart not only from the tract or trade, from the courſe and cuſtom of evil, but from any one act, or attempt of evil. No man can excuſe himſelf when he doth evil, by ſaying, I will not do it often, I will not do it alwayes, I intend not to live in it, nor to make a buſineſs of it, I will do it but this once, for (beſides that, he who ſins once runs a hazzard of ſinning often) he that ſins but once, ſins too often by once. The beſt of men cannot chuſe but ſin often; but no man ſhould chuſe to ſin no not once.

Fourthly, We muſt depart from, or as the Apoſtle expreſſeth it (1 Theſ. 5.22.) Abſtain from all appearance of evil; that is, from whatſoever hath ſo much as a ſhew of ſin, or wherein ſin makes any the leaſt ſhew. Suppoſe ſin appear not in a full body, yet if it put out but a little finger we muſt not have to do with it. Some ſhews and appearances of ſin are real, ſome are only conceited and imaginary; and theſe imaginary appearances of ſin are of two ſorts: Firſt, Such as appear to us through our ignorance or want of information; or, Secondly, Such as appear ſo to others, either upon the ſame grounds, or upon theſe ſuperadded ones, their jealouſies of us, or prejudices againſt us.

Firſt, As for the real appearances of evil, we muſt alwayes abſtain or depart from them, upon the utmoſt peril of our own conſciences. Secondly, As for thoſe imaginary evils, which appear to us through our ignorance as evils, though in themſelves they are not, we muſt abſtain from them while they appear ſo; an erring conſcience binds us to do nothing againſt it; Whatſoever is not of faith is ſin to us (Rom. 14. 23.) though the fact or thing done be not ſinful. A ſcrupulous conſcience is a troubleſome one, but 'tis better then a preſumptuous one. As we muſt not nouriſh ſcruples or needleſs doubts, ſo we muſt not act againſt our ſcruples or doubtings, ſo that though the evil be but a meer ſhew or imagination of ours, yet we muſt abſtain from it. Thirdly, As for thoſe appearances of evil which are ſo only in the imagination of others, we muſt often abſtain from them, and rather forbear our own liberty, then offend the weak, or bring diſcredit upon profeſſion. Paul would eat no fleſh for ever, rather then he would offend his brother; much more would he abſtain from fleſh offered to Idols, though that was ſinful only in the imagination of others (1 Cor. 8. 13.) nor would he take maintenance of the Corinthians, though he pleaded the lawfulneſs of it ſtrongly (1 Cor. 9. 15.) becauſe he would avoid all appearance of covetouſneſs in preaching the Goſpel. It is not alwayes ground enough for us to do a thing becauſe it is lawful, we muſt conſider in many caſes whether it be ſeemly and expedient as to time and place.

Fifthly, As we are to depart from the appearances, ſo from the occaſions of evil. When Solomon had given that ſtrict charge (Prov. 4. 14.) Enter not into the paths of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men; he preſently adds (ver. 15.) Avoid it, paſs not by it, turn from it, and paſs away: As if he had ſaid, I adviſe thee, my Son, not only not to enter the path of the wicked, but not ſo much as to look upon it; not only to withdraw thy foot from it, but thine eye, for that may be a provocation leading thee into it; yea, I adviſe thee not only to avoid it when thou comeſt near it; but do not ſo much as come near it; Paſs thou not by it, keep aloof off (as we ſay) keep thy diſtance, Turn from it, and make not the leaſt ſtay when thou turneſt, Paſs away: The leaſt ſtand may be an occaſion of thy fall, therefore keep thy ſelf alwayes in motion, yea, upon thy full ſpeed when thou art near an evil path, Paſs away; that is, paſs it by, when thou paſſeſt by it. As we muſt depart from the evil it ſelf, ſo from every thing which hath any tendency thereunto. 'Tis dangerous to go alwayes to the furtheſt bound of things lawful: They that will do the utmoſt of what they may, are eaſily engaged to do what they may not. But 'tis much more dangerous to dally with the firſt overtures and occaſions of things unlawful. They who keep not off from the verges of ſin, may quickly be carried to the center of it. Solomon ſpeaking of the ſtrange Woman, whoſe lips drop like a Honey-comb, preſently ſubjoyns (Prov. 5. 8.) Remove thy way far from her, and come not nigh the door of her houſe: As if he had ſaid, Do not only forbear diſcourſe with her, but forbear the remoteſt ſight of her. In oppoſition to this counſel Solomon ſheweth us the folly of ſinners (Prov. 7. 6, 7, 8.) At the window of my houſe I looked through the caſement, and behold among the ſimple ones, I diſcerned among the youths, a young man void of underſtanding, paſſing through the ſtreets near her corner, and he went the way to her houſe: That is, He did, as it were, caſt himſelf into the mouth of danger, and invite his own ruine. And whenever we put our ſelves upon the occaſion of ſin, then we paſs near the corner, and go the way to the Harlots houſe. When Joſeph's chaſtity was ſollicited by his wanton Miſtreſs, the Text ſaith (Gen. 39. 10.) It came to paſs as ſhe ſpake to him day by day, that he hearkened not unto her, to lye with her, or to be with her; that he might avoid the ſin, he avoided all private ſociety with her.

Secondly, What is it to depart from evil? 'Tis not barely ſaid, do no evil, but depart from it; and there is a great deal more in departing from evil, then a forbearance to do evil. As there is a wide difference between our doing of good, and our delighting to do good (many a man doth that good which he doth not love, in which he hath no delight) ſo there is a wide difference between our departure from, or abhorrence of evil, and our not doing or forbearing to do it. Not to do evil ſheweth indeed that the hand and tongue, yea, all the parts of the outward man turn from it; but to depart from evil is an argument that the heart and ſpirit, that the deſires and affections, even all the powers of the inward man turn from it. So then, this departure is firſt external, from the acts; ſecondly, internal, from the love and liking of it, from any pleaſedneſs or complyance with ſinful evil. Yea, the Hebrew word implyeth a departing with indignation and abhorrence, and not only a departing with abhorrence, but with a purpoſe of revenge; as when a man departeth from an utter enemy, he doth not only leave his company, but hath a purpoſe to be revenged on him with the firſt opportunity. (I ſpeak not this to juſtifie ſuch a ſpirit or purpoſe of revenge, but only to declare the thing as it is moſt commonly, and as in ſome caſes it may lawfully be.) Thus, the departure from evil ſpoken of in this Text, is not like a departing from a friends houſe or company whom we love and like very well, and from whom though we depart, yet it is but for a ſeaſon, and with a hope ſhortly to ſee and enjoy him again. But 'tis a departing with a deſire never to have to do with it again; yea, with a purpoſe of holy revenge, to mortifie, kill, and deſtroy it to the very uttermoſt of our power. For as the wiſdom of the fleſh (Rom. 8. 7.) is not only a declining from that which is good, or from the Law of God, but enmity againſt God, joyned with a total and reſolved unſubjection to, and oppoſition againſt his righteous Law; ſo the wiſdom of the Spirit, and ſpiritual underſtanding, is not only an avoiding of, and abſtaining from that which is evil, but a deteſtation of it, joyned with a firm reſolution to ſubdue and break the ſtrength of it for ever. They underſtand not what it is to depart from evil, who bear any the leaſt good affection to it, how much ſoever they lay down or leave off evil actions. This is that holy enmity which God planted in the Womans ſeed; that is, in the holy ſeed (Gen. 3. 15.) I will put enmity between thee and the Woman, and between her ſeed and thy ſeed: That is, between thee and all the wicked; yea, between thee and all wickedneſs. This enmity is not only an effect and fruit, but the ſecurity and preſervation of our holineſs. As our love to that which is good, ſo our abhorrence of that which is evil, is the higheſt of our holineſs, and moſt fundamental (I mean of any thing wrought in us) to it. Suppoſe corruption doth ſo dog and cumber us, that we cannot depart from many evils in our outward actings; yet if we do maintain and keep up this hatred of the law of ſin in the inner man, we are well, yet muſt ſtrive to do and act better. David gives this character among others of a wicked man (Pſal. 36. 4.) He ſetteth himſelf in a way that is not good, he abhorreth not evil. Poſſibly there are ſome, yea many evils, which the wicked man doth not act; but as he never ſets himſelf in a good way, ſo neither doth he abhor, that is, inwardly depart from that which is evil.

Further, When Job ſaith, To depart from evil is underſtanding; in that negative, we are to underſtand the affirmative, our doing good. 'Tis not the fulneſs of ſpiritual underſtanding, barely to abſtain from doing evil, or not to bring forth evil fruit. He that hath a ſpiritual underſtanding labours to bring forth good fruit, and ſo to be compleat in all the will of God. All the negative Commandments of God include their affirmatives. When God ſaith (Exod. 20. 2.) Thou ſhalt have no other Gods before me: He ſaith, Thou ſhalt have me for thy God, thou ſhalt love me, and fear me, and truſt upon me. And when God ſaith, Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any graven Image: That is, Thou ſhalt not uſe any deviſed worſhip: He ſaith, Thou ſhalt worſhip me according to my own appointments. As we muſt depart from all will-worſhip; ſo we muſt apply our ſelves to God in that worſhip, which is according to his will. When God ſaith, Thou ſhalt not kill; Thou ſhalt not commit adultery; Thou ſhalt not ſteal; Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs; Thou ſhalt not covet. A departure from all theſe evils is not the keeping of theſe Laws, unleſs we perform the contrary acts of love and duty to our Neighbours, with reſpect to the ſafety of their lives, the purity of their perſons, the proſperity of their eſtate, and the preſervation of their credit. For though not to do evil is to do good, becauſe we are forbidden to do it; yet there is a good which we are commanded to do, beſides the not doing of evil forbidden; and that departure from evil works, which is our underſtanding, is alwayes attended and fruited with thoſe good works.

Thirdly, It may be queſtioned, How it is our underſtanding to depart from evil?

I anſwer; Firſt, It is ſo formally: That is, the thing it ſelf is an act of underſtanding. Every rational act is an act of the underſtanding; much more every ſpiritual act: Though Grace be above Nature, yet it is an act in Nature, and exerts or puts forth it ſelf, ſometimes in the will, ſometimes in the affections, ſometimes in the memory, ſometimes in the conſcience, and alwayes in the underſtanding. The peace of God paſſeth all underſtanding (Phil. 4. 7.) that is, our underſtanding is too narrow to compaſs it, or to conceive what it is; and the Grace of God paſſeth through our underſtanding; that is, whatſoever we do graciouſly, we do it underſtandingly, or in the light of our underſtanding.

Secondly, To depart from evil is underſtanding, evidentially, or declaratively; that is, He declareth himſelf to be an underſtanding man who departeth from evil. Nor know I how a man can give a fairer proof of his underſtanding then this; and that the beſt underſtanding of ſpiritual underſtanding. For as it was ſhewed before, that the fear of the Lord is not only wiſdom, but the beſt wiſdom, not the wiſdom of this world which God will deſtroy, not the wiſdom of Politicians, nor the wiſdom of Philoſophers, which ſhall periſh, but ſpiritual wiſdom; ſo to depart from evil, is not the natural or common underſtanding of man as man, but the ſpecial and ſpiritual underſtanding of Saints as Saints. And when the Lord ſaith, To depart from evil is underſtanding, it is as if he had ſaid, let men boaſt of the pregnancy of their parts, and wit, and underſtanding as much as they will, yet there is no man truly witty or underſtanding; there's no man hath a true pregnancy of parts, but he, who in the honeſty and integrity of his ſoul, departeth from evil.

From the words thus opened obſerve,

Firſt, Sin is evil; ſin is the evil.

Sin is evil, and the worſt of evils; he that departs from ſin departs from evil; before there was ſin in the world, there was no evil in the world; God ſaw all that he had made, and behold it was very good. But as ſoon as ſin, which was the firſt, and is the greateſt evil, came in, all other evils thronged in with it.

We may demonſtrate the evil of ſin, or how great an evil ſin is, many wayes.

Firſt, Sin is ſo bad, that nothing can be ſaid of it worſe then it is; therefore the Apoſtle (Rom. 7. 13.) ſpeaking of the evil of ſin, goeth not out of its ſelf for a title of diſhonour and diſcommendation (Rom. 7. 13.) where acquitting the Law, of doing him any hurt, he chargeth all upon ſin; Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But ſin, that it might appear ſin, working death in me by that which is good; that ſin by the commandment might become exceeding ſinful. Here are two expreſſions ſetting out the evil of ſin, and both tell us, that it ſelf is the worſt word it can be expreſſed by: Firſt (ſaith he) Sin that it might appear ſin: As if he had ſaid, When ſin appears like it ſelf, that's the blackeſt and moſt horrid appearance of it, or there can no repreſentation be made of it by any other thing to reach the evil of it. When ſin appears ſin, then (as we ſay) it appeareth in its proper colours. Sin puts on ſometimes ſuch borrowed ſhapes and colours, as makes it look ſomewhat handſome; but whenever it is ſeen in its own ſhape, 'tis an ugly miſ-ſhapen Monſter. Secondly, ſaith the Apoſtle, That ſin might become exceeding ſinful: Some render, Out of meaſure ſinful; not that there is any due meaſure in any ſin, the leaſt ſin exceeds that meaſure of our actions which the Law requires and keeps us to. And yet as to the event or puniſhment of ſin, we may ſay ſin hath a meaſure, which when it once exceeds or goes beyond, God will no longer ſpare nor forbear to puniſh it. As we may ſee in the Canaanites and other wicked Nations, whom God ſpared a great while, but when their ſins had ſurpaſſed ſuch a meaſure or degree, and their iniquities were full (Gen. 15. 16.) then the Lord would bear no longer, but utterly deſtroyed them. But I rather take that phraſe of the Apoſtle (καθ' ὑπερβολὴν) as it is uſed in many other Texts of the New Teſtament (1 Cor. 12. 31. 2 Cor. 1. 8. 2 Cor. 4. 7. and 7. 17. Gal. 1. 13.) to note only the exceſſive ſinfulneſs of every ſin; ſin becomes hyperbolically, or (as we) exceeding ſinful; that is, it puts forth all its ſtrength, when it finds a check or ſtop put to its courſe by the Commandment. The Greek is a ſubſtantive (ἁμαρτωλὸς) That ſin might become an exceeding ſinner; which imports a perſon that hath the very art and knack of ſinning. So the Apoſtle elegantly calls ſin a ſinner, and wickedneſs a wicked one: As on the other hand, the Scripture ſometimes calls a wicked man wickedneſs, and a ſinner ſin (Pſal. 107. 42.) The righteous ſhall ſee it and rejoyce, and all iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth; that is, all unrighteous or wicked men ſhall ſtop their mouths. Wicked men are nothing but a very maſs of wickedneſs. Every agent puts on the nature of, and takes up the likeneſs of that which he is commonly and conſtantly at. And ſo the ſinner is, as it were, changed into ſin, and is not ſo much vicious, as vice. As through the obedience of faith Saints are made partakers of the Divine nature, and may be called (in a correct ſence) not only godly, but godlineſs, not only holy, but holineſs; ſo through diſobedience and unbelief ſinners have not only a ſinful nature, but are transformed into the nature of ſin, and may juſtly be called, not only ſinners, but ſin. Thus we ſee that as the ſinner is ſin, ſo according to the ſtrictneſs of the Text in the Romans, Sin is a ſinner, an exceeding ſinner. But our reading is abundantly full to ſhew the evil of ſin, which ſaith, Sin through the Commandment becomes exceeding ſinful, and that the diſeaſe of it doth encreaſe by that which at firſt was preſcribed for its prevention, though never for its cure, The Law.

Secondly, The greatneſs of the evil of ſin may be ſeen in the Author of it; Sin is the work of the evil one, the work of the Devil: And what but evil, and the worſt of evils, can proceed from The evil one? He that committeth ſin (ſaith the Apoſtle John, Epiſt. 3. 8.) is of the Devil, for the Devil ſinneth from the beginning: For this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted, that he might deſtroy the works of the Devil. But what are the works of the Devil, which the Son of God came to deſtroy? I anſwer; The Devils works are of two ſorts: Firſt, He works againſt us: Secondly, He works in us; His work againſt us is a deſign to deſtroy us: He hath ſtratagems, wiles, and devices to undo us for ever; as he plotted and hoped to ruine all mankind at once in our firſt Parents; ſo he is every day trying to do it from man to man. Now Chriſt the Son of God was manifeſted to deſtroy thoſe works of the Devil, and to fruſtrate or overthrow all his deſigns againſt us. Secondly, The works of the Devil in us, are all thoſe luſts and corruptions which the Devil ſtirs up, and then draws out to the acting of any wickedneſs. And all thoſe ſins which are done by man may be called the Devils works, not only becauſe he provokes us to work them; but becauſe they are ſuch as himſelf works. Sin is the Devils proper work, and therefore this Text in John ſaith, The Devil ſinneth from the beginning: He not only ſinned at the beginning, but he ſinneth from the beginning: He from that day to this, hath been in a continued act of ſin: As he promotes ſin in all others; ſo he is an unceſſant practicer of it himſelf. He cannot turn his hand to any other work; he can do nothing but ſin, and advance ſin, or be the executioner of the Lords righteous vengeance upon ſinners. There is ſome evil that God doth; the evil of puniſhment. Is there any evil in the City that I have not done? ſaith the Lord (Amos 3. 6.) That is, Is there any trouble or affliction in the City that I have not ſent? The Lord taketh theſe evils upon himſelf, and freely owneth them; I have done them (ſaith the Lord) they are my works, they are the works of my holineſs and righteouſneſs as well as of my wrath and indignation. Theſe evils are Gods creatures as he ſpeaks (Iſa. 45. 7.) I form the light, and create darkneſs; I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all theſe things. But as for the evil of ſin, though God hath a hand in ordering and bounding it, yet he hath no hand in doing it; that's the Devils work; 'tis his work upon a twofold account (as was toucht before:) Firſt, As that which he is alwayes doing: Secondly, As that which he deſires and endeavours all ſhould do; he is turning every ſtone, and oyling all the wheels of mans corruption, that this work may be carried on. How evil is that which is the work of the Devil, that evil one!

Thirdly, The evil of ſin appears as it is the cauſe of all penal evils; how evil is that, as done, which is productive of all evils endured. Sin hath ſword, and famine, and peſtilence, and death, yea, and hell in the belly of it (James 1. 15.) When luſt hath conceived, it bringeth forth ſin; and ſin, when it is finiſhed, bringeth forth death. Luſt is firſt a mover unto ſin (ver. 14.) Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own luſt and enticed: Secondly, Luſt is the Mother of Sin, we have it firſt teeming, Luſt conceives: Secondly, we have it in travel, It bringeth forth ſin; Sin the Daughter is as fruitful as Luſt the Mother; for when that is grown to maturity, or (as the Apoſtles word is) when 'tis finiſhed, it conceives alſo, and beareth a ſtrange abortive, a pure privative, its iſſue is ſtill born; yet not ſo much dead, as death. Sin when it is finiſhed bringeth forth death. The firſt motions of ſin, or ſin unfiniſhed, deſerve death, though ſin fully acted and finiſhed be that to which death is chiefly aſcribed, with reſpect to the event, as alſo to the evidence and conſpicuouſneſs of it. And as this Scripture, by an elegant ſimilitude of a pregnant woman, makes death the child of ſin; ſo that of the Apoſtle by another elegant ſimilitude of a juſt Maſter, makes death the wages of ſin (Rom. 6. 23.) He that commits ſin is the ſervant of ſin, and ſin will pay all its ſervants (it hath no better coin among all its treaſures) in this black money called Death; which is ſo great a penal evil, that it includes and is put for all other penal evils. When the Prophet had foretold the Jews what diſmal clouds of wrath and judgment were ready to break and ſhowre down upon them, he alſo tells them from what vapours thoſe clouds had been collected and embodied (Jer. 4. 18.) Thy wayes and thy doings have procured thoſe things to thee. What wayes? Thy ſinful wayes. Thy doings: What doings? Thy evil doings, as appeareth plainly by the next words, This is thy wickedneſs, becauſe it is bitter, becauſe it reacheth to thine heart; that is, all the evils, troubles, and ſorrows that are ready to fall upon thee, are nothing elſe but thy ſins; ſin procureth the greateſt evils, therefore ſin is the greateſt evil.

Fourthly, The evil of it appeareth yet more; becauſe as it doth procure and is the meritorious cauſe of all puniſhments or penal evils, ſo it ſelf is the greateſt puniſhment. We commonly diſtinguiſh between the evil of ſin and the evil of puniſhment; yet the truth is, ſin it ſelf is not only a puniſhment, but the worſt of puniſhments (Hoſea 4. 17.) Ephraim is joyned to Idols; there is his ſin; But how will God puniſh him? He doth not ſay, I will bring a Sword upon him to cut him off, or divide him from his Idols; but, let him alone: This ſhall be his puniſhment, he ſhall go on in his ſin: He loves Idols, let him take his fill of them. So the Lord concludes againſt Jeruſalem (Ezek. 24. 13.) Becauſe I have purged thee (that is, I have uſed much means to purge thee, I have given thee many ſtrong purging Medicines) and thou waſt not purged (that is, thou didſt not repent nor turn from thy ſin) thou ſhalt not be purged from thy filthineſs any more; that is, I will uſe no more means to purge thee, but leave thee in thy luſts and groſſeſt humours; but know, that while I leave thee to reſt in thy ſin, my fury reſteth upon thee, as it followeth in the cloſe of the ſame verſe. The old Gentiles having abuſed the light of Nature, what was their puniſhment? It was no outward evil, nor ſtroke of vengeance upon their bodies or eſtates, for the Gentiles lived in much worldly proſperity: What was it then? The Text anſwers (Rom. 1. 26.) For this cauſe God gave them up to vile affections; and (ver. 28.) As they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do things that are not convenient: He did not give them up to endure things which were grievous, but to do things that were not convenient. What thoſe things were is clear in the twenty-ninth verſe; Being filled with all unrighteouſneſs, fornication, wickedneſs, covetouſneſs, maliciouſneſs, full of envy, &c. The Lord let their luſts looſe upon them, and laid the reins of their brutiſh affections in their necks, without the leaſt check; this was their puniſhment. They are in a bad condition whoſe affections are not renewed; what then is their condition whoſe affections are not ſo much as reſtrained? When any man is given up to be as wicked as he will be, he is within one ſtep (and that's to Hell) as miſerable as he can be. Some may think, this ſurely is a fine world, when God leaves a man to do what he liſt, and to run his own courſe without controul whither he liſt; or as Solomon ſpeaks to the young man (Eccleſ. 11. 9.) to walk in the wayes of his own heart, and in the ſight of his own eyes; that is, to act whatſoever ſeems good in his own eyes. But as Solomon there gives the young man a cooler, Know thou, that for all theſe things God will bring thee to judgment; ſo I may ſay, Know thou, O man, that to be ſuffered thus to take thy wayes, is a judgment. As thou ſhalt be judged for theſe things hereafter to eternal ſufferings; ſo thy preſent ſufferance in theſe things is a ſpiritual judgment. The hot diſpleaſure of God againſt all thoſe who received not the love of the truth that they might be ſaved, is thus ſignified by the Apoſtle (2 Theſ. 2. 11.) For this cauſe God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions, that they ſhould believe a lye. And that this is the very next door to Hell, the next words aſſure us (ver. 12.) That all they might be damned, who believed not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs. Many thouſands of men ſin, who ſhall not be damned; but all they who for a preſent puniſhment of former ſins are finally given up to the power of ſin, ſhall ſurely find and feel damnation for their puniſhment. They are altogether left under the guilt of ſin, who are wholly left to the power of ſin. How great an evil is ſin, which God often makes the laſt puniſhment of men here; and when he doth ſo, alwayes deſigns them to everlaſting puniſhment hereafter?

Fifthly, That ſin is the greateſt evil may be evinced and learned from the means and manner of its cure. How was this evil remedied? How was the cure of it wrought? Not by the power, not by the vertue of any creature in Heaven or Earth; all mankind was tainted with this infection; and though the good Angels were free, yet they could not free us from it; nor were they, though mighty in power, able to undertake it. There was no balm in any Gilead of this world, no Phyſician there, that could heal the hurt of Adam's poſterity: Sin was ſuch a Goliah, ſuch a Giantly monſter, as made all the whole Creation ſtand trembling at his challenge: None but a David, none but Jeſus Chriſt the eternal Son of God, none but he who thought it no robbery to be equal with God, had power and goodneſs enough in him to match and maſter, to combate with and conquer ſin, and to heal the deadly wounds which it had given us. How great is that evil which nothing can take away but the greateſt good? Unleſs the vertue of the Medicine exceed the malignity of the Diſeaſe, no cure can be wrought; ſuch was the malignity of ſin, that no blood but the blood of God, the blood of that perſon who is God bleſſed for evermore, could cure it, becauſe no other blood could match, much leſs overmatch the evil of it; ſin hath ſo deeply indebted us, that none but Chriſt could ſatisfie or make payment for us; and ſin hath ſo deeply infected us, that none but Chriſt could cleanſe us, or provide a remedy for us.

Laſtly, We may collect, how great an evil ſin is, by what it doth both to God and to our ſelves. Conſider ſin in reference to God; and then, Firſt, It diſhonours him; ſin is a breach of the Law, and through breaking the Law we diſhonour God (Rom. 2. 23, 24.) Secondly, Sin is a deſpiſing and ſlighting of God (1 Sam. 2. 30.) we make light of his commands, and ſet at nought all his counſels (Prov. 1. 25.) And hence thirdly, It is a provocation to God (Jer. 32. 31. Pſal. 95. 8.) What can provoke God to anger, who is infinitely patient and good, but that which is extreamly evil? Fourthly, It is a burden, and a wearineſs to God (Amos 2. 13. Iſa. 43. 24.) yea, a very breaking to God, I am broken (ſaith the Lord, Ezek. 6. 9.) with their whoriſh heart, even as a loving Husband is at the diſloyal carriage of an adulterous Wife. All theſe things are ſpoken of God after the manner of men, or of God as he became man in the perſon of the Son, to ſhew how great an evil the ſin of man is in the ſight of God. To all which add, how ill the holy and good Spirit is treated by ſin, which is ſaid, Firſt, To grieve the Spirit (Eph. 4. 30.) Secondly, To quench the Spirit (1 Theſ. 5. 19.) Thirdly, To reſiſt the Spirit (Acts 7. 51.) Fourthly, To vex the Spirit (Iſa. 63. 10.) Yea, fifthly, when acted to the height, it is a doing deſpight to the Spirit of Grace (Heb. 10. 29.) And whereas the evil of ſin is ſo great (as was ſhewed before) that nothing but the blood of Chriſt crucified could relieve us againſt it; ſo ſome ſorts of ſin, their ſins I mean, who having made ſome profeſſion of Chriſt, Apoſtatize from him and fall away, are called a crucifying of Chriſt afreſh, and a putting him to open ſhame (Heb. 6. 6.) that is, ſuch ſinners do it as much as in them lyes now that Chriſt is in Heaven; and were Chriſt here upon the Earth again, they would do their utmoſt to crucifie him again. That malicious Spirit poſſeſſeth them, which poſſeſſed thoſe Jews, who were the very betrayers and murderers of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And therefore ſuch by their ſinning are ſaid to have trodden under foot the Son of God, and to have counted the blood of the Covenant, wherewith they were ſanctified (externally, or as to the opinion of men) an unholy thing (Heb. 10. 29.) How unſpeakable an evil is ſin, which riſeth up thus againſt Chriſt, who only ſaveth us from our ſins? Sin abounds in evil, as it breaks the Law; but as it oppoſes and rejects the light and love of the Goſpel, it becomes exceſſively evil.

Secondly, As the evil of ſin appears in its references to God, againſt whom we ſin, ſo as it reſpects our ſelves who are The ſinners. Firſt, It deceives and befools us, and and therefore ſin is called folly, and ſinners fools, often and often in the Scripture. We read of the deceitfulneſs of ſin (Heb. 3. 12.) and of deceitful luſts (Epheſ. 4. 22.) And what other buſineſs can deceivers have with us, but to deceive us? Secondly, Sin pollutes and defiles us; it defiles not our garments, or our faces, but our minds and conſciences (Tit. 1. 15.) it is an internal ſpot, and will be an eternal one, unleſs Chriſt fetch it out. Thirdly, Sin keeps us low and debaſeth us; it is a reproach to a perſon and to a people. As Reuben loſt his dignity by it, though the firſtborn he could not excel (Gen. 49. 4.) ſo every man in Gods eſteem is degraded and made lower by it; yea, they who are higheſt among men are in his eſteem ſet, not only in degree, but in kind, below the loweſt of men, and are like unto, and numbred among the beaſts which periſh (Pſal. 49. 20.) Fourthly, It breaks our peace, and weakens our comforts, it troubles our conſcience, and at the beſt, doth but make work for ſorrow and repentance (Pſal. 38. 3, 4, 5.) Fifthly, Sin ſeparates between God and us (Iſa. 59. 2.) and endangers his departure from (Jer. 6. 8.) Sixthly, It makes preſent good things leſs good to us, and preſent evils much worſe to us; And laſtly, Layes us open to endleſs evils. If in all theſe Glaſſes we ſee not the evil of ſin, 'tis either becauſe we cannot (or which is worſe) will not ſee.

Secondly, Obſerve, It is our duty to depart from every ſinful evil.

Sin is The evil, and what good can we get or expect by it? 'Tis dangerous to have to do with it: Sin will be to us in its effects as it is in its nature, evil and only evil, and that continually. Moſes warned the people of Iſrael (Numb. 16. 26.) in the hiſtory of Corah's Rebellion, in the language of this Text, Depart I pray you, from the tents of theſe wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, leſt ye be conſumed in all their ſins. It may prove ſad to us, to aſſociate with ſinful men, much more to aſſociate with ſin; and therefore, I ſay, depart from the tents of the wicked; but much more from wickedneſs it ſelf; we may fall into miſchief if we keep company with ſinners; but it is impoſſible to avoid it if we keep company with ſin.

But if ſin be ſo evil in its own nature, as hath been ſhewed, and ſo hurtful unto us, ſurely a few words may prevail with us to depart from it, yea, it may be thought that no words can prevail with us to hold or retain it. Needs any man much admonition not to run into a devouring fire? Or many diſſwaſives to withhold him from drinking down a deadly poyſon?

I anſwer; Firſt, A ſober man may ſoon be diſſwaded from theſe deſtructives, but a mad man will not. A man may eaſily be entreated not to wallow and tumble in filthy mire, but a ſwine cannot. A meer natural man is not only fooliſh, but frantick and mad; he is [illegible] Beaſt among men, and as a ſwine among beaſts. He hath (læſa principia) a wound in his principles, and therefore no wonder if he wound himſelf by his practices. Some will ſin whatever comes of it; they will buy repentance at any rate. So they may have their luſt, let them have wrath, and death, and hell into the bargain. As Nero's Mother, when it was told her, he would be her death if ever he came to the Empire, ſaid, Let him kill me ſo he may reign; ſo ſay they, let ſin reign, though we dye and be damned for it; let us but have our will, and then let come on it what will. Some deſires, whether of good or evil, conquer and overtop all fears: The deſire of that which a man intimately loveth, is often ſtronger and more prevalent then the fear of that which he extreamly abhorreth; and 'tis ſo theneſpecially, when (as in this caſe) the thing feared is (at leaſt to their apprehenſion) afar off, and the thing deſired preſent or near at hand.

Secondly, I anſwer, Though the fruit of ſin be thus bitter, and the conſequents of it thus deadly, yet ſinners have other apprehenſions of it; they look upon the danger as that which is indeed poſſible, but not unavoidable, as a contingency, not as a certainty; they have at leaſt a peradventure for their indempnity and eſcape, as Eve (the Mother of us all) had, who reported Gods abſolute threatening Gen. 2. 17.) In the day that thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt ſurely dye, with this mitigation of his ſeverity (Gen. 3. 3.) Ye ſhall not eat of it, neither touch it, leſt ye dye. Yea, ſometimes ſinners are ſo bewitched, that they conclude ſin their friend, and their thoughts are, that they ſhall rather get good then hurt by it, or gain rather then loſs by it; as they ſaid (Prov. 1. 13.) We ſhall find all precious ſubſtance, and fill our houſes with ſpoil. And therefore ſeeing many have thus made a Covenant with death, and are at an agreement with hell, promiſing to themſelves, that when the overflowing ſcourge ſhall paſs through, it ſhall not come unto them (Iſa. 28. 15.) We have need to lift up our voices like a trumpet againſt ſin, and to cry aloud to all in the language of Job; Depart from evil.

But ſay others, This evil of ſin is within us, 'tis riveted and ſeated in our nature, yea, 'tis our nature, how then can we depart from it? Sin dwells in us (Rom. 7. 20.) How can we go from that which we carry about us, whitherſoever we go?

I anſwer; We are ſaid, in a Scripture ſence, to depart from ſin: Firſt, When we caſt off and clear our whole courſe from the viſible and groſs acts of it (Epheſ. 5. 3.) But fornication and all uncleanneſs, &c. let it not be once named among you, that is, with approbation; or keep your ſelves ſo far from thoſe ſins, that there may never be any need of having them named among you by way of reproof, as 'tis expreſſed (Phil. 2. 15.) That ye may be blameleſs and harmleſs the Sons of God without rebuke; that is, walk ſo, that ye may not fall under any open rebuke.

Secondly, Then we depart from evil, when, as we eſcape the acts of groſs ſins, ſo we make conſcience of the leaſt ſins, and of thoſe which are moſt ſecret. When for every vain thought and idle word obſerved by us, when for the omiſſion of a good duty, or our deadneſs, and diſtractions, and unſpiritualneſs in it our hearts ſmite us; here is a gracious departure from evil.

Thirdly, He departs from evil, who in uprightneſs reſolves againſt it. He that with ſuch a frame as David (Pſal. 39. 1.) ſaith, He will take heed to his wayes that he offend not with his tongue, is departed from tongue-offences; and he that with ſuch an honeſty of ſoul as Daniel (Chap. 1. 8.) purpoſeth in his heart that he will not defile himſelf, is departed from all defilements. When we with purpoſe of heart cleave to the Lord, then we keep near to him indeed; and when we with purpoſe of heart ſeparate from ſin, then we depart from it indeed.

Fourthly, He who can ſay as Paul ſaid it (Rom. 7. 15, 19.) That (evil) which I do I allow not; The evil which I would not that do I; ſuch a perſon is departed from evil. The Virgin that cryed, and ſo ſhewed her utter aborrence of all impure embraces, was not defiled, though deflowred; her rape or raviſhment was not her ſin, but her affliction, becauſe it was done meerly by an outward force. And though our inward incompleat motions to ſin, are our ſins, though reſiſted; yet becauſe reſiſted we may be ſaid to depart from them, while they riſe up in us.

Fifthly, He departeth from the evil that is in him, or is done by him, who bears it continually as his burden, and mourns over it ſincerely before the Lord. When the regenerate part is vext with the irregular movings and actings of the unregenerate part, as the righteous ſoul of Lot was vext with the filthy converſation of the Sodomites (2 Pet. 2. 7, 8.)

7,8.) when corruption remaining in us is to us (as the wicked are among whom the godly remain) as a thorn in our eye, and as a goad in our ſide; when as David bemoaned himſelf (Pſal. 120. 5.) Woe is me that I ſojourn in Meſec, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar: So we bemoan our ſelves, becauſe Meſec and Kedar, this luſt and that luſt dwells in us; Then are we departed from evil.

Sixthly, He departs from evil, that heartily ſtrives againſt it, and labours to mortifie it, by prayer and faſting, and in both by a believing application of the croſs or death of Chriſt, that it may dye. He who repreſents his ſin to God as his enemy, and is glad when any word ſmites it, yea, when any affliction weakens it, or when God hedgeth up his way with thorns that he may not find the paths of it; ſuch a man is departed from evil.

Seventhly, So doth he who is ſo far from ſtanding upon his guard, by denying, extenuating, or excuſing his ſin, when others charge him with it, that he is forwardeſt and firſt, in charging, accuſing, and judging himſelf for it. As David (Pſal. 73. 22.) So fooliſh have I been and ignorant, I have been, O Lord, as a beaſt before thee.

Thirdly, Obſerve, To depart from all ſinful evil, is an infallible argument of a wiſe and underſtanding man.

To ſin is to do fooliſhly, therefore he that departs from it doth wiſely. Sin is a deceiver, an impoſtor, he is a prudent man that frees himſelf from ſuch company; we may match, yea, and out-wit ſome deceivers; but there is no avoiding the deceit of ſin, but by avoiding ſin, which is the deceiver; ſin will put tricks and cheats upon all that trade with it. Sin made fools of our firſt Parents, while the Devil aſſured them they ſhould attain the Wiſdom of God; or that they ſhould be as God knowing good and evil, if they would but ſin. Sin deceived Solomon the wiſeſt of men: They are (in this thing) wiſer then Solomon, who turn away from it. Sin hath the ſubtilty of the Devil in it. Surely then they are wiſe with the Wiſdom of God, who depart from it. Zophar ſaith (Chap. 11. 12.) Vain man would be wiſe; that is, he would be reputed ſo: But ſurely a wiſe man ſhould not be vain; he ſhould not cloſe, nor have to do with vanity. Sin of every ſort, of every degree, is a vain thing, and therefore his underſtanding is ſadly departed from him, who departs not from it. Wiſdom cryeth in the ſtreets, How long ye ſimple ones will ye love ſimplicity? What ſimplicity were they in love with? There is a twofold ſimplicity: Firſt, Oppoſed to hypocriſie; Secondly, To holineſs: Or there is firſt, An innocent ſimplicity; Secondly, An ignorant ſimplicity. It was either the hypocritical, or the ignorant ſimplicity which they loved, as the next words of wiſdom expound it, And ye ſcorners delight in ſcorning, and fools hate knowledge. Now then (ſeeing there is the ſame reaſon of contraries) if it be folly and ignorant ſimplicity to do evil, it cannot but be our wiſdom and underſtanding to depart from it. We may demonſtrate this yet more diſtinctly.

Firſt, Thus; He that departs from evil, muſt be able to ſee through all the pleas and carnal reaſonings, all the unſound poſitions and flattering promiſes, which ſin-evil makes to hinder our departure from it. Sin is ſo perſwaſive an Orator, ſo ſtrong an Arguer, that unleſs the Word of God dwell richly in us, in all wiſdom and ſpiritual underſtanding, we ſhall quickly diſcover a loathneſs to depart from it. I ſhall inſtance only in three pleas which ſin uſually makes why we ſhould not depart from it.

Firſt, Saith Sin, I will bring you in profit and worldly advantages; I will exalt you and bring you to honour. This is a prevailing argument with the moſt. Gain is ſweet to Nature; and as any natural man will be very buſie in the out-works of holineſs, ſo he will hardly lay aſide any work of unholineſs, when he ſees and feels gain coming in at that door. We read of ſome (Acts 16. 16.) who were troubled that the Devil was caſt out of the Damſel, who brought her Maſters much gain by ſooth-ſaying, when they ſaw that the hope of their gain was gone.

Is not he a man of underſtanding, who can ſee that though much may be gotten by ſin, that yet nothing can be gained by it? Who perceives that all the profits of it are unprofitable, like that of Achan, who got ſtones about his ears, or like that of Gehezai, who got a leproſie in his forehead by looking after ſinful gain? Is not he a wiſe man that can ſee, though a man may exalt himſelf, that yet he cannot be eſtabliſhed by unrighteouſneſs (Prov. 12. 3.) Jeroboam a wicked man was far from this piece of underſtanding. He thought that the two Idol-calves which he had erected in Dan and Bethel, would prove as two mighty Pillars and ſupporters of his new gotten Kingdom; but they were indeed not only the ſhame, but the ruine of it. He alſo thought, that his unparallel'd impiety would be an unparallel'd point of policy for the aſſuring of his eſtate; when he made the loweſt of the people Prieſts of the high places (1 Kings 13. 33.) But it follows (ver. 34.) This thing became ſin to the houſe of Jeroboam. How became it ſin? Was it not ſin (ipſo facto) in its own nature? Doubtleſs it was ſo: But 'tis ſaid, it became ſin to him in regard of the event or iſſue, which was wrath or judgment, as the next words tell us, Even to cut it off (that is, to cut the houſe of Jeroboam off) and to deſtroy it from the face of the earth. Fools ſee it thus in the event, but a wiſe man foreſeeth the event will be thus, and ſo departs from evil. The penitent man ſaith, What fruit have I of thoſe things whereof I am now aſhamed? For the end of thoſe things is death (Rom. 6. 21.) The prudent man ſaith, I will forbear to do thoſe things which I know can have no better fruit then ſhame or death. The penitent man doth well; but the prudent man doth better. They are wiſe who depart from ſin committed by repentance; but they are wiſer who depart from ſin by refuſing to commit it, and ſo prevent their own repentance.

Secondly, Sin pleads ſweetneſs for our continuance in it. Who would depart from his pleaſure (ſaith ſin) and not roll a ſweet morſel under his tongue? Even Solomon while his wiſdom remained in him (Eccleſ. 2. 9.) tells us notwithſtanding (ver. 10.) Whatſoever mine eyes deſired, I kept not from them, I withheld not my heart from any joy.

Then, Hath not he an underſtanding who is Maſter of his ſenſes, and can keep his affections under? Hath not he an underſtanding, who can deny himſelf not only in ſenſual, but in all ſenſitive delights, that he may depart from evil? Is not he wiſe, who knows, that though wickedneſs be ſweet in the mouth, yet the meat thereof will turn to the gall of Aſps within him? (Job 20. 12, 14.) Who, though ſtolen waters are ſweet, and bread eaten in ſecret is pleaſant, yet knoweth, that the dead are there, and that her gueſts are in the depths of Hell? (Prov. 9. 17, 18.) Is not he wiſe who knows, that as the beſt pleaſures of ſin are a bitter ſweet, ſo all the pleaſures and ſweetneſſes of ſin are but for a ſeaſon (Heb. 11. 25.) and that the longeſt life led in ſuch pleaſure, is a death while we live? (1 Tim. 5. 6.) Is not he wiſe, who knoweth, that to depart from evil, is not to looſe our pleaſures, but to exchange them for the better? to exchange fading worm-eaten fly-blown pleaſures, for laſting, everlaſting pleaſures, for joy unſpeakable, and for peace which paſſeth all underſtanding.

Thirdly, If ſin cannot prevail by promiſes of profit and pleaſure, but that you will needs be gone and depart from it, then it falls to threatenings, or at leaſt to ſuggeſting ſtrange troubles which you are like to draw upon your ſelves by withdrawing from it. This parting will coſt you many a ſigh, many a tear, it will be like parting with an old friend, yea, like parting with the right eye, the right hand.

Is not he a man of underſtanding that can turn off this Objection firſt, and next his ſin? Who can tell ſin to its teeth, are we not willing to endure pain, that we may get quit of a Diſeaſe, or of an aking Tooth, or to ſettle a diſlocated Bone? Are we not willing to endure preſent ſmart upon hope of future eaſe? And ſhall we be afraid either of bearing pain, or of taking pains to get quit of ſin, which (though it be in moſt their nature, yet) is to all their worſt diſeaſe? Hath not he a good underſtanding, who ſees there is more pain in keeping ſin, then in parting with it? Doth it not make many a mans heart ake to tend and humour his luſts? And ſaith not the Spirit of God in this Book (Chap. 15. 20.) The wicked man travelleth with pain all his dayes. And that not only firſt, In regard of thoſe gripes of conſcience which often trouble him: And ſecondly, In regard of outward troubles which often afflict him: But thirdly, In regard of the trouble which he finds in the very actings of it. To ſerve and purſue the unceſſant motions and commands of luſt, of pride, of ambition, of covetouſneſs, of malice and revenge, makes many a man toil and ſweat, yea, tire and wear himſelf quite out? Laſtly, Hath not he a good underſtanding that can ſay, what tell ye me of pains in parting with, or departing from ſin? Do not I believe and know, or know I not by believing, that eternal pains will be the portion of all thoſe who do not depart from this ſort of evil? Are the pains of repentance or of godly ſorrow which works repentance, not to be repented of here on Earth, comparable to the pains of that fruitleſs repentance which ſinners ſhall for ever torment themſelves with in Hell? Are there no pains in Tophet? Or is it eaſie to dwell in the fiery indignation and everlaſting burnings of an angry God? Thus he that departs from evil puts ſin to ſilence; And is it not an act of underſtanding to do ſo?

I might give many further evidences of this great Truth: As Firſt, It is our underſtanding to ſubmit to the Will of God; but this is his expreſs Will (2 Tim. 2. 19.) Let every one that nameth the Name of Chriſt depart from iniquity. Secondly, It is our underſtanding to keep our ſelves in the love of God (Jude ver. 21.) both in the love of God to us, and in our love to God; but this we cannot do, unleſs we depart from evil. While the Pſalmiſt adviſeth (Pſal. 97. 10.) Ye that love the Lord hate evil, he doth more then intimate that the leaſt compliance with evil is inconſiſtent with the love of God. Thirdly, It is our underſtanding to preſerve our own peace, even our outward peace, but eſpecially our inward peace; but this we cannot do unleſs we depart from evil; For as there is no peace to the wicked, who give themſelves up to do evil; ſo if a godly man, inſtead of a reſolute departure from, be found dallying with evil, God (as many have found by ſad experiences) will ſooner or later break his peace. Fourthly, It is our underſtanding to maintain our own liberty, or to recover it; but we can do neither of theſe, unleſs we depart from evil, For whoſoever committeth ſin is the ſervant of ſin (John 8. 34.) and while ſin promiſeth us liberty, it doth but make us bond-ſlaves to corruption. Fifthly, It is our underſtanding to keep our ſelves free for righteouſneſs, or ready for every good word and work; but we cannot ſtand in ſuch a bleſſed frame and poſture, unleſs we depart from evil; for, when we are the ſervants of ſin, we are free from righteouſneſs (Rom. 6. 20.) that is, righteouſneſs hath us not actually and readily at its command, though it alwayes had, and ſtill hath a right to command us, and will at laſt find power enough to chaſten us for taking up ſuch an unwarrantable freedom. Sixthly, It is our underſtanding to keep our ſelves, as free and ready to do, ſo to ſuffer the will of God, or to bear the croſs: But this we cannot do unleſs we depart from evil; for as no croſs is heavy to him who thinks no ſin light; ſo they who make light of ſin, think every croſs heavy. They who are forwardeſt to do evil, are in their own ſpirits furtheſt from ſuffering. Guilt is impatient; a ſhoulder out of joynt cannot carry a burden. Why was Chriſt ſo patient? It was becauſe he was ſo innocent (1 Pet. 2. 22, 23.) Seventhly, It is our underſtanding to keep the way to Heaven alwayes open for prayer, But unleſs we depart from evil, either we ſhall have no mind to pray, or if we do, The Lord will not mind or regard our prayer (Pſal. 66. 18.) The love of any ſin either ſhuts our hearts ſo that we cannot put out a prayer, or it ſtops the ear of God ſo that he will not take in our prayers.

To conclude this Verſe and Chapter, as John doth the thirteenth of the Revelation; Here is wiſdom, let him that hath underſtanding count, if he can, the number of thoſe bleſſings which are wrapt up in the fear of the Lord, and the number of thoſe trouble-evils which we eſcape while we depart from the evil of ſin. Or ſhall I conclude this Verſe and Chapter as David doth the hundred and ſeventh Pſalm? Who ſo is wiſe and will obſerve theſe things, even they ſhall underſtand the loving kindneſs of the Lord. They who are ſo wiſe as to obſerve theſe two things, To fear the Lord, and to depart frem evil, they certainly ſhall at laſt underſtand (by their own enjoyment and experience) the loving kindneſs of the Lord, or how kind the Lord is to them that fear him; and then they will abundantly bear their teſtimony to this truth; That, The fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom, and to depart from evil is underſtanding.

CHAP. XXIX. Verſ. 1, 2, 3.

Moreover, Job continued his Parable, and ſaid,

O that I were as in months paſt, as in the dayes when God preſerved me:

When his Candle ſhined upon my head, and when by his light I walked through darkneſs.

THis Chapter contains Job's ſecond Parable, for ſo he began the twenty-ſeventh, Moreover, Job continued his Parable and ſaid: This (I ſay) is his ſecond Parable or Speech which he made beyond what he was urged to in defence of his own innocency, after he had given particular Anſwers to all the Objections which his Friends made againſt him.

This Parable hath three general parts in it.

Firſt, The propoſal of his wiſh, for the reſtitution of his former plentiful ſtock and proſperous ſtate; or 'tis, at leaſt, a wiſh about it, which he purſues quite through this twenty-ninth Chapter.

Secondly, He gives us a deſcription of his preſent calamitous eſtate, and of the contempt which was poured upon him under it: This he proſecutes all along the thirtieth Chapter to the twenty-fourth verſe.

Thirdly, He preſents us with an Aſſertion of his own integrity, joyned with the soreſt imprecations upon himſelf, in caſe of his faultineſs, or of the truth of thoſe accuſations that his Friends had brought againſt him. And this he inſiſts upon from the twenty-fourth verſe of the thirtieth to the end of the thirty-firſt Chapter. And he thus ſtands up and aſſerts his own innocency or integrity, not becauſe he was hungry after the applauſe of men, or deſired in a vain glorious way to blow a Trumpet, and cry up his own name and fame, but he doth it to do himſelf right, or to wipe off thoſe foul aſpertions which his Friends had caſt upon him; that ſo he might be acquitted before men, even before the whole world, as his heart did acquit him before God.

More particularly, Job's ſcope in this Parable or Apologetical Narration, which he makes for himſelf, may be threefold, or it bears a threefold reſpect.

Firſt, To convince his Friends further of the wrong which they had done him, and of the wrong courſe which they took with him, in judging him the greateſt of ſinners, becauſe he was ſo great a ſufferer.

Secondly, To purge and clear himſelf of that imputation of impatience under his change, by ſhewing how ſad a change God had made in his condition. To fall from ſuch a height of outward happineſs, as he deſcribeth in this Chapter, into ſuch a depth of outward affliction, as he deſcribeth in the next, would put the patience of any man to it, and therefore they might in charity and compaſſion bear with him, if ſometimes his ſpirit were a little unquiet, and his ſpeeches tinctur'd with impatience.

Thirdly, His ſcope might be to ſhew that he had retained his integrity, and conſtantly walked in that fear of the Lord, of which he ſpake in the cloſe of the former Chapter, And unto man he ſaid, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom, and to depart from evil is underſtanding. Job, I ſay, to give a teſtimony of his integrity that he had walked in this fear of the Lord, and departed from evil, even in thoſe times of his greateſt fulneſs and worldly felicity, makes this large profeſſion: Though God had afflicted him, yet his conſcience told him he did not afflict him for the ill management of his power and proſperity (as his Friends ſuggeſted againſt him) by tyrannizing over and oppreſſing the poor, by vexing the widow and the fatherleſs, or by denying or delaying right to any, for he had all along kept cloſe to the rule of righteouſneſs, juſtice, and judgment; and when he might have done what he would, had no will to do any thing but what he ought; and therefore ſaith he, I am not afraid to look back upon what I have been, nor to take an account of what I have done, as many in ſuch caſes are, whoſe practiſes teſtifie unto others, and whoſe conſciences teſtifie againſt themſelves, that they have perverted juſtice, and cauſed judgment to ſpring up as Hemlock in the furrows of the field. But (ſaith Job) as for me, I am ready to tell you the ſtory of my whole life, in the exerciſe of my place and power. And as I have reaſon to be acquitted, your ſelves being Judges; ſo I am ſure to be acquitted before God, the Righteous, the Supream, and Impartial Judge. Thus we may conceive Job's ſcope and aim in theſe three Chapters.

More particularly, in this twenty-ninth, conſider:

Secondly, In this Parable Job makes a large deſcription of his once flouriſhing condition, from the ſecond verſe incluſively to the end of the eleventh; concerning which we may note.

Firſt, His earneſt wiſh or deſire of being re-eſtated in what he once enjoyed; for ſo moſt interpret the firſt words of the ſecond verſe, O that I were as in months paſt.

Secondly, He leads us to the fountain of his proſperity; which did ariſe (according to his preſent diſcourſe) three wayes.

Firſt, From that divine care or eye of providence that watched over him, and all his wayes; this is plainly intimated in the latter part of the ſecond verſe; O that it were with me, &c. as in the dayes when God preſerved me: As if he had ſaid, I proſpered while God preſerved me.

Secondly, (which is near the ſame) from that divine Favour and Grace, Goodneſs and Kindneſs, Light and Love of God towards him, at the third verſe, When his Candle ſhined upon my head, and by his light I walked through darkneſs.

Thirdly, He aſcribes his proſperity to the free and familiar preſence of God with him; of which he ſpeaks at the fourth and part of the fifth verſe; As I was in the dayes of my youth, when the ſecret of God was upon my tabernacle; when the Almighty was yet with me, or when I had ſweeteſt converſe with God. Thus Job attributes all his proſperity to the care of God watching over him, to the Candle of God ſhining upon his head, and to the Secret of God abiding upon his tabernacle.

Fourthly, He deſcribes his proſperous ſtate, by the ſubject of it, or by that wherein it did conſiſt. The proſperity of one man conſiſts in riches, of another in honour, of a third in children and relations. In Job there was a confluence of all three.

Firſt, He had many Children, at the cloſe of the fifth verſe; When my Children were about me.

Secondly, He had abundance of riches, at the ſixth verſe; When I waſhed my ſteps with Butter, and the Rock poured me out rivers of Oyl.

Thirdly, He was full of honour, and crowned with dignity; he was raiſed high and lifted up above his Brethren. And he gives proof that he was ſo three wayes.

Firſt, Becauſe he ſate chief Magiſtrate or Judge; at the ſeventh verſe; When I went out to the gate through the City, when I prepared my ſeat in the ſtreet; that is, when I ſate to give judgment between man and man, between cauſe and cauſe in open Court.

Secondly, His honour did appear by the obſervance and reverence which all ſorts gave him in his place. Some ſit upon the Throne as earthly Gods, yet have no real reverence nor reſpect from men on earth; but Job had not only great power, and ſate in the gate as a Prince over the people, but he had reverence and due reſpect from the people, even from people of all ranks and ages (ver. 8, 9, 10.) The young men ſaw me, and hid themſelves; and the aged aroſe and ſtood up. The Princes refrained talking, and laid their hand on their mouth. The Nobles held their peace, and their tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth. All theſe acts of young and old, of the Princes and of the Nobles, carried in them the higheſt and freeſt ſignifications of reſpect both to his Perſon and Authority.

Thirdly, He ſhews the greatneſs of his honour, by the general content which all took in him, and by the teſtimony which they gave him; all readily ſubſcribing to what he ſaid or did, as juſt and good (ver. 11.) When the ear heard me, then it bleſſed me; and when the eye ſaw me, it gave witneſs to me. Here was a Magiſtrate honoured indeed. What can be ſaid more of, or done more to the man, whom either God or men delight to honour, then was ſaid of this man, and done unto him?

Job having ſhewed the proſperity of his ſtate from the multitude of his Children, the abundance of his Riches, and the greatneſs of his Honour, proceeds in the third place, to clear the righteouſneſs of his actions while he continued in that high eſtate of honour; and this he doth two wayes.

Firſt, By the ready help and redreſs of wrongs, which they who were oppreſſed and helpleſs found at his hand; Job received not this honour for nought; the people did not worſhip an Idol, nor flatter him with forged commendations, they ſaw reaſon for all they did (ver. 12. 13, 14, 15, 16.) Becauſe I delivered the poor that cryed, and the fatherleſs, and him that had none to help him, the bleſſing of him that was ready to periſh came upon me; and I cauſed the widows heart to ſing for joy. I put on righteouſneſs, and it cloathed me; my judgment was as a robe and a diadem. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. I was a father to the poor; and the cauſe which I knew not, I ſearched out. When a Magiſtrate exerciſeth his power, and beſtirs himſelf in his place, it is no wonder if all reverence him, if every eye and ear witneſs to him. And as Job carried it thus in his office towards thoſe who were wronged and oppreſſed; ſo he was not behind in another piece of juſtice, and that was in puniſhing wrong-doers and oppreſſours. Theſe are the two parts of Juſtice, and the ornaments of Magiſtracy; Reward and protection to the good, wrath and puniſhment to them that are evil. Thus he ſpeaks at the ſeventeenth verſe; I brake the jaws of the wicked, and pluckt the ſpoil out of his teeth; that's the third part of the Chapter.

In the fourth he tells us, that being in this proſperity and honour, he had conceived great hopes that he ſhould ſo continue to the end of his dayes. Thus he ſeems to conclude at the eighteenth verſe, Then I ſaid, I ſhall dye in my neſt, and I ſhall multiply my dayes as the ſand: That is, As I was in a good eſtate, ſo I had a fair probability to hold it. And that it might appear, he did not ſpeak without book, but had ground for this confidence, he ſubjoyns what reaſon he had to be ſo confident.

Firſt, He had a good bottom, or foundation (ver. 19.) My root was ſpread out by the waters, and the dew lay all night upon my branch. He had a good root, and he had dew and moiſture to maintain the beauty and greenneſs of his branches.

Secondly, He never found any decay, but rather a daily encreaſe of theſe. Some mens honour and riches are in a kind of conſumption, and they pine away by degrees; but his abode in full ſtrength and luſter (ver. 20.) My glory was freſh in me, and my bow was renewed in my hand.

Thirdly, Theſe hopes were confirmed, becauſe he carried all before him, as with a juſt, ſo with a high hand of authority. And this he amplifieth five wayes.

Firſt, By the willing attentiveneſs of all men to what he ſpake (ver. 21.) Unto me men gave ear, and waited, and kept ſilence at my counſel.

Secondly, By the prevailing power that his ſpeech had with all men; his opinion was not rejected, his judgment was received as an Oracle (ver. 22.) After my words they ſpake not again, and my ſpeech dropped upon them. No man had any thing to reply, when I had once ſpoken.

Thirdly, His ſpeech was not only powerful but delightful, his counſel gave great content, and was a refreſhing unto all (ver. 23.) They waited for me as for the rain; and they opened their mouth wide as for the latter rain.

Fourthly, His very mirth and laughter had an aw and ſeriouſneſs in it (ver. 24.) If I laughed on them, they believed it not, and the light of my countenance they caſt not down.

Laſtly, As all gave him the hand, and his perſon had precedency among all, ſo they earneſtly ſued to him for, and gladly ſubmitted to his counſel (ver. 25.) I choſe out their way, and dwelt as a King in the Army, as one that comforteth mourners. Laying all theſe conſiderations together, might he not ſay without ſelf-flattery, I ſhall dye in my neſt, and multiply my dayes as the ſand. Theſe are the parts and reſolution of the whole Chapter. I ſhall now proceed to a diſtinct explication of the words as they lye in order.

Verſe 1. Moreover Job continued his Parable, and said.

I purpoſe not to inſiſt upon theſe words, having already opened them ſomewhat largely at the firſt verſe of the twenty-ſeventh Chapter. I ſhall only add, and ſo paſs, that here we may conceive Job a ſecond time taking breath a while, and making ſome pauſe, poſſibly, to try whether his Friends had any thing more to ſay, or whether they would renew their conference: But perceiving that they all ſtood mute or ſilent, and anſwered no more, he was reſolved to pour out his mind, and vent himſelf more fully, in the vindication of his name and honour from all thoſe accuſations which had been brought againſt him: Being right in his own thoughts, he will do what he can to ſet himſelf right in the thoughts of others.

Verſe 2. O that I were as in months paſt, as in the dayes when God preſerved me: Or, Who will give me to be as in the months paſt? So the Hebrew.

'Tis a form of wiſhing frequent in that language, and we have met with it more then once in this Book. Thus Job ſpake (Chap. 6. 8.) O that I might have my requeſt! and that God would grant me the thing that I long for. Thus alſo Zophar (Chap. 11. 5.) O that God would ſpeak, and open his lips againſt thee! Thus here, O that I were as in the months paſt! The Septuagint render it in the ſingular number, month; O that I were for a month as in the dayes that the Lord preſerved me: As if he had ſaid, O that I had my former proſperity for a little while, though but for a month. They who are compaſſed with ſorrow, would highly prize even a ſhort injoyment of their former comforts; O that we were for a month, for a day, for an hour, as in the dayes when God preſerved me. The rich-man ſpoken of in the Parable (Luke 16.) being in torment, begg'd for a drop of water to cool his tongue, which if it had been granted him could have given him but a little eaſe, and that for the leaſt of time, a moment; How welcome then would ſuch a month have been to him as he once had, when he was cloathed gorgeouſly and fared deliciouſly every day!

But we render more clear to the Text; O that I were as in months paſt; that is, in the former part of my life, when I had as much of this world as this world had; when all creature-contentments courted me, and rendred themſelves up to my acceptance. O that I were

As in the months paſt.

The life of man hath a threefold meaſure in Scripture: Firſt, 'Tis meaſured uſually by years; The dayes of our years are threeſcore years and ten (Pſal. 90. 10.) Secondly, By dayes; Man that is born of a Woman is of few dayes, and full of trouble (Chap. 14. 1.) Thirdly, By Months, or by Moons, as here. The Hebrew word rendred Months, comes from a root ſignifying the Moon, as our Engliſh word alſo doth, becauſe Months are meaſured by the courſe of the Moon; O that it were with me as in the Months or Moons paſt. Job's Moon was changed; it was full Moon with him once, but now he was in the wane, his light was almoſt gone. All things under the Moon (like the Moon) appear daily in a new ſhape, and are only certain in their uncertainties.

O that I were as in the months of old: Or, As in the months of antiquity; ſo the Original.

The word ſignifieth any thing before us, whether in time or place; and therefore the Eaſtern part of the world is expreſſed by it: but here 'tis taken for a precedency of time, O that I were as in the month's that are paſt, or have been before.

קדם Dicitur quicquid ante nos, & tam ad locū quam ad tempus refertur; unde Oriens קדם vocatur.

But it may be demanded, Was Job ſo eager, was his ſtomack ſo ſharp ſet after earthly delights and delicacies, that he deſired their return as in former times? Or is it becoming a godly man, to hunger after his former fulneſs, and to declare a diſcontent or diſſatisfaction with his preſent emptineſs? O that I were as in the months before. The Apoſtles rule is (Heb. 13. 5.) Let your converſation be without covetouſneſs, and be content with ſuch things as ye have: or (as the Greek text hath it) with things preſent, yea, we ought to be content though at preſent we have nothing. So the Apoſtle ſpeakes of himſelf (Phil. 4. 11, 12.) I have learned in whatſoever ſtate I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abaſed, and I know how to abound, every where and in all things I am inſtructed, both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to ſuffer need. Doth not Job's ſpirit ſeem very different from Paul's, while he is thus importunately calling for his former fulneſs and abounding ſtate?

Ἀρκούμενοι τοῖς παροῦσιν contenti præſentibus. Bez.

I anſwer; Firſt, All godly men are not alike eminent, in the actings of the ſame grace, though all have the ſame grace. Secondly, 'Tis natural to man (I mean it not in reference to ſinful, but common nature) to deſire that which is good, and to avoid that which is hurtful, grievous, and troubleſome to himſelf, ſo that Job (ſubmitting his deſire to the will of God) might (without any impeachment either of his piety or of his patience) expreſs ſuch a deſire as this, O that God would reſtore me to my former proſperity! O that he would make up thoſe breaches which he hath made in my comforts! It is as lawful for a man to deſire the reſtoring of that good which he had, as the continuance of that which he hath. We may pray for the return of our comforts, as well as for the eſtabliſhment of them; eſpecially when we have and propoſe right ends in ſuch petitionings. Indeed to deſire the reſtoring of a worldly good, becauſe we are in love with, or do but love the world, argues a worldly mind; but we may deſire the reſtoring of a worldly good,

Firſt, That God may be glorified in his goodneſs to us, or that from our own experiences, as well as from the promiſes, we may magnifie the compaſſions and loving kindneſs of the Lord. This is lawful, and this was Job's ſcope.

Secondly, We may deſire the reſtoring of a worldly good, that others may be delivered from or convinced of their miſtakes who upon our loſs of it think evil of us, or ſay, ſurely we have done much evil becauſe we endure ſo much. That others may be freed from this errour, we may wiſh that God would free us from our trouble; and this may be probably ſuppoſed one of Job's ends in this wiſh.

Thirdly, We may deſire it, that we may with the more ſweetneſs and quietneſs of ſpirit ſerve the Lord, and that our impatience may no more find an advantage by our pains. Some afflictions (I grant) fit us (through grace) yea and quicken us to duty; but thoſe afflictions which are accompanied with great pains upon the body, and trouble upon the mind (which was Job's caſe) thoſe (I ſay) unfit the heart for, and diſtract it much in duty; and to deſire to be freed from affliction, that we may ſerve God more freely, is not only a blameleſs but a commendable and gracious deſire. Our ſins and corruptions do alwayes hinder and clog us in duty, and ſo do our ſorrowes and afflictions often. A man under great ſufferings, is under a great burden; And he that hath a heavy burden upon his back, is very unable to put his hand or move his foot about any work. And therefore as it is our duty (according to that counſel given, Heb. 12. 1.) To lay aſide every weight (of worldly cares, pleaſures, or encumbrances) and the ſin (the boſome corruption, or moſt taking luſt) which doth ſo eaſily beſet us, that we may run with patience the race (of obedience in ſuffering, for of that the text ſpeakes) which is ſet before us: So it is not at all inconſiſtent with our duty, to intreat the Lord, that he would take off from us thoſe greivous weights of trouble, and thoſe ſufferings which do ſo hardly beſet us, that ſo we may run with cheerfulneſs the race of obedience (in doing that) which himſelf ſets before us. This alſo may be conceived Job's mind and gracious deſign in breathing out this wiſh, O that it were with me as in the months paſt. And therefore

Thirdly, Though it be a very generally received opinion, that Job deſired a change of his ſtate, yet ſome think otherwiſe, and I am apt to joyn with them in opinion, that Job did not ſo much, if at all, deſire the reſtauration of his outward flouriſhing ſtate, as that God would reſtore him to the beauty and joy of his ſpiritual ſtate in which once he flouriſhed, but was now ſadly decayed. As if he had ſaid, O that my ſpirit were in as holy a frame as it was in the time of my proſpertiy! O that I were as free for good, and had a heart as inlarged toward God as when God preſerved me! O that my mind were as ſpiritual, and the light of my ſoul as clear as when his candle ſhined upon my head, and when by his light I walked through darkneſs. And Job had reaſon to make ſuch a wiſh, becauſe his friends charged him that in his proſperous ſtate his mind was vainly lifted up, that he abuſed his power, and oppreſſed all that were neer him; O (ſaith Job) that I were as in the former months, I wiſh I had no worſe a frame of heart now, then when it was beſt with me in the world, I could wiſh my heart were now as humble and as heavenly, as it was when I was at my higheſt in earthly enjoyments, and that I had given no more occaſion of offence ſince my affliction then I did before. Though every godly man gains in grace, at the long run, or as to the iſſue of his afflictions; yet his affliction may for a time much obſcure the beauty, and hinder the preſent actings of grace. The Lord chaſtneth his children for their profit that they may be partakers of his holineß (Heb. 12. 10.) yet while they are under chaſtnings their participations of and profitings in holineſs may not appear either to themſelves or others; and therefore the Apoſtle adds (v. 11.) Now, no chaſtning for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous but grievous: Neverthelesß afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs to them that are exerciſed thereby. As if he had ſaid, This is one thing that makes chaſtnings ſo greivous to good ſouls, that they have ſo much ado to keep their ſouls quiet and peaceable while they feel the ſmart of the rod upon their backs. O how little of the peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs do they then bring forth! This fruit grows and ſhews it ſelf afterwards, or after they have been exerciſed thereby; but while they are in the exerciſe, O how ſmall and ſometimes not at all diſcernable is it? This was (as'tis conceived) greivous to Job in his chaſtnings; and provoked him to make this wiſh, That it were with him, as to the fruitfulneſs of his ſoul in holineſs and righteouſneſs, as it was when he abounded in the fruits of his worldly felicity. This is an excellent ſence, and carries the text cleerly to a moſt divine deſire and holy wiſh: 'Tis lawful (as was ſhewed before) to wiſh, and pray for our reſtoring in temporals; but to wiſh and pray for our reſtoring in ſpirituals, the reflouriſhing of our graces, and the renewings of our inner man to former ſtrength and activity in the wayes of God and works of holineſs, this is the beſt deſire, the moſt gracious prayer of an afflicted ſoul, O that I were as in months paſt.

I ſhall joyn both the interpretations of Job's wiſh in the following Obſervation.

> We are more apt to prize and to be taken with good things paſt, then with good things preſent, whether ſpiritual or temporal.

I doubt not but Job had a due valuation of his outward comforts, and alſo of his inward graces when he enjoyed both in their beſt perfection, yet the want of the one, and the decay of the other, did increaſe his value of them, and raiſe their price in his ſoul; O that it were with me as in times paſt. He that is ſick and languiſhing ſaith, O that it were with me as in the months paſt of health; and he that is fallen into poverty ſaith, O that it were with me as in the time when I was rich; and he that is in bondage, or a priſoner, ſaith, O that it were with me as in the dayes of my liberty, when I could go and ſtay where I liſt. Queſtionleſs David highly prized the powerful and ſavourable preſence of God with him in his Ordinances when he had them to the ſull, and lived (as we ſay) at the wells mouth; but when he was deprived of them, O how eager was his ſpirit after them? (Pſal. 63. 1, 2.) O God thou art my God, early will I ſeek thee, my ſoul thirſteth for thee, my fleſh longeth for thee, in a dry and thirſty land where no water is, to ſee thy power and thy glory ſo as I have ſeen thee in the Sanctuary. What dry and thirſty land was this, and what was this land where there was no water? He doth not mean it of the natural barrenneſs of the ſoyl, or of the providential drought or dryneſs of the land for want of rain from the clouds; but in a metaphorical ſence it was a dry and thirſty land to his ſoul, that place yielded no means of grace, no food nor refreſhing for his inner man. Now when David was in this land, this dry and thirſty land, what ſaith he? My ſoul thirſty for thee; What to do? To ſee thy power and glory, as I have ſeen thee in the Sanctuary: As if he had ſaid, I remember how I have ſeen thee in the Sanctuary, I remember what full and large draughts of the wine of thy conſolations I have had, while I had liberty to enjoy, and waited for enioyments in thine Ordinances; I remember how abundantly I have been ſatisſied with the fatneſs of thy houſe, and how, O Lord, thou haſt made me drink of the rivers of thy pleaſures. But now alas, I am in a dry and thirſty land, where none of thoſe heavenly waters are. Thus Chriſt told his Diſciples, who then had the priviledg to be filled daily with his perſonal preſence; The dayes will come, when ye ſhall deſire to ſee one of the dayes of the Son of man, and ye ſhall not ſee it (Luke 17.22.) Theſe dayes of the Son of man, were the dayes of his bodily converſe with them, in preaching, admoniſhing, inſtructing and comforting them. As if he had ſaid, Now ye have many of thoſe dayes, and are not much affected with them, nor improve them to your utmoſt advantage, but the time ſhall come when one of thoſe dayes would be a welcome day, and you blaming your former neglect and unbeleif will cry out earneſtly, O that it were with us as in the months paſt, when we enjoyed the preſence of our dear Lord and Maſter Jeſus Chriſt! The children of Iſrael being in the wilderneſs, ſaid, we remember the fleſh-pots of Egypt, the Garlick and the Onions; yet when they were in Egypt they cryed out of their hard bondage. Thus 'tis alſo in the actings of grace, when faith and love are up in free communion with Chriſt, we are not ſo ſenſible of our mercies, but when faith and love are down, when the heart is ſtreightned, and the Spirit clouded in prayer and duty, then we are preſt to wiſh, O that it were with us as in the months paſt; So then, whether we conſider ſoul-mercies or body-mercies, our want of them quickeneth our deſires after them, and cauſeth us to prize that, which being preſent, we either made light of, or did not ſo dearly prize.

Secondly, Obſerve, There is nothing in this world but is ſubject to change.

It may ſoon not be with you, as it was with you a few months paſt, whether for ſpirituals, or for temporals; poſſibly to morrow you may have cauſe enough to ſay, O that it were with us, as it was but yeſterday. Boaſt not of to morrow (ſaith Solomon, Pro. 27. 1.) for thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth. This Proverb is their reproof who contemn providence, promiſing to themſelves not only many dayes in the world, but the attaining of their own ends and projects, as if they had the world in a ſtring, and living without any ſenſe either of their own frailty or of the creatures uncertainty. This to morrow, may be taken either ſtrictly for the next day coming, or largely for all time to come; every day hath its birth, it brings forth ſomewhat or other; time is not barren, it travelleth to bring forth the Lords decrees; As time eats up and devoures all things, ſo time puts out or brings forth all things. But no man knoweth what to morrow will bring forth, whether good or evil, though moſt pleaſe themſelves with the hopes, yea and make boaſt of many good morrows.

Men know what themſelves plot and purpoſe to bring forth, but what to morrow will bring forth, the wiſeſt man alive knoweth not. The next day is not ſo neer this in time, as it may be remote and far from it, in its products and iſſues. God may quickly ſend ſuch a change both in reſpect of our publick, and perſonal comforts, as ſhall make us ſay, O that it were with us as in the months paſt! The things of the world ebb and flow, move and turn from one condition to another, they go forward and backward, up and down, now we have them, and anon they are ſlipt out of our hands. Spiritual things are ſubject to changes alſo, though grace cannot be loſt, yet it may be abated, and you may come to ſay, O that I could find my faith acting as in time paſt. And as changes are incident to our graces, ſo much more to the means of grace; Many a good ſoul hath ſaid, O that I had ſuch a Miniſtry, ſuch food for my ſoul as in the months paſt. Ordinances and Churches are changeable, Chriſt can remove our candleſtick, and when we are in the dark we wiſh for light; O what ſhall we do, the light is gone, the word is gone, the Miniſtry is gone, truth (as to the publication and protection of it) is gone, all's gone, when ſhall we ſee a return? It is good to be ſenſible of the want of mercies, but 'tis better to make a good uſe of preſent mercies: therefore improve the price which is in your hand, and be thankful. The beſt of men may ſoon have cauſe to ſay (as Job) about all theſe things; O that it were with me as in the months paſt;

As in the dayes when God preſerved me.

The ſame thing is here intended by dayes as before by months. The months paſt were a time of proſperity, and ſo were the dayes of his preſervation. And as here he expreſly repeats a deſcription of his former ſtate, ſo here is an implicit repetition of his wiſh, which ſhews his earneſtneſs for the thing, O that it were with me, as in the dayes when God preſerved me; that is, when God kept me and all mine from invading evils. The ſame word is uſed in the ſeventh Chapter of this Book at the twentieth verſe, as alſo Chap. 10. v. 14. in all which it ſhewes the providential care of God for and over his people and ſervants, both in refereuce to their perſonal ſafety, and the ſafety of their families, of their dwellings, goods, cattel and affairs. Satan took envious notice of Gods preſerving mercy towards Job, yea, he could not but complain of it (Chap. 1. 10.) Haſt not thou made an hedge about him, and about his houſe, and about all that he hath on every ſide? Thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands, and his ſubſtance is increaſed in the land; thou haſt ſecured, ſheltered, and fenced him from danger as if he were thy darling, thy delight. Now as Satan was very envious at, ſo Job himſelf was very ſenſible of this former kindneſs of God, and therefore he ſaith, O that it were with me as in the dayes when God preſerved me, as in the dayes when the Devil could not touch me without leave obtained.

But it may be asked, Did not God preſerve Job at that time, and all along in the dayes of his affliction? Had God taken away or laid aſide his care of him, and left him to the wide world to ſhift for himſelf, to ſink or ſwim? Or if God did then preſerve him, how can Job be blameleſs, in this intimation that he did not?

I anſwer, Firſt, Job ſpeakes according to the common opinion of men, who eaſily grant that God preſerves a man when he is free from trouble, and no evil comes neer him to grieve him; but when once they ſee him fall into the hand, and under the preſſure of an evil, then they are ready to ſay, yea conclude, God doth not preſerve him; ſuch is the vulgar underſtanding and judgment of man concerning the providences of God. They ſcarce believe there is a preſervation in trouble as well as from trouble; or that God is graciouſly preſent with thoſe who ſuffer greivous things. As Mary ſaid to Chriſt concerning Lazarus (John 11. 32.) Lord, if thou hadſt been here, my brother had not dyed. Or as Gideon to the Angel (Judges 6. 13.) O my Lord, if the Lord be with us, why then is all this befallen us? Thus the moſt of men argue upon every croſs accident (as they call it) As if the ſorrows which preſs us, were inconſiſtent with the care of God over us. Whereas indeed, his preſervations in trouble are greater then thoſe by which we are kept from trouble.

Secondly, I anſwer, that, not only common, but even godly men are apt to think that God hath withdrawn his preſence, and preſervation from them, when trouble is upon them. Hence thoſe bitter complaihts and vehement expoſtulations (Pſal. 22. 1.) My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Why art thou ſo far from helping me, and from the words of my roarings? Again (Pſal. 77. 7.) Will the Lord caſt off for ever? and will he be favourable no more? (As if he had ſaid, ſurely the Lord hath caſt off for the preſent, he takes no care of me now) is his mercy clean gone for ever? doth his promiſe fail for evermore? hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger ſhut up his tender mercies? What tumultuating thoughts were theſe? yet theſe were the thoughts of Aſaph a Godly man, or rather of David, a man after Gods own heart, in the day of his diſtreſs. And thus (poſſibly) Job thought himſelf out of covert, when his enemies laid his eſtate, and his friends his credit, waſte, The beſt of men can hardly believe that God takes care of them, when they are hardly dealt with by men. Faith acts glorioully, when though we ſee our ſelves deſtroyed, yet we can believe our ſelves preſerved. Job's faith was ſometimes at this pitch, yet now, it ſeems, it was not, when he cryed out, O that it were with me as in the dayes when God preſerved me.

Thirdly, I anſwer; The work of preſervation may be conſidered either abſolutely, or comparatively. When a man is fallen into great troubles, he may look upon himſelf as unpreſerved in compariſon of that preſervation which he had in thoſe dayes when God ſuffered no evil to befal him, or come near his dwelling. He that is not ſo compleatly preſerved as formerly he was, or found himſelf to be, may be ſaid to want divine preſervation. O that it were with me as when God preſerved me.

Fourthly, I anſwer; There is a twofold preſervation: Firſt, Viſible; Secondly, Inviſible. That's viſible preſervation when God keepeth us from outward evils: Inviſible preſervation is when God keeps our ſpirits up under the preſſure of all thoſe evils; God doth not withdraw from his people at any time his inviſible preſervation, but his viſible he often doth. That word of promiſe ſtands faſt for ever, how much ſoever the world ſhakes, or we are ſhaken in the world. (Heb. 13. 5, 6.) I will never leave thee nor forſake thee; ſo that we may boldly ſay (even when to appearance we are moſt helpleſs) the Lord is my helper. God once preſerved Job ſo viſibly that he had not ſo much as a ſcratch with a pin from any enemy or danger; but when all was torn from him to his skin, when his very skin and fleſh, and which is yet more, his ſoul and ſpirit were all betorn, when he was ſores, and boyls, and wounds all over, in that caſe all his diſcernable preſervation was gone, he had no arm of fleſh to defend him; yet then his inviſible preſervation was not gone, The everlaſting arms were under him; but thoſe arms not being ſeen, he looked upon himſelf as if out of the arms of God, as if not at all preſerved; and therefore deſired the return of ſuch comforts as he had in thoſe dayes when God (viſibly) preſerved him.

Hence note, Firſt, Mans preſervation is of God.

He condeſcends to the daily care and over-ſight of his people. As he is our Creator, ſo our Preſerver. He gave us our being, and he maintains us in it. He is not like the Architect that builds a houſe, and leaves it, never looking after it more, let it rot or ruine if it will; nor like the Ship-wright who builds a ſtately veſſel, and then lets it go to the wide Sea and daſh againſt rocks, or be ſwallowed with ſands for all him. God deals not thus with us, either in regard of our bodies, or of our ſouls; when he hath built us up a ſpiritual houſe, he leaves us not to the winds, and ſands, and rocks, but he looks to us, and repairs us, and protects us in our graces, and in our comforts. As we owe our effectual vocation into a ſtate of grace, ſo our abiding and continuance in it unto him. He confirms us to the end (1 Cor. 1. 8.) As he calls us out of ſin to holineſs, ſo he keeps us from ſin in holineſs. He is the Author of our faith, by vocation; and the finiſher of it, by preſervation (Heb. 12. 1.) We are kept, (as with a Garriſon, or as in a Garriſon'd City) by the power of God, through faith unto ſalvation (1 Pet. 1. 5.) He preſerves us, firſt, from temptation; ſecondly, in temptation. Again, He preſerves ſome, Firſt, By affliction, A hedge of thorns keeps them from wandring in forbidden paths (Hoſ. 2. 6.) Many are preſerved in Brine from corrupting. Secondly, He preſerves others, as we do ripe fruits, in Sugar from corrupting, The peace of God which paſſeth all underſtanding, keeps their hearts and minds through Chriſt Jeſus (Phil. 4. 7.) Thirdly, He preſerves us as beſieged Cities are, by fortifying us, and putting in freſh ſupplyes of his Spirit. Fourthly, He preſerves us by ſtopping the ſupplyes of our inward enemies, our luſts, ſo that they ſtarve, and cannot aſſault us. Fifthly, He preſerves ſome from greater ſins by letting them fall into leſſer ſins, which both awaken their own conſciences and the jealouſie of others concerning them. Chriſt can make our dangers preſervatives, our ſnare a table, and cauſe that which hath been an occaſion of our falling, turn to our good. Thus as the natural, ſo the ſpiritual creation is followed with a watchful eye of providence. He that made all things upholds them (Heb. 1. 3.) This priviledge we have by the ſecond Adam above what we had by the firſt; we were made upright in the firſt, we are kept in our righteouſneſs by the ſecond Adam. In the firſt we had a power to ſtand if we would; in the ſecond we have a power to keep us from falling. That's a comfortable promiſe (Jer. 31. 10.) Hear the Word of the Lord, O ye Nations, and declare it in the Iſles afar off, and ſay, He that ſcattered Iſrael, will gather him, and keep him as a Shepherd doth his flock. Keeper of Iſrael, is one of Gods Names and glorious Titles (Pſal. 121. 4.) Behold, he that keepeth Iſrael ſhall never ſlumber nor ſleep. As we want a Keeper, ſo we have one; and he is a ſure one, his care is not only without end, but without intermiſſion, He never ſlumbers nor ſleeps. And thus the Prophet expreſſeth at once the vengeance of God upon the enemies of his people, and his watchfulneſs for their preſervation (Iſa. 27. 1, 2, 3.) In that day the Lord with his ſore, and great, and ſtrong ſword ſhall puniſh Leviathan the piercing Serpent, even Leviathan that crooked Serpent, and he ſhall ſlay the Dragon that is in the Sea. In that day ſing ye unto her: A vineyard of red wine. I the Lord do keep it, I will water it every moment leſt any hurt it; I will keep it night and day: That is, mine eye ſhall alwayes be upon it. As the Lord plants his Vineyard, ſo he fenceth it, and makes a Tower in the midſt of it (Iſa. 1. 2.) to ſhew that he watches over it. This care of God towards his people, exceeds the care of a nurſing Mother towards her tender Infant (Iſa. 49. 15, 16.) Can a Woman forget her ſucking Child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the Son of her womb? It were a kind of prodigy in nature if ſhe ſhould; yet this unnaturalneſs is poſſible to nature (as it follows in the ſame verſe) Yea, they may forget; but this is impoſſible (becauſe it implyes an impotency and deficiency) to the God of Nature, who is alſo the God of all Grace and mercy, as himſelf there profeſſeth, Yet will I not forget thee: And to aſſure us that he will not, he adds in the ſixteenth verſe, Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me.

Secondly, Obſerve, They are ſafe whom God preſerves.

In the dayes when God preſerved Job, nothing moleſted or troubled him: We may be unſafe notwithſtanding all the promiſes and performances of men to preſerve us: But if God will undertake our preſervation, who can touch us? (Pſal. 127. 1.) Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vain that build it: Except the Lord keep the City, the Watchman waketh but in vain. It is in vain for you to riſe up early, and to ſit up late, to eat the bread of ſorrows; for ſo he giveth his beloved ſleep. As if he had ſaid, if the Lord be with us, all's well with us; and without him nothing is well with us: They are ſafe indeed whom God keeps, and without his keeping (whoſoever elſe keeps us) we are unſafe. That ninety-firſt Pſalm is full of this aſſurance to the Saints; thus it begins, He that dwelleth in the ſecret place (that is, in the love and power) of the moſt High, ſhall abide (or lodge) under the ſhadow of the Almighty: (His ſhadow is our ſubſtance, or our ſubſtantial defence, both againſt heat and force, as it follows in the ſecond verſe) I will ſay of the Lord, he is my refuge and my fortreſs, ſurely he ſhall deliver thee from the ſnare of the Fowler (the Devil) and from the noyſome peſtilence; both that which would infect, poyſon, and kill thy body, as alſo thy ſoul, which Solomon in his prayer at the dedication of the Temple (1 Kings 8. 38.) calls the plague of every mans own heart, yea, and from the peſtilential wounds and ſtings of other mens tongues (as one of the Ancients expounds that Pſalm) that is, both from ſuch words as would diſcourage and draw thee off from doing good, or from the good wayes of God; as alſo from thoſe peſtilential words, which would infect thee with ſin, and boyl up thy luſts like a Plague-ſore: From the noyſom peſtilence of all or any of theſe kinds the Lord will deliver thee: And (ver. 4.) He ſhall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings ſhalt thou truſt; his truth ſhall be thy ſhield and buckler: Inſomuch that thou ſhalt not be afraid (that is, thou needeſt not to fear) for the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flyeth by day. Yea (ver. 11.) He ſhall give his Angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy wayes; they ſhall bear thee up in their hands, leſt thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone. The Lord keeps his people himſelf, and he chargeth his Angels with their keeping and guardianſhip. None of the Princes of the earth (who are not Saints) have ſuch a guard as Saints have. We read alſo of another keeper which the godly carry about them, they have a guard within as well as without (Prov. 2. 11, 12.) Diſcretion ſhall preſerve thee, underſtanding ſhall keep thee, to deliver thee from the way of the evil man, from the man that ſpeaketh froward things. It is good to have a rule of holineſs without to keep us, but 'tis far better to have a principle of holineſs within to keep us; which that Scripture promiſeth. But what's this diſcretion? What's this underſtanding that they ſhould keep us? Diſcretion and underſtanding are the gift, or grace rather of God planted in man for his preſervation and keeping. Man, by common natural diſcretion, may keep himſelf much out of harms way; but that ſpecial and ſpiritual diſcretion, which is the gift and grace of God, keeps him much more and much better out of wayes which are harmful, whether to himſelf or others. Yet the ſame Solomon tells us, that we are not truſted alone in the hand of that diſcretion which is the gift of God to us; for God himſelf is the diſcretion and underſtanding that preſerves his; this he makes the ground of our encouragement (Prov. 3. 25, 26.) Be not afraid of ſudden fear, nor of the deſolation of the wicked when it cometh (that is, fear not that deſolation which cometh upon the wicked) For the Lord ſhall be thy confidence, and ſhall keep thy foot from being taken: That is, thou ſhalt confide fully in him, and confiding in him thou ſhalt be ſafe; for he ſhall keep thy foot from being taken; that is, from being taken with any ſnare of evil, or with the ſnare of any evil, either of ſin or trouble. The Hebrew word in this text of the Proverbs which we render confidence, ſignifies alſo inconſtancy and folly. One of the Jewiſh Expoſitors takes that ſence here, and tranſlates the Text thus; The Lord ſhall be with thee in thy folly: That is, In thoſe things which thou doſt fooliſhly, or wherein thou diſcovereſt much folly, the Lord ſhall be with thee, and preſerve thee from thoſe ſnares with which, through thy own folly thou waſt ready to be taken. For as the Lord is above wicked men in the things wherein they deal proudly (Exod. 18. 11.) thinking by their parts and policy to carry all before them. So the Lord is with his own people, even in the things which they do weakly and fooliſhly (while honeſtly and with righteouſneſs) to keep them from miſcarrying; he will ſo guide the feet of his Saints, that they ſhall not be taken in their own folly, while the feet of the wicked ſhall be taken in their own wiſdom. This is a very ſpiritual and comfortable expoſition of that Scripture, and doth wonderfully magnifie the kindneſs of God in the preſervation of his people.

In quibus deſipere videberis, dominus tibi præſto erit. Aben Ezra.

Laſtly, As Job, ſo we ought to aſcribe our ſafety and peace to the Lords preſervation.

As no man hath made, ſo no man hath preſerved himſelf. Let no man cover himſelf with his own feathers, or think himſelf ſafe under his own ſhadow, or under the ſhadow of any creature; God is and muſt be acknowledged, The Great Lord Protector and Preſerver of men. Wo to thoſe who ſit down in their own help; and wo to thoſe who go down to Egypt for help. Why gaddeſt thou about ſo much (ſaith the Prophet, Jer. 2. 36, 37.) to change thy way? Or changing thy way (that is, looking after, and reſorting to new wayes of ſupport and ſuccour) thou ſhalt be aſhamed of Egypt as thou waſt aſhamed of Aſſyria: That is, Egypt ſhall no more be able to protect thee, then Aſſyria did, who indeed diſtreſſed thee, but ſtrengthened thee not (2 Chron. 28. 20.) Yea, thou ſhalt go forth from him, with thy hands upon thy head (that is, lamenting and bewayling thy diſappointments) for the Lord hath rejected thy confidences (though thou hadſt a thouſand of them, and the more thou hadſt, the more the Lord will reject them) and thou ſhalt not proſper in them. The Lord ſometimes ſeems as if he did not preſerve us, but the creature at beſt doth but ſeem to do it. Job ſcarce thought himſelf preſerved by God when he was ſo ſorely troubled, but when he was preſerved he knew no Preſerver but God. O that it were with me as in the months paſt, as in the dayes when God preſerved me.

Verſe 3. When his candle ſhined upon mine head, and when by his light I walked through darkneſs.

In the former verſe Job confeſſed that God kept him from evil; in this he confeſſeth that God directed him to and in that which was good. There he had the power of God to preſerve him; here the light of God to lead him.

His candle ſhined upon my head.

Some take theſe words as an alluſion to the cloud and pillar of fire that guided the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs; but I ſhall not inſiſt upon that, becauſe it is a query, and a query undetermin'd, whether Job lived before the journey of Iſrael through the wilderneſs, or after it: If after, there is no neceſſity of inferring that alluſion here, and if before, there is no conſiſtency for it.

The candle of God is taken three wayes in Scripture.

Firſt, For the word or counſel of God, by which as by a candle we are directed and ſee our way, through the darkneſs and doubtful paſſages of this world. David found and acknowledged this uſe and benefit of the word, (Pſal. 119. 105.) Thy word is a lamp (or candle) unto my feet, and a light unto my paths. By his feet he means both his inward motions and his outward, his affections and his actions; and by his path, the courſe which he took by both. In all, the word of God was his light or candle, to ſhew him where his way lay.

Secondly, As the word of God, ſo the ſpirit of a man is called a candle, (Prov. 20. 27.) The ſpirit of man is the candle of the Lord, ſearching all the inward parts of the belly. By the ſpirit of man Solomon means the intellectual powers, which in the ſtate of mans created integrity, were as the Sun ſhining with pure beams of light in that little world man: But by the fall of man into ſin, that light is ſo decayed and leſſened, that now it is but like a candle, to give man ſome help in this night and darkneſs of his condition. And it is called not barely a candle, but the Candle of the Lord; not as that, which the Lord ſees by, but either firſt, as that which the Lord hath mercifully left or ſet up in us to ſee by; and ſo thoſe words, Of the Lord, teach us that the Lord is the Author or efficient cauſe of it. Or ſecondly, thoſe words, Of the Lord, are as an Epithete to the word candle, and ſo, to call the ſpirit of man the Candle of the Lord, is as much as to ſay, the ſpirit of man is an excellent and a moſt neceſſary Candle; for it ſearcheth, or by it, we ſearch all the inward parts of the belly; That is, whatſoever is moſt ſecret in our ſelves: As the Apoſtle ſpeakes (2 Cor. 2. 11.) What man knoweth the things of a man, ſave the ſpirit of man which is in him? That is, no other man knows what his own thoughts are, or what they are working, but himſelf by his own underſtanding. But this candle of a mans underſtanding ſearcheth all the ſecret good and ſecret evil that is in the moſt inward parts of his belly, that is, of his mind; for as in the belly natural conceptions are wrought and ſhaped; ſo in the mind moral conceptions of good or evil are wrought and ſhaped. And man with his ſpirit or underſtanding, as with a candle, may ſearch himſelf quite through. The candle of this candle is the Word of God, and the candle of that candle is the Spirit of God. Mans ſpirit hath no ſpiritual light, but as the Word and Spirit of the Lord gives light to it. The ſpirit of a man would be but a very dim candle, or a dark lanthorn, if it had not the light of the Word and Spirit of God to guide it by. Thus ſome underſtand Job's text, When his candle ſhined upon my head; that is, when the Lord gave me clear direction from his Word by his Spirit, how to frame and faſhion the whole courſe of my life in conformity to his will. But

Thirdly, Conſidering the context of the Chapter, I conceive we may expound the candle of God in another uſual Scripture ſence, for the favour and good will of God, and ſo for that which is the iſſue of it, proſperity and good ſucceſs. Thus David ſpake in his ſong of praiſe to God, by whom he had triumphed over all his enemies (2 Sam. 22. 29.) Thou art my lamp, O Lord: and the Lord will lighten my darkneſs. He ſpeaks declaratively, what God was to him, Thou art my lamp, O Lord; that is, from thee I have preſent favour; and he ſpeaks prophetically, what God would be to him, The Lord will lighten my darkneſs; That is, if fears and doubts (which are inward darkneſs) if troubles and afflictions (which are outward darkneſs) come upon me, the Lord will ſhew me what I ought to do, or he will give me comfort while I ſuffer. Thus again (Pſal. 132. 17.) There will I make the horn of David to bud: I have ordained a lamp for mine anoynted; That is, I have ordained proſperity and bleſſings for him; bleſſings upon his perſon, and eſpecially the bleſſing of poſterity. Children are as a lamp or candle in their Fathers houſe, making the name of their Anceſtors conſpicuous; hence in Scripture a Child given to ſucceed his Father is called a lamp. When God by Abijah the prophet told Jeroboam, that God would take the Kingdom out of the hand of Solomon's ſon, and give it unto him, even ten Tribes; he yet adds (1 Kings 11. 36.) And unto his Son will I give one tribe, that David my ſervant may have a light (lamp or candle, as we put in the Margin) alwayes before me in Jeruſalem, the City which I have choſen me to put my Name there. And again (1 Kings 15. 4.) when Abijam the ſon of Rehoboam proved wicked, the text ſaith, Nevertheleſs for David's ſake did the Lord his God give him a lamp (or candle) in Jeruſalem, to ſet up his Son after him. Job once had a candle ſhining upon his head, both in perſonal proſperity, and in a hopeful poſterity, but he lived to ſee both extinct, and therefore ſpeaks as of what was paſt, Lucernam Dei appellat ejus favorē, quo velut lucerna ei in omnibus quæ ſuſcipiebat aut agebat ipſi prælucebat, ut omnia adverſa et rerum difficultates ſuperaret. Merc.

His candle ſhined upon my head.

The Sun Moon and Stars, being above us, are as candles ſhining upon our heads: And ſome conceive that here is an alluſion to a lamp or candle hung up in a room, which being aloft ſhines upon the heads of thoſe that ſtand about it. In Scripture the head notes the whole man, that being his cheif part, and the ſeat of all the ſenſes. So that this ſpeech of Job, His candle ſhined upon my head, is of the ſame ſence (excepting the duration) with that of the Prophet (Iſa. 35. 16.) The ranſomed of the Lord ſhall return and come to Sion with ſongs, and everlaſting joy ſhall be upon their heads: and with that (Pro. 10. 6.) Bleſſings are upon the head of the juſt. His bleſſing is from above, though it be in things of the earth, and ſo coming down upon the head, like the ointment upon Aaron's head, runs down to the skirts of his garment; that is, he is bleſſed all over, or quite through; he is bleſſed from the beginning to the ending. Thus when Job reports concerning his former dayes, that then, the candle of God ſhined upon his head, his meaning is, that the favour of God was extended over all he had, over ſoul and body, over his wayes and counſels.

Me ſalutaribus conſiliis inſtruebat ut viderem quid in rebus dubiis agendum eſſet. Piſc.

Further; A candle ſhining upon the head, implyeth the cleareſt, as alſo the moſt uſeful and profitable light, for the more the light comes from above, the leſs is the ſhadow; while the Sun is aſcending or deſcending it caſts a ſhadow, and according to the degrees of its aſcent or declenſion, the ſhadow is more or leſs, longer or ſhorter; when ſhadows are very long, we know 'tis towards evening, and that the Sun is ſetting; But when the Sun is in his Zenith, (as at high-noon) and ſo caſts his beams directly upon our head, then it makes no ſhadow at all. This Conſideration of Job's, from nature, gives us ſome advantage for the better and fuller underſtanding of his mind and ſcope in them. Job had not a light ſhining from below, but from aloft, not a light to his ſide, but upon his head; He had a clear and good light, as the light at noon day, which is grown into a Proverb, ſuch a thing, is as clear as the light at noon-day. And becauſe the head is the ſeat of the underſtanding as well as of the ſenſes, the candle upon the head may fitly import, a clear light of knowledge in adviſing others or our ſelves what to do, or how to order our affairs. From all which notions, it appears that Job had much of God, many ſignal teſtimonies of reſpect from him, he had comforts without, and counſels within, and mercy every way. His candle (ſaith he) ſhined upon my head.

Hence Note, A godly man owns God as the Author, and his favour as the ſpring of his proſperity and good ſucceſs.

Job doth not ſay, O that it were with me as in former times, when I got and gained; but, O that it were with me as in months paſt, when the Candle of God ſhined upon my head. As the Candle of God, or his favour ſhining upon us, is the beſt portion, and portion enough, though we had nothing elſe; ſo what portion ſoever we have in other things is to be aſcribed to that. Carnal men ſacrifice to their own net, and burn incenſe to their own drag (that is, they thank their wit or their induſtry, their policy or their ſtrength, their own forecaſt or the kindneſs of their friends, becauſe by them (they conceive as the Prophet ſaith, Hab. 1. 16.) their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous. And as many have no mind to offer the ſacrifice of praiſe to God for their plenty, ſo they have no reaſon to do ſo. And becauſe they have no reaſon to do ſo, it would be their ſin to do ſo. For ſeeing their plenty comes in by their ſin, and is at once provided by and for their luſts; they in praiſing God for their plenty, ſhould entitle God to all thoſe ſins by which they have provided it. They have not got their riches by the Candle of God ſhining upon their heads, but by putting out the Candle of God which ſhined into their hearts. There is a natural Candle or Light which God hath put into the hearts of all men, by which they may ſee (Heathens have ſeen it) what is juſt and right in their dealings with men. This Candle or Light they put out, that they may heap up the gain of deceit and fraud, of unrighteouſneſs and oppreſſion in the darkneſs of their own luſts. He only gets riches by Gods Candle, who gets them in wayes of righteouſneſs: And if he become poor (as Job) he may wiſh or pray with confidence (as Job did) O that it were with me, as when the Candle of God ſhined upon my head.

And when by his light I walked through darkneſs.

The Light of God is oppoſed, Firſt, To our own light, or (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Iſa. 50. 11.) To the light of our fire. Secondly, To the light of any creature-comfort. All light is of God; for God is light (1 John 1. 4.) and the fountain of light. Firſt, To his own Son the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is that true light (John 1. 8.) The light of the world (John 3. 18.) Secondly, To the Saints, who are therefore ſaid not only to receive light from him, but to be light (Eph. 5. 8.) Ye were ſometimes darkneſs, but now ye are light in the Lord. All light is Gods light, yet ſome light is more peculiarly called his light. Light was the firſt diſtinct part of the whole Creation. And as external light is Gods creature, ſo alſo is internal light, intellectual light, ſpiritual light.

But it may be queſtioned, What is that light which Job ſo eminently entitles God to? His light.

I anſwer, Firſt, Negatively, Not light in a proper ſence, the light of the Sun, which fills the Air.

Secondly, Affirmatively, We may underſtand it two ways.

Firſt, For the light of counſel and direction, given either immediately or mediately from God. The word of God is the light of God (as was ſhewed from the former words) Thus in the Prophet (Iſa. 2. 5.) O houſe of Jacob, come ye and let us walk in the light of the Lord. The word, like light diſcovers and layes open the hidden things of God, and the hidden things of man. 'Tis as light, the firſt thing to be ſeen, and that by which we ſee all other things. 'Tis the means by which we ſee, and 'tis the object of our ſight. 'Tis like the lights or lamps ſpoken of (Lev. 24. 2, 3, 4. Num. 8. 2.) which God hath appointed to hang up and burn continually in the Tabernacle of the Church. By this light of God, the light of his holy Word, Job walked through darkneſs.

Secondly, By his light, or the light of God, may be meant the favour, grace, and good will of God. When David begg'd of God, To lift up the light of his countenance upon him (Pſal. 4. 6.) his meaning is, O let me enjoy thy favour, or be thou favourable unto me. And from this light of God ſhining upon us, another, a third light of God, the light of joy ſhines in us; as it follows in the Pſalm, where David had no ſooner prayed, Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon me, but he ſeems to have received an anſwer preſently (ver. 7.) Thou haſt put gladneſs in my heart. This light of God is ſown for the righteous (Pſal. 97. 11.) and it ſprings up in them like the joy of harveſt, even when the labour of the Olive faileth, and the Fields yield no meat (Hab. 3. 17, 18.) By all theſe, or any of theſe lights of God, Job walked through darkneſs. The light of the counſel of God, his word, and the light of the countenance of God, his favour, and the light of the joy of God, his conſolations, are enough to carry us through all the darkneſs of this world.

But it may be queſtioned, What the darkneſs was through which Job walked in the light of God. As before we had nothing to do with natural light; ſo neither here with that natural darkneſs which followeth the departure of the Sun from, or its going down below our Horizon. But in an improper ſence; Darkneſs in Scripture-language is put,

Firſt, For ſin; And to walk in darkneſs, is to lead a ſinful life (1 John 1. 6.) This is not the darkneſs here meant; Job did not walk in a ſtate of ſin, though he had ſin in him; nor do we walk through this darkneſs by the light of God, but from it. The light of God teacheth us to avoid it, yea, to abhor it, to have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of it; but it doth not help or aſſiſt us to walk through it.

Secondly, Darkneſs is often put for affliction. Job (I grant) had walked long in this darkneſs, and was then walking in it when he ſpake theſe words; yet we cannot underſtand theſe words of that darkneſs, becauſe Job in ſpeaking them, refers or looks back to his proſperous ſtate, in which as he had all manner, ſo the fulleſt meaſure of outward mercies, and knew not what ſorrow meant, nor what it was to walk through the darkneſs of it, as to his own experience; Job in theſe times ſcarce ever had a cloud come over his day, much leſs was his day turned to night, or his light to darkneſs.

Thirdly, By darkneſs is ſignified ſome eminent danger: He that is in a good condition, doth ſometimes fall into ſuch a danger, and is compaſſed about with ſuch ſudden extremities, as may cover him for the time with very great darkneſs, and yet by the light of divine favour he paſſeth ſafely through it. Though I walk (ſaith David, Pſal. 23. 4.) through the valley of the ſhadow of death (that's a dark valley indeed) I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and thy ſtaffe they comfort me; that is, In thy light I walk through darkneſs. Poſſibly Job had met with ſome ſuch ſudden exigents in the former paſſages of his life, through which he walked or made his eſcape by the light of God.

Fourthly, Darkneſs may import any difficult caſe or doubtful condition, through which a mans own reaſon cannot guide him, and he wants light to ſee his way out. Now if in ſuch caſes the Lord ſhew us our way, we have cauſe to ſay, that in the light of God we walked through darkneſs. And this, I conceive, is Job's meaning here, when he ſaith, In his light I walked through darkneſs. As if he had thus expreſſed himſelf, Not only did the Candle of God, ſhining upon my head in former times, keep me out of a ſtate of miſery and affliction, but if at any time I did but ſtep into or was ſurprized with a ſudden danger, if at any time I were hard put to it, not well knowing how to reſolve or what to do; preſently, even in ſuch dangers, doubts, and ſtraits I had light from God, by which I walked through the darkneſs of thoſe diſpenſations, and all iſſued well for me.

In rebus dubiis luce ejus directas. Merc.

Hence Note, Firſt, The light of God is enough to lead us through all doubts and difficulties.

We cannot walk in the light by our own light, but in the light of God we may walk through any darkneſs. Eaſie things are hard to our own power, and plain things are obſcure to our own light; but as nothing is hard to the power, ſo nothing is obſcure to the Light of God. The Grace of God is ſufficient for us in our weakneſs, and the Light of God is ſufficient for us in our darkneſs. And as 'tis comfortable to remember that his Light is ſufficient for us; ſo tis much more comfortable to remember that he will not fail to give us light. As David prayed (Pſal. 43. 3.) O ſend out thy Light, and thy Truth, let them lead me. So the Lord made a Promiſe unto David (Pſal. 32. 8.) I will inſtruct thee, and teach thee in the way that thou ſhalt go; I will guide thee with mine eye: That is, I will look upon thee, and as mine eye turns ſo ſhalt thou; or not only doth mine eye ſee thy way, but mine eye ſhall ſhew thee thy way; mine eye ſhall be thy directory, or as a hand pointing thee which way thou ſhalt go, what courſe thou ſhalt take in every difficulty, and exigency of affairs. The Lord makes ſuch a promiſe in ſpecial to him that keeps a true faſt (Iſa. 58. 10. 11.) Then ſhall thy light riſe in obſcurity, and thy darkneſs be as the noon day: That is (though I grant the Text may alſo be well expounded of a turn from adverſity to proſperity) obſcure things ſhall be light or clear to thee, and thou ſhalt ſee through thoſe buſineſſes as if it were noon day, which are as dark as darkneſs it ſelf, even where the light was as darkneſs, the darkneſs ſhall be as light. The next words favour this interpretation much, where this promiſe runs in proper terms, And the Lord ſhall guide thee continually, and ſatisfie thy ſoul in drought, and make fat thy bones, &c. The Lord will guide his, not only for a day, but all their dayes, continually. And he that is alwayes guided, is guided in all his wayes, even in his darkeſt wayes. The Faith of Hannah was raiſed to this aſſurance (1 Sam. 2. 9.) He will keep the feet of his Saints (from going out of their way) and the wicked ſhall be ſilent in darkneſs: Not ſilent as Saints are in in their darkneſs by patience and quiet ſubmiſſion to the hand of God; not ſilent as Saints are in their darkneſs, by abſtaining from all murmurings and complainings againſt God; but ſilent under a conviction of the righteous judgment of God, or ſilent in an utter deſperation of freeing themſelves from his judgments. They ſhall neither have a word to ſay for themſelves, nor ſhall they know what to do for themſelves. They ſhall be comfortleſs, and they ſhall be counſelleſs; they ſhall neither be able to give themſelves counſel, nor to ask it of God; They ſhall be ſilent in darkneſs; this is a wretched ſilence. And that's it which the Lord threatened in very doleful language by the Prophet (Jer. 13. 16.) Give glory to the Lord your God, before he cauſe darkneſs, and before your feet ſtumble upon the dark mountains, and while ye look for light, he turn it into the ſhadow of death, and make it groſs darkneſs. The Lord who forms the light, doth alſo create or cauſe darkneſs, and he can add darkneſs to darkneſs; the darkneſs of ignorance to the darkneſs of trouble; and he can add one degree of darkneſs to another, one degree of the darkneſs of trouble to another, and one degree of the darkneſs of ignorance to another; they who are in darkneſs, may ſoon be in greater darkneſs, even in groſs darkneſs. The dark mountains ſpoken of by the Prophet, are not only properly ſuch, but figuratively ſuch: As when men are in great troubles, they either run or are driven to the dark mountains to ſhelter and hide themſelves; ſo great troubles are dark mountains; and to ſtumble upon theſe dark mountains of trouble, is to be deſtitute of the light of counſel what to do, or which way to betake our ſelves for deliverance. Saul was upon ſuch a dark mountain when the Philiſtines invaded him, and there his feet ſtumbled (1 Sam. 28. 15.) I am ſore diſtreſſed (ſaith he) for the Philiſtines make war againſt me, and God is departed from me, and anſwereth me no more, neither by Prophets nor by dreams. He was in darkneſs, and God gave him no light to walk through that darkneſs: His darkneſs was indeed turned into the ſhadow of death, when he turned to the Devil to raiſe the dead, that he might have light. He was left in the groſs darkneſs of ignorance as well as of trouble when he went to the Prince of darkneſs for advice, how to get out of that darkneſs which compaſſed him round about. Good men are brought many times to the dark mountains, but their feet do not ſtumble there: The Lord will keep the feet of his Saints, and they (like Job) by the light of God ſhall walk through darkneſs.

And that you may have the light of God to walk by through all the darkneſs you meet with, be ſure to avoid theſe two things.

Firſt, Take heed of walking in or leaning to the light of your own underſtanding. None ſtand ſo much (as we ſay) in their own light, as they who walk in it. To walk in our own light, is to be (as Solomon ſpeaks, Prov. 3. 7.) wiſe in our own eyes. And as ſuch are oppoſed to thoſe (ver. 6.) who acknowledged God in all their wayes, ſo they cannot expect (which is there promiſed to them that do ſo) that he ſhould direct their paths.

Secondly, Take heed ye be not found walking in the light of your own comforts, as not in the light of your own counſels. Some make comforts for themſelves, or they kindle their own fire, as the Prophet elegantly expreſſeth it (Iſa. 50. 11.) Behold all ye that kindle a fire, that compaſs your ſelves about with ſparks, walk in the light of your fire, and in the ſparks that ye have kindled, this ſhall ye have of my hand, ye ſhall lye down in ſorrow. In the foregoing verſe he ſpake of thoſe, who though they feared the Lord, and obeyed the voice of his ſervants, yet walked in darkneſs and ſaw no light; and ſuch he adviſeth to truſt in the Name of the Lord, and to ſtay upon their God: As if he had ſaid, If you, who now walk in darkneſs and ſee no light, deſire to walk at laſt through this darkneſs in the light of God; then beware that ye do not, as many, kindle a fire for your ſelves in creature-comforts and contentments; do not compaſs your ſelves about with theſe ſparks, hoping to get warmth or light by them. You may try if you have ſuch a mind to it, what the light of your own fire, and what your ſparks can do for you: But I aſſure you, there's no walking through darkneſs by your own light, make it as clear as you can, Your lying down or end will be in ſorrow, and that is but a cold and a dark lodging. There is no walking through any darkneſs, but by the light of God.

VERS. 4, 5, 6.

As I was in the dayes of my youth, when the ſecret of God was upon my Tabernacle.

When the Almighty was yet with me, when my Children were about me.

When I waſhed my ſteps with Butter, and the Rock poured out Rivers of Oyl.

THis Context continues Job's wiſh; and to make the ſence compleat, we muſt have recourſe to, or reaſſume the words of the ſecond verſe; O that I were as in the month paſt, O that I were, &c.

Verſe 4. As I was in the dayes of my youth.

There is much variety in the rendring of theſe words.

Firſt, Mr. Broughton renders, As I was in my laſt years: That is (as I ſuppoſe his meaning to be) as I was in thoſe years which immediately preceded theſe my ſorrows: Or, O that I were in as good a condition as theſe troubles found me in.

Secondly, Others render thus, As I was in the dayes of my winterings; or when I lay in my winter quarters. This tranſlation is an alluſion to Souldiers, who uſually all the Summer are drawn out into ſervice, and lye abroad in the field, but in the Winter (that being incommodious for action) come home to their quarters, where after long marches, and hard, yea, hazardous duty, they reſt in ſafety. And thus Job ſeems to ſay, O that it were with me as in thoſe dayes when I lay like a Souldier in my winter quarters, not drawn out to combate with afflictions and temptations, not at all engaged with thoſe Armies of ſorrow which have lately charged me on every hand, both in front and rear. But this is a little too critical and curious, nor could Job well expreſs the comfort of a flouriſhing ſtate, by a Souldiers life, though in his winter quarters, where though he hath all things neceſſary, provided by his General, or next Officer, yet that's no pleaſant life, nor much deſirable condition.

In diebus hibernorum meorum. Jun.

Metaphora Caſtrenſis de proſperitate Jobi ſecurè in domo ſua agentis quaſi miles in hibernis. Mer.

Thirdly, Some give it in theſe terms; As I was in the dayes of my reproach: That is, In thoſe dayes which have been caſt upon me as my reproach; or with which I have often been reproached. Satan reproached Job with his good or proſperous dayes, as if in them he had played the hypocrite, and and ſerved God only becauſe God filled his belly, and ſecured all his fulneſs to him. Such was his malicious ſence, when he anſwered Gods Queſtion (Chap. 1. 8, 9.) Haſt thou conſidered my Servant Job*? &c.* With, Doth Job fear God for nought? Haſt thou not made a hedge about him? &c. Job's Friends reproached him ſo often with ſuggeſtions of ſinful carriages in thoſe dayes of his proſperity, that he at laſt ſaid (Chap. 19. 3.) Theſe ten times have ye reproached me. So that Job having been ſo much and ſo often reproached with thoſe dayes, might well call them, The dayes of his reproach; and when he wiſheth here (according to this reading) O that it were with me as in the dayes of my reproach! His meaning is, O that I were in as good a ſtate both for ſoul and body, as I was in thoſe dayes, with which you have ſo frequently and falſly reproached me.

In hieme terra non oſtendit germen, ſed ſ veſti nudua anni opprobrium agit.

We tranſlate, O that it were with me as in the dayes of my youth. The word which we render youth, doth properly ſignifie reproach, or that which brings any kind of diſgrace upon a perſon. And thus the Winter is expreſſed, becauſe 'tis, as it were, the diſgrace of the year; it uncloaths both Fields and Forreſts, it ſoyls that beauty which the Spring gave, and the Summer maintained all things in, and ſtrips them naked and bare. In the ſame ſence, that the Spring is the glory, Winter is the ſhame of the year. And as the cold of Winter doth ſhame the Fields, and blaſt their bravery; ſo the heat of youth is apt to thruſt us upon the doing of ſuch things as turn to our ſhame, and often bring not only reproofs, but reproaches upon us: Youth is ſubject to many temptations and corruptions, 'tis hurried in the purſuit of divers luſts and pleaſures, which unleſs timely left, leave us under the clouds of diſgrace. So the word is rendred (Job 27. 6.) For whereas we ſay, My heart ſhall not reproach me; others render it, My heart ſhall not youth or bechild me; that is, it ſhall not make me do things like a child or a youth tending to my reproach. The Prophet (Jer. 31. 19.) repreſents Ephraim, bemoaning himſelf, thus, Surely after that I was turned I repented, and after that I was inſtructed, I ſmote upon my thigh, I was aſhamed, yea even confounded, becauſe I did bear the reproach of my youth. Reproach falleth ſo often indeed upon youth, that youth and reproach go alwayes in word together, or are linked in one word; O that I were as in the dayes of my youth. We may take youth in a twofold ſence.

Non expueraſcet cor meum. Bold.

Firſt, As youth ſignifies a diſtinct ſtate or age of man; the life of man is caſt into many diviſions, into childhood, youth, manhood, and old age. Which referring to the four ſeaſons of the year; youth is the ſpring, the prime and glory of it.

Secondly, We may expound it not of the perſon but ſtate of Job, and then. In the dayes of my youth, is, when I was in the flouriſh of riches, and greatneſs, and power, and honour. There is a youth in every mans ſtate, and ſome mens eſtates grow old and decrepid, before their perſons do. O that it were with me as in the dayes of my youth. The general ſence is the ſame with the former; yet from the form of expreſſion

Obſerve, Youth is a flouriſhing condition; but it is a paſſing condition.

Whether youth reſpect the perſon, or the ſtate of man, the youthfulneſs of both paſſeth away. The Graces of ſome Believers are in a perpetual youth (Iſa. 40. 30, 31.) Even the youths (that is, ſuch as truſt to, or boaſt in their own ſtrength) ſhall faint and be weary, and the young men ſhall utterly fall, but they that wait on the Lord ſhall renew their ſtrength, they ſhall mount up with Eagles wings. Now the Eagle reneweth her youth (Pſal. 103. 5.) And as ſome Believers have a perpetual youth in grace; ſo all Believers ſhall have a perpetual youth in glory. But the youth of mans moſt flouriſhing eſtate in riches and honour, and the youth of his perſon, when 'tis moſt flouriſhing in ſtrength and beauty, is ready to decline every day. There was ſomewhat of miracle in that of Moſes (Deut. 34. 7.) Who being an hundred and twenty years old when he died, his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated. Moſt men are ſenſible enough of the decayes of their natural youth, and many of their civil; yet the Prophet by an elegant alluſion complains that Ephraim was not (Hoſea 7. 9.) Strangers have devoured his ſtrength, and he knoweth it not; yea, gray hairs are here and there upon him (or ſprinkled upon him) yet he knoweth not: He doth not mean it of the gray hairs upon his head, but upon his ſtate or outward condition. He whoſe affairs were ſtrong and proſperous a while ago, even like a young man in his prime, have now the ſymptoms of old age appearing upon them, here a loſs and there a loſs, here a breach and there a breach, like gray hairs, ſignifying weakneſs and old age appearing upon them. Youth in every notion of it, reſpecting naturals and civils, is paſſing and fading.

Again, O that I were as in the dayes of my youth. I ſhewed before that Job doth not only, nor ſo much deſire the ſame ſtate of outward proſperity which he formerly had, as the ſame frame of holineſs that he formerly had in that ſtate. Job's ſpirit was much out of order and diſcompoſed under his afflictions. And therefore he prayeth, O that I were as ſpiritual, or as well ſettled in my ſpirit, as in the fore-part of my natural life.

Hence Note, To be holy in youth, is a great commendation of holineſs.

Holineſs is alwayes a beauty, yet moſt then, when we are moſt ſubject to folly. Many looking back to their youth, have no reaſon to ſay, O that it were with us as in the dayes of our youth: Dayes of youth are uſually dayes of ſin and vanity. There are but few who can reflect upon and review that part of their life, without much cauſe of bluſhing, yea of loathing. Yet in old age a temptation may come which puts a man more out of order and beſides the rule, then he was in the moſt unruly and diſorderly dayes of youth: Childhood and youth are vanity, and ſo may old age be too. How comely is it to ſee gravity and ſanctity in youth, to ſee youth ſpotleſs and unblameable, not only taking example by thoſe who are good, but being an example. As Paul exhorts Timothy (1 Tim. 4. 12.) Let no man deſpiſe thy youth (He ſpeaks not ſo much to others as to Timothy, O Timothy, ſee thou walk ſo exactly that no man may have occaſion to deſpiſe thy youth, let not thy youth lay thee open to contempt, but) be thou an enſample of the Believers, in word, in converſation, in charity, in ſpirit, in faith, in purity. Hold forth theſe graces in thy youth, and no man will deſpiſe thy youth, but an enemy to all grace; live ſo undiſtemper'd in youth, that when any little diſtemper is upon thee in old age, thou mayeſt have cauſe to wiſh with Job, O that it were with me as in the dayes of my youth.

When the ſecret of God was upon my Tabernacle.

Quando ſecretè Deus erat in Tabernaculo meo. Vulg.

Quando Deo familiaris eram, & in domo mea, tanquam in ſodalitio ipſius, verſabatur. Lavat.

With Gods favour upon my Tent, ſaith Mr. Broughton. When God was ſecretly in my Tabernacle (ſaith the Vulgar tranſlation) When there was (as it were) a league between God and my Tabernacle, ſaith a third. When God kept me company, and aſſociated himſelf with me in my Tabernacle, ſaith a fourth. The word ſignifieth an Aſſembly or Meeting of choice perſons (Pſal. 111. 1.) I will praiſe the Lord with my whole heart in the Aſſembly of the upright, or, In the ſecret of the upright. The upright are ſecret ones, and the ſecret of God is with them. Our Tranſlation gives this ſence fully, When the ſecret of God was upon my Tabernacle; As if he had ſaid, O that it were with me as when God gave me ſecret counſel, or opened his heart to me upon all occaſions.

There is a twofold ſecret of God. Firſt, The ſecret of his Word: Secondly, The ſecret of his Works: or the ſecret of his Counſel, and the ſecret of his Providence. Both theſe were upon the Tabernacle or Tent of Job. There was the ſecret of the Word, or of the revealed Will of God. We may have the Word which contains the Will of God, yet not know the ſecret of God in it. The Word of God is the Covenant of God, and the Covenant is called a myſtery, that is, a ſecret. This ſecret of God was upon Job's Tabernacle; that is, God made known his mind to him, and ſhewed him as what himſelf would do for him in mercy; ſo what Job ought to do for him in duty.

Again (which I rather conceive to be Job's meaning) The ſecret of Divine providence was upon his Tabernacle: Firſt, To prevent evil from annoying him: Secondly, To preſerve the good which he enjoyed: Thirdly, To bleſs his labours, and to make what he took in hand thrive and proſper. Thus (ſaith he) it was with me, and O that it might be ſo again. This intimacy and ſweet fellowſhip with God, Job recounts with thankfulneſs, and begs the renewing of it as his happineſs; he doth not wiſh to be happier then when the ſecret of God was with him.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Saints are acquainted with the ſecrets of God.

(Pſal. 25. 14.) The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him, &c. Saints are (as I may ſay) The Lords Secretaries, they are of his Privy Council; He ſheweth them all that is needful and good for them to know. What he hideth from the wiſe and prudent, he revealeth to his babes (Matth. 11. 25.) The wiſe men of the world cannot underſtand the ſecrets of the Spirit, but ſpiritual babes do. In the new birth God puts his Law into the mind (that is, he gives his people a right underſtanding of it) and he writes it in their heart (Heb. 8. 10.) that is, he gives them a ſutableneſs to it, both in their wills to chuſe it, and in their affections to love and to embrace it. Regeneration is a ſecret work, and the regenerate are admitted into the ſecrets of the Word of God. The ſervant knoweth not what his Lord doth, but (ſaith Chriſt, John 15. 15.) I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you. Chriſt came out of the boſom of the Father, and he opens the Fathers boſom to all his Children.

Secondly, Obſerve, A ſecret unſeen bleſſing from God makes the houſe and eſtate of a godly man proſperous.

As a ſecret curſe goes out from God upon the wicked mans houſe or tabernacle, which blaſts his faireſt fruit, and makes all to wither. Some are unthriving, and find all going to nought, they know not how nor which way, ſurely by no way of their own intending (Haggai 1. 6.) Ye have ſown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye cloath you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. Nothing comes of it, there is no tack in your ſtate, or any thing you have, it melts as Butter before the Sun. And what cauſed all this? A ſecret curſe (ver. 9.) And when ye brought it home I did blow upon it? That is, I made all your labours and endeavours fruitleſs. Now, I ſay, as a ſecret curſe upon a wicked or ſinful mans Tabernacle conſumes and waſtes all (no man knowing how) ſo by a ſecret bleſſing upon the Tabernacle of the righteous, all their undertakings thrive, they ſcarce know how or which way, ſurely by no way of their own projecting or deviſing; ſo that while their proſperity is viſible to all, and envied by many, the way of it is almoſt utterly unknown to themſelves, and they even wonder to ſee how wealth comes in. This is the ſecret of God upon the Tabernacle of the righteous. A little that we have, by the ſecret influence of a bleſſing from above, is better then abundance without it: And a little that we do, by the ſecret influence of a bleſſing upon it, will bring in abundance: So that a godly man ſaith ſometimes in regard of his temporal encreaſe, as it is propheſied, the Church ſhall in regard of her ſpiritual (Iſ. 49. 20, 21.) The place is too ſtrait for me, give place to me that I may dwell: and he is ready to ſay admiringly, as it follows there, Who hath begotten me theſe? Or who hath gotten me all this?

Thirdly, Obſerve, Secret communion and converſe with God is very deſirable to a gracious ſoul, and the ſweeteſt priviledge of this preſent life.

O that it were with me as in the dayes of my youth, when the ſecret of God was upon my Tabernacle: That is, When God and I were often in ſecret converſe, and even walked together as familiar friends. What David ſaid of his falſe friend, who at laſt ſhewed himſelf an open enemy (Pſal. 55. 14.) A godly man can ſay of his real and cordial friendſhip with God, We took ſweet counſel together, and walked (both) unto the Houſe of God (and in my own houſe God owning me there) in company. God viſited me, and I rejoyced in his viſits. The Septuagint render the Text ſo out of the Hebrew; When God made his viſitation of my houſe or family. God viſits ſome in wrath, or in fatherly diſpleaſure at the beſt, to chaſten them for their uneven and diſorderly walkings, to reprove and check them for what they have done amiſs: He viſits other in love or in a friendly pleaſure, to encourage them in their holy and upright walkings, to approve and commend them for what they have done well. I know not whether they are more highly honoured, or more ſweetly refreſhed who are thus viſited. A gracious Soul hath many Soliloquies about God, he hath alſo many Colloquies, Conferences, or Diſcourſes with God. He tells God his mind in Prayer and Meditation; and God tells him what his mind is, by the Spirit in his Word, and all other Goſpel-diſpenſations. He ſpeaks to God, and he is hearkening what the Lord God will ſpeak (Pſal. 8. 5.) And what he ſpeaks is well worth the hearkening after, for (as it follows there) He will ſpeak peace to his People, and to his Saints. It is ſaid of Iſaac, that, He went out into the fields to meditate at eventide (Gen. 24. 63.) God and he kept ſecret correſpondence or intelligence one with another. And, indeed, then doth God communicate himſelf moſt to us when we retire moſt from the world, from worldly delights, and from worldly cares, from our buſineſſes and affairs, that we may be private with him. (Hoſea 2. 14.) Behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderneſs, and ſpeak comfortably to her; or, I will ſpeak to her heart. When I have brought her out of the huddle of the World into the Wilderneſs (which ſome underſtand to be a troubleſome condition, others, only a ſolitary condition) then I will ſpeak kindly to her. God brings many gracious Souls into the Wilderneſs of a troubleſome condition, and he loves to allure all into the wilderneſs of a ſolitary condition, that he may then and there ſpeak comfortably to them. They who live in a populous City, may live as in a Wilderneſs, private and alone with God. And when God hath got us thus alone, then he ſpeaks to our hearts, and pours his heart into ours. It is the promiſe of Chriſt (John 14. 23.) If a man love me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him. Thus we have, as a deſcription of the proſperity of Job in the encreaſe of outward things, through the ſecret of God upon his Tabernacle (as we render the Text) ſo likewiſe a deſcription of his piety and encreaſe in ſpiritual things, through that ſweet intimacy, and ſecret converſe which he had with God in his Tabernacle, or conſtant courſe of his life, as others render it. Both wayes he was a happy man, though in the laſt moſt. 'Tis a great bleſſing to have the ſecret of God upon our Tabernacle; but 'tis a greater to keep cloſe to God by ſecret communion in our Tabernacle. This latter differs but a little more from heavenly happineſs then this, that we are in a Tabernacle. Job ſtill proceeds in the Hiſtory of Gods ancient kindneſſes to him. He cannot get his thoughts off from the pleaſant remembrance of thoſe times.

Ὅτι ὁ θεὸς ἐπισκοπὴν ἐποιεῖτο τοῦ οἴκου μου. Sept.

Verſe 5. When the Almighty was yet with me, when my Children were about me.

In the former verſe Job ſpake of God, by his Title or Name Eloah, or, The ſtrong God, in this by his Name Saddai, The Almighty, or God All-ſufficient, The bountiful Diſtributer and Giver out of all good things. It was the Almighty who was with him in the time of his proſperity, and made him proſperous.

But was not the Lord with him in his afflicted condition? Or is he not alwayes with all men? Was the Lord quite departed from Job? Or are any out of his preſence? How then ſaith he, When he was yet with me?

I anſwer, God is ſaid to be with us, or abſent from us, as he is pleaſed to give out himſelf to us, or withdraw from us in his providences and diſpenſations. When God acts graciouſly towards us, then he is ſaid to be with us; and when he leaves us in the hand of any trouble, then he is ſaid to be far from us (Pſal. 10. 1.) Why ſtandeſt thou afar off, O Lord? Why hideſt thou thy ſelf in time of trouble? God is alwayes near to his people, and uſually then neareſt in his care for and watchfulneſs over them, when they are in trouble; yet then they are apt to think he is afar off from them, and then they cry out as men forſaken, Why ſtandeſt thou afar off, O Lord? Thus the Scripture ſpeaks according to our ſenſe, or as the fleſh apprehends, which, when we ſmart under any trouble, is ready to conclude God is not with us.

There is not any form of words (that I remember) in the whole Book of God which is made uſe of with ſo much variety as this, The Lords being with us.

Firſt, 'Tis uſed by way of promiſe, and 'tis indeed the ſum of all the Promiſes. If God ſhould bid us ask what we would have at once, or wrap up all our deſires in one word, what could we ask ſo comprehenſive as this, Lord give us thy promiſe to be with us. Thus the Lord expreſſed all that good which he intended to do by the hand of Joſhua for the conduct of his people into Canaan (Joſhua 1. 5.) There ſhall not any man be able to ſtand before thee all the dayes of thy life; as I was with Moſes, ſo will I be with thee; I will not fail thee nor forſake thee. God aſſures Joſhua againſt all oppoſition, by giving him aſſurance of his preſence. And thus the Apoſtle reaſons for the comfort of all Believers (Rom. 8. 31.) If God be with us, who can be againſt us? Many (poſſibly, yea certainly) will be againſt us to oppoſe us; but none can be againſt us to prevail over us.

Secondly, Godly men ſpeak thus in a way of faith (Pſal. 46. 11.) The Lord of Hoſts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge. Their faith was poſitive and peremptory in the thing; they do not ſay, we have ſome glimmering hopes that the Lord will be with us; but they conclude upon it, The Lord is with us, to uphold and maintain both our ſpirits and our cauſe. Thus ſpake Caleb and Joſhua to quiet the murmurings of the people (Numb. 14. 9.) Only rebel not ye againſt the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the Land, for they are bread for us; their defence is departed from them, and the Lord is with us; fear them not. The men that accompanied Caleb and Joſhua in the ſearch of the Land, gave a very diſcouraging report of it (Num. 13. 32.) The Land through which we have gone to ſearch, is a Land that eateth up the Inhabitants thereof. Not ſo (replyed Caleb) you are quite miſtaken; we ſhall quickly eat up that Land; They are bread for us; their high walls cannot defend them, for God, who is the defence of a Land, hath withdrawn his preſence from them, and is with us.

Thirdly, It is uſed by way of requeſt and petition, by that holy man Jacob (Gen. 28. 20.) If God will be with me, and will keep me in the way that I go, &c. As if he had ſaid, Lord, I deſire no more of thee but that thou wilt be with me; thy preſence will be my protection from evil, and that will alſo procure me all good.

Fourthly, 'Tis uſed by way of good wiſh to, or prayer for others (Ruth 2. 4.) And behold Boaz came from Bethlehem, and ſaid unto the Reapers, the Lord be with you. The ſame is uſed by us in common ſpeech, but with too common and unſerious a ſpirit by the moſt, when we take leave of friends, God be with you.

Fifthly, It is uſed by way of Propheſie (Gen. 40. 23:) And Iſrael ſaid unto Joſeph, behold I dye, but God ſhall be with you, and bring you again unto the Land of your Fathers: I am going the way of all fleſh, but God will abide with you, and becauſe he will, I know you ſhall not alwayes abide here, but return to your own Land.

Sixthly, We find it uſed by way of Hiſtory (Gen. 39. 21.) But the Lord was with Joſeph, and ſhewed him mercy, and gave him favour in the ſight of the Keeper of the Priſon. Lay all theſe forms of ſpeaking together, and it appears that the beſt thing which God can promiſe, is to be with us: The beſt thing which man can pray for, or believe he ſhall receive at the hand of God, is that he would be with him: The beſt thing that can be foretold of, or wiſht for another, is that God will be, or would be with him; and the beſt report that can be made of any mans proſperity is this, The Lord hath been with him, or was with him.

Further, We may conſider the Lords being with us two wayes.

First, More generally.
Secondly, More ſpecially.

More generally: The Lord is with all men, but not with all men alike: Firſt, The Lord is with all men by a common providence and preſence, to ſupport and preſerve them; Man could neither live nor move, unleſs the Lord were with him. Secondly, The Lord is with all men to provide for them (Matth. 5. 45.) He cauſeth his Sun to ſhine upon the good and the bad, and his rain to fall on the juſt and on the unjuſt. The whole world is his family, and he feeds them every day. Thirdly, The Lord is with all men, to obſerve what they do: He looketh from Heaven (ſaith David, Pſal. 33. 13, 14.) He beholdeth all the ſons of men, from the place of his habitation he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth. He looketh upon their perſons, and he looketh upon their actions; he ſeeth who they are, and how they are employed. Fourthly, The Lord is with all men, to order and over-rule them in their doings, to move or ſtop them in all their wayes: Whither would the hearts of men carry them, and what would their hands do, if God were not with them to reſtrain them? Wicked men would be boundleſs in their workings and uneven walkings, if God did not check and bridle them: Did not he ſay to the pride, wrath, and rage of men (as he doth to the proud and raging waves of the Sea) hitherto ſhall ye come and no further, who knows how far they would go, or where they would ſit down? In all theſe ſences God is with all men, even with the worſt of men. And they are ſometimes ſo ſenſible of the Lords being with them, that they are burdened with it, and would fain be rid of him, as was ſhewed (Chap. 21 14.) They ſay to the Almighty depart from us.

But when Job ſaith, there was a time when The Almighty was with me, we are to underſtand it of his favourable and ſpecial preſence. God is with his people in a peculiar diſtinguiſhing way; he is ſo with them, that he is alſo for them. The Apoſtle gives us the ground of this diſtinction (1 Tim. 4. 10.) We truſt in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, eſpecially of thoſe that believe. As there is a ſpecial ſalvation, ſo there is a ſpecial preſence of God, which is the ſole priviledge of the Saints; and in which they only can call him Immanuel, God with us. I will be to them a God, and they ſhall be to me a people, is the Great Charter or New Covenant, by which Believers receive and hold all their mercies (Heb. 18. 10.) Now, as God is the God of his People in ſuch a manner, as he is not the God of the reſt of the world; ſo he is with his people in ſuch a manner, as he is not with the reſt of the world:

Firſt, The Lord is with his people, to aſſiſt them in doing good; I will be with thy mouth (ſaith the Lord to Moſes, Exod. 4. 12.) and teach thee what thou ſhalt ſay: He is alſo with the ear of his people, and teacheth them how to hear; He is alſo with the heart of his people, and teacheth them how to pray; He is with their hand, and teacheth them, as how to work in peace, ſo how to fight in war (Pſal. 144. 1.) Ye can do nothing (ſaith Chriſt, John 15. 5.) without me. And while he ſaith ſo, he aſſures them that he will be with them in the doing of all things, which he calleth them unto. Secondly, As God is with his people to aſſiſt them in doing good, ſo in oppoſing and reſiſting evil, I mean, both that ſinful evil, which themſelves are tempted to do, whether by Satan, or by the world, or by their own hearts; as alſo in oppoſing that evil which is done, or attempted to be done by others. Thirdly, God is with his people to aſſiſt them in bearing or ſuffering evil, both that which his own fatherly hand, and that which the malice of the world layeth upon them (Gen. 39. 20, 21. Iſa. 43. 2.) When thou paſſeſt through the waters, I will be with thee. Yea, then he is with them, not only to ſtrengthen them in bearing (Iſa. 41. 10.) but to bear a part with them (Iſa. 63. 9.) and in due ſeaſon to deliver them (2 Tim. 4. 16, 17.)

Secondly, The Lord is with his people, not only to aſſiſt them, but to direct and lead them. What he did viſibly, or by a viſible token to the people of Iſrael, the ſame he doth inviſibly, or by an inviſible light to his people continually (Exod. 13. 21, 22.) The Lord goes before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and in the night by a pillar of fire, to give them light, to go by day and by night; he takes not away the pillar of the cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night from before his people. They who are lead both by day and night, are never without a Leader. If the old Church had Pillars to point their way, much more hath the new. Moſes in his laſt Sermon and Song, gives an elegant deſcription of this conducting preſence of God with Iſrael (Deut. 32. 10.) He found him in the Deſart, and in the waſte howling Wilderneſs; he led him about, he inſtructed him. God found Iſrael in the Wilderneſs, not by chance, but by reſolved and gracious choice; he manifeſted himſelf a Leader, there, where was moſt need of leading; we are alwayes led of God, but then chiefly and moſt diſcernably when we are in a wilderneſs condition. As he cauſeth the wicked to wander in a Wilderneſs where there is no way (Job 12. 24.) ſo he ſheweth his people a way in the Wilderneſs.

Thirdly, The Lord is with them to proſper and to give them ſucceſs in all their undertakings, that are according to his will. Thus 'tis ſaid concerning Joſeph (Gen. 39. 23.) The Lord was with him; and that which he did, the Lord made it to proſper. God puts work into our hands, but keeps the ſucceſs in his own; and we may do much but to little purpoſe, unleſs the Lord be with us in what we do. The reaſon why they who pray much do moſt, is, becauſe God is moſt with thoſe who pray moſt; while God is with us helping us to pray, he is alſo with us to give us an anſwer of ſucceſs in the things we pray for. Here's the happineſs of the Saints, in this life the Lord is ever with them, and in the next life they ſhall ever be with the Lord (1 Theſ. 4. 7.) To be with the Lord but for a moment is a Heaven upon Earth; and to be with the Lord for ever is the Heaven of Heaven. And as it will be the height of glory hereafter to be ever with the Lord; ſo 'tis now the height of duty to be with the Lord, in our actions obeying him, in our affections loving him, and in all our deſigns aiming at the lifting up of his Name and Glory.

But ſome, who are preſſed either with perſonal, or publick troubles, may ſay as Gideon, when the Angel ſaluted him in the language of Job (Judges 6. 12, 13.) The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of valour: Oh my Lord, if the Lord be with us, why then is all this befallen us? Why am I ſo weak, ſaith one, both in doing good, and oppoſing evil, if the Lord be with his people to aſſiſt them? Why am I ſo much miſled and carried out of the way, ſaith another; why am I ſo much in the dark, what to do; if the Lord be with his people to lead and to inſtruct them? Why am I ſo unſucceſsful in all I take in hand, or go about, ſaith a third, if the Lord be with his people to proſper them? Why are we, ſay others, ſo clouded and covered with ſorrows, if the Lord be with his people to comfort them? Why are our hearts ſo hard, ſo ſtraitened, ſo dead, if God be with his people to ſoften, to enlarge, and quicken them?

I anſwer; Firſt, Theſe queryings ſavour more of fleſh then ſpirit, more of unbelief then of faith; were we more in believing, we ſhould be leſs in queſtioning and complaining. They who have faith do not alwayes ſpeak, no nor act according to it. The fleſh will ſpeak ſometimes without the Spirit, even in thoſe who have the Spirit. Nor may it ſeem ſtrange that the fleſh ſpeaks ſometimes alone in thoſe who have the Spirit; Seeing Satan himſelf ſpeaks ſometimes alone in thoſe who have the Spirit; or, they ſpeak ſo like Satan that they are called ſo (Matth. 16. 22, 23.) And therefore, when Gideon had made that query, 'tis ſaid (ver. 14.) The Lord looked on him (we may conceive) chidingly and rebukingly, though efficaciouſly (as Chriſt did upon Peter, Luke 22. 61.) And ſaid, Go in this thy might; that is, the might which I have now given thee by my promiſe to be with thee.

Secondly, I anſwer; It is the Lords will it ſhould be thus with thee while he is with thee. What if the Lord anſwer, I am with thee, and yet 'tis my pleaſure to leave thee in weakneſs, and darkneſs, and wants, &c. Is not the Lords will reaſon enough for any man, and ought it not to be the moſt ſatisfying reaſon? For though in man will and reaſon are often oppoſed, yet never in God. His will is the higheſt reaſon, the perfection of reaſon, though we perceive it not. And it were the moſt irrational thing in the world, as well as the moſt impoſſible, that things ſhould go otherwiſe in the world then God would have them. But though the prerogative will of God be enough to ſtop every mouth, and to make all fleſh ſilent before God, yet I anſwer;

Thirdly, The reaſon why God, who is alwayes with his people, doth yet let them lye under great troubles, both inward and outward, is ſometimes to correct and chaſten them for their neglects and undervaluings of his former preſence with, and appearings for them For this cauſe he is as a man aſtonied, as a mighty man that cannot ſave, though he be in the midſt of them; as the Prophet ſaith (Jer. 14. 9.) We often depart from the living God through that evil heart of unbelief that is in us (Heb. 3. 12.) No wonder then if God be as one departed from us. We often leave God by our uneven walkings and ſinnings againſt him; no wonder then if God be now and then as one that hath left us. We are ready to ſay, if God be with us, why is it thus? Or why hath this, and that, and t'other croſs befallen us? But may not the Lord ſay, Seeing I have promiſed to be with you, and have ſo often ſtood by you, why is it thus and thus with you? Why have you thus requited my preſence with you, and the puttings forth of my power for you? Are your paſſions, and your pride, and your earthlineſs, and your envy, and your carnality, due returns for my being with you ſo long, and my ſtanding by you ſo often?

I anſwer, Fourthly, As Hypocrites ſeem to be with the Lord when they are not, yea, when they are far from, they ſeem to cleave unto him and hang about him; ſo the Lord is with the ſincere when he ſeems to be far from them, yea, to have laid them quite aſide, and to have caſt them off. And as the Lord is indeed departed from many who perceive it not, ſo he is with many who perceive it not.

Fifthly, God hath promiſed to be with his people, eſpecially when they are in trouble, and therefore they have no reaſon to make their troubles an occaſion of queſtioning his preſence with them, much leſs an argument that he is withdrawn from them; yea, he often ſuffers evil to befal them, that he may have a clearer opportunity to ſhew how much he is with them. For the Lords being with us, is as much and as glorioully ſeen in upholding his people under tryals and temptations, as it is, either firſt, in preventing them; or ſecondly, in delivering us out of them. How glorious is the work of God upon the heart, when we can live by faith, when ſenſe hath nothing to live upon? When we can live upon the Word and Promiſe of God, even then, when his Works and Providences ſpeak nothing but death to us?

Laſtly, I anſwer, Though the Lord hath promiſed to be ſo with his people, that evil ſhall not hurt them, nor prevail over them; yet he never promiſed to be ſo with them, that troubles ſhould not aſſault and vex them. Job knew the Lord was with him in the former ſence, while his ſad experience taught him, that he was not with him in the latter. And therefore he wiſhes, O that it were with me as in the dayes when the Almighty was ſo with me, that he ſuffered no trouble to aſſault me. Job, when it was worſt with him, could ſay, he would truſt God though it ſhould be worſe with him (Chap. 13. 15.) Though he ſlay me I will truſt in him; he alſo is my ſalvation. But 'tis impoſſible for any one to ſay this in faith and truth, who thinks God hath totally left him. Upon which ground we may confidently conclude, that Job meant only that God was not every way and in every degree ſo near unto him as formerly, when he ſaid, O that it were with me as it was in the dayes of my youth, when the Almighty was yet with me.

When my Children were about me.

The Hebrew word here rendred children, ſignifies alſo Young men, or Servants. And hence ſome tranſlate, When my Servants were about me. We, When my children were about me. The words are a deſcription of a Family-bleſſing, whether we render Children or Servants. And the ſame word ſignifieth both, as implying that Children ought to be ſerviceable and obedient to their Parents; and that faithful Servants ſhould be dear and acceptable to their Maſters, even as ſo many Children. When Children obey their Parents like Servants, and Servants love their Maſters like Children, as if their Maſters were their Fathers, then things go right in a Family.

Filii aut famuli mei. Puer pro ſervo, ſic παῖς gracè. Druſ.

So then the meaning of the Text is extendible to either relation, to Children or to Servants, or indifferently to both. We tranſlate well, though reſtrainedly to one relation, When my Children were about me.

Thoſe words about me, may note two things: Firſt, Their preſence with him: Time was when Job's Children filled his houſe and his eye, which way ſoever he turned: Time was when they were not ſcattered nor divided from him by death, as then they were when he ſpake theſe words. 'Tis a mercy when they who are near unto us in nature, are not ſeparated from us by providence; when all are about us, who are of us.

Secondly, Thoſe words, about me, may note the readineſs of his Children to attend and ſerve him. Good Children, like Servants, are about their Parents, waiting for their orders and directions what they would have them do. The very poſture, of being about refers to duty. How comely is it for Children to ſtand about their Parents as ſo many Servants about their Maſters, to hearken to their counſel, or receive their commands? Children or Servants are not about Parents or Maſters for ſociety or company, as friends are, much leſs for complement, as flatterers are, but for uſe and help: As Arrows in the hand of a mighty man, ſo are Children of the youth, happy is the man that hath his Quiver full of them; They ſhall not be aſhamed, but they ſhall ſpeak with the enemies in the gate (Pſal. 127. 5.) As if he had ſaid, Their Children will be ready both to plead and act for them, if occaſion be; they will not ſee their Parents wronged either in perſon, ſtate, or credit, to the beſt of their power. Parents are as the Center, Children are as a Circumference drawn about them, or they are as ſo many lines meeting in them. This was a further addition of Job's happineſs, His Children were about him.

Hence Note, 'Tis one of the greateſt outward bleſſings to have a Family full of dutiful Children.

To have many Children is the next bleſſing to have much Grace: To have many Children about us, is better then to have much wealth about us. To have ſtore of theſe Olive plants (as the Pſalmiſt calls them) round about our Table, is better then to have ſtore of Oyl and Wine upon our Table. We know the worth of dead, or rather liveleſs treaſures, but who knows the worth of living treaſures? Every man who hath Children, hath not a bleſſing in them; yet Children are a bleſſing, and ſome have many bleſſings in one Child. Children are chiefly a bleſſing to the Children of God. Lo (ſaith David, Pſal. 127. 3.) Children are an heritage of the Lord, and the fruit of the womb is his reward. But are not houſes and land, gold and ſilver, an heritage of the Lord alſo, that is, an heritage beſtowed by the Lord upon his people? Doubtleſs they are, For the earth is his, and the fulneſs of it, and he gives it to the Children of men. But though all things are of God, yet all things are not alike of him; Children are more of God then houſes and lands. And ſo the Scripture ſpeaks of a Wife (Prov. 19. 14.) Houſe and riches are the inheritance of Fathers, and a prudent Wife is of the Lord: As if he had ſaid, A prudent Wife is a more ſpecial and immediate gift of God then houſes and lands; yea, the care and favour of God in providing a prudent Wife is ſo great, that in compariſon thereof the Lord ſeems to put off the whole care of providing houſes and lands to Parents themſelves, or did look upon them as ſcarce worthy his looking after. Wife and Children are the beſt viſible heritage which God beſtows upon his people in this world, Abraham was rich, he had received a good Wife from God, but ſhe was barren, and therefore, even after God had ſaid to him, (Gen. 15. 1.) Fear not Abram, I am thy Shield, and thy exceeding great reward. Abram ſeems to reply ſomewhat paſſionately, in the next verſe (ver. 2.) And Abram ſaid, Lord God, what wilt thou give me, ſeeing I go childleſs? There is no queſtion but Abram was infinitely pleaſed with Gods promiſe to be his Shield, and his exceeding great reward. And indeed what is it to be childleſs, when we are not godleſs? What is it to be without Children, when we are not without God in the world? But Abram ſpake thus to ſhew that he preferr'd a Child above all worldly bleſſings: As if he had ſaid, What are all theſe riches, if I go childleſs? What are all theſe ſervants, if I go childleſs? Yea, what is my life to me, is not half the mercy of that relation taken away, if I go childleſs? I know Abram's fear was not only this, leſt he ſhould have no Children, but leſt the promiſe of the bleſſed and bleſſed-making Seed ſhould fail, and not be accompliſhed in him, according to what God had ſaid (Gen. 12. 3.) And in thee ſhall all Families of the earth be bleſſed; yet the want of a Son in his own family was grievous to him, as appears by that (Gen. 15. 3.) Behold to me thou haſt given no ſeed; and lo one born in my houſe is mine heir. And therefore the Lord renews the promiſe not only of a Child, but of innumerable Children to him (v. 5.) And he brought him abroad and ſaid, Look now toward Heaven, and tell the Stars if thou be able to number them; and he ſaid unto him, ſo ſhall thy ſeed be. When the Lord ſaid, I will fan them with a fan in the gates of the Land (Jer. 15. 7.) his purpoſe was not to fan out the chaff or the rubbiſh, as commonly we do, but to fan out the beſt of the Corn, or their very Jewels, which in the next words of the ſame verſe is thus expreſſed, I will bereave them of Children; we put in the Margin, Whatſoever is dear. The Original is but one word (I will bereave, or I have bereaved) and becauſe Children are moſt dear and precious to their Parents, therefore we ſay, I will bereave them of Children, or of whatſoever is dear. How dear Children are appears in the ſorrow of Parents for them (Jer. 31. 15.) Thus ſaith the Lord, A voice was heard in Ramah; lamentation and bitter weeping; Rachel weeping for her Children, refuſed to be comforted for her Children, becauſe they were not; that is, becauſe ſhe was bereaven of them by death. Babylons vain confidence was in her Children (Iſai. 47. 8, 9.) Hear thou this thou that art given to pleaſures, that dwelleſt careleſly, that ſayeſt in thine heart, I am, and none elſe beſides me, I ſhall not ſit as a widow, neither ſhall I know the loſs of children. But theſe two things ſhall come upon thee in a moment, in one day, the loſs of children and widowhood. The laſt and worſt plague upon Egypt was the death of the firſt-born, this made the great cry (Exod. 12. 29, 30.) The great ſorrow of the Jews in their converſion is thus ſet forth (Zech. 12. 10.) They ſhall be in bitterneſs for him, as one that is in bitterneſs for his firſt-born.

Verſe 6. When I waſhed my ſteps with Butter, and the Rock poured me out Rivers of Oyl.

This verſe is an hyperbolical deſcription of the affluence and abundance of Job's formerly flouriſhing eſtate.

I waſhed my ſteps with Butter.

Some expound theſe words as an alluſion to Banquets in old time, at which they uſed annointings, and in hot Countreys to waſh and annoint their feet: But we never read of annointing with Butter, nor can that be a commodious interpretation here. Butter is properly a part of our food; and though Butter is often uſed in medicinal annointings, yet not at all in meer convivial or pleaſurable annointings. And therefore, I conceive, this form of ſpeech ſignifies no more then hath been intimated, that Job was a man flowing, even overflowing with an encreaſe of the bleſſings and good things of this life. Job was rich in Cattel (and in them the riches of thoſe times did chiefly conſiſt) he had ſuch ſtore of Butter that he could waſh his ſteps with it. The ſteps of God (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks) dropt him ſo much fatneſs, that his ſteps dropt it too. He had ſuch plenty of Oyl, as if the Rocks had poured it out to him. Here are two great and rich Commodities, and both in great quantities. Butter is the moſt precious encreaſe of Cattel; Milk yields Cream, that's the beſt of the Milk; and Cream yields Butter, that's the beſt of Cream. The Olive-tree is numbred among the beſt of Trees; and Oyl is the beſt, the fatneſs of the Olive-tree. In language like this, dying Jacob bleſſed the Kingly Tribe of Judah (which though ſome departing from the plain import of the words, expound them Allegorically, as a Propheſie of the Power of Chriſt, binding both Jews and Gentiles by the power of his Grace and Spirit to the Church, The Vine, and to himſelf the choice Vine; yet doubtleſs, the proper reading is intended to hold forth the outward bleſſing of that Royal Tribe, Gen. 49. 11.) Binding his Foal unto the Vine, and his Aſſes-colt unto the choice Vine: he waſhed his garments in wine, and his clothes in blood of Grapes: That is, He ſhall have ſo much Wine that he may ſpare it for common uſe, even for the waſhing of his clothes. He ſhall have Wine (which by a Synechdoche is put for all good things) as plentiful as water. Alſo Canaan is deſcribed (Exod. 13. 15.) A Land flowing with Milk and Honey: As if the very Springs and Rivers did run Milk and Honey, or as if theſe did flow like a River. So (Deut. 32. 13.) He made him ride on the high places of the earth, that he might eat the increaſe of the field; and he made him to ſuck Honey out of the Rock, and Oyl out of the flinty Rock; Butter of Kine, and Milk of Sheep, with fat of Lambs, and Rams of the breed of Baſhan, &c. (Deut. 33. 24.) And of Aſher he ſaid, Let Aſher be bleſſed with Children; let him be acceptable to his Brethren, and let him dip his foot in Oyl: That is, let him have ſtore of Oyl. In the twentieth of Job (ver. 11.)

In hac ſententia indicatur priſtina ungendi pedes in convivio conſuetudo. Pined.

11.) we read ſuch Hyperbolies; He ſhall not ſee the Rivers, the Floods, the Brooks of Honey and Butter. As the abundance of ſpiritual and evangelical bleſſings, are ſhadowed (Joel 3. 18.) By the Mountains dropping down new Wine, and the Hills flowing with Milk: So by a like ſtrain of Rhetorick all ſorts of temporal abundance are ſignified. Job knew the time when he waſhed his ſteps with Butter. Not that he uſed Butter for that purpoſe, he was neither ſo proud, nor ſo prodigal, to do that, nor was the thing in it ſelf convenient to be done; but the meaning is, He had ſuch plenty of Butter, that if he had been minded, he might have done it.

And the Rock poured me out Rivers of Oyl, or Fat.

The ſame word ſignifieth both, becauſe Oyl is the fat of vegetative, as Fat is the oyl of ſenſitive Creatures. Job's Olive-grounds yielded him a Fountain of Oyl; he had not only Oyl in a Cruſe, not only Veſſels or Pipes, but Rivers of Oyl.

The Rock poured me out Rivers of Oyl.

Some conceive him ſpeaking thus, becauſe the place where Olive-trees uſe to grow is ſtony, ſuch as Arabia Petrea, and there it is ſuppoſed Job dwelt: As if he had ſaid, The Olive-trees that grew among the Rocks yielded me ſuch ſtreams of Oyl, that the Rock it ſelf might be thought to have generated a Fountain of it. The words may be rendred to that ſence; There was with me a Rock melted into Rivers of Oyl. As we read (Pſal. 81. 16.) Of Honey out of the Rock; Becauſe ſwarms of Bees did many times hive themſelves in a Rock. So here we have Oyl out of the Rock; becauſe Olive-trees did grow among the Rocks.

Solent Olivæ optimũ Oleum habentes in locis lapidoſis & arenoſis eſſe. Aquin.

Hence Note, Plenty, the greateſt plenty of outward good things, falls, ſometimes to the lot of good men.

Job had enough and to ſpare; a good man may have abundance, but he doth not deſire it, or ſet his heart upon it; he doth not abuſe it, and grow wanton or proud with it. It is ſinful to ſet our hearts upon, or abuſe the leaſt portion of the creature (they who have but little may ſoon become guilty of abuſing it, and of ſetting their hearts upon it) but to have and hold for good uſes the largeſt portion of the creature, even Rivers of Wine and Oyl, is not ſinful. While we make not worldly things as fuel for the fleſh to fulfil the luſts of it, we may poſſeſs not only ſo much of them as will barely ſerve the neceſſity of our fleſh (as fleſh is put for the outward man) but the regular and moderate contentments of it. Paul ſaid (Phil. 4. 12.) I know both how to be abaſed, and I know how to abound. It is a great piece of ſpiritual wiſdom to know how to want, and a greater to know how to abound. 'Tis harder to uſe abundance well, then to be well in want; and the reaſon is, becauſe abundance puts, as it were, a ſtaffe into the hand of every luſt. Rivers of Oyl do but oyl the wheels of our corruption, and cauſe us to move faſter in forbidden paths. Fulneſs offers an opportunity to every luſt to act its part in it: It offers much to pride and malice to act their parts; it offers much to intemperance and luxury to act their parts. Want ſtops the ſupplyes of luſt, and puts out the fire by drawing away the fewel of it. They have attained true learning, who have learned to abound, and yet to be temperate; to abound, and yet to be ſober; to abound, and yet to be meek and ready to forgive thoſe that have wronged them; to abound, and yet to be humble. There is a great ſtrength of grace ſeen, in the due ordering of the things of nature. It is the abuſe of the creature, not the having of it, that is evil. If we uſe it well, all's well. If we uſe it ill, the more we have of it, the worſe it is.

Thus Job hath ſhewed us, what he once was in wealth, riches and plenty: He will tell us next, what he once was in honour, power, and authority; he was not only a rich man, but a Ruler; not only full of wealth, but full of honour; as will appear in the proceſs of this Narrative concerning his former condition.

VERS. 7, 8.

When I went out to the gate through the City, when I prepared my ſeat in the ſtreet.

The young men ſaw me and hid themſelves, and the aged aroſe and ſtood up.

IN theſe two verſes, and thoſe which follow to the eighteenth verſe, Job ſets forth how it had been with him in his publick capacity as a Magiſtrate, having before ſhewed how it had been with him in his private capacity as a Man and Maſter of a family. And in this diſcourſe he tells us; Firſt, That he was a man of Power: Secondly, That he had much reſpect with all ſorts of men when he was in Power: Thirdly, He gives the true cauſe of it, The Juſtice and Righteouſneſs of his proceedings in the mannagement of that Power which he received and was committed to him. From all we may conclude, that Job was a man compoſed of outward happineſs, and compaſſed about with worldly bleſſings on every ſide. He was happy as a Father of a Family; and he was happy as a Father of his Countrey. And what can be added or deſired beyond this to make up an outward happineſs?

Verſe 7. When I went out to the gate through the City.

Job ſtill purſueth his wiſh at the ſecond verſe; O that I were as in the months paſt, as in the dayes when God preſerved me, when his Candle ſhined upon mine head, &c. And O that it were with me now, as it was when I moved in that publick and higheſt ſphere of Magiſtracy, When I went out to the gate through the City.

When I went out.] That is, when I went out of mine own houſe: A Magiſtrate, or Prince, who is faithful to his truſt, goeth out morning by morning like the Sun (Pſal. 19. 5.) Which as a Bridegroom comes out of his chamber, and rejoyceth as a ſtrong man to run his race; his going forth is from the end of the Heaven, and his circuit to the ends of it. Job went out of his houſe in the morning as the Sun to run his race; the race of Juſtice and Righteouſneſs. An unjuſt and oppreſſing Magiſtrate goeth out of his houſe like ſome Monſter whom men abhor; his riſing is like that of ſome malignant Star, which drops barrenneſs and diſeaſes upon the Earth, or provokes ſtorms and tempeſts in the Air: But a juſt and righteous Magiſtrate riſeth, in his capacity, as Jeſus Chriſt the Sun of Righteouſneſs doth in his, with healing in his wings, with light and warmth, with beauty and brightneſs in his face, ſo that the people under his government go forth and grow up (as to all things which they may duly expect from him) as the Calves of the ſtall.

When I went out (ſaith he) That form of ſpeech is uſed in Scripture as a Periphraſis of diligence. All the buſineſs of mans life is deſcribed by going out, and coming in. Bleſſed ſhalt thou be when thou comeſt in, and bleſſed ſhalt thou be when thou goeſt out, that is, thou ſhalt be bleſſed in all thy undertakings (Deut. 26. 6.) When Moſes was about (by Gods appointment) to lay down his leading Staffe and dye, he ſpeaks thus of himſelf to the people of Iſrael (Deut. 31. 2.) I am an hundred and twenty years old this day, I can no more go out nor come in (and though notwithſtanding this great age he might have done it, for 'tis ſaid (Deut. 34. 7.) Moſes was an hundred and twenty years old when he dyed; his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated; therefore he ſuggeſts (a further and a fuller reaſon why he could not) alſo the Lord hath ſaid unto me, thou ſhalt not go over this Jordan. For that reaſon chiefly, if not only, he ſaith, I can no more go out nor come in; that is, I can no longe[illegible] hold the place of your Captain in war, nor of your judge in peace. And thus the Prieſts and People both prayed for and propheſied the proſperity of David in his Government (Pſal. 121. 8.) The Lord ſhall preſerve thy going out, and thy coming in, from this time forth, and even for evermore; that is, the Lord ſhall bleſs thee in all the buſineſſes, affairs, and adminiſtrations of thy Kingdom. Thus here, Job went out, not as an idle perſon, who knows not whither he goeth, or what he hath to do, but he went out about the honourable employments of his calling, as chief Magiſtrate among that people. It is well for us, when we can ſay, we go out, not to ſatisfie our luſts, or to take our pleaſure, but to finiſh the work which God hath given us to do. Job went out to the gate through the City.

There is ſome variety in reading theſe words, To the gate through the City.

Firſt, Some underſtand them of a going quite out of the City through the Gate, and ſo paſſing into the Countrey to travel, to take a journey, to take the air: But this is incongruous to the tenour of his whole diſcourſe.

Secondly, Others interpret it, not of his going to the gate through the City, but of his going out of his own gate; that is, out of his own houſe to the City about his buſineſs. Some take that to be the ſence of Mr. Broughton's tranſlation, When I went out adoor to the City. But though we ſhould take this tranſlation, yet there is no neceſſity to make that interpretation of it.

Thirdly, Others render thus, When I went out of the gate, or from the gate, that is, to go home: As if he had ſaid, When I had been doing my office, or adminiſtring Juſtice, much people followed me all the way home. But I paſs that alſo; it being improper for him to ſpeak of his returning to, before he had ſpoken of his going from his houſe.

Our tranſlation is moſt pertinent to his ſcope; and the word which we render, a gate, ſignifies rather the great gate of a City then the gate or door of a houſe. And though Princes and Chief Magiſtrates have great gates to their houſes, like the gates of a City, yet it is much more convenient to expound it here of a publick gate, where gate of a City, rather then of the gate of any particular houſe, though the gate of a great Prince (When I went to the gate through the City)

To the gate.] Gates are of a four-fold uſe.

Firſt, Gates are for entrance into a City.

Secondly, Gates are for the defence and ſtrength of a City.

Thirdly, Gates are for ornament; Gates are the moſt beautiful parts of a City: We read of the Beautiful Gate of the Temple (Acts 3. 10.) And uſually all Gates are made beautiful.

Fourthly, Gates were appointed for the adminiſtration of Juſtice, or ſome known place near the gate: So that his going to the gate was his going to the exerciſe of his Civil Power. As the Powers of darkneſs, thoſe evil ſpiritual Powers, are called gates, The gates of Hell (that is, all the Dominions, Principalities, and Powers of Hell, ſaith Chriſt, Matth. 16. 18.) ſhall not prevail againſt the Church. So gates are put for outward Civil Power; and to this gate it was, or in this ſence it was that Job went out to the gate; that is, to the place where Juſtice was done, both in relieving the oppreſſed, and in puniſhing evil doers. So the word is taken (Chap. 5. 4.) And that it was uſual to exerciſe Judgment in the gate, the Scripture is very full (Ruth 4. 1.) Then went Boaz up to the gate, and ſate him down there; and there he ſpake to the Elders of the City concerning his own caſe. (Pſal. 127. 5.) The righteous mans Children ſhall not be aſhamed to ſpeak with the enemy in the gate; that is, they ſhall not be afraid of any matter which their enemy can charge them with, they ſhall not be afraid to appear in any Court of Juſtice, or to be called to the open bar (Zech. 8. 16.) Theſe are the things that ye ſhall do, ſpeak ye every man the truth to his neighbour, execute the Judgment of truth and peace in your gates; which ſhould be as Sanctuaries of Juſtice, and Cities of refuge for all that are wronged and oppreſſed (Amos 5. 10.) They hate them that reprove in the gate: Which may be underſtood of a twofold reproving: Firſt, of ſpiritual reproving, or of a reproof by the Prophets, for they gave reproof in the gate; that is, openly, in the publick Aſſembly; And therefore Wiſdom is ſaid (Prov. 8. 3.) To cry in the gate, in the place of publick aſſembly. Secondly, Of civil reproving, or of a reproof given by the Magiſtrate. His righteous ſentence is a reproof upon the wicked. And that Magiſtrate who reproves impartially, ſhall be hated alſo. Again, at the twelfth verſe of the ſame Chapter, corrupt Magiſtrates are thus reproved, They take a bribe, and they turn aſide the poor in the gate from their right: That is, receiving a bribe from the rich, they turn off the poor, and will not do them right, though their cauſe be righteous. It is ſaid of the vertuous Woman (Prov. 31. 23.) Her Husband is known in the gate; ſhe ſends him out ſo well furniſhed, that he is known to be her Husband when he ſits among the Elders of the people; that is, among the Magiſtrates. Once more (Lam. 5. 14.) The Elders have ceaſed from the gate, &c. And ſo ſome who expound that of God to Cain (Gen. 4. 7.) If thou doſt well, ſhalt thou not be accepted? And if thou doſt not well, ſin lyeth at the door, or at the gate: That is, puniſhment or a dreadful ſentence lyeth at the gate; thou ſhalt be condemned as an evil doer, thou ſhalt have Judgment as in open Court. But I will not give that as the meaning of thoſe words; for the ſentence of the Judge doth not lye at the gate, but is declared or pronounced in the gate. To lye at the gate notes only a readineſs to come in, or the nearneſs of Judgment; like that (James 5. 9.) Grudge not one againſt another, brethren, leſt ye be condemned; behold, the Judge ſtandeth before the door: That is, as he ſpake in the former verſes; The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. The Judge ſtandeth a while before the door; but at laſt he ſitteth down in the gate. When I went out to the gate through the City:

When I prepared my ſeat in the ſtreet.

That is, when I gave order to have my ſeat prepared and ſet up in the ſtreet; he did not ſet it up with his own hands, that's no buſineſs for Magiſtrates. they are not for ſervile works. As 'tis not the buſineſs of the Commander of an Army to hew out his way with his own hands, he only gives order and directions: If he doth but appear in perſon where danger is, that's enough for him, though he never ſtrike ſtroke himſelf: So here, I prepared my ſeat, that is, I commanded to have it prepared: what was this ſeat?

There are two opinions about it; The Greeks underſtand it of that ſeat ſpoken of by Chriſt (Math. 23. 2.) The Scribes and Phariſees ſit in Moſes ſeat; that is, in the ſeat of Inſtruction and doctrine; They teach the things and wayes of God. They were the great Doctors and Maſters in Iſrael; they were (at leaſt in their own opinion) as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 2. 19, 20.) Guides of the blind, a light to them which were in darkneſs, inſtructers of the fooliſh, teachers of babes. I grant, that as Job was a Magiſtrate, ſo he was alſo an Inſtructer of the people in the myſtery of Godlineſs, both which duties were often complicated in the ſame perſon, yet the ſcope of the place carrieth it rather to be underſtood of the ſeat of Judicature, or Throne where he and others ſate, to hear cauſes and determine controverſies among the people. Sitting is the poſture of Judges and Princes, as to ſtand is the poſture of thoſe who are judged. The Judge ſits upon the Bench, The Priſoner, the Complainant and Defendant ſtand at or about the Bar. Such was the ſeat, which Job prepared for himſelf in the ſtreet.

Rectè ſumitur pro judiciaria ſella aut pro regali ſolio: nam judicū principumvè ſedere eſt, ſicut eorum qui judicantur & audiant ſtare. Pined.

The word which we tranſlate ſtreet, ſignifyeth a broad place; for the Judgment ſeat was not in the very paſſage of the gate, but in ſome place near the gate, ſometimes in the open ſtreet, as the Cuſtom in many Cities is at this day. (Neh. 8. 2, 3.) And Ezra the Prieſt brought the Law before the Congregation, both of men and women, and all that could hear with underſtanding, upon the firſt day of the ſeventh month. And he read therein before the ſtreet that was before the water-gate. Again (2 Chron. 36. 6.) Then he ſet Captains of war over the people, and gathered them together in the ſtreet of the gate of the City, that being an Eminent broad ſtreet, fit to receive an Army. (Pro. 1. 20, 21.) Wiſdom cryeth without, and uttereth her voice in the ſtreets; ſhe cryeth in the chief places of concourſe, in the opening of the gates. In ſuch a ſtreet was Job's ſeat prepared. The ſum of the whole verſe is this; O that it were with me, as in former times, when I went honourably attended to the place of Judgment.

Whence Note, Courts of Juſtice or places of Judicature ſhould be publick and open for all Comers; Juſtice muſt not be adminiſtred in a corner or in private.

The Gate of a City, is an open publick place. Laws and Courts are of publick Concernment, and every one is to have his liberty of ſeeing, hearing, and knowing what's done there; that's the reaſon why anciently the Law was adminiſtred in or near the gate, becauſe it was a place of eaſie acceſs, and greateſt conveniency for the people.

Secondly, Becauſe Magiſtracy is the general ſubject, not only of this verſe, but of all that follow to the end of this Chapter; I ſhall take leave to inſiſt upon it a little beyond the ordinary method of this Expoſition.

The Obſervation may be thus formed,

Magiſtracy, or the Exerciſe of Magiſtratical power, hath been held up and ſubmitted to in all ages.

Magiſtracy is the appointment and Ordinance of God. There is no power but of God; The powers that be are ordained of God (Rom. 13. 1.) And thence the Apoſtle makes this univerſal inference (v. 2.) Whoſoever therefore reſiſteth the power, reſiſteth the Ordinance of God. For though Magiſtracy may be called an Ordinance of Man; Firſt, As to the end, it being imployed for the good of men; As alſo ſecondly, In reference to the kind of it, every Nation having a liberty to chuſe what form of Government they pleaſe, or is moſt ſutable and commodious for them. In which ſence the Apoſtle Peter calls it a humane ordinance or creation (1 Pet. 2. 13.) yet in regard of the original appointment and inſtitution of it, we muſt affirm it to be an Ordinance of God. And though many have not only acquired it by wicked and deviliſh means, but adminiſtred it in a wicked and deviliſh manner; yet this doth not at all hinder but that the Magiſtrates Authority, not only abſtractly conſidered in it ſelf, but concretely in the perſon adminiſtring it, is of God. For as the Apoſtle ſaith, That all power is of God, while he ſaith, There is no power but of God; ſo he ſaith likewiſe, The powers that be (let them be what they will, and veſted in whomſoever they will) are of God.

The light of Nature leads to this, as well as the light of Scripture. Some diſpute whether ever there ſhould have been any Power of man over man, if man had continued, in his created integrity, with God: but it is beyond diſpute that ever ſince man fell from that integrity, there hath been an appointment of God concerning Magiſtracy, and the power of man over man. The light of Nature ſheweth it, and carries it out in three things.

Firſt, Even Heathen Law-givers have often, if not alwayes, pretended to receive the rules of that government which they propoſed to the people from ſome divine hand. There is a kind of Religion in that ſuperſtition, and a truth in thoſe fabulous narrations. All intimating, that Magiſtracy is of a divine pedigree, and hath a ſtamp of God upon it. And while they ſaid, they had their lawes from the gods, it was to make an Impreſſion of reverence to them upon the ſpirits of men.

Secondly, It appears by the very light of Nature, becauſe there is an univerſal hatred and abhorrence of Anarchy imprinted in the hearts of all men. That there ſhould be poſitive laws, is a law natural. Though Nature being proud loves not the ſuperiority of others, and being licencious loves not to be reſtrained by others, yet it teacheth ſubordination, and chuſeth Tyranny rather then Anarchy; As ſeeing, 'Tis better to be where nothing is lawful, then where all things are lawful. No man hath a will to live where every man may do what he will. They ſay vagabond Beggars have a King of their own ſetting up; the worſt of men, even the ſons of Belial, who cannot abide the yoak of government, either that of God, or that of man (that is, of this or that man) yet even they will not be altogether without a Ruler, and therefore Thirdly, We find that in the greateſt rebellions and oppoſitions that ever were made againſt Government or Magiſtracy, the thing endeavoured hath been the change, not the extinguiſhment of it; The putting of it into other hands, not the putting of it out of all hands. Thoſe turbulent and fanatick ſpirits, who roſe up at Munſter, and decryed the then preſent Magiſtrates, quickly ſet up (ſuch a one as he was) a King of their own. The moſt unruly know not how to ſubſiſt without a Ruler.

Yea the very Devils have a government. We read of Beelzebub, The Prince of the Devils (Matth. 12. 24.) The Devils who are the authors of all diſorders among men, have an order among themſelves. There is a principal Devil; And there are Princes and cheif wicked ſpirits in Provinces and Nations under The Prince of the power of the air, the Spirit that now worketh in the children of diſobedience (Eph. 2. 2.) Some expound The Prince of the Kingdome of Perſia, who withſtood the affairs of the Church, to have been an evil Angel (Dan. 10. 13.) And the Apoſtle expreſly calls them Principalities and Powers (Eph. 6. 12.) Both which titles are given to Civil Magiſtrates (Titus 3. 1.) Now as the light of nature leads to Government,

So the light of Scripture and the principles of Chriſtianity do not weaken, much leſs oppoſe and contradict Government, but mightily confirm and ſtrengthen it. The Crown of Chriſt doth not pull the Crown of Princes from their heads, neither doth his Scepter ſtrike their Scepter out of their hand, unleſs they ſtrike at him with it. By me (ſaith he, Prov. 8. 15.) Kings reign, and Princes decree Juſtice. Some read, For me Kings reign, and that's true of all good Kings, deſignedly by themſelves they aim at the honour of Chriſt; and 'tis true of all evil Kings, deſignedly by Chriſt, he over-rules their power to ſerve his honour. For what the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of the wrath of man (Pſal. 76. 10.) we may ſay much more of the power of man; Surely the power of man ſhall praiſe thee, the remainder of power (that is, what power ſoever there is over and above or beyond that which doth turn to thy praiſe) thou wilt reſtrain. One Ordinance of God doth not eat up another. The order of Chriſt in the Church, doth not thruſt out the orders of men in Commonwealths, much leſs doth it bring in confuſion. Theſe are ſo far from violencing or violating one another, that they embrace and kiſs, yea, maintain and ſupport one another.

I grant, firſt, Chriſt makes all his ſubjects Free; but 'tis with a freedome from ſpiritual bondage, not from civil ſubjection.

I grant, ſecondly; The Juſt are a law to themſelves, yea Chriſt hath made them Kings. Yet firſt, they need both Laws and Kings for them, that is, to defend and protect them; for ſuppoſe they do no evil, yet they may quickly ſuffer evil, if they have not protection from Laws and Princes. And therefore it hath been ſaid anciently and truly; Magiſtrates are made for men, not men for Magiſtrates. Secondly, Though the juſt are a law to themſelves, yet they have ſtill luſts in themſelves too, which many times call for Coercion from outward Laws; even good men may be byaſſed and ſway'd by evil affections, and turn'd aſide by ſelf-ends and Intereſts, and therefore have need enough of Laws and Magiſtrates to keep them right; yea to puniſh them when they do wrong.

'Tis granted, Thirdly, That Believers are under the ſpecial Governance and protection of God by promiſe; yet the good that is in ſuch Promiſes is conveyed to us in wayes of providence. And God hath provided and ſet up Magiſtracy for the guard and ſecurity of his people from annoyance, as alſo for their comfort and encouragement (Iſa. 49. 2, 3.) Kings ſhall be thy nurſing Fathers, and their Queens thy nurſing Mothers. God made ſeveral of the Perſian Kings Nurſing Fathers and Sheilds of defence to his ancient people the Jews, at the time of their return from the Babyloniſh Captivity, as we read in the Book of Ezra and Nehemiah. And ſo were ſome of the Roman Emperours, Conſtantine, Theodoſius, &c. To his people profeſſing Chriſtianity within their Dominions.

Fourthly, It muſt not be denyed (whence ſome have argued that Chriſtians need no Magiſtrates) That Chriſtians ought not to reſiſt evil (Math. 5. 39.) That they ought not to avenge themſelves (Rom. 12. 19.) That they ought not to go to law one with another, but rather take wrong (1 Cor. 6. 7.) But though a Chriſtian ought not to return evil for evil, but take two blows rather then give one, and endure a double injury rather then do one, though he may not offend others, yet he may and ought to defend himſelf, which he cannot do without the Magiſtrates help; though he may not wrong others, yet he may right himſelf in meekneſs and righteouſneſs, and this he cannot do without the Magiſtrates help. Though he may not avenge himſelf upon thoſe who wrong him, yet he may quietly put his cauſe into his hand, who is the Miniſter of God, a revenger (by office) to execute wrath upon them that do evil (Rom. 13. 4.) And who is that but the Magiſtrate? And where there is no Magiſtrate who ſhall do that?

God indeed is the Governour of all men, and of all things; power belongs to him; yet he will not adminiſter juſtice to men immediately. For as, although he is able, if he pleaſe, to convert ſinners, and build them up in grace without the miniſtry of man, yet he will not, but hath ordained a miniſtry for that end; ſo, though he is able to govern the world, and keep all in order by an Immediate Power, yet he will not do it but by means, he ſets up ſome to rule, and others to inſtruct the ſons of men. The Loadſtone hath a mighty attractive vertue, yet it doth not put forth that vertue in ſtrength, till 'tis arm'd with Iron, which is connatural to it, and then by the Iron it transfuſeth its vertue, and is much more operative then alone: ſo God hath all Power of governing and teaching in his own hand; he hath thoſe two great Ordinances of Magiſtracy and Miniſtry vertually and originally in himſelf; yet he uſeth Inſtruments and puts forth his Power in and by the creature as himſelf pleaſeth and hath appointed. The Lord hath not ſet up Magiſtracy upon any neceſſity which lyes upon him; as Princes of the world ſet up inferiour Magiſtrates; there is a neceſſity for it, they cannot do all alone; though they are the ſeat of all executive power, yet they muſt execute by other hands; but it is not ſo with God, he is able to ſupply all, but he will not.

And beſides his will (in which we ſhould acquieſs) to have it ſo; There is reaſon why it is ſo. For indeed, if the Lord ſhould judge and rule the world immediately, we were not able to bear the glory and terror of his appearance. In the day of Judgement God will appear as Judge in perſon, and then the world will ſtand trembling before him; if God ſhould appear as ſupream Judge now, who could abide it? Job deſired, and yet was afraid of a perſonal treaty with God (Chap. 9. 32.) He is not a man as I am, that I ſhould anſwer him, and we ſhould come together in Judgment: ſo Chap. 23. 15. Chap. 33. 6, 7. And therefore God appointeth men who are ſubject to the like paſſions and infirmities with our ſelves to be our Governours. What the Apoſtle ſpeaks in reference to Miniſters, is true in reference to Magiſtrates, The Power is put into an Earthen veſſel: And why ſo? Firſt, That the excellency of the power may be of God and not of man: Secondly, That we might have the more eaſie and free acceſs to them. (Exod. 19. 16.) when the Lord himſelf Promulgated the Law in an Immediate way, O ſay the People, Let not God ſpeak to us leaſt we dye; let him ſpeak to us by Moſes; ſo it is in this caſe; if God ſhould execute either the Miniſterial or the Magiſtratical office himſelf Immediately, even the beſt of men would cry out, O let us have a Moſes, a Paul, an Apollos, to ſpeak to us, we are not able to bare the preſence of God. God hath made them that rule and them that are ruled all of a kind, as the greater and leſſer wheels of an Engine are all of one matter: Firſt, That there might be a greater tryal of obedience in thoſe who are ſubject: Secondly, A greater ground of tenderneſs and mildneſs in thoſe who rule.

To ſhut up this Obſervation, I ſhall briefly ſhew wherein Magiſtracy doth conſiſt, and lay down ſome Conſiderations, which may evince both the uſefulneſs and neceſſity of it.

Magiſtracy, Conſiſts in two things.

Firſt, In Superiority; hence Magiſtrates are called not only Powers but Principalities (Tit. 3. 1.) They are the Head of the Body politick (Numb. 14. 4 Judg. 11. 8.) They are mountains, which ſtand above and over look the earth, (Mic. 6. 7.) They have ſo much ſuperiority over men, that they are ſtiled, by God himſelf, Gods and Children of the moſt High (Pſal. 82. 6.)

Secondly, In Authority. And that, firſt, In an Authority to make Laws, both affirmative, commanding what is good; and negative, forbidding the contrary, or that which is evil. Laws are the ſecurity of a people, the ſecurity of their perſons, of their eſtates, of their credit, and of their liberties. Some have well compared Laws to Phyſick, which doth both prevent and remove thoſe diſeaſes which are incident to the whole Body of a Nation. Secondly, As Magiſtracy conſiſts in an Authority to make and conſtitute Laws; ſo in an Authority to apply, actuate, or execute them in all particular caſes and emergencies. A Law unexecuted is like a ſealed Book, or like a Sword lockt up in the ſcabbard. This execution of Laws is threefold: Firſt, In determining controverſies about right between party and party (Exod. 22. 9. Deut. 1. 16. Deut. 19. 17.) Secondly, In diſtributing rewards and puniſhments according to the righteouſneſs or unrighteouſneſs, the good or evil of mens actions. (Rom. 13. 3, 4.) Rulers are not a terror (that is, in their inſtitution they are not, or they were never ſet up to ſuch an end, to be a terror) to good works, but to the evil: Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? Do that which is good, and thou ſhalt have praiſe of the ſame; for he is the Miniſter of God to thee for good; but if thou do that which is evil, be afraid, for he beareth not the ſword in vain; for he is the Miniſter of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doth evil. How large and diſtinct is the Apoſtle in ſetting forth this part of the Magiſtrates office, as he is a rewarder and a puniſher. And though the latter be a ſad work, yet it muſt be done. The Magiſtrates duty is Juſtice not pity (Deut. 19. 21.) For though he may attemper the rigour of the Law, yet he muſt not abate the vigour of it. Such pity to one, may prove a cruelty to many. He may puniſh ſparingly, but he muſt not ſpare to puniſh. Though his Sword ſtrike not all who offend, yet it muſt cauſe all Offenders to fear, and all to fear offending. He muſt not be bloody, yet he muſt ſhed blood; That all (as 'tis ſaid in the Law of Moſes) may hear, and fear, and do no more preſumptuouſly. Thus we ſee what Magiſtracy both is and doth; and from thence we may quickly ſee both the uſefulneſs and neceſſity of it; which I ſhall give forth more diſtinctly in a few particulars.

Firſt, It is the Cement of humane ſociety, it knits mankind together as a firm building, or well compacted body.

Secondly, It is the Pillar that props up humane ſociety, without Magiſtracy all would fall to ruine, and become a heap of confuſion.

Thirdly, 'Tis the Defence and ſafety of the Innocent; Magiſtrates are the Sheilds of the earth.

Fourthly, It is the terrour of Evil doers: What would become of us if every man might do evil, without fear of ſuffering the preſent evils of puniſhment? How could we live among thoſe who fear not the inviſible God, if there were not viſible Gods to fear? It hath been truly obſerved, That if ſome men were not Gods among men, the moſt of men would be beaſts, yea Devils among men.

Fifthly, 'Tis the preſervative of publick peace and order among men. The mountains bring forth peace to the people, and the little hills by righteouſneſs (Pſal. 72. 3.) but without it, the mountains are mountains of prey, and the hills filled with robbers. All are out of place, where none are chief in place. The ſtrongeſt Nations prove weak, where Powers are not maintained and obeyed.

Sixthly, Magiſtracy is the Fence of our liberty, and property, if none were ſubject, none could be free. Anarchy brings in the worſt ſlavery: No man ſhould long call any thing his own, if Government were not owned. Were there not Laws to limit men, and Magiſtrates to enliven thoſe Laws, many would think that lawfully enough theirs, which they have power enough to make theirs.

Seventhly, Magiſtrates are the very vital ſpirits and breath by which millions of men ſubſiſt comfortably in one body politick. Jeremiah in his Lamentations (Chap. 4. 20.) calls their King (though none of the beſt) the breath of their noſtrils.

And therefore as in duty, ſo for neceſſity, as for conſcience, ſo for our own comfort and commodity, we ſhould (as Chriſt commanded his Diſciples in his own caſe (Math. 22. 21.) Render to Ceſar the things that are Ceſars. The Apoſtle not only exhorts but enjoyns (Rom. 13. 1.) Let every ſoul be ſubject to the higher Powers. With this ſubjection to them he commands ſupplycation for them (1 Tim. 2. 1, 2.) I exhort that firſt of all Prayers and Supplications be made for all men, for Kings, and for all that are in Authority, that under them we may lead quiet and peaceable lives, &c. And as he commands that Magiſtrates ſhould be much the ſubject of prayer, ſo alſo of preaching (Tit. 3. 1.) Put them in mind to be ſubject to Principalities and Powers, and to obey Magiſtrates. Which ſhews, Firſt, That this is no new doctrine, but an old duty, which they were to be put in mind of. Subjection to Magiſtrates is the old Commandment, and it doth not wax old, 'tis as ſtrong as at firſt. Secondly, That they were often to have this Inculcated upon them; men have a very untoward ſpirit, as for ſubjection to God, ſo to man; we are naturally ſo high minded, that we cannot ſtoop to thoſe who are higheſt, therefore ſaith he, Put them in mind to be ſubject to Principalities aud Powers. Many will be ready to ſay in the pride of their hearts, are we not all one mans children? Are we not fellow-members, fellow-creatures? Such kind of language hath been heard among many; theſe need to be put in mind to be ſubject. And (as St. Peter directs, 1 Ep. 2. 13.) To ſubmit themſelves to every ordinance of man for the Lords ſake, whether it be to the King as ſupream, or unto Governours as unto them that are ſent by him, &c. The Apoſtle Jude diſcovering anti-Magiſtratical Spirits, calls them filthy dreamers (v. 8.) Likewiſe alſo theſe filthy dreamers defile the fleſh, deſpiſe Dominions, and ſpeak evil of Dignities. We muſt have liberty and freedom (ſay they) why ſhould we be under and others above? Theſe are filthy dreamers, they ſpeak for liberty, but indeed it is for licentiouſneſs; They would do what themſelves pleaſe, not what is pleaſing to God. Behold in the glaſs of one Scripture, the woful and deformed face of things where either there are no Magiſtrates, or none that know how to adminiſter juſtice according to the duty of their place (Iſa. 3. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.) where the Prophet threatens that the Lord will take away from Jeruſalem and from Judah, the ſtay and the ſtaffe: What ſtay, and what ſtaffe? He ſpeaks of a twofold ſtay and ſtaffe: Firſt, The natural ſtay and ſtaffe; Secondly, The civil ſtay and ſtaffe; yea there is alſo a third mentioned, even the ſpiritual ſtay and ſtaffe. Firſt, He will take away bread and water, which are the ſtay and ſtaffe of natural life. Secondly, He will take away Magiſtrates and other Miniſters of ſtate, who are the ſtay and ſtaffe of a civil life. The mighty man, and the man of war, the Judge and the Prophet, and the Prudent and the Ancient, &c. I will break theſe (ſaith God) I will take away all orders of men from them; I will leave them none to go into the field to fight for them, none to go to the gate to judge for them. What then? I will give Children to be their Princes, and Babes ſhall rule over them; that is, they that are in places of power, whether for peace or war, ſhall be as fit for it, as Babes are to lead an Army, and martial a battel, or as Children are to ſit in Judgment, and give ſentence in weightieſt matters. And what will become of a Nation in this caſe? the fifth verſe tells us; And the people ſhall be oppreſſed, every one by another, and every man by his neighbour. The people complain many times, and ſometimes they have cauſe to complain that the Magiſtrate oppreſſeth them; but if there be no ruling, every one will be an oppreſſour. The people are ready to ſay, if oppreſſing Magiſtrates were but outed, we ſhould have liberty and freedom. But they will find a thouſand oppreſſors for one, when they have no Magiſtrate. Therefore the Lord in abundant goodneſs as well as wiſdom hath appointed Magiſtrates to go, as Job did, out to the gate through the City.

As in this verſe Job hath ſaid enough to ſhew that he was a Magiſtrate, ſo in the next and ſeveral verſes following, he ſaith as much to ſhew what reſpect he had being a Magiſtrate. Some who are in Power, have much fear, but little love and affectionate reſpect among the people: but as Job was a man in power, ſo he had abundance of love, and was reſpected as well as feared, both by young and old.

Verſe, 8. The young men ſaw me and hid themſelves, and the aged aroſe and ſtood up.

Young men and old men include all men, though it be true that ſome men are neither young nor old, but as we ſay, middle-aged. And as young and old carry all men, ſo thoſe actions of the one ſort hiding themſelves, and of the other riſing up at Job's appearance, or coming in place, ſignifie all kind of reſpect both to his perſon and office.

The young men ſaw me and hid themſelves, &c.

The word notes the younger of any ſort, theſe ſaw me paſs through the ſtreet going to the ſeat of Judgment; and ſee how they were affected? Preſently they hid themſelves. But what was the matter? Was Job ſuch a terrible man, a man of ſo much ſeverity, that the young men durſt not look upon him, but hid themſelves as ſoon as they ſaw him? Is any man truly honoured when he is thus feared?

I anſwer, This action of hiding of our ſelves is noted in Scripture to ariſe three wayes.

Firſt, From ſhame, mixed with fear (Gen. 3. 8.) when God came in the cool of the day to queſtion Adam after he had ſinned in eating the forbidden fruit; He and his Wife hearing the voice of the Lord walking in the Garden, hid themſelves from the preſence of the Lord among the trees of the garden. Whence was this hiding? His own anſwer tells us, it was from a mixture of fear and ſhame; And he ſaid, I heard thy voice in the garden, and was afraid, becauſe I was naked, &c.

Secondly, There is a hiding which proceeds from pure or meer fear. Thus the Prophet deſcribes wicked Idolaters terrified with the dreadfulneſs of Gods Judgments againſt them, betaking themſelves to any hole for ſhelter (Iſa. 2. 19.) They ſhall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for the fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majeſty, when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the Eerth; That is, to make great commotions and changes in the affairs of Nations, which like an earthquake ſhall vehemently ſhake, if not utterly overthrow all. In ſuch a day the ſtouteſt ſinners ſhall fear and hide themſelves. Thus Michaiah told Zedekiah the Bold-faced falſe Prophet (1 Kings 22. 25.) Behold, thou ſhalt ſee in that day, when thou ſhalt go into an inner chamber to hide thy ſelf.

Thirdly, There is alſo a hiding of our ſelves for joy, mixt with modeſty. So 'tis ſaid in the Goſpel concerning Zacharias his Wife Elizabeth (Luk. 1. 24.) After thoſe dayes his wife Elizabeth conceived, ſhe hid her ſelf five months, ſaying, thus hath the Lord dealt with me in thoſe dayes where in he looked on me, to take away my reproach among men. Elizabeth had received ſo great a mercy, both as it was the taking away of her reproach, and the return of her prayer, that ſhe was even over-joyed at her own conception, yet ſhe will a while modeſtly cover this joy, and hide both her ſelf and her bleſſing for a time, that ſhe and it might appear together in more aſſurance to the eye of the world. 'Tis wiſdom to make no great ſhew, much leſs boaſt of things, till we are ſure of them. Elizabeth hid her ſelf (five months) till ſhe was quick with child, and then ſhe could confidently avouch it to all her friends.

Here, the young men hid themſelves: either

Firſt, As being ſtruck with ſuch a reverence of Job's perſon, that they durſt not appear openly before him; or

Secondly, They hid themſelves, fearing leſt (he being a man of ſo much Authority and eſteem) they ſhould fail in their behaviour before him.

Thirdly, It might be from a fear that they had done ſomewhat amiſs, or that he had heard of their youthful vanities, and would ſurely reprove them for it. Young men are apt to offend (that's a ſlippery age) and are therefore loath to appear before their Superiours, eſpecially when eminently ſuch (as Job was) in holineſs, wiſdom, and a Spirit of diſcerning concerning men and manners, things and perſons. Job's juſt ſeverity ſtruck the young men with a kind of amazement.

Note hence; Firſt, Eminent vertues and graces draw reverence and reſpect upon the perſons of men, even from thoſe who are apt to take too much liberty to themſelves.

The ſpirits of young men are uſually vain and light, and often deboyſt and oppoſite to ſobriety and goodneſs, yet theſe were overcome by Job's preſence. It is not greatneſs, or riches, outward pomp, or ſplendour that can over-awe the vain ſpirits of youth: But a vertuous gravity and the ſplendour of Juſtice will. 'Tis very memorable which is reported of Cato in the Roman Hiſtory, He was a man of ſuch veneration in the City of Rome, that though they uſed much immodeſty, both in ſpeech and geſture at their publick playes and ſhews, eſpecially in the Floral Games; yet when once Cato appeared upon the Theater, there was not a man durſt ſpeak any immodeſt word, or uſe any wanton behaviour, till he was withdrawn. If heathen Cato, becauſe he was a man of a compoſed ſpirit, of much Juſtice and Integrity, a man of an unſpotted converſation and reputation (if he, I ſay) had ſuch a reverence; much more will the grace of Chriſt, ſhining forth with beams of light in a converſation becoming the Goſpel, command reſpect. It is ſaid of King Herod (Mark

Valer. Max. lib. 2. cap. 5.

(Mark 6.20.) That He feared John (the Baptiſt) knowing that he was a Juſt man and an holy, and obſerved him. As the Name of God is holy and reverend (Pſal. 111. 9.) ſo there is a reverence in that holineſs which is imprinted upon man. Grace is ſometimes, at leaſt ſeemingly, honoured even in their Conſciences who have no grace.

Secondly, Looking upon Job as a Magiſtrate;

Note, There is a Majeſty in Magiſtrates.

God puts their dread upon men; all are in awe of them. As David often acknowledged that God ſubdued his enemies to him: So that it was God who ſubdued the ſpirits of his own Subjects to him (Pſal. 144. 1, 2.) For having ſaid (ver. 1.) Bleſſed be the Lord my ſtrength, who teacheth my hands to war, and my fingers to fight; he preſently adds in the cloſe of the ſecond verſe, Who ſubdueth my people under me. It is as great a work of God, that millions of men quietly ſubmit to the Magiſtratical ſword of a ſingle Perſon, as that a potent Army of enemies are conquered by his Military ſword (Prov. 20. 8, 26.) A King that ſitteth in the Throne of Judgment, ſcattereth away all evil with his eyes. The wicked dare not come before a juſt and righteous Prince, they are caſt down with a caſt of his eye. As they cannot bear the preſence of God; ſo not theirs who ſtand among men in the place and power of God. Princes are not deſpiſed of men till themſelves prove deſpiſers of God. Them that honour me (ſaith the Lord, 1 Sam. 2.30.) I will honour (that is, I will honour them, and cauſe others to honour them) and they that deſpiſe me ſhall be lightly eſteemed, both by my ſelf and others.

Thirdly, From this action of young men hiding themſelves at the appearance of a Magiſtrate paſſing to the Place and Seat of Judicature, we may conceive what hiding there will be when Chriſt ſhall appear in the Glory of his Father, with all his holy Angels, to Judge the World. O what hiding will there be when Chriſt ſhall come to the Gate through the City, and prepare his Seat in the Street? Then how will young men full of vanity and voluptuouſneſs, how will old men full of earthlineſs and covetouſneſs, how will thoſe mighty men who are full of ambition and oppreſſion, even laden with the ſpoils of the helpleſs and innocent, hide themſelves (as 'tis ſaid, Rev. 6. 15, 16, 17.) in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains? How will they ſay to the mountains and to the rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that ſitteth on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, for the Great day of his wrath is come, and who ſhall be able to ſtand? How can they ſtand before the Judge of Heaven and Earth, who hide themſelves from the face of an earthly Judge? This is a profitable and an awakening Meditation upon the Text: Yet, I conceive, it was not ſo much the guiltineſs of theſe young men, as their ſhamefac'dneſs, meeting with the gravity and integrity of this Reverend Judge, which cauſed them to hide themſelves; and ſo their hiding was not their fault, but their commendation.

Whence Note, Fourthly, Modeſty and baſhfulneſs is a vertue in thoſe who are young, when their Ancients and Superiours are in preſence.

It was both the honour of Job, and the praiſe of theſe young men, that they hid themſelves. The word which the Hebrews uſe for a young man ſignifieth hiding, becauſe young men and maidens ſhould rather hide then put themſelves forward at all times, eſpecially when great and grave men appear. Shamefac'dneſs is a piece of their comelineſs alwayes, but moſt of all when they have done amiſs; how deformed are they who do evil and are not aſham'd, but ſuffer the very ſhew of their countenance (as the Prophet ſpeaks) to teſtifie againſt them, declaring their ſin as Sodom, and neither hiding themſelves nor it (Iſa. 3. 9.) 'Tis a ſhame to commit a fault; therefore not to be aſhamed of it when committed, but to appear with a brazen face, and with an iron front, not caring who ſees or knows it, is a doubling of the fault. As it is a great ſin to hide our ſins by excuſes; ſo it is a greater ſin to ſhew our ſins with impudence: Hypocritically to hide our ſins, and audaciouſly to declare them, are high aggravations of ſin; and of the two the latter is the higheſt, both as it carries a contempt of God in it, and an avouchment of it to man. The former hath a hope to deceive God and man; but the latter is not afraid to ſend them a defiance, and having done it, bids them both do their worſt.

Fifthly, Note, 'Tis the duty of young men to reverence the aged, eſpecially thoſe aged who are in Power.

The Law of Moſes gave this in charge (Levit. 19. 32.) Thou ſhalt riſe up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man. When young men know not their diſtance, but are bold with and irreverent towards the aged, 'tis one of the worſt ſigns of an evil government, and of the evils which follow upon it in Families, Cities, and Nations. It was threatened as a great Judgment in it ſelf, and as the preſage of a greater (Iſa. 35. 5.) Children ſhall behave themſelves proudly againſt the Ancient, and the baſe againſt the honourable. The diſcipline of the Lacedemonians was ſo exact towards their youth, and they were bound to give ſuch reverence to the aged, that it grew into a Proverb, Only in Sparta it is good to be old. Job's government and perſon were ſo much reverenced among the younger (who are commonly in all Commonwealths the ruder) ſort, that when they ſaw him they would not be ſeen. The young men hid themſelves,

In ſola Sparta expidire fieri ſenem.

And the aged aroſe and ſtood up.

The young mens withdrawing was an argument of great reſpect; but the riſing and ſtanding up of the aged when Job paſſed by, was an argument of ſo much the more reſpect, by how much the aged are of more reſpect then the young. We ſay, Honour is in the perſon honouring: Therefore the more honourable the perſon is that gives the reſpect, the more honour is given by it. The honour of Jeſus Chriſt is highly advanced in that prophecy of him (Pſal. 72. 9, 10, 11.) where it is not only ſaid (ver. 9.) They that dwell in the wilderneſs (by whom we may underſtand perſons of a ruder breeding and meaner quality) ſhall bow before him; but, as it follows (ver. 9, 10.) The Kings of Tarſhiſh, and of the Iſles, ſhall bring preſents: The Kings of Sheba and Seba ſhall bring gifts; yea, all Kings ſhall fall down before him. How honourable is Jeſus Chriſt! whom not only the Cottagers of the Wilderneſs, but the mighty Kings of the Earth adore and worſhip. We may thus alſo in proportion take the elevation or height of Job's honour upon the ſame account, who was not only reverenced by young men, but by the aged. And (which heightens it ſomewhat more) the Hebrew word here uſed for aged, ſignifies the oldeſt, even decrepit old age. Thoſe old men, whoſe laſt glaſs was running, and who were taking their laſt ſtep (as it were) even they did ariſe, and ſtood up.

Aliqui vertunt decrepiti: ſenes ultimæ ſenectutis qui à Græcis Ἐσχατογȣρȣντες vocantur. Comprehendit etiam ſenectutem mediam & primam.

Some read, They aroſe and ſtood; that is, when once they aroſe from their ſeats, they would not, or did not ſit down in his preſence. To ariſe and ſtand up are poſtures referring to a double relation: Firſt, To that of a ſervant or waiter, who preſents himſelf ready for buſineſs at a call or beck. Secondly, To that of a hearer or learner; in this latter ſence ſome conceive the aged aroſe and ſtood up: As if when Job came into the Court they aroſe and ſtood up ready to hear and receive the Law from his mouth, or to take inſtructions what to do in caſes that came before him. But this geſture of the aged here refers only to the uſual cuſtom of riſing and ſtanding up when the Judge, eſpecially if he be a chief Magiſtrate, paſſeth by with his Attendants to the place of Judicature.

Hence Note, 'Tis the duty of all to honour Magiſtrates.

This duty is required in the fourth Commandment; we muſt honour our civil Father, the Father of our Countrey, as well as our natural Father, the Father of the Family. The Scripture doth not only command ſubjection to the higher Powers, but reverence and reſpect (Rom. 13. 7.) Render therefore to all their dues, Tribute to whom tribute is due, cuſtom to whom cuſtom, fear to whom fear, honour to whom honour. Our Obligation to this duty is grounded upon three Conſiderations.

Firſt, Magiſtrates are to be honour'd as they are Gods Deputies and Vicegerents: For as they are ordained by God, ſo they are in the place of God, and exerciſe his Power by deputation.

Secondly, Magiſtrates are ſet up for the common good of mankind. Daniel expounding Nebuchadnezzar's

Dream, who was the greateſt Prince of the whole world, tells him, He was the tree whoſe leaves were fair, and whoſe fruit much, and in it was meat for all, under which the beaſts of the field dwelt, and upon whoſe branches the fowls of the heaven had their habitation (Dan. 4. 22.) And as he, ſo all Magiſtrates (in their capacity) are ſuch a tree, to all their Subjects, yielding them refreſhing food and defence. Therefore they are to be reverenced, and to have reſpect from all.

Thirdly, God hath put (as was toucht before) his own Name upon them, I have ſaid ye are Gods (Pſal. 82. 6.) As Paraſites in baſe flattery and complyance with their pride, have vainly called ſome of them ſo; and as ſome Princes have moſt wickedly and blaſphemouſly affected to be called, yea, to be adored as Gods (God will take higheſt vengeance upon all thoſe who take his Name upon them; or ſubmit to it when given them) ſo God himſelf hath put his own Name upon Magiſtrates, to mind them of their duty, or for a twofold end, Firſt, That being called Gods, they ſhould judge and rule as God doth, or with a mind like God, free from the mixture of a private or paſſionate ſpirit, and filled with a love to and a delight in impartial Judgment and Righteouſneſs. Secondly, That being called Gods, all men might learn their duty, freely to ſubmit to them, and duly to honour them; ſeeing any diſhonour done to them, reflects upon God whoſe Name they bear. Next to the honour which we owe to God himſelf, we owe and ought to pay honour to Magiſtrates who are called Gods. And though there be ſome difficulty in clearing Paul's ſence, when being reproved for calling Ananias the High Prieſt, A whited wall, he ſaid, I wiſt not, Brethren, that he was the High Prieſt (which to me ſignifies his opinion, or judgment, that he was not a lawful rightly conſtituted nor duly qualified High Prieſt, rather then either his neſcience or inadvertency who he was; I ſay, though there be a difficulty in the ſence of that ſaying) yet the Scripture alledged by him leaves it as clear as noon day, that Magiſtrates are not to receive any courſe or unbecoming language. It is written, Thou ſhalt not ſpeak evil of the Ruler of thy people (Acts 23. 5.)

> Secondly, Obſerve, Godly and Juſt Magiſtrates are willingly honoured by their good people of all ſorts and on all hands.

Subjection, yea, ſome kind of honour is due to a Magiſtrate as a Magiſtrate, though an evil man, yea though an evil Magiſtrate. 'Tis hard to bring the heart to it; yet ſuch a one was Tiberius Cæſar, of whom Chriſt ſaid, Give unto Cæſar the things which are Cæſars; and ſuch a one was Nero (a monſter of men) when Paul writ to the Church at Rome, Let every ſoul be ſubject to the higher powers. But godly and juſt Magiſtrates deſerve all ſorts of honour as well as ſubjection from all ſorts of men: If a wicked man be in Power, he is to be honour'd for his place ſake; but if a godly man be in Power, he is to be honour'd for his perſons ſake.

For firſt, Good Magiſtrates make it their aim to honour God, therefore we ſhould honour them.

Secondly, Good Magiſtrates are honour'd by God, therefore we ſhould honour them: They that honour me (ſaith God) I will honour. Honour alwayes goes with power, as the ſhadow with the body: Evil men in Power receive honour mith a mixture either of fear or flattery; but ſuch as are good and do good, have it caſt upon them in love and in ſincerity. When evil men govern, young men hide themſelves, and old men riſe up and honour them, as the poor Indians worſhip the Devils, for fear they ſhould do them a miſchief; or at beſt only in a bare obedience and ſubmiſſion to the Will and Ordinance of God, or as the Apoſtle Peter directs (1 Epiſt. 2. 13.) To the Ordinance of man for the Lords ſake. Which though it be the beſt as to the perſon honouring, yet 'tis the worſt as to the perſon honoured. The more we honour Magiſtrates in ſubmiſſion to the will of God, or for the Lords ſake, our act is the better; but when we honour them only ſo, and not at all for their own ſakes, it ſhews that they are not good. For good and righteous Magiſtrates are reverenced and honoured (as Saints reverence and honour God) becauſe they are good, and do good; they are honoured for the goodneſs that is in them, and for the good that is done by them. When power and piety, dominion and deſert meet together and center (as they did in Job) in the perſon of a Prince, then the young men, ſtruck with the awe of him, modeſtly hide themſelves, and the aged, filled with love to him, and thankfulneſs to God for him, ariſe and ſtand up. Happy are the people that be in ſuch a caſe; and how fair an evidence is it that a people (which is the top of all happineſs) have the Lord for their God, when they have ſuch a God for their Lord.

VERS: 9, 10, 11.

The Princes refrained talking, and laid their hand upon their mouth.

The Nobles held their peace, and their tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth.

When the ear heard me, then it bleſſed me; and when the eye ſaw me, it gave witneſs to me.

THis Context contains a further proof of that great reſpect and honour which Job received as a Magiſtrate. In the former verſe, we ſaw how he was obſerved and reverenced as he paſſed through the ſtreets to the place of Judicature. When I went out to the gate through the City, when I prepared my ſeat in the ſtreet. The young men ſaw me and hid themſelves; and the aged aroſe and ſtood up. In theſe three verſes we ſee the obſervance and reverence which this worthy man received, when he ſate in judgment. And this not only from a few, nor only from perſons of inferiour rank; but from perſons of all ranks, it was an univerſal reſpect. Firſt, He had reſpect from the chiefeſt and higheſt in dignity, called here, Princes (ver. 9.) Secondly, He had reſpect from the middle ſort of Magiſtrates or Governours, called here Nobles (ver. 10.) Thirdly, He had reſpect from the whole body of the people collectively as one man, even from every ſingle ear and eye, When the ear heard me, it bleſſed me; and when the eye ſaw me, it gave witneſs to me: That is, every eye and every ear bleſſed, and gave witneſs to me.

Verſe 9. The Princes refrained talking.

The word notes men in eminent authority: And ſometimes thoſe of the moſt eminent authority, ſuch as rule in chief. Chriſt himſelf is adorned with this title (Iſa. 9. 6.) The Prince of peace. Chriſt is a Prince, who hath peace not only in his nature or diſpoſition, but he hath peace in his power, or at his diſpoſe: Chriſt is not an inferiour, but the chief Prince, higher then the higheſt: Yet the word is applyed to any that are in power, and bear rule over others. (1 Chron. 15. 22.) The chief of the Levites, is called the Prince of the Levites. And we read (1 Chron. 29. 6.) of The Princes of the Tribes. As there was a Prince or Head over all the Tribes, ſo every Tribe had a Prince or Head. This ſtile is beſtowed alſo upon Eminent Officers in the Court or Family of a King (Gen. 40. 2.) And Pharoah was wroth againſt two of his Officers, againſt the chief (or Prince) of the Butlers, and againſt the chief (or Prince) of the Bakers. It is ſaid of Seraiah (Jer. 51. 59.) And this Seraiah was a quiet Prince; we put in the Margin, Prince of Menucha, or chief Chamberlain, who took care of the Kings reſt, or of the King when he went to reſt. And whereas we render (Exod. 1. 11.) They did ſet over them (that is, over the people of Iſrael) Taskmaſters to afflict them with burdens: The Hebrew is, They ſet over them Princes of the Treaſury. We may ſuppoſe the Princes here ſpoken of to be any Great men whether by birth or office. Now what ſaith he of theſe Princes?

They refrained talking.] That is, They would not ſpeak on, but brake off their conference, or they would not ſpeak at all while Job was preſent. They were ſo deſirous to hear him ſpeak, that they would not ſpeak a word, but let him have all the diſcourſe where-ever he came. His words were welcome to them, they were as Laws and Oracles among them; therefore they refrained talking; or as the word imports, they impoſed ſilence upon themſelves. Theſe Princes (we may ſuppoſe) were very able to ſpeak to any buſineſs, and could readily give their opinion, but, They willingly refrained.

Further, the word which we tranſlate, refrained, is taken three wayes in Scripture. Firſt, To ſtop or reſtrain by outward outward force. Secondly, To reſtrain or ſtop by command, as a King or Magiſtrate doth coerce his Subjects by his Authority and his Laws. Thirdly, It is to reſtrain by prayer or entreaty. We read it twice applyed to the ſtopping of the plague, which is done both by a word of authority or command from God, and upon a word of prayer or entreaty from man (Numb. 16.48.) And Aaron took as Moſes had commanded, and ran into the midſt of the Congregation, and behold the Plague was begun among the people, and he put on Incenſe, and made an atonement for the people: And he ſtood between the dead and the living, and the Plague was ſtayed. The Plague, that devourer, was ready to ſlay the whole Congregation, but the Lord ſtopt and reſtrained it upon the interceſſion and ſupplication of Aaron for the people. So (1 Chron. 21. 22.) David coming to the threſhing-floor of Ornon, He offered ſacrifice, and the Plague was ſtayed. There went a Command out from God, and a Prayer from David to ſtay it, and it was ſtayed. Here the Princes refrained talking, not by a reſtraint from Job, but by their own diſcretion. They ſaw it beſt to ſay nothing, when their Prince (who was every way ſo much their better) was in preſence.

Hence Note, It is both our wiſdom and our duty ſometimes to forbear ſpeaking.

There is a time to keep ſilence, and a time to ſpeak (Eccleſ. 3.7.) The Prophet (Amos 5. 13.) ſets down one ſeaſon of ſilence, Therefore the prudent ſhall keep ſilence in that time, for it is an evil time. When times are ſo evil that they will not bear evil to be ſpoken againſt, nor good to be ſpoken, 'tis time for the prudent to keep ſilence; for though in ſome caſes we muſt bear our teſtimony openly for truth and holineſs, whether men will bear it or no, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, we muſt ſpeak, yet we are not urged with that neceſſity at all times, but may (in this ſence) ſave our ſelves from an untoward generation, even by refraining to ſpeak; and ever when men more prudent then our ſelves are in place, and ready to ſpeak, 'tis a fitting time for us to keep ſilence. Uſually they are moſt forward to ſpeak, who have leaſt reaſon to ſpeak, and ſpeak leaſt reaſon: Some will be ſpeaking, though they diſcover nothing but their own inability to ſpeak. 'Tis much better to refrain talking, then to talk to little purpoſe, or to hinder thoſe who can talk to better purpoſe then our ſelves. David prayeth (Pſal. 141. 3.) Set a watch (O Lord) before my mouth; keep the door of my lips. It is more then man can do, to govern his tongue, and to hit the due ſeaſon of ſpeaking. And in another Pſalm, David intimates, that he had as much to do, to keep his tongue, as to rule an headſtrong Horſe (Pſal. 39. 1.) I ſaid I will take heed to my wayes, that I ſin not with my tongue; I will keep my mouth with a bridle while the wicked is before me. As hot mettl'd Horſes, ſo the tongue is apt to run out, unleſs well bridled. Nor is any bridle ſtrong enough to hold it, but the bridle of Grace. Grace is both ſpur and bridle to the tongue; Grace like a ſpur provokes us to ſpeak for God, and for the good of others, to ſpeak ſavoury words which may miniſter Grace to the hearers; and Grace, like a bridle, ſtops us from ſpeaking what may grieve the Spirit of God, or be either infectious or offenſive unto others. None rule their tongues well without Grace; and ſome who have Grace cannot rule them well. And hence the Apoſtle James (Chap. 3. 2.) concludes, not only that, He who offends not in word, is a gracious man (ſeeing it is poſſible, yea, very uſual for a man to be ſo who yet offends in word) but he ſaith ſuch a one is a perfect man; that is, he hath attained to a very great, if not the greateſt degree of Grace. And becauſe by our readineſs to ſpeak, we are continually ready to ſin; there the ſame Apoſtle commends ſlowneſs to ſpeak (James 1. 19.) Let every man be ſwift to hear, ſlow to ſpeak: When the tongue hath got looſe, it is not eaſie to ſtay it. They in the Pſalm thought their tongues in their own power, and proudly put the queſtion (Pſal. 12. 4.) With our tongue we will prevail, our lips are our own, who is Lord over us? We may anſwer; Their tongues were Lords over them; and having gotten the bridle would on whether they would or no. Many a mans tongue is too hard for his whole man. He hath a great command over himſelf, that can command it. We take it ill, if others ſilence us: But it were well (in many caſes) if we could (like theſe Princes) refrain talking, and ſilence our ſelves. I find this word applyed to the ſhutting up of the Rain in the Clouds, which is no eaſie thing, the Clouds being ſo quickly moved and cruſhed like Sponges with the Wind; as alſo to the reſtraining and ſtopping of fire beginning to kindle, that it break not out into a flame. To reſtrain ſpeaking is often as hard and as beneficial as to reſtrain a fire from burning, or to lock up the Clouds from immoderate or unſeaſonable raining. The Princes refrained talking,

And laid their hand upon their mouth.

Theſe words ſpeak the ſame thing, the not ſpeaking of the Princes in Job's preſence, or their utmoſt ſilence. We have the ſame expreſſion as well as ſence (Chap. 21. 5.) Mark me and be aſtoniſhed, and lay your hand upon your mouth. That is, ſpeak no more. There the riſe and meaning of this geſture was opened, and thither I refer the Reader. I ſhall only add two things.

יד כפ

Firſt, That whereas there are two words in the Hebrew which ſignifie the hand; the word here uſed ſignifieth the hand open, the hand in plain, or the palm of the hand, which, ſay ſome (though I think it to be but a critical nicity) implyeth ſuch a ſtopping of the mouth, that not a word can get out, as when a man cloſeth his mouth with the palm of his hand.

Secondly, Some of the Hebrew Writers expound this clauſe, They laid their hand upon their mouth, as a geſture teſtifying honour. And it is in uſe (as in many Nations, ſo) among us, when we come before honourable perſons, to put the hand to the mouth in token of reverence.

In quibuſdā regionibus manus oſculo teſtantur homines ſe alicui honorem exhibere; ſed ego ad ſilentium refero. Merc.

But I rather adhere to the former Interpretation, that this action or geſture denoteth a total ſilence, which beſt ſuits with what went before, They refrained ſpeaking; and as they did ſo when he came in, ſo they would not venture to ſpeak when he had ſpoken, nor offer their opinion after him, but reſting in his Judgment about, and determination of every caſe brought and pleaded before him, Laid their hand upon their mouth.

Hence Note, Some have ſuch power in ſpeaking, that they ſilence all ſpeakers.

They ſpeak ſo much reaſon, and with ſo much authority, that, as none can contradict what hath been ſaid, ſo, to ſay more were but to hold a Candle to the Sun. As the light of the Sun when it riſeth, puts out all other lights; out goes the light of the Moon and of the Stars, we ſee no more that day by their ſhining: So ſome have ſuch a power of language, ſuch a conquering Logick, and perſwading Oratory, ſuch weight and excellency of ſpeech, that no man hath any mind to ſpeak after them. Thus Chriſt ſpake with authority, and often put all to ſilence. He ſo anſwered all their queſtions, that, After that they durſt not ask any queſtion at all (Luke 20. 40.) Such a Maſter of words and reaſon, ſuch a Maſter of the Aſſemblies (as Solomon expreſſeth it, Ecclеſ. 12. 11.) was Job; his words were ſuch goads, that every hearer was ſtirr'd and prickt at heart, they were nails ſo faſtened, home driven, and riveted, that there was no drawing of them out, and therefore, The Princes laid their hand upon their mouth.

Again, Whereas 'tis ſaid, the Princes refrained talking, when Job came into the Court, it may be underſtood of all impertinent talking, with which Courts of Juſtice and Aſſemblies for counſel are often interrupted while publick matters are in hand.

Hence Note, Private talking is very uncomely, in a time of publick hearing and debating.

Many Courts have a Cryer to command all who are near or about them to be ſilent; and it is but need ſometimes that they who are within and of the Court ſhould be called upon to be attentive, and, as theſe Princes in the Text, to refrain talking, to erect their ears, and lay their hands upon their mouth. How improper is it to ſee a private Junto in an open Court or Council? And ſome whiſpering (poſſibly about by-matters) where all are called to hear and determine publick matters?

Thirdly, Note, Wiſe and diſcreet men are willing to be hearers as well as ſpeakers.

The Princes in the Text were able ſpeakers,elſe it needed not be ſaid, that they refrained ſpeaking; yet it pleaſed them to be hearers only while Job was there to ſpeak. They who are conceited of their own abilities, are ready to complain, as he did, Shall we alwayes be hearers only; they muſt up, they cannot hold. To hear is to receive; to ſpeak is to give: And I grant that which the Apoſtle Paul reports as a ſaying of Chriſt (Acts 20. 35.) It is more bleſſed to give then to receive, holds true in this, 'tis a more bleſſed thing to be a ſpeaker then a hearer: Yet it may be more a duty upon ſome to receive then to give, to be hearers then ſpeakers; and that not only in ſpiritual things which concern our eternal intereſt (for ſo the greateſt advantage comes in by hearing) but in things temporal and of leſſer concernment. Bablers will be ſowing their words, though nothing ſpring up worth the reaping. Thoſe Philoſophers ſpake ſcorningly of Paul (Acts 17. 18.) What will this babler, or as the Greek text ſtrictly hath it, This ſower of words ſay? It is good to be a reaper of ſound words ſown by others, but to be a ſower of vain words is greateſt vanity: They do well who ſpeak well, and ſo do they who are willing to hear thoſe that can ſpeak better then themſelves. Some Criticks conceive that the word of diſgrace caſt upon Paul by the Athenian Philoſophers, doth rather note a picker up of words then a ſower of words, and they give the original of the Metaphor two wayes. Firſt, As alluding to poor fellows in the Market-place, who pick up the ſcattered corns which fall out of the full ſacks ſtanding there. And ſo it is as if they had ſaid, what will this ſimple fellow ſay? Secondly, As alluding to thoſe little Birds, Sparrows, or the like, picking up the looſe corn in the furrows of the field at ſeed-time, which becauſe they are given much to chirping and ſinging undelightful notes, may well ſerve to expreſs bablers and vain talkers, who love much to hear themſelves ſpeak, though none elſe do. The readieſt way for ſuch to make themſelves profitable ſpeakers, were a while to refrain ſpeaking, and be patient hearers. Words ſpoken in ſeaſon are like apples of gold in pictures of ſilver (Prov. 25. 11.) and ſo is a ſeaſonable ſilence for the gathering up and feeding upon thoſe Apples. The Princes refrained talking.

Verſe 10. The Nobles held their peace, and their tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth.

These Nobles may be taken for the inferiour ſort of Magiſtrates or City-Officers, as by the Princes, the higheſt, or thoſe next the Supream. Some by Nobles underſtand Captains, or thoſe who had the command in military affairs, who as they are bold and forward in acting, ſo uſually in ſpeaking; yet even theſe were down in the mouth when Job appeared. Another renders, The moſt eloquent Leaders hid themſelves; which ſuits well with Maſter Broughton's tranſlation, The beſt in voice would not be ſeen. As if Job had ſtruck the very Orators dumb, and made eloquence it ſelf ſpeechleſs. The Hebrew word which we expreſs by Nobles comes from a root, which, taken adverbially, ſignifies any thing before us, directly oppoſite to us, or in our eye; ſuch are Nobles, they ſtand in open view, and are eyed by all men: Men in high place (ſuch are Nobles) fall under a very general obſervation. Again, the Original word in the Verb ſignifies, to declare, to publiſh, to teach; and that three wayes; Firſt, By word: Secondly, By geſture: Thirdly, By example. Jeſus Chriſt is ſet forth by the Prophet under this Title (Iſa. 55. 4.) Behold, I have given him for a Witneſs to the people, a Leader and a Commander to the people. Here are three Titles beſtowed upon Chriſt by the Father, the ſecond is that in the Text, A Noble, or a Leader. Chriſt is firſt a witneſs of all the truths of God, he is the Amen, the faithful and the true Witneſs (Rev. 3. 14.) In him all the Promiſes of God are Yea and Amen (2 Cor. 1. 20.) Secondly, He is a Leader, the Captain of our ſalvation; He goes before his people to ſhew them the way, and to fight all the enemies that ſtand in their way. Thirdly, He is a Commander to the people; His Commands are to be received and obeyed without diſpute, and at our utmoſt peril. It is the happineſs of a people, when their Nobles are not only Commanders, but Witneſſes of, and Leaders to that which is good in it ſelf, and beſt for them.

This notation of the word teacheth us two things concerning the Magiſtrate: Firſt, That he is before others in place and power, and there he is placed by the Laws both of God and man. Secondly, That he ought to go before others in the practice of and conformity to the Laws. He ſhould declare them not only by word, but by action. He ſhould teach them with his feet, and ſpeak them with his fingers. He that holds the power ſhould hold out the pattern; and as he gives others the rule, ſo he ſhould be the example of what they ought to be and do. Common people think they cannot go amiſs, while they follow their Superiours.

The actions of Rulers are rules of action.

If then the actions of Rulers are erroneous, they prove to many rules of error: And if the Rulers actions be right, they prove to many as rules of righteouſneſs. A Magiſtrate is a Leader by his example, as well as by his authority. We ſee, there is much matter in ſome words beſides the matter expreſſed by words.

The Nobles held their peace.

The Hebrew in ſtrictneſs is, Their voice was hid, or, They hid their voice; they did, as it were, put their words in their pockets, as men aſhamed to ſpeak where Job ſate Judge. As they who are aſhamed of their doings uſe to hide their heads; ſo they who are aſhamed to ſpeak, hide their words.

And their tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth.

That is, They ſpake no more then as if they had not a tongue to ſpeak. The tongue is the organ of ſpeech; yet 'tis not the having, but the uſing of a tongue which is ſpeaking. If a man be but tongue-tyed, he cannot ſpeak well; but if his tongue cleave to the roof of his mouth, he cannot ſpeak at all. This proverbial ſpeech, The tongue cleaveth to the roof of the mouth, is uſed two wayes in Scripture.

Firſt, To note the extremity of thirſt (Lam. 4. 4.) The tongue of the ſucking Child cleaveth to the roof of his mouth for thirſt. When an Infant hath not a Mothers breaſt to ſuck, he ſucks his own while native moiſture laſts, and then cryes out for more till he can cry no more, his tongue cleaveth to the roof of his mouth. Thus David ſpeaks typically of Chriſt in his ſufferings (Pſal. 22. 15.) My ſtrength is dryed like a potſheard; and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou haſt brought me into the duſt of death. As this Pſalm is a Propheſie of the ſufferings of Chriſt, ſo we find the fulfilling of this Propheſie (John 19. 28, 29.) Jeſus knowing that all things were accompliſhed, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, ſaith, I thirſt. Now there was a veſſel full of vinegar; and they filled a ſpunge with vinegar, and put it upon hyſſop, and put it to his mouth.

Secondly, This form of ſpeaking is uſed to note deepeſt ſilence. The captive Church of the Jews breathed out her ſorrows in this ſad imprecation (Pſal. 137. 5, 6.) If I forget thee, O Jeruſalem, let my right hand forget her cunning; if I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if I prefer not Jeruſalem above my chief joy. The people of Jeruſalem had skill to play, and were much delighted in playing upon an Inſtrument, and to make muſick with their voice; yet in their captivity they would rather forbear the uſe of both, then forbear to expreſs their ſorrow for the deſolations of Jeruſalem. The Lord tells the Prophet (Ezek. 3. 26.) I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, that thou ſhalt be dumb, and ſhalt not be to them a reprover. The words are a ſevere threatening: But to whom? Not to Ezekiel, but to the people, who having ſo long and ſo often ſtopt their ears, like the deaf Adder, at the voice of that holy and heavenly Charmer, are at laſt told they ſhould be troubled with his voice no more, I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth. As if the Lord had ſaid, This rebellious people love not to be reproved, and they ſhall not. The greateſt reproof that can be given a people, is, to tell them they ſhall be reproved no more. That tongue of thine which was a ſharp ſword ſhall be lockt up in its ſcabboard, the of thy mouth; this is their deadly wound, they ſhall be wounded with it no more. So then, to ſay their tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth, is an emblematical expreſſion either of a commanded or reſolved forbearance to ſpeak. The contrary whereof we find (Pſal. 140. 3.) They have ſharpened their tongues like a Serpent; Adders poyſon is under their lips. To ſharpen or whet the tongue, imports the keeneſt and extreameſt kind of dicacity or talkativeneſs, much more to ſharpen the tongue as a Serpent. Naturaliſts tell us, that no living creature ſtirs his tongue ſo ſwiftly as a Serpent, and Serpents are therefore ſaid to have a treble tongue, becauſe moving their tongues ſo faſt, they ſeem to have three tongues. They ſharpen their tongues as Serpents; that is, they ſpeak thick and threefold, they ſting and poyſon me with their tongues. That in the Pſalm, They have ſharpened their tongues like a Serpent, and this in the Text, Their tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth, are the utmoſt contrarieties about the tongue. 'Tis ſaid in one of the ancient comical Poets, That in a great Aſſembly one called to the Cryer, Make this people All Ear, that is, Make them ſilent, let them do nothing but hear: Let not the leaſt murmur or motion of a tongue be heard among them. Thus the Nobles were ſilent when Job was preſent, they were all ear; Their tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth.

Fast jam nunc præco omnem auritum populum. Plaut.

In this verſe we have three orders or ranks of men: Here are, Firſt, Princes: Secondly, Nobles: Thirdly, The chief Governour, Job, above them both, honoured and attended by both. How high was Job who had Princes and Nobles below him?

Hence Note, God hath ranked men in ſeveral degrees and orders.

He hath not only ſet all Magiſtrates above the people, but he hath ſet ſome Magiſtrates above others. As the Earth is not caſt into a level, but into Mountains and Plains, into Hills and Valleys; ſo the Men or Inhabitants of the Earth are not placed in a level, ſome are high and ſome are low, ſome are Mountains and Hills, others are Plains and Valleys. David praying againſt mighty enemies ſaith (Pſal. 144. 5.) Touch the Mountains, O Lord (that is, the Great men of the earth) and they ſhall ſmoak: That is, they ſhall vaniſh into ſmoak. And among Hills and Mountains there is a difference, ſome Hills are but Hillocks to others, though high compared with the Valleys. Some great men are like great Hills or Mountains, others are ſmaller Mountains or little Hills. Job was not only a Mountain, but a great Mountain, he was a Chief among the ſons of men; Princes and Nobles, who were much above the common people, were much his underlings. As the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the diſtribution of the heavenly bodies (1 Cor. 15. 39, 40.) There are celeſtial bodies, and bodies terreſtrial: But the glory of the celeſtial is one, and the glory of the terreſtrial is another. So it is among men in civil reſpects; there are among men celeſtial bodies, and bodies terreſtrial; the vulgar are in this account, but bodies terreſtrial; the Magiſtrates are, as it were, bodies celeſtial; and the glory of the one differs from the glory of the other. The people have their glory, but they have not the glory of Princes or Sovereigns. Nor have theſe, metaphorically, celeſtial bodies one glory, as the natural celeſtial bodies have not: As there is one glory of the Sun, another of the Stars; for one Star differeth from another in glory: So there is one glory of the Sovereign Prince, who is as the Sun in the ſphere of Magiſtracy, and another glory of ſubordinate Governours, who are as Stars in the ſphere of Magiſtracy; yea among theſe Stars, or ſubordinate Governours, ſome are bigger, and ſome are leſſer, one Governour differeth from another Governour in power and glory. All theſe diſtinctions and ſubordinations of men concern and ſerve for not only the beauty and ornament, but the ſafety and well-being of mankind. And as it contributes much to the good of all, that ſome ſhould govern, and others be ſubject, ſo that ſome ſhould be ſupream, and others inferiour in government.

Hence, Secondly, Obſerve, As it is the duty of all the people in common to obey and be ſubject to their Magiſtrates; ſo it is the duty of inferiour Magiſtrates to obey, reſpect, and be ſubject to the ſupream Magiſtrate.

Job the chief Magiſtrate was ſubmitted to by the Princes and Nobles, as well as by the common people. There may be ſeveral co-ordinate States in Government, but there is not a co-ordination of perſons. Soveraign Princes are leſs then all their people conſidered together; but they are greater then any one of them, yea, then all of them taken ſingly, or one by one.

Thus we ſee the obſervance which Job had from the uppermoſt of his people, the Princes and Nobles. The next ſhews us what reſpect he had from the lower ſort or whole body of the people.

Verſe 11. When the ear heard me, then it bleſſed me; and when the eye ſaw me, it gave witneſs to me.

I might give you the full ſence of this atteſtation of the people to Job, in that of the people to David (2 Sam. 3. 36.) where 'tis ſaid, all the people took notice of his mourning for the death of Abner, and it pleaſed them. Upon which acquieſcence and ſatisfaction of the people with that particular act, the Divine Hiſtorian takes occaſion to report the peoples ſatisfaction with all his actions, As whatſoever the King did pleaſed all the people. Not that the people ſwallowed all the Kings actions by an implicit faith, or cryed up (as the flatterers of great Princes often do) his vices for vertues, or his evil deeds for good; but the meaning is, that David was ſo prudent in his carriage, and righteous in all his adminiſtrations to the people, that they took high content in him, and were pleaſed with him to the full. As David was Gods Darling and Favourite, a man after his own heart, ſo he was a King after the heart of the people, their darling and delight; and therefore as he did all well, ſo they took all well that he did; whatſoever the King did pleaſed all the people. This (I ſay) is the clear ſence and interpretation of Job's Text, When the ear heard me, then it bleſſed me, &c. Yet I ſhall touch upon it in the parts a little more diſtinctly.

When the ear heard me, &c.] The ear is the proper organ of hearing; nor hath it any other buſineſs to do, or office to perform, but to hear. The ear, a part, a little part of man, is here put ſynecdochically for the whole man; When the ear heard me, is, when any man heard me, he bleſſed me;

Auris pro audiente, oculus pro vidente.

And when the eye ſaw me, it gave witneſs to me.

The eye is put for the man, or for the perſon ſeeing, as the ear for the perſon hearing.

Again, When he ſaith indefinitely, When the ear heard, and the eye ſaw me, we are to expound it univerſally, for all ears that heard, and all eyes that ſaw him: As if he had ſaid, Every one that heard me, bleſſed me, and every one that ſaw me, gave witneſs to me. There was not any hearer but did bleſs me; not any beholder but gave witneſs to me.

Thoſe words, heard me, may be taken two wayes.

Firſt, Thus, Which heard me perſonally ſpeaking.

Secondly, Thus, Which heard me ſpoken of, or my proceedings reported by others.

But what did the ear which heard Job? Himſelf anſwers in the Text, It bleſſed me: Or (as Mr. Broughton renders it) They held me happy. We read in Scripture this act of bleſſing three wayes ſpoken of. Firſt, Of God bleſſing man. Secondly, Of man bleſſing God. Thirdly, Of man bleſſing man. Here's bleſſing on all hands, but with a difference.

First, When God bleſſeth, He effectually and irreſiſtibly conveighs a bleſſing. He whom God bleſſeth is ſurely bleſſed. He hath bleſſed (ſaid Balaam, Numb. 23. 20.) and I cannot reverſe it. The creature cannot repeal the acts of God: What he will work for good or evil none can let. Our bleſſings are at the command of God (Pſal. 133. 3.) There (that is, in and upon Sion) the Lord commanded the bleſſing. And again (Pſal. 42. 8.) The Lord will command his loving kindneſs, that is, the effects and fruits of his love to fall upon me. The Lord doth not ſtand treating about, or entreating for a bleſſing upon us; He can lay his charge or command upon it, and it obeyeth. As he is able to curſe our bleſſings (Mal. 2. 2.) ſo to bleſs the very curſes which men caſt upon us.

Dei benedicere eſt benefacere.

Secondly, Man bleſſeth God by acknowledging his bleſſedneſs, and that all our bleſſings come from him; or we are then ſaid to bleſs God, when we confeſs and declare that he hath bleſſed us. Bleſs the Lord (ſaith David, Pſal. 103. 1, 2.) O my ſoul, and all that is within me bleſs his holy Name; bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul and forget not all his benefits; that is, forget none at all of them. As often as we thankfully remember the benefits of God, we bleſs God. We cannot benefit God by bleſſing him; but we ſhould alwayes bleſs him for his benefits.

Thirdly, Man bleſſeth man, two wayes: Either firſt, When he doth conceive and repute him bleſſed, and ſo it may be underſtood here, They bleſſed me; that is, they eſteemed and reputed me bleſſed. Or ſecondly, When one man wiſheth another bleſſed, or prayeth for a bleſſing upon him, either as to his perſon, or his undertakings. In the former ſence, That woman bleſſed the Mother of Chriſt (Luke. 11. 27.) Bleſſed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which gave thee ſuck. As if ſhe had ſaid, that Woman is to be accounted bleſſed; that bare and brought thee up. In which ſence alſo Mary propheſied of her ſelf (Luke 1. 48) Henceforth all generations ſhall call me bleſſed. The Lord having beſtowed this great priviledge upon me to conceive and bring forth the Greateſt bleſſing that ever the world had, the world ſhall confeſs and eſteem me bleſſed. And thus it was propheſied of Chriſt, who is the bleſſing of all Nations (Pſal. 72. 17.) All Nations ſhall call him bleſſed; That is, they ſhall declare him bleſſed, and bleſs God for him. And thus Solomon ſpeaks of the vertuous Woman (Prov. 31. 28.) Her children ariſe up and call her bleſſed, her Husband alſo, and he praiſeth her. So here, The ear that heard me, bleſſed me; that is, all that heard me, or heard of me, judged and called me bleſſed.

But that of the Apoſtle may be objected (Heb. 7. 7.) Without all contradiction the leſs is bleſſed of the greater, &c. Where ſpeaking of Melchiſedec, who bleſſed Abraham, he ſaith, See how great a man this Melchiſedec was to whom Abraham gave tithes, &c. Abraham was a great man, yet Melchiſedec was greater, becauſe he bleſſed Abraham.

Then how can the common people be ſaid to bleſs their Soveraign Prince? How can the leſſer bleſs the greater?

I anſwer; There is a twofold giving of a bleſſing: Firſt, An authoritive giving of a bleſſing, of which that Axiome of the Apoſtle, Without all contradiction the leſs is bleſſed of the greater, is to be underſtood. Melchiſedec bleſſed Abraham, and Iſaac bleſſed Jacob, and Jacob the twelve Patriarchs, with a prophetick ſpirit, and with authority or warrant from God to aſſure them of a bleſſing.

Secondly, There is a bleſſing by way of devotion or well wiſhing; And thus without contradiction, the greater may be bleſſed of the leſs. The meaneſt ſubject may wiſh well to his Lord, and pray for his ſucceſs and proſperity. So here, They bleſſed me; that is, they wiſhed me well, or did pray for a bleſſing upon me.

The latter clauſe is of the ſame ſence, When the eye ſaw me it gave witneſs to me; That is, it gave a good report. There is a twofold witneſs-giving: Firſt, Againſt a man: Secondly, For him. Job had no witneſſes againſt him, but he had ſtore of witneſſes for him; All gave him their good word, their teſtimony. So that it is as much as to ſay, I was by the publick conſent and general vote of all reputed a juſt Governour; all agree that I had decreed and acted righteouſly towards all men. The witneſs which Chriſt received from the people was but ſuch another, though Chriſt deſerved infinitely better (Mark 7. 37.) He hath done all things well, He maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to ſpeak. Indeed Job did all things ſo well, that though he did no miracles in natural things, yet he did that which was very like the miracles of Chriſt in civils; as he ſaith (v. 13. 15.) I made the widows heart (who was even dumb with ſorrow) ſing for Joy; I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. Theſe were marvellous, if not miraculous works of Juſtice: and no wonder, when he was eyes to them that could not ſee, to hear him ſay, When the eye ſaw me, it gave witneſs to me. And therefore,

If we conſider this verſe with the cauſal Particle, which begins the next (I ſhall meddle no further with that verſe at preſent) The ear which heard me, bleſſed me, and the eye which ſaw me, gave witneſs to me; Becauſe I delivered the poor that cryed, and the fatherleſs, and him that had none to help him; If I ſay, we conſider this verſe with that cauſal Particſe, we may be ſufficiently enformed, that it was not for nothing, or without cauſe, that Job was thus bleſſed and witneſſed to by all that heard and ſaw him.

Hence Note, They that do well, eſpecially Magiſtrates that do well, ſhall probably hear well, and be reported well among their people.

Regium eſt male audire cum benè feceris.

For though it be true, To do well and hear it is kingly; and filthy Dreamers (as Jude calls them) will deſpiſe Dominion, and ſpeak evil of Dignities, let them do never ſo well. Unquiet ſpirits will quarrel and contradict whoever is uppermoſt; though, I ſay, all this be true, and (the beſt of Princes when they have done their beſt have found it ſo) yet they who do well, are in the faireſt way to hear well; and God, who hath the hearts of all men in his hand, doth uſually give righteous Magiſtrates a place in the hearts, and honour from the mouthes of all men. When the righteous are in Authority, the people rejoyce (Pro. 29. 2.) That is, they have cauſe to rejoyce, and commonly they do ſo. The Scepter of good Magiſtrates is the peoples ſtaff: while they wear the Robes of honour, the people are cloathed with garments of gladneſs. Now Garments of Gladneſs are alſo Garments of praiſe (Iſa. 61. 3.) As when mourners are comforted of God, they praiſe him; ſo they who are comforted by man, praiſe man. Magiſtrates are ſet up for the praiſe of them that do good (Rom. 13. 3.) That is, they ſhould praiſe, commend, and encourage thoſe among their ſubjects that do good, and doing ſo they give their ſubjects much cauſe of praiſing them, and of praying for a bleſſing upon them. They who are a bleſſing to the people, ſhall be bleſſed by the people. (Jer. 31. 23.) Thus ſaith the Lord of Hoſts the God of Iſrael, as yet, they ſhall uſe this ſpeech in the land of Judah, and in the Cities thereof, when I ſhall bring again their Captivity. The Lord bleſs thee O habitation of juſtice and mountain of holineſs. Whether this Prophecy was fulfilled at the return of the Jews from Babylon, or when Chriſt the Meſſias came in the fleſh, or whether it be yet to be fulfilled at that great and glorious call of the Jews to faith in Chriſt, is queſtioned among Interpreters; but 'tis out of all queſtion, that whenſoever they or any other people ſhall become, through the care and good government of their Magiſtrates, an habitation of righteouſneſs; When Courts of Juſtice are habitations of Juſtice; When Juſtice is done there as well as declared and ſpoken of there; When they who have Juſtice in their power, put it forth in their actings; Then the common cry of the people ſhall be, The Lord bleſs thee O habitation of Juſtice, &c. And it is a ſad argument, that there is a failure of Juſtice in the Magiſtrate, when inſtead of a bleſſing from the people, we hear of much complaining among the people. All the particular bleſſings which David deſired might meet in his government are gathered into this one (Pſal. 144. 14.) That there may be no complaining in our ſtreets. Some (I know) will alwayes be complaining, nothing will pleaſe them; yet when a people inſtead of bleſſing are generally complaining of and murmuring againſt their Magiſtrates, when inſtead of bleſſing and wiſhing them good, they are reviling and ſpeaking evil of them, eſpecially when inſtead of bleſſing them, they are curſing and wiſhing evil to them, theſe are ſad ſymptomes of many preſent evils, and preſages of worſe. In Job's Commonwealth, there was nothing heard but bleſſing; he bleſſed the people, and the people bleſſed him. Thus it hath been between Prince and People; And thus it ſhall be at the fulfilling of that promiſe (Iſa. 1. 26.) I will reſtore thy Judges as at the firſt, and thy Counſellors as at the beginning; afterward thou ſhalt be called the City of righteouſneſs, the faithful City.

Secondly, Obſerve, That reverence and praiſe which Magiſtrates gain by righteous and vertuous actions is honourable indeed.

The worſt of men, the worſt of Magiſtrates, have had high Encomions and Praiſes; But good Magiſtrates deſerve them. To be commended for piety and equity; To be commended becauſe we have done commendable things, is the only true commendation. Some do but borrow a bleſſing from others, and others baſely beg it. Some Magiſtrates are bleſſed only for fear, and others for hope. Of theſe latter Solomon ſpeaks (Pro. 27. 14.) He that bleſſeth his friend with a loud voyce, riſing early in the morning, it ſhall be counted a curſe to him. To bleſs our friends is ſo much our duty, that 'tis our duty to bleſs our enemies; yet there is a bleſſing of our friends which is our ſin, and may prove a curſe both to them and us. He that bleſſeth his friend with a loud voyce, when his heart is ſilent, or meaneth him no good, or ſecretly wiſheth ill to him, this hypocritical bleſſing of a friend, will be an enemy, or a curſe to him that uſeth it. Again, he that bleſſeth his friend with a loud voyce, as if he had a mind that all ſhould know it, when himſelf knows he deſerves no ſuch matter, this man doth but call aloud for a deſerved curſe upon himſelf. To bleſs thoſe who deſerve it not, deſerves a curſe. The undue honour which we give to others, is our own ſhame and diſgrace; and as it turns to the ſhame and diſgrace of the giver, ſo of thoſe to whom 'tis given; not only becauſe it hardens and fattens them in their ſin, but becauſe others know 'tis falſe, and ſee their ſhame and nakedneſs, their filth and deformity, through all the painted coverings which paraſites and flatterers put upon them. They can never receive honour from others, who have not the root of it in themſelves.

Again, Job ſetting forth his proſperity in the capacity of a Magiſtrate, brings in the peoples high eſteem of him, as the proof of it.

Whence note, Thirdly, It is a great happineſs to a Magiſtrate, when he hath the hearts and affections, the good will and the good wiſhes of his people.

When the ear that hears bleſſeth, and the eye that ſees gives witneſs to a Prince, then he is an happy Prince indeed. What is it for a Prince to command the bodies of his Subjects, while he hath no room in their affections, nor is at all intereſted in their prayers and well-wiſhes. The love of a people is the beſt treaſure and ſecurity of Princes. He cannot want their purſes while he hath their prayers; yea well-wiſhes and prayers from a good heart upon good grounds, are better then the fulleſt purſes and largeſt revenues. Who knows what the comings in of prayer may amount unto? Prayer can build and pull down; Prayer can both plant and root up. What is it that prayer cannot do, that is, prevail with God to do, when ſent up to Heaven by thoſe that are the Favourites of Heaven, and have through grace the ear of God? Whatſoever a Prince looſeth, he may comfort himſelf ſo long as he doth not looſe the prayers of the Godly; and whatſoever a Prince enjoyes, he hath no reaſon to rejoyce in it, while he looſeth their well-wiſhes and prayers. Better looſe Armies then looſe prayers; prayers may ſoon recover Armies, but Armies can never (as ſuch) recover prayer. When the Pſalmiſt would deſcribe the miſerable and deſperate condition of the enemies of the Church, in all their attempts and plots, He doth it firſt, by ſetting the prayers of the Church againſt them (Pſal. 129. 5.) Let them all be confounded and turned back that hate Sion; let them be as the graſs upon the houſe-tops, which withereth afore it groweth up, &c. Secondly, He doth it by ſhewing that they had not the leaſt breath of prayer for them (v. 8.) Neither do they which go by ſay, The bleſſing of the Lord be upon you, we bleſs you in the name of the Lord. They were ſo far from having any ſolemn dayes of prayer, or any dayes ſet apart to pray for a bleſſing upon them, that they had not ſo much as a tranſient prayer, or a good wiſh from any man that paſſed by. Not to pray our ſelves, or to be caſt out of the prayers of others, is the worſt of any mans caſe.

Laſtly, We are not to look upon theſe words as a bare narrative only of what was done. Job deſcribes matter of duty as well as matter of fact, what ſhould be, as well as what was.

Hence Note, Fourthly, It is the duty of people to pray for, and wiſh a bleſſing upon their Magiſtrates.

This the Apoſtle gives in charge (1 Tim. 2. 1, 2.) I exhort therefore, that firſt of all ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions, and giving of thanks be made for all men, for Kings, and for all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godlineſs and honeſty, &c. This he would have firſt in prayer, which ſome expound, as if the firſt prayer when the Church aſſembled together ſhould be for their Magiſtrates. But, I rather conceive the Apoſtle doth exhort to this as a thing of prime conſideration, or as that which ſhould have a principal place in all Church-Aſſemblies. As we ſhould ſeek to God for a bleſſing upon all holy and ſpiritual, ſo alſo upon Civil adminiſtrations, and upon thoſe by whom they are adminiſtred. For as his bleſſing only makes the Ordinances of his own worſhip ſweet and profitable to us, ſo alſo the Ordinances of Government. The heart of the King (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 21. 1.) is in the hand of the Lord; and the heart of the Lord is very much in the hand of his people, praying and calling upon him in faith and with uprightneſs.

Laſtly, Whereas Job ſaith, The eye which ſaw me, gave witneſs to me.

Note, It is our duty to give a good Teſtimony to all, eſpecially to Princes that are good and do good.

While the Law of God (in the ninth Commandment) forbids the bearing of falſe witneſs, it commands the bearing of a true witneſs. As to defame and caſt aſperſions upon them that deſerve well, is a great wickedneſs; ſo it is our ſin to conceal our teſtimony, or not to ſpeak well of them at all times, when called thereunto. To deny or withhold juſt praiſe, is next door to the giving of undue praiſes. To do the latter is flattery; and not to do the firſt is at leaſt a defect of charity, if not an effect of envie. It may be much beſides our duty to ſpeak evil of our Rulers when they have done evil; but not to ſpeak well of them, when they do well, is alwayes a neglect of duty. He that juſtifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the juſt, even they both are an abomination to the Lord (Pro. 17. 15.) And they who do not juſtifie the Godly, in all that they have done juſtly, cannot (as to ſuch forbearance) be accepted of the Lord. Chriſt himſelf ſaith to Pilate (John 18. 37.) To this end was I born, and for this cauſe came I into the world, that I ſhould bear witneſs unto the truth. To bear witneſs to the truths of God, is the Great end of our coming into the world; and 'tis no little one to bear witneſs to the truth of man, whether it be the truth of his opinion, or the truth of his practice. 'Tis beſt to be found doing good our ſelves; and 'tis very good to be found giving witneſs to thoſe who do ſo. Yet we muſt uſe much caution in doing it. There are few that are able to hear of the good they have done, without taking hurt. A true teſtimony may have a temptation in it. And therefore we muſt not be at this work too much, nor too openly; indeed, not at all, but in theſe two caſes. Firſt, To vindicate them when wronged. Secondly, To incite them when diſcouraged, otherwiſe, as it hath been long ſince noted, The ſafeſt and moſt friendly way is, to tell men of their faults and failings to their faces, and to report their vertues and good deeds behind their backs.

Thus we ſee what reverence and reſpect this good man had of all his people, as alſo the reaſon and ground of it, even Becauſe he delivered the poor that cryed, &c. If we conſider this whole context from the ſeventh verſe incluſively to the end of the eleventh, we have a compleat deſcription of a Magiſtrate, in all the circumſtances of his ſtate and honour in publick adminiſtrations.

Firſt, We have the ſeat of Judgment prepared for him.

Secondly, We have him paſſing through the ſtreets to it, with due equipage and attendance.

Thirdly, We have all men giving reverence to his perſon and authority. The young men modeſtly withdrawing, the aged riſing and ſtanding up.

Fourthly, We have the Princes and Nobles keeping ſilence while he ſpake and gave out his ſentence.

Fifthly, We have the people highly contented with and applauding his ſentence as juſt and righteous to all, as benign and favourable to the oppreſſed and the poor. A Magiſtrate cannot expect more honour then was given Job; nor a people more juſtice then was done by Job. Happy, thrice happy is that Prince, and as happy are that people, where there is ſuch a reciprocation of reſpect and righteouſneſs.

And indeed ſo great was this reciprocation of reſpect and righteouſneſs between Job and his people, that, I ſuppoſe, a parallel of it hath ſcarce been made or heard of in any Commonwealth. This aſſertive memorial of what was really acted by Job, and anſwered by his people, ſeems to equal, if not to exceed any ſpeculative model of government drawn out by the ſtudies of the moſt curious Profeſſors in politicks. Here's as much, if not more practiſed, then Plato's Commonwealth had in Idæa or propoſal. And that which ſome have ſaid of Zenophon's Cyrus, that ſurely it was written, rather to ſet forth the ſhape and picture of a good Prince, then as the hiſtory of a Prince, may be ſaid alſo of this narrative made by Job of his government, did not the Scripture aſſure us, that this book doth contain a certain hiſtory, and is a divine report of what was done, not a parable or ſpeculation about what ought to be done, by a juſt Prince towards his people, and by a dutiful people towards their Prince.

VERS. 12, 13, 14.

Becauſe I delivered the poor that cryed, and the fatherleſs, and him that had none to help him.

The bleſſing of him that was ready to periſh came upon me, and I cauſed the widows heart to ſing for joy.

I put on righteouſneſs, and it cloathed me; my Judgment was as a Robe and a Diadem.

IN the context of theſe three verſes, and in the three that follow, Job gives the reaſon, or ſhews cauſe why all ſorts of men gave him ſuch reverence, and had him in ſuch high eſteem, as hath been ſhewed from the precedent paſſages of this Chapter. When the ear heard me, then it bleſſed me; and when the eye ſaw me, it gave witneſs to me. Whence was all this? The reaſon was not barely, becauſe he was a great and a wealthy man, becauſe he had thouſands of Sheep, and hundreds of Oxen; Nor ſecondly, Did he by any diſſembling courteſie or courtſhip, ſteal the hearts of the people, as Abſalon by his faining and flattering ſtories, trayterouſly ſtole away the hearts of the people from David his father to himſelf; Nor thirdly, Was Job thus reverenced and eſteemed, becauſe of any undue compliance with all ſorts of people, bearing with their exorbitances, and forbearing to draw his ſword againſt Offenders; it was not becauſe he let every man do what he pleaſed, or what was good in his own eyes, that all were ſo well pleaſed with him, and wiſhed well to him. Such ſleepy Magiſtrates are ſometimes cryed up, and had in great eſteem, by thoſe who are of no eſteem.

Neither theſe, nor any like theſe were the Reaſons why Job was witneſſed to by every eye that ſaw him; but the true reaſon is laid down in the Text, it was his faithfulneſs to his truſt, or his impartial adminiſtration of Juſtice to all, in the two main parts or branches of it. Firſt, His readineſs to help the poor, and the oppreſſed; this is laid down at large from the Twelfth to the Seventeenth verſe. Secondly, His undaunted courage in oppoſing and ſuppreſſing the wicked, eſpecially ſuch as were alſo proud oppreſſors (ver. 17.) I brake the jaws of the wicked, and pulled the ſpoil out of his teeth; Here was the true reaſon why Job was honoured, he miniſtred Juſtice, and he miniſtred it impartially to the poor, in helping them; to the proud and wicked, in puniſhing them.

But it may be queſtioned whether or no Job did well, thus to cry up his Juſtice, and to proclaim his own righteouſneſs? Doth he well to ſay, this I have done, and that I have done? I have delivered the poor that cryed, and the fatherleſs, and him that hath no helper; I have put on Righteouſneſs, and cloathed me, &c. Was this comely for Job? Doth not this commendation of himſelf diſcommend him? And is it not a mans diſpraiſe to praiſe himſelf?

I anſwer, For a man to ſpread his plumes, to ſet forth his own works, to deck himſelf with what he hath done, that thereby he may appear glorious in the eyes of the world, and go away with the applauſe of men, this is not only vanity and weakneſs, but a kind of madneſs, yea this is to play the fool in earneſt; and hence in the Hebrew the ſame word ſignifies to praiſe our ſelves, and to be fooliſh; nor is there any greater argument of fooliſhneſs then ſelf-praiſe: ſurely Job had another deſign then this, he reported his good deeds, not to boaſt of them, or to blaze them abroad, and tell the world what a rare man, what a miracle of Magiſtracy, he had been. No, he was conſtrained to it in a way of ſelf-vindication, he had no itch to do it in a way of ſelf-commendation. And thus it is not only lawful but a duty for any man to ſet forth the goodneſs of his actions, when charged with evil, and to aſſert the righteouſneſs of his wayes, when he is challenged wrongfully. Scandals caſt upon a good man reach further then himſelf, they reflect upon the whole kind, even upon all good men, they reflect upon the very profeſſion of Godlineſs, yea upon God himſelf; and if ſo, then every good man is bound to the utmoſt line of truth to wipe them off, and quit himſelf from them.

And therefore, Firſt, Job ſpake what he had done, becauſe his Friends had accuſed him for doing otherwiſe. Secondly, He ſpake what he had done for truths ſake, and that God might be glorified, not for his own ſake, or that he might be applauded. Thirdly, He ſpake what he had done, that he might not be prejudiced in what he was further both to do and ſpeak. Fourthly, He ſpake of his righteous acts, not as reſting upon his own righteouſneſs, but to ſhew forth the fruits of a true faith, or that his faith had more in it then a verbal profeſſion.

So much of the general ſtate and ſcope of theſe words; now to the particulars.

Verſe 12. Becauſe I have delivered the poor that cryed.

Here we have the poor in their worſt condition, the poor crying; And here we have the Magiſtrate in his beſt condition, The Magiſtrate delivering. 'Tis a ſad hearing, though very uſual, to hear the poor cry; and 'tis a bleſſed ſight, but not very uſual, to ſee the Magiſtrate delivering; and though this text ſhews us that bleſſed ſight, the Magiſtrate delivering the poor, yet it doth not ſhew us either from whom or from what the poor were delivered. And ſo the queſtion is, Firſt, From what, Secondly, From whom Job delivered the poor? I anſwer both, firſt in general; He delivered them from evil men, and from evils of any kind. Secondly, More eſpecially he delivered them from oppreſſors, and their oppreſſions of every kind. The Septuagint render it, Becauſe I delivered the poor out of the hand of the mighty, or out of the hand of the ſtrong who did overpower, and ſo oppreſs them.

I delivered the poor that cryed.

The word ſignifieth the cry of one extreamly afflicted, earneſtly imploring aid, help, or aſſiſtance. David ſpeaking of his enemies (Pſal. 18. 41.) ſaith, They cryed, but there was none to ſave them; they cryed even to the Lord, but he anſwered them not; then did I beat them as ſmall as duſt before the wind; I did caſt them out as the dirt in the ſtreets. Such was the cry of the poor to Job, they were cruelly dealt with; The proud were ready to beat them to duſt, and to tread them under-foot as dirt. As when a fierce and greedy Lyon hath faſtned on his prey, the poor creature cryes out being ready to be torn in pieces; ſo the poor cry out for the help of Juſtice, when theſe cruel Lyons have got them into their claws. Thus David deſcribes the Oppreſſor (Pſal. 10. 8, 9, 10.) He ſitteth in the lurking places of the villages, in the ſecret places doth he murder the innocent; his eyes are privily ſet againſt the innocent: He lyeth in wait, ſecretly as a Lyon in his den: he lieth in wait to catch the poor; he doth catch the poor when he draweth him into his net: He croucheth and humbleth himſelf, that the poor may fall by his ſtrong ones, or, into his ſtrong parts. What for the power, and what for the policy of theſe Lyons, the poor can hardly eſcape their clutches; and when the poor are caught, what can they do but cry, either to God in Heaven, or to the Gods on earth for help. To be ſure, when they cry to the God of Heaven, he both can and will help them in his own time and way; as is ſaid (Pſal. 34. 6.) This poor man cryed, and the Lord heard him, and ſaved him out of all his troubles. And when they cry to the Gods on earth, Magiſtrates and Judges, they ſhould hear them and ſave them out of all their troubles; and they who (as Job) are faithful, will do it with all their might and power. I delivered the poor that cryed.

Vociferatio pauperis non tam vocis eſt, quam calamitatis.

This cry of the poor is twofold, either formal or vertual; ſometime it is formal, or an explicit cry; ſometime it is only vertual, that is, The poor mans caſe cryeth, his condition cryeth, though he ſay nothing; as it is ſaid of the blood of Abel, it cryed (Gen. 4. 10.) His blood did not cry with a formal or formed voyce, but equivalently and vertually his blood did cry and cry aloud to God. The poor mans caſe cryeth alwayes, and he often cryes out for the ſadneſs of his caſe. It is ill when the poor cry, but worſe when they are not delivered; I delivered the poor that cryed. The Lord warns his ancient people (Deut. 15. 9.) Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart, ſaying, the ſeventh year, the year of releaſe is at hand, and thy eye be evil againſt thy poor Brother, and thou giveſt him nought, and he cry unto the Lord againſt thee, and it be ſin (that is, Judgment) unto thee. When the poor cry, becauſe they are not releived in charity, the rich may ſmart for it; how much more when they cry becauſe they are not releived in Juſtice. There are three degrees of danger from the cry of the poor: Firſt, To thoſe who do not relieve them: Secondly, To thoſe who do oppreſs them; Thirdly, To thoſe who do not deliver them, when they cry, from their Oppreſſors. I delivered the poor that cryed,

And the fatherleſs.

The condition of the fatherleſs was opened (Chap. 22. 9.) therefore I will not ſtay upon it here.

And him that hath none to help him.

We have a threefold object of Job's compaſſion, and of his Juſtice; for though juſtice belongs properly to the Magiſtrate, yet a temperament of diſcreet pity is uſeful for him in his place, eſpecially for the ſpeeding of delivering Juſtice (which is exerciſed towards this threefold object in the text) Firſt, The poor: Secondly, The fatherleſs; Thirdly, Him that hath none to help him. And this laſt is the ſaddeſt caſe of the three. It is ſaid of that Great Prince, whoſoever he was, after he had made many ſpoils in the Nations (Dan. 11. 45.) yet he ſhall come to his end, and none ſhall help him; that is, though he hath many helpers, yet none ſhall be able to help him. Now as that man is in a miſerable ſtate, whom none ſhall help, though they endeavour it; ſo alſo is he who hath none, who will ſo much as try or endeavour to help him. Some are poor, who yet have many to help them; ſome are fatherleſs, yet not helpleſs. The latter of the three is both, and more then both, the former two; yet as in Scripture the poor and fatherleſs are the ſame, ſo either or both are the ſame with the helpleſs (Pſal. 10. 14.) The poor committeth himſelf to thee, thou art the helper of the fatherleſs. As Job in his Magiſtratical capacity ſtood in the place of God, ſo he acted like God towards the people. I (ſaith he) delivered the poor that cryed, the fatherleſs, and him that had none to help him. As if he had ſaid, If any complained to me of wrong, who was poor, or fatherleſs, or helpleſs, I was a friend, and father, and helper to him, I was at hand to do him right; I did not reſpect the perſons of men, but their cauſe; whoſoever wanted, deſired, and deſerved my help had it, and they moſt, who (as to the making of any return to me) could deſerve it leaſt. Job exerciſed his power eminently towards thoſe three, who were objects of his pity as well as of his Juſtice, the poor, the fatherleſs, and him that had none to help him.

But did not Job exerciſe Juſtice towards all? Did he not help the rich as well as the poor, the fatherleſs, and him that had no helper? Doubtleſs he did; but becauſe that's the ſpecial work of a Magiſtrate, and Magiſtrates are uſually backward to help the helpleſs, therefore he names them. The rich hath many friends (Pro. 14. 20.) or as the Margin reads it, Many are the lovers of the rich. Yea the rich man hath a kind of command upon Magiſtrates and Judges; But the poor (as Solomon ſaith there) is hated of his own neighbour. Therefore to be a friend to, and help the poor, the fatherleſs, and him that hath none to help him, is an unanſwerable argument of pure delight (which is alſo the delight and exerciſe of God himſelf, Jer. 9. 24.) in the exerciſe of loving kindneſs, righteouſneſs, and judgment, and that Juſtice is done for Juſtice ſake, or in love to Juſtice.

We read (Pſal. 82. which is the Magiſtrates Pſalm) what a charge is given to Magiſtrates, that theſe be taken care of and provided for. God ſtands in the Congregation of the mighty, he judgeth among the gods; how long will ye judge unjuſtly, and accept of the perſons of the wicked? (there's the reproof; then follows the direction) Defend the poor, and fatherleſs; do Juſtice to the afflicted and needy; deliver the poor and needy, rid them out of the hand of the wicked. As if the Lord had ſaid, this is your main buſineſs; when ye have a rich mans cauſe before you, ye are to do him right; but ye muſt be ſure to defend the poor; ye ought to do the former, but take heed ye leave not the latter undone. This ſhould be your great care. The poor are low in their condition, and they are often laid lower by oppreſſion; the Magiſtrate is ſet up on purpoſe, both to protect them in their low condition, and to lift them up when they are laid lower by oppreſſion. Thus the Lord Jeſus is deſcribed in the adminiſtration of his Kingly government (Pſal. 72. 12.) All Kings ſhall fall down before him, and all Nations ſhall ſerve him; for he ſhall deliver the needy when he cryeth, the poor alſo, and him that hath no helper. As the higheſt muſt ſtoop to him and obey him, ſo the loweſt are raiſed up and ſaved by him. Jeſus Chriſt, who hath all power committed to him in Heaven and Earth, lays out his power moſt of all for their help, who have neither power nor helper. When Rulers do ſo, they not only follow the rule of Chriſt, but his example, they rule as Chriſt himſelf ruleth. As it ſhall be the honour of all Believers to reign with Chriſt hereafter; ſo 'tis the duty of all who reign now to reign like Chriſt.

Again, Taking the helpleſs as diſtinct from the poor and fatherleſs, Obſerve, To help thoſe that have none to help them, is the nobleſt way of helping.

This is to help as Chriſt helpeth, and deliver as Chriſt delivereth; Chriſt Jeſus helped us when there was none to help us; He delivered us when none could deliver us; if all the Angels in Heaven had offered themſelves to help us, they could not; much leſs could any among the inferiour creatures give us help. I have laid help (ſaith God, Pſal. 89. 19.) upon one that is mighty; I have exalted one choſen out of the people. David was a mighty man, and he is there ſpoken of in the Pſalm as a type of the mighty God our Helper Jeſus Chriſt. He only had might enough to help us, when we had none to help us. And the depth of his humiliation, when he came to help us, is ſet forth by this, that he had none to help him; ſo he bemoaneth himſelf in that other Prophetical Pſalm (69. 20.) Reproach hath broken my heart, and I am full of heavineſs: and I looked for ſome to take pity, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none. Though Chriſt needed none to help him through his ſufferings for us; yet this was a great part of his ſuffering, that he was ſo far from finding any to help him, that he found none to comfort him, yea, none to pity him, which is the leaſt degree (if it may at all be called a degree) of help. As when Chriſt helped us, himſelf had no helper, ſo neither had we any: And as to help us then was an act worthy of God; ſo to help ſuch is one of the worthieſt acts of man. There are two Scriptures which (whether they be underſtood of ſpiritual and eternal deliverance by Chriſt, or of corporal and temporal deliverance) do both fully prove and clearly illuſtrate this truth. (Iſa. 59. 16.) And he ſaw that there was no man, and wondered that there was none Interceſſour (or interpoſer, that is, none who would ſtand up for truth and righteouſneſs, which were miſerably fallen in the ſtreet; none that had a heart or would put forth a hand to reform what was amiſs and ſet things right) therefore his arm brought ſalvation to him, and his righteouſneſs it ſuſtained him; that is, his own ſtrength or power, with that principle of infinite and unwearied righteouſneſs which was in him, carried him out in doing that for his people, and upon their oppreſſours, which none elſe either would or could. Again (Iſa. 63. 5.) I looked (ſaith the Lord) and there was none to help, and I wondered, that there was none to uphold; therefore mine own arm brought ſalvation unto me (but for my people) and my fury it upheld me. Thus the Lord works ſalvation when man neither can nor will, he helps when man neither can nor will. And when Magiſtrates work thus, when they deliver thoſe that have none to help them, none that either can nor will help them, then they work glorioufly, then they work like God himſelf. To help thoſe that are able to help themſelves, or have many helpers, is to act like men; but to help thoſe that have none to help, this, this is to act like God. Corrupt Magiſtrates love to have to do with the fat cattel, with thoſe that yield profit and preſent reward. Felix the Governour hoped that money ſhould have been given him of Paul that he might looſe him; wherefore he ſent for him the oftner and communed with him (Acts 24. 26.) Felix treated Paul fairly, but he had a foul hand, and a fouler heart; for when he ſaw nothing coming he left Paul bound; he had no mind to help him, becauſe he was helpleſs, only he ſhewed him ſome favour, which he looked ſhould return to him in a bribe. There are three ſorts of men, whom unrighteous Magiſtrates are very ſlow to help, how helpleſs ſoever they are. Firſt, Thoſe who deſerve nothing of them, nor have ever oblig'd them. They care not to benefit them, who have not been beneficial to them. Secondly, Thoſe who by reaſon of poverty cannot reward them, nor be beneficial to them. They have no freedom of ſpirit to do juſtice freely. Thirdly, Thoſe who cannot call them to account if they deny them juſtice. They need not fear them, therefore they care not to right them. They do juſtice only becauſe they dare not do otherwiſe; not becauſe they either love to do it, or becauſe 'tis their duty to do it. What Solomon obſerved in his time hath been experienced in all times (Eccleſ. 4. 1.) So I returned, and conſidered the oppreſſions that are done under the Sun, and behold the tears of ſuch as are oppreſſed, and there was no comforter; and on the ſide of their oppreſſours, there was power, but they had no comforter; Not a Magiſtrate that would comfort them, not a man in power would take their part; oppreſſors were ſtrong, and they were ſtrengthned; the oppreſſed were weak, and they were deſerted or left to ſhift for themſelves, to ſink or ſwim in their weakneſs. How ſad is it when they who have no power of their own, have no comfort from others? To deny comfort to thoſe who are in miſery, is more then inhumanity. When the Jews boaſted much of their ſacrifices, the Lord ſaith, To what purpoſe is the multitude of your ſacrifices unto me (Iſa. 1. 11.) while I find ſo little juſtice, ſo few acts of love and righteouſneſs one to another? and therefore he would not have them inſiſt ſo much upon their ſacrifices, but (ver. 17.) Seek Judgment, relieve the oppreſſed, judge the fatherleſs, plead for the widow. And when they cryed up their faſtings, he tells them (Iſa. 58. 6.) Is not this the faſt which I have choſen, to looſe the bands of wickedneſs, (that is, thoſe bands with which you have wickedly tyed your brethren to hard bargains or contracts) to undo the heavy burdens (by which your brethren are like to be undone) to let the oppreſſed go free, and that ye brake every yoak. This kind of mercy is better then either ſacrifices or faſts. This is at once every Magiſtrates duty and Glory, as here it was Job's; I delivered the poor that cryed, &c.

Verſe 13. The bleſſing of him that was ready to periſh came upon me.

We have here a further deſcription of the perſons whom Job delivered, even ſuch as were ready to periſh. They who have none to help them, are within a ſtep of periſhing. Firſt, To periſh, ſtrictly taken, is to be annihilated, ſo beaſts periſh. Secondly, To periſh, more largely taken, is to dye, ſo the righteous periſh (Iſa. 57. 1.) Thirdly, To periſh, moſt largely taken, is to be in any extreamly bad and low condition of life. Fourthly, To periſh, taken in the worſt ſence, is to be eternally miſerable, or to be rapt up in the pains of Eternal death, (John 2. 16.) The periſhing here may be taken in either of the two middle ſences; The bleſſing of him that was ready to periſh came upon me; that is, he who was in preſent danger to looſe his life, or to be ruin'd utterly in his eſtate and cauſe, had cauſe to bleſs me. Men are ready to periſh four wayes; Firſt, Some by their own wants and neceſſities; Secondly, Many by the unmercifulneſs of others, who hate them, and watch an opportunity to deſtroy them. Thus the Jews were ordered to make confeſſion (Deut. 26. 5.) And thou ſhalt ſpeak and ſay before thy Lord thy God, a Syrian ready to periſh was my father, and he went down into Egypt, and ſojourned there with a few, and became there a Nation great, mighty, and populous. Jacob is called a Syrian becauſe he lived twenty years as a ſervant and ſon in Syria with Laban, who was alſo the ſon of Bethuel a Syrian; and he was ready to periſh, becauſe he feared the unmercifulneſs of his brother Eſau, who had threatned to kill him (Gen. 27. 41.) and marched againſt him with four hundred men in his return from Laban. Thirdly, Not a few are ready to periſh under falſe accuſations which bring them into hazzard of life or liberty. Thus Joſeph was ready to periſh upon the unjuſt ſuggeſtions of his wanton Miſtreſs againſt him. And thus the Apoſtle Paul was often ready to periſh by the wicked inſtigations of the Jews, and he was delivered out of the mouth of the Lion (2 Tim. 4. 17.) Fourthly, Others are ready to periſh by the juſt ſentence of the Judge, being condemned for their faults and offences; of ſuch ('tis conceived) Solomon ſpeaks (Prov. 31. 6.) Give ſtrong drink to them that are ready to periſh, and wine to thoſe of a heavy heart; that is to condemned perſons, give them ſomewhat to refreſh their ſpirits, leſt they ſink under their ſorrows and ſound away. 'Tis ſome comfort to thoſe who are ready to periſh to have their hearts a little cheared before they dye; but 'tis a comfort indeed to ſave them from death, as merciful Princes ſometimes do. It is ſaid of the Emperour Theodoſius, That he once in a great ſolemnity gave pardon to all that were priſoners, adding this merciful wiſh to his work of mercy; I would I had the liberty even to raiſe the dead, and reſtore them unto life who are already periſhed. We may ſuppoſe, that Job had the bleſſing of him that was ready thus to periſh; he was ſo merciful, that he ſometimes ſpared and pardoned thoſe who were juſtly condemned for, yet repented and promiſed amendment of their faults. When Offenders are deeply humbled and engage to become new men, it may not be amiſs to mix clemency with juſtice, in ſome caſes, and give them a new life. Magiſtrates muſt not encourage any to offend, but they may ſhew mercy to ſome that have offended. And the bleſſing of thoſe that are ready to periſh, not only by their own wants, or by the unmercifulneſs and falſe accuſations of others, but even by the juſt ſentence of the Law, may come upon them, as Job found it came upon him.

At the eleventh verſe of this Chapter, Job ſaid, When the ear heard me, then it bleſſed me: Here he ſaith, The bleſſing of him that was ready to periſh came upon me. There we had the act of bleſſing, here the fruit and effect of it: There we ſaw how and in what manner man bleſſeth man, here we ſee it is no vain thing for man to bleſs man. Job had, Firſt, The good word of the people, they all ſpake well of him, and of his government. He had ſecondly, The good wiſhes of the people, they all prayed for him: And he was ſenſible of the benefit of both, a bleſſing came upon him.

Hence obſerve, They who for good cauſes are bleſſed by men, receive alſo a bleſſing from God.

As, the curſe cauſleſs ſhall not come (Prov. 26. 2.) ſo where there is cauſe for a bleſſing it ſhall come. When men curſe maliciouſly (as Shimei curſed David, 2 Sam. 16. 5.) the Lord requites good for their curſing, as David hoped that day (ver. 12.) Shimei (ſaith the text) came curſing, but the Lord was ſo far from ſaying to the curſe, come, that he commanded a bleſſing to come. How much more will the Lord ſay to the bleſſing come, when men are deſervedly bleſſed by men. A good word from a good man, upon good grounds, may prove no ſmall good to us. The Law of Moſes (Deut. 4. 13.) gave command to the lender, concerning the borrower, Thou ſhalt in any caſe deliver him the pledg again when the Sun is down, that he may ſleep in his own rayment, and bleſs thee. As if it had been ſaid, The bleſſing of the poor man may prove a greater gain to thee then his pledge could. If thou wilt but give him cauſe to bleſs thee, thou ſhalt find the effect of his bleſſing.

Secondly, Obſerve, It is a bleſſed and a bleſſing-procuring work, to help thoſe that are in a periſhing condition.

By how much the worſer and more miſerable any mans condition is, by ſo much the better and more merciful is their work who give him relief; and by ſo much the more ſinful it is not to give him relief (Prov. 24. 11, 12.) If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and thoſe that are ready to be ſlain; if thou ſayeſt, behold, we knew it not: doth not he that pondereth the heart, conſider it? and he that keepeth thy ſoul, doth not he know it? and ſhall not he render to every man according to his works? The Proverb is at once a reproof of and a threatning againſt all thoſe that ſlightly paſs over, the ſad condition of others; who ſay, They knew it not. When the poor and diſtreſſed apply themſelves for help, it is the uſual excuſe of many to ſay; We know you not, we know not your condition, whether it be thus with you or no, nor do we know how you came into this condition; nor do we know how or by what means to help you out of it; and ſo they forbear to deliver thoſe that are drawn to death, and thoſe that are ready to be ſlain, either by hunger and cold, or by cruelty and perſecution, when 'tis in the power of their hand to do it. It is not a duty to deliver every own that is drawn to death, or ready to be ſlain; but thoſe that are drawn to death wrongfully, thoſe that are ready to be ſlain unjuſtly, thoſe that are ready to periſh under oppreſſing Burthens, we ſhould be ready to deliver. And let all take heed of ſaying to ſuch, We knew it not, or we know you not; That's the anſwer of a Naball; He, when David ſent his ſervants to him for proviſion, ſent them back with this cold comfort (1 Sam. 25. 10, 11.) Who is David, and who is the Son of Jeſſe? There be many ſervants now adayes that break away every man from his Maſter; Shall I take my bread, and my water, and my fleſh, that I have killed for my ſhearers, and give it to men whom I know not whence they be? This is the churles charity, I know you not: He knows how to ſave his purſe, by pretending he doth not know. But (as it follows in Solomon's Proverb) Doth not he that pondereth the heart conſider it? And he that keepeth thy ſoul, doth not he know it? That is, Doth not God (who is the heart-ponderer, or weigher, and who hath a ballance for every thought, who is alſo the ſouls-keeper, doth not he) conſider and know the wants of ſuch a man? Doth not he know the ſorrows of his heart, and the weight of grief that preſſeth his ſoul? Doth not God alſo conſider and know, what thou haſt ſaid to put off this periſhing ſoul without affording any help? Doth not he know that this is a meer excuſe to colour thy not doing for him with thy ignorance, while the true reaſon is thy unwillingneſs to do it, and the hardneſs of thy heart? And ſeeing he knoweth whether our pretended ignorance and inability be real or no; he will (as Solomon concludes) render to every one (not according to his words, but) according to his works. It is a vain thing to plead ignorance, or not knowing before the All-knowing God, whether it be to excuſe our doing of evil, or our not doing that which is good, eſpecially our not doing this good, this bleſſed work, The deliverance of thoſe who are ready to periſh. This Magiſtrates ſhould do by their power, breaking the Jaws of the wicked (as we ſhall ſee Job did) who vex and overpower the innocent. And this inferiours ſhould do either by teſtifying or petitioning for them to the Magiſtrate. How noble and famous a work was that of Eſther, who ventured her own periſhing, to petition the King, when the Jews were ready to periſh through the malicious ſuggeſtions of Haman, (Eſt. 7. 3, 4.) If I have found favour in thy ſight, O King, and if it pleaſe the King, let my life be given me at my petition, and my people at my requeſt; for we are ſold, I and my people, to be deſtroyed, to be ſlain, and to periſh, &c. Such alſo was that act of Ebed Melech, the Ethiopian, in petitioning for the deliverance of Jeremiah the Prophet, who upon falſe accuſations was caſt into the Dungeon, and there ready to periſh; or as that good Eunuch told the King, like to dye for hunger (Jer. 38. 7, 8, 9.) How were the Children of Iſrael become (as the Lord calls them for their degenerate walkings, Amos 9. 7.) As children of the Ethiopians? How black and ſwarthy did they look, with wrath and choler, while they cauſed the holy Prophet to be caſt into the dungeon? And how like a true Iſraelite indeed in whom there is no guile, did this Ethiopian look, while in pity and compaſſion to the periſhing Prophet he obtained his releaſe from that ſtinking miery dungeon? But above all bleſſed, for ever bleſſed ſhall that work of the Lords free grace and mercy be called, who by one act ſaved millions of ſouls from an everlaſting periſhing, (John 3. 16.) God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth on him might not periſh, but have everlaſting life: Nor is the Lord forgetful to ſave poor ones from temporal periſhing (Pſal. 79. 11.) The ſighing of the priſoner comes before him, and according to the greatneſs of his power, he preſerveth thoſe that are appointed to dye.

Hæc divina potentia eſt gregatim & publicè ſervare multos autem occidere incendii at ruinæ potentia eſt. Sen. de ira.

Thirdly, Obſerve, It is the duty of thoſe that have been delivered out of a periſhing condition, to bleſs their deliverers.

It is their duty to bleſs their deliverers, both as to bleſs implyes thankfulneſs to them, and prayer for them. Deliverance from periſhing is the ſtrongeſt obligation to thankſgiving; if ever we have cauſe to bleſs any, we ſhould bleſs thoſe that keep us from periſhing. And here again we may turn to that more ſpiritual conſideration of our deliverance by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; How ſhould the bleſſing of thoſe many thouſand thouſands that were ready to periſh, come upon him every day? How ought we for ever to cry up the name of this our great Deliverer? We need not pray for a bleſſing upon him, but we ought to praiſe and magnifie him, who is above all bleſſings and praiſes. It is a high point of ingratitude not to bleſs men when we receive any good from them; much more when they either keep or pluck us out of the jaws of the greateſt evils. But 'tis a high point of impiety, not to bleſs Jeſus Chriſt, who hath at once procured us the greateſt good, and freed us from the greateſt evils. He that periſheth, looſeth all the bleſſings which belong to him in that capacity wherein he periſheth. What can he do leſs that is delivered from periſhing, then bleſs his Deliverer? The bleſſing of him that was ready to periſh came upon me.

And I cauſed the widows heart to ſing for joy.

Here's a farther evidence of Job's righteous and merciful adminiſtrations. He cauſed the widows heart to ſing for joy. But doth the heart ſing? He ſhould have ſaid, and ſo the Septuagint ſay, I cauſed the widows tongue to ſing for joy; but he ſaith the heart; becauſe as true joy ſprings from the heart, ſo that's true joy which is hearty; poſſibly there may be a ſong in the mouth, when ſorrow and ſighs are at the heart; but when the heart ſings within, there's cauſe of joy without, though there be no outward rejoycing.

Cor canere dicitur impropriè; at quando cantus oris ex corde proficiſcitur, ea eſt vera lætitia. Druſ.

When Job ſaith, I cauſed the widows heart to ſing for joy; This notes a wonderful change in the widows ſtate; The widows heart is a ſorrowful heart, ſhe ſuppreſſeth words, unleſs to expreſs her ſorrow. Now to ſee her who could ſcarce ſpeak, ſing; her who could not contain her eyes from weeping, now not able to contain her heart from rejoycing, and her tongue from ſhouting, how great a change is this! But how did he cauſe the widows heart to ſing? Firſt, He delivered her from her enemies: Secondly, He relieved her in her neceſſities; either of theſe two wayes the widows heart is cauſed to ſing for joy.

Hence Note, The widows ſtate in it ſelf is a ſorrowful ſtate.

To make the widow ſing, is to make her ſing that is furtheſt from ſinging, 'tis to make her ſing who is moſt acquainted with ſorrow; the widow is in a deſolate condition, ſhe wants her husband to comfort her. There muſt needs be great cauſe of joy when they who are in ſo much heavineſs cannot chuſe but break out in ſinging. The Apoſtle ſaith (James 5. 17.) Is any man merry, let him ſing. And the captivated Jews being urged to ſing in Babylon could only ſigh out this doleful lamentation, How ſhall we ſing the Lords ſong in a ſtrange land? The widow is brought into a ſtrange ſtate; and therefore if ſhe ſing, we may be ſure her caſe is altered though her ſtate be the ſame. Much hath been offered about the widows ſad ſtate, at the twenty-ſecond Chapter, verſe nine, and elſe where in this book, whither I refer the Reader, and proceed to the next verſe, which ſhews us Job in ſuch a habit, as might well cauſe the widows heart, yea the moſt ſilent tongue to ſing for joy.

Verſ. 14. I put on righteouſneſs, and it clothed me: my Judgment was as a Robe and a Diadem.

Leſt any ſhould ſay that Job in helping the poor, the fatherleſs, and him that had no helper, and in cauſing the widows heart to ſing, was byaſs'd with pity, or blown up with popularity; And that to get the applauſe of ſuch kind of people, he had more reſpect to their perſons, then to the rule; and laboured more to do good turns or acts of charity to the poor, then to do juſtice to all; he to prevent, or remove ſuch ſuſpicions, affirms confidently that he was guided by his judgment, not by his affections; by rules of equity, not by bowels of pity in all he did. He indeed helped the poor and helpleſs, but not meerly becauſe poor and helpleſs; he, indeed, delivered thoſe who were ready to periſh, and cauſed the widows heart to ſing; but the reaſon why he did either the one or the other, was not becauſe the one was ready to periſh, and the other a widow, but becauſe all of them had right on their ſide, and he found himſelf as much engaged in duty as in deſire to ſtand up and improve his power for them. For all the while he was about this work, He put on righteouſneſs, and it cloathed him, and his judgment was as a Robe and a Diadem.

From the connexion of this verſe with the former Obſerve, A good Magiſtrate will not relieve ſome by wrong to any.

Though he ought to ſhew compaſſion to the poor, yet he muſt not do the leaſt injuſtice for the poor. The Law of Moſes was expreſs in this (Exod. 23. 3.) Thou ſhalt not countenance a poor man in his cauſe. What? not ſhew favour to a poor man; no, not to a poor man, with wrong to Juſtice; not only is it ſinful to countenance or reſpect the perſon of a rich man, to a poor mans wrong, but to wrong the rich with reſpect to the poor is alſo exceeding ſinful: and the act is by ſo much the worſe, as the end is the better. It is a bleſſed end of our actions to help the poor, but that end muſt be compaſſed by good means; we ought not to lye for God, much leſs for man: Officious lyes are as much againſt truth and righteouſneſs, as malicious ones are. If we help a poor man becauſe poor, we muſt help him out of our own, not out of other mens purſes; we muſt not relieve any one againſt the right of another. We muſt judge according to the equity of the cauſe, not according to the poverty of the perſon. Be ſure, when you put on (as the Apoſtle exhorts the elect of God to do (Col. 5. 12.) Bowels of mercies and kindneſs, that ye put on righteouſneſs too, and then the more of them you put on, the more nobly you act, and you look the more like the elect of God, yea, the more like God himſelf, who (as the Prophet deſcribeth him, Jer. 9. 24.) when he exerciſeth loving kindneſs, doth alſo, in conjunction with it, exerciſe judgment and righteouſneſs in the earth.

I put on Righteouſneſs] What Righteouſneſs? there is a twofold Righteouſneſs: Firſt, Of our perſons: Secondly, Of our actions; we put on Chriſt by faith in juſtification as the former righteouſneſs; For he is made unto us of God wiſdom and Righteouſneſs. As many as have been baptized into Chriſt, they have (thus) put on Chriſt (Gal. 3. 37.) This is our beſt cloathing, even our wedding Garment (Iſa. 61. 10.) I will greatly rejoyce in the Lord, my ſoul ſhall be joyful in my God, for he hath cloathed me with the garment of ſalvation; he hath covered me with the robes of Righteouſneſs; as a Bridegroom decketh himſelf with ornaments, and as a Bride arrayeth her ſelf with her Jewels. Bleſſed are they who are thus cloathed, for they ſhall never be found naked. Job had put on this righteouſneſs, the righteouſneſs of his perſon by believing; but this is not the righteouſneſs here intended. Secondly, There is the Righteouſneſs of our Actions, and that, Firſt, Reſpecting God. Secondly, Reſpecting man. Piety is the former righteouſneſs, and equity is the latter. This latter is the righteouſneſs which Job in this place profeſſeth he had put on. Yet further, this righteouſneſs of our actions, conſiſting in equity towards man, may fall under a twofold conſideration. Firſt, As we are conſidered in our private ſtation, and thus every honeſt man puts on righteouſneſs in all his dealings and tranſactions with man. Let no man defraud or go beyond his brother in any matter, becauſe that the Lord is the avenger of all ſuch, ſaith the Apoſtle, (1 Theſ. 4. 6.) Secondly, There is a righteouſneſs of our actions towards men, as we are conſidered in our publick ſtation, and this is it which Job moſt diſtinctly and ſpecially means in this text. He in all his actings, as a Magiſtrate or a man in authority, ſought to do all men right. For, righteouſneſs (in the ſence now under hand) is nothing elſe but the giving of every man his right, and the protecting of every man in his right. And if any ſhould ask, when hath every man his right given and done to him? I anſwer, When, that is given and done to him, which is according to the Law. That King put the queſtion right, as to matters of righteouſneſs, who askt his wiſe men or Judges, What ſhall we do unto the Queen Vaſthi according to Law? For as the Apoſtle argues in reference to God, ſo may we much more in reference to man, Where there is no Law, there is no tranſgreſſion (Rom. 4. 15.) I may ſay alſo, where there is no Law, there is no poſſeſſion. Law and righteouſneſs are ſo neerly related, that the Latine word for righteouſneſs fetcheth its pedigree from a word in that language ſignifying Law. Such a legal procedure and ſentence Job here intendeth, when he ſaith, I put on righteouſneſs; And what did righteouſneſs for him? The next words tell us what.

Juſtitia nomen habet à Jure.

And it cloathed me.] The ſame word is rendred in the former clauſe, I put on, and, It cloathed me, in the latter. As if he had ſaid, I put on Righteouſneſs, and it put me on; we may expreſs it reciprocally, I put that on, and, that put me on; that is, Righteouſneſs and I were no ſtrangers, nor were we at a diſtance from one another; Righteouſneſs covered all my proceedings; no man could ſee any nakedneſs or defect of Juſtice (which is the Magiſtrates nakedneſs) in what I did.

Hence note, Firſt, A good Magiſtrate doth not only uſe but put on Righteouſneſs.

It is not enough to exerciſe it ſometimes, it muſt be kept on.

You will ſay, what doth it import more to put on, and be cloathed with Righteouſneſs, then to uſe or exerciſe it. I ſhall give it you in three things from the metaphor of putting on, as it refers to cloathing.

Firſt, It notes a very frequent exerciſe of Juſtice: There muſt be many acts to the making up of this habit. He that is cloathed with righteouſneſs is conſtant in doing righteous things. Every man puts on his cloaths every day; and ſo ſhould a Magiſtrate act righteouſly every day, he muſt put it on as much and as often as he doth his clothes. A Magiſtrate ſhould be as much aſhamed to be ſeen at any time without righteouſneſs, as any man would be to be ſeen naked to his skin, or without cloathing.

Secondly, It notes a liking of, a pleaſedneſs with, yea, a delighting in Righteouſneſs; A man is pleaſed with his cloaths, as with his meat. As cloathing is one of the neceſſaries, ſo a chief contentment of this life.

Thirdly, Cloathing is put or worn not upon one limb, or part of the body only, but all the body over. To be cloathed with righteouſneſs, notes a man throughout righteous; head, and heart, and hand, all are righteous; he hath the rule of righteouſneſs in his head, he hath the love of righteouſneſs in his heart, he hath the work of righteouſneſs in his hand, who is cloathed with righteouſneſs.

Hence Note, Righteouſneſs is the Magiſtrates cloathing.

It is his cloathing as to all the uſes of cloathing.

Firſt, It covers his nakedneſs, and hides his ſhame, which without this will quickly appear to all the world

Secondly, It puts a comelineſs upon him, and makes him graceful (as goodly and ſutable apparel doth any man) in the eyes of all beholders.

Thirdly, It keepes him warm and chearful, 'tis his defence (as good garments are to the body) againſt the cold and ſtorms of trouble, which he may meet with in doing his duty. This is rich cloathing, and clean cloathing, and beautiful cloathing, and durable cloathing. The benefit and comfort of it will abide and laſt for ever. How happy are thoſe Magiſtrates who are not only cloathed with this garment, but keep it from ſpotting! I (ſaith Job) put on righteouſneſs, and it cloathed me,

And my Judgement was as a Robe and a Diadem.

Juſtitia generatim verſatur in officio cuivis præſtando rectè & condignè; judicium vero eſt juſtitia verſans in diſcrimine boni & mali, juſti ac injuſti. Coc.

Some diſtinguiſh between Righteouſneſs and Judgement, and ſay, that Righteouſneſs is that by which the innocent are delivered; and Judgement is that by which the wicked are puniſhed; which two divide and comprehend the whole work of a Magiſtrate. Again, others diſtinguiſh thus; righteouſneſs is that by which the Magiſtrate gives his award or ſentence according as he finds the merit of every mans caſe. Judgment is that whereby he finds out what the merit of every mans caſe is. But we may take them for ſynonamaes, or words of the ſame ſignification.

My Judgment was as a Robe.

מעיל Pallium, genus veſtimenti reliquis ſuper indui ſolitum; à מעל prævaricatus, mentitus eſt.

The word is tranſlated a Mantle (Chap. 1. 20.) which as it is taken ſometimes for a vulgar Garment, ſo alſo for a veſt of honour, A Judges Mantle or Robe. The Root of that word ſignifieth to deal treacherouſly and falſly; and by this ſome tell us that God puts us in mind, even while we are putting on our cloaths, of the treachery and falſneſs of our hearts. Before man ſinned he was naked, yet not aſhamed; and now God hath given the beſt of garments, the Magiſtrates Robe, ſuch a name in the original tongue, as may at once lead to the root of his ſin, and mind him to be watchful againſt it. The Judges Robe which in name hath ſo neer a cognation with falſhood and prevarication, ſhould both admoniſh him of the corruption of his own heart, and arm him againſt all temptations (of which his high and great place is full) leading to or bordering upon the corrupting of Juſtice; and that, while his Robe ſpeaks prevarication from judgment, the rightneſs of his Judgment may be (as Job's was) a Robe, and which is yet more,

A Diadem] A Robe covers the body, a Diadem the head: A Diadem or Crown is the chief ornament of Princes. It was alſo the ornament of the high Prieſt (Exod. 23. 35.) The word ſignifyeth a compaſſing about, becauſe the Diadem is round, and ſits circling the Temples of the head.

Hence note, Firſt, Magiſtrates in all Ages have had their ſpecial Garments and Emblems of Honour.

צניף Cidaris, tiara, à circumvolvendo.

Robes and Diadems are not for ordinary wearing. As God hath made a difference among men, ſo he allowes a difference in mens apparel and habit. Some ſay, why ſhould Magiſtrates be in pomp? Why ſhould they wear Skarlet Robes, and Gold Chains? Is it not enough that they have Righteouſneſs for their Robe, and Judgment for their ornament? I anſwer, Robes and Diadems are but extrinſecal and circumſtantial to a Magiſtrate; yet 'tis argument enough to prove both their uſe and uſefulneſs, in that Righteouſneſs is compared to a Robe, and Judgment to a Diadem. If Magiſtrates had not uſed theſe ornaments of old, thoſe better ornaments had never been expreſſed by theſe. And as theſe are honourable additions to their office, ſo they draw reverential thoughts upon their perſons in the execution of their office. If Magiſtrates ſhould go in a vulgat garb, they would be ſlighted and neglected by the vulgar, though the wiſe would know their duty. As God hath ſet up Magiſtrates for the neceſſity of, ſo he hath ſet them out in a ſutableneſs to mankind; they are not only to govern godly men, but mankind, the world, which is mixed of good and bad, and is for the moſt part bad; and therefore they muſt have ſomewhat to take the eye, ſome outward ſplendor and Grandeur, to ſtrike aſtoniſhment. Hiſtory makes report of a very famous King, who coming to Egypt, a mighty concourſe of people flocked from all parts to ſee him, but when they found him without any ſtate, an old man in a mean habit, they went away laughing, none regarding him. 'Tis ſo with the generality of people, let a man have never ſo much true honour and power, yet if he hath not ſomewhat extraordinary to the eye and outward appearance, the common people will not regard him. Robes and Diadems, Gold Chaines and Ornaments, rule and ſubdue a great part of mankind, to a due reverence of and obedience to the Civil power.

Cum Ageſilaus in Egyptum Appulit omnes quaſi ad ſpectaculum concurrebant propter opinionē gloriæ ipſius: Sed ubi nihil ſplendoris, tantū in herba ad littus ſenem decumbere viderunt, vili habitu & parvo corpore, ridere & jocari cœperunt. Pezel. Mellif. Hiſtor. par. 1.

Secondly, Obſerve, The chief Robe and Diadem of a Magiſtrate is Juſtice and Righteouſneſs.

A Magiſtrate is a naked man till thus cloathed, and being thus cloathed, he is cloathed like God, of whom the Prophet ſaith (Iſa. 59. 17.) He put on righteouſneſs as a Breaſt-plate, and an Helmet of ſalvation upon his head; and he put on the garments of vengeance for cloathing, and was clad with zeal as a cloak. If a Magiſtrate being Roabed and Crowned thinks that's enough, he is no wiſer then a child, that plays with a rattle, or is proud of a Baby. His Robe and Diadem are no better, if he neglect righteouſneſs and Judgment. Wo be to thoſe who ſatisfie themſelves with getting on and wearing the Robe and Diadem of Magiſtracy, while they wholly caſt off the duty of it. It was ſaid of the old Monks, If they once gat on a Cowle, they thought they had enough; but as it was then ſayd among the wiſe, The Cowle doth not make a Monk; ſo, It is not a Robe or a Crown that makes a Magiſtrate. If he have theſe without Righteouſneſs, Juſtice, and Judgment, he is but a meer vanity, he is but a painted ſhadow, or a pageant of Juſtice. There are two things which make Juſtice done, the Crown and Diadem of a Judge. Firſt, when 'tis done ſpeedily. Tedious delayes in doing Juſtice are within one ſtep of doing injuſtice. How ſad is it to ſee Juſtice come as if ſhe had been ſhut up in a Priſon, and fettered in Irons, when her attendants look ſhe ſhould come to them as from a Throne (where indeed Juſtice ſits) with eaſe and freedom. It is ill to do right raſhly, and 'tis a wrong to do it delayingly. As they do a double courteſie, who do it ſpeedily; ſo they do a man double right, who do it (though deliberately, yet) quickly.

Cucullus non facit monachum.

A ſecond thing which makes Juſtice the Magiſtrates Diadem, is, when he doth it impartially. David (2 Sam. 8. 15.) reigned over all Iſrael, and executed Judgment and Juſtice to all his people; not to ſome only, not to this or that man only, His Juſtice was as large as his Dominion. See the exactneſs of Moſes Law (Deut. 19. 15.) and Solomons judgment, or rather the judgment of God (Pro. 24. 25.) To accept perſons in Judgment is not good; that is, 'tis extreamly bad, as bad as bad may be; nor do I well know which is the worſe, To deny Juſtice to all, or to give it but to ſome. Laws are made without reſpect of perſons; and then Magiſtrates do at once render a people happy, and themſelves honourable, when they are executed ſo. It is a miſerable thing when a man ſees his right in Parchment or Paper, and yet cannot come at it. It is well when a man can ſay, There's a good Law for me; but 'tis far better, when a man can ſay, There's a good Judge for me. Good Laws never made a people happy: only good Magiſtrates can. When Magiſtrates are Crowned with Juſtice, then a people are Crowned with bleſſings.

Laſtly, Conſidering that Job was not only a Magiſtrate, but the cheif Magiſtrate.

Obſerve, Cheif and ſoveraign Magiſtrates ſhould think themſelves cheifly concerned in matters of Juſtice.

Job did not put the buſineſs wholly into other hands, and take his eaſe himſelf; nor did he only ſee that others did it, or puniſh them for not doing it, but he did it, in many caſes, himſelf: And which is yet a higher commendation, he did it not only authoritatively, but conſcientiouſly. No inferiour Judge could be more careful to do right, then he who was the ſupreame Judge, and from whoſe judgment there lay no Appeal. He took no advantage to be unjuſt, becauſe none could call him to account for injuſtice. And indeed there is nothing more noble then to ſee them fear to do the meaneſt man wrong, who have no man to fear though they do it. When Abraham pleaded with God for Sodom, he was bold to ſay to him (Gen. 18. 25.) Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? Though the Lord be abſolutely the Judge of all, and can be judged of none; yet he judgeth not one unrighteouſly; and when ſoveraign Judges or Magiſtrates (who may be called alſo Judges of all the earth in their dominion) judge all as righteouſly, as if every man might implead them in caſe of any error or unrighteouſneſs in judgment, then they are Judges after the heart and way of God; And their judgment is glorioſly their Robe and their Diadem.

And as righteouſneſs and Judgment are the cloathing and Crown of the Magiſtrate, ſo of every man in his rank and place. All the Graces are the cloathing of the Saints; Put on (ſaith the Apoſtle, Col. 3. 12.) bowels of mercies, kindneſs, kindneſs, humbleneſs of mind, meekneſs, long-ſuffering. And as the Apoſtle Peter (1 Eph. 3. 3,4.) admoniſheth profeſſing women, we may admoniſh men and all; Let not your adorning be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of Gold, and of putting on of Apparel; But let it be in the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, which in the ſight of God is of great price. And again (Chap. 5. 5.) Be ye cloathed with humility. Gold and ſilver are but droſs to the leaſt graine of grace. O let grace ſparkle in your lives, that's better then to have gold and ſilver ſparkle on your garments. The Apoſtle doth not deny the uſe of theſe, but he denyes that theſe are or can be our adorning. Many are proud of their cloathing, the wicked are cloathed with pride; They have not only their beſt cloaths on, but the beſt cloaths on (however elſe cloathed) who are cloathed with righteouſneſs and humility. And all they who have put on Chriſt as their Robe and Diadem, are certainly cloathed with both theſe Graces, and with whatſoever beſides theſe is truly Graceful.

VERS. 15, 16, 17.

I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame.
I was a father to the poor, and the cauſe that I knew not I ſearched out.
And I brake the jaws of the wicked, and plucked the ſpoyl out of his teeth.

JOB ſtill proceeds to ſhew cauſe, why, as a Magiſtrate, he had ſo much reſpect from, and ſo great a place in the hearts of all the people. He hath already given ſundry inſtances, how he acted and put out that power which was put into his hand. In the former verſe we found him clearing himſelf from all by-reſpects in doing the duty of his place; it was pure love to Juſtice that moved him to do Juſtice; it was not a vain-glorious deſire to be accounted, called, or pointed at as a juſt man. He did juſtice for thoſe who could have nothing but the juſtice of their cauſe and the miſerableneſs of their condition to move him to it; The poor, the fatherleſs, the helpleſs, and ſuch as were ready to periſh.

In theſe three verſes, the fifteen, ſixteen, and ſeventeen, Job gives yet a further Exemplification, both of the perſons to whom, and of the manner how he Exerciſed Juſtice. Firſt, in ſupporting them and their cauſe who were diſtreſſed (ver. 15, 16.) I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame, &c. Secondly, in puniſhing them whoſe cauſe deſerved it (ver. 17.) I brake the jaws of the wicked, &c. Thirdly, in a careful and diligent diſcovery of all doubtful matters, as he ſpeaks at the latter end of the ſixteenth verſe, And the cauſe that I knew not, I ſearched out. What he did for the diſtreſſed, falls firſt under diſcuſſion.

Verſ. 15. I was eyes to the blind.

Non dixit, per ſervos faciebam, &c. Chryſoſt.

I, that is, I in perſon; not I, by my officers, but I my ſelf; ſo ſome of the Ancients give the Emphaſis of the text; He doth not ſay I was eyes to the blind by my overſeers and ſervants, but I looked to them my ſelf; I did not put the doing of it off to others, but I ſaw it done. And though it be a truth, that the beſt of Magiſtrates cannot do all themſelves, they muſt ſee many things by other mens eyes, and do moſt things by other mens hands: Yet a faithful Magiſtrate will not diſdain to do offices of righteouſneſs, in perſon, for his people, yea, ſo far as he is able, he delights to do it. I was eyes to the blind, that is, I was to the blind inſtead of eyes, or I gave them direction, as the eye directs the body, which way to go, and what to do, when they knew not. The light of the body is the eye (ſaith Chriſt, Matth. 6. 22.) and he that is a mans eye, is his light in darkneſs.

Further, 'tis conſiderable that the word is plural, Job doth not ſay, I was an eye, but eyes to the blind, and ſo not a foot, but feet to the lame. Which may intimate both the frequency and the fulneſs of that aſſiſtance which he gave them.

I was feet to the lame.] That is, inſtead of feet, or in the place of feet, performing that office for them in effect which feet perform for the body. The feet are, Firſt, the pillars and ſupporters of the body; upon them the body ſtands, as a houſe upon its foundation. Secondly, As the feet are the ſupporters, ſo the porters of the body, they carry the whole body, they move and remove it from place to place. The locomotive power of the body is acted by the feet. Thus Job was both a ſupporter and a porter to the lame and feeble, he bore them up and carryed them on in all their needs.

I (ſaith he) was feet to the lame. Here a queſtion muſt be anſwered (for the clearing of the whole verſe) who are meant by the blind and the lame, to whom Job was eyes and feet?

The blind and the lame may be conſidered either properly, or metaphorically. The blind and the lame in proper ſence are ſuch as want ſight, and the uſe of their legs and limbs. Some of the Ancients underſtand this Text properly, in this ſtrictneſs of the letter; and 'tis granted by all that a great part of the Magiſtrates care is to provide for the lame and the blind; to ſee that there be hoſpitals and houſes of receit for the poor, who are either blind or lame, and impotent. Fot though not ſo much the natural as the political body is the ſubject of the Magiſtrates care; yet the care of the natural bodies of men, doth redound to and reach the good of the body-politick, or whole Commonwealth, under any Princes Government and protection.

Secondly, The blind and lame in a metaphorical ſence, may be taken two wayes: Firſt, More generally for all ſuch as are deſtitute of help; a blind man wants one to guide him, and a lame man wants one to ſupport him; So the blind and the lame may ſignifie any that are in a wanting or helpleſs condition (Mic. 4. 6.) In that day, ſaith the Lord, will I aſſemble her that halteth, and her that is driven out, &c. To halt is to be lame; Now who were theſe halters? We are not to underſtand the Prophet barely of ſuch as had an Imperfection (like Mephiboſheth) in their feet, but generally all thoſe of the people of God were under that comfortable Propheſie, who were in a ſad condition, eſpecially as to their ſpirituals (for of them that Propheſie is intended, as alſo that other which runs in the ſame terms, Zeph. 3. 19.) Behold at that time I will undo all that afflict thee, aud I will ſave her that halteth, and her that is driven out; that is, her that is in a weak, troubled, ſcattered ſtate. Idol-Gods (of whom I conceive that Scripture, 2 Sam. 5. 6, 8. is beſt interpreted) are called, The blind and the lame, becauſe they are utterly unable to help and deliver either themſelves, or thoſe that truſt and call upon them with greateſt affiance and devotion. Though a man have legs good and ſtrong enough both to go and run his way (like another Aſahel) though he hath eyes as peircing and ſharp-ſighted as an Eagle, to ſee and diſcern his way, yet (in this notion) we may number him among the blind and lame. And 'tis the duty of Magiſtrates to be eyes to theſe blind, and feet to theſe lame; that is, to take care of thoſe that are diſabled by affliction to ſubſiſt and maintain their own right againſt oppoſers.

Secondly, by the blind, and the lame, we may underſtand, as the afflicted in general, ſo thoſe eſpecially who are deſtitute of help and counſel, as to ſome particular caſe brought before the Magiſtrate, though otherwiſe in a proſperous condition. They are blind who know not how to order their buſineſs; and they are lame, who are not able to carry it through. To ſuch blind ones, ſaith Job, I was eyes. As if he had ſaid, when any through ignorance of and unacquaintance with the method of legal proceedings, could not ſee their way, I adviſed and directed them. Many a man hath a juſt and a good cauſe, who yet knows not how to help himſelf, he wants an internal eye, an eye of underſtanding both to ſee what his right is, and how to get it. 'Tis the goodneſs of a Magiſtrate to ſhew ſuch the righteouſneſs of their cauſe, as 'tis his Juſtice to do them right.

Again, To ſuch lame ones ſaith Job, I was feet; As if he had ſaid, when the right of any, through poverty and want of friends to ſtand by them, was like to fall to the ground, I aſſiſted and upheld them. Many a man hath a good cauſe, but he is lame, he hath not means to ſupport and proſecute it; 'Tis the honour of a Magiſtrate to bare up ſuch, in the righteouſneſs of their cauſe, as 'tis his duty to give them their right. 'Tis the ſhame of Magiſtracy when any are foyled in a juſt cauſe, either for want of counſel or encouragement. In which reſpects, moſt eminently Job makes this profeſſion, I was eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame. For though it be not proper for a cheif Magiſtrate or a Judge to be a Solicitor or an Advocate, yet he both may and ought, in the caſe of the blind and lame in the text, to aſſign means for the ſupply of thoſe defects. I was eyes to the blind.

Hence Note, It is the duty of a Magiſtrate to appear openly for the poor and the oppreſſed, for the weak and ſimple.

He ſhould not turn them over to others, but take care of them himſelf. 'Tis the ſin of ſupream Magiſtrates to take their pleaſure, and leave buſineſs to their Officers and Miniſters: Unleſs themſelves look to the adminiſtration of Juſtice, there may ſoon be a very ill adminiſtration of it. As in common houſhold affairs, the eye of the Maſter doth the work: when the Maſter of the family ſaith only to his ſervants, do you this, and do you that, but, ſaith not come, let us do it, all will be done to halves. We have a proverb, The Maſters eye fats the horſe. And 'tis as true, The Magiſtrates eye orders the City. Unleſs Magiſtrates ſee to the doing of things, and take account of thoſe that are under them, unleſs they condeſcend to be eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, matters of Juſtice and righteouſneſs will be but lamely tranſacted.

Again, As he doth not ſay (which was noted in opening the words) I was an eye to the blind, or I was a foot to the lame, but I was eyes and feet in the Plural number; thereby implying his preſent, conſtant, and compleat helpfulneſs to thoſe that were deſtitute of help; So he doth not ſay, I was eyes to this blind man, and feet to that lame man, but indefinitely, To the blind, and to the lame, which Indefiniteneſs of the object, ſheweth the univerſality and extenſiveneſs of his care to ſee right done.

Hence note, Magiſtrates ſhould have an equal and univerſal reſpect unto and care for all that need and implore their help.

He muſt not do for one or two only, nor for all thus or thus related, but the blind, and the lame, be they who they will, muſt have his help. When Juſtice is duly adminiſtred, 'tis ſaid in Scripture, To run down as waters, and as a mighty ſtream (Amos 5. 24.) Now waters and ſtreams run not to one mans houſe, or door, but the ſtream offers it ſelf to every man, it runs down to the poor mans door as well as to the rich mans door, it runs by the meaneſt Cottage as well as by the Princely Pallace. Righteouſneſs muſt run like a ſtream; it muſt be a common, an univerſal good. And as the Magiſtrates care muſt be univerſal as to ſorts and kinds of men, he muſt be as ready to do Juſtice for the poor as for the rich; ſo his care muſt be univerſal as to individuals, or the particular perſons of any ſort of men; He muſt be eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, to all, not to this or that blind or lame man only. Juſtice it ſelf is blind, if it help not one blind man as well as another; and that s but lame Juſtice which is not feet to all the lame.

Thirdly, Obſerve, They who are in power ſhould mercifully ſupply the defects of thoſe who apply to them.

To the blind man, the Magiſtrate muſt be eyes, and to the lame man feet. One of the Ancients ſaid; Under a good Prince, or Governour, there's no ſubject lame, no ſubject blind. The Magiſtrate is an univerſal eye, and an univerſal foot. He makes up natural, and he makes up or provides a remedy for civil imperfections. His prudence, power, and authority, mingled with pity, and compaſſion, will eaſily do all theſe good things. A Magiſtrate is the head of the people, yea, he is not only the head, but he is every member to the people, he is eyes and feet to all the people, and he is a tongue to all the people. It is ſaid (Prov. 31. 8.) Open thy mouth for the dumb in the cauſe of all ſuch as are appointed to deſtruction. As others ſhould be tongues to plead, ſo he ſhould be a tongue to judge and determine righteouſly for the dumb, that is, for them who cannot ſpeak for themſelves. To do all this, and to be all theſe helps to the people, is not only the duty and the burden, but the dignity and honour of the Magiſtrate. What ſhall we ſay, when we ſee Magiſtrates inſtead of being eyes to the blind, pulling out the eyes of thoſe that ſee; inſtead of being feet to the lame, lameing thoſe that have feet; and inſtead of being tongues to the dumb who cannot ſpeak, making thoſe who would ſpeak dumb and tongueleſs. As there are merciful and releiving, ſo there are cruel and oppreſſing Magiſtrates.

Fourthly, Obſerve, Every man is that good which he doth to and procureth for another.

He that feeds the hungry is their bread, and he that cloaths the naked is their garment; he that guides the blind is their eye, and he that ſpeaks for the dumb is their tongue. The Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who procureth ſalvation, is called ſalvation to the ends of the earth (Iſa. 49. 6.) And indeed Jeſus Chriſt is all this and more then this in the text. Chriſt was eminently all this, both literally and myſtically (Math. 11. 5.) Go (ſaith he to the Meſſengers of John) and tell him, The blind receive their ſight, the lame walk, the leapers are cleanſed, the deaf hear (thus he was healing to the diſeaſed) and (which is more, he was life to the dead) the dead are raiſed up: He was all this to them in a proper ſence: And he was all this in a myſtical ſence. It had been but a ſmall matter, comparatively, to have been eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, to have cured bodily blindneſs, and lameneſs; if he had not done more; if he had not been an eye of underſtanding to the ignorant; and a foot of power to the weak; if he had not cleanſed leprous ſouls, and opened an ear in deaf hearts, as he did in the heart of Lydia, to receive the word of life. Theſe ſpiritual cures are the nobleſt cures: And theſe were long before propheſied (Iſa. 35. 5, 6.) Then the eyes of the blind ſhall be opened (that is, they ſhall perceive and underſtand the myſtery of Godlineſs, and the mercy of God revealed in the Goſpel) and the ears of the deaf unſtopped (that is, they ſhall obedientially hearken to the mind of God delivered by his Meſſengers) Then ſhall the lame man leap as an hart (that is, he ſhall walk ſtrongly, conſtantly, chearfully in the wayes of God) and the tongue of the dumb ſing (that is, they who could not ſpeak a good word, ſhall joyfully utter the prayſes of God, who hath done ſuch great things for them; the reaſon of all which miraculous ſpiritual changes is given in the next words) for in the wilderneſs ſhall waters break out, and ſtreams in the deſert. That is, the ſpirit ſhall be powred out abundantly, and thoſe waters, thoſe ſtreams ſhall have a healing vertue in them, they ſhall reſtore ſight to the blind, and hearing to the deaf, and ſtrength to the lame, and ſpeech to the dumb. By the powring out of the Spirit of Chriſt, all theſe ſoul-infirmities and deficiencies ſhall be removed. Thus Chriſt is truly in a ſpiritual ſence, all that which Job was in a Civil ſence, eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame: Chriſt is that good to us which he doth for us; he is our eyes, and he is our feet, he is our ears, he is our life, and our ſalvation.

Verſe 16. I was a father to the poor, and the cauſe that I knew not I ſearched out.

This relative word father, may be taken either properly or improperly; here 'tis to be underſtood improperly. Job was once a rich man himſelf, and the children to whom he was properly a father were rich too; but as he was a father in a figurative ſence, ſo he was a father of the poor. Whoſoever doth that to another which is the office of a natural father, either inſtructing and directing him, either watching over him, or protecting him, either aſſiſting him in his buſineſs, or ſupplying him with neceſſaries, in a word, whoſoever ſtands by another in a time of need, and is ready at any time (in righteouſneſs) to do him a good turn, may juſtly be called his father. Thus Joſeph, though a ſubject and a ſervant to Pharoah, yet ſaith (Gen. 45. 8.) God hath made me a Father to Pharoah; that is, God hath uſed me as an inſtrument of good to him and his Kingdom, in giving him advice to lay up corn againſt the years of famine, God he hath made me able to give him counſel, and him willing to receive my counſel, even as a ſon doth the counſel of a father. And when we would moſt emphatically expreſs and moſt thankfully acknowledge the good which we have received from any man, we ſay, He hath been to me as a very Father. Job was a father to the poor: In what? Take it in two things, which eminently ſet forth the relation of a father.

Firſt, He was a father to the poor in affection, he loved them, and was tender over them as a father is over his children; Job looked upon all the people that were under his government as his own children; and he had the bowels of a father to them.

Secondly, Job was a father to the poor, not only as to affection, but as to the care which he had of them, and the proviſion which he made for them. He did not only ſay to the hungry, be ye fed; and to the naked, be ye cloathed; but he helped them to thoſe things which were needful for the body (as the Apoſtle James ſpeaks, Chap. 2. 16.) either in a way of charity ſupplying their wants, or in a way of Juſtice ſetling and maintaining them in their rights. The Apoſtle gives it as a Common principle in Nature (2 Cor. 12. 14.) The children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children. And as our natural Fathers act moſt like themſelves when they lay up for their children, ſo alſo do our civil Fathers; Not that the Magiſtrate is bound to provide portions for particular perſons or families: but when they take care both by making General Laws, and by looking to the execution of them, that all under their Government may be protected in what they have, or reſtored to what is unduly taken away, or with-held from them, as alſo in all caſes of inevitable poverty, relieved and kept from ſtarving, then they may well be be ſaid, like careful parents, to lay up for their children; or to be (as Job here profeſſeth himſelf to have been in that capacity) Fathers to the poor.

Both the original words here tranſlated father, and poor, come from one and the ſame root, though upon ſeveral and diſtinct grounds. For whereas that root-word ſignifies to wiſh, or deſire; we know there are two ſorts of wiſhes or deſires; Firſt, We wiſh well to, or deſire the good and proſperity of others. So the word rendred Father, ſprings from it, becauſe fathers cannot but wiſh well to their Childred, they cannot unleſs altogether unnatural, but deſire and pray for their well-doing, and well-being. Secondly, We wiſh well to and deſire ſomewhat that is good for our ſelves; and thus the word rendred poor comes from it, becauſe the poor are much in want, and uſually much in deſiring; they have little or nothing, and therefore they deſire ſomewhat; ſome deſire more, how much ſoever they have; and they who have very little are uſually much in deſires for more. The poor are ſenſible of, and often pincht with their own wants, and, being ſo, they cannot but wiſh for enlargements. He that's hungry wiſhes heartily for good fare; and he that's naked for cloathing: They have many deſires who have but few Enjoyments; ſuch are the poor. And to ſuch poor Job was a father; that is, he wiſhed well to them, and provided well for them. The poor ſaid, O that we could be heard! O that our petition might be read and anſwered! O that our Governour would deliver us out of the hand of our Oppreſſours, who are too ſtrong for us! O that we might have right done us! and O that it might be done ſpeedily! Of ſuch wiſhes as theſe the poor are made up: You ſhall have a poor ſuitor ſtand ſighing and wiſhing all the day long at a Great mans door, O what ſhall I do? I am undone if he doth not help me; O that he would call for me; O that he would diſpatch me; I would fain be at home with my wife and children. The little buſineſs which I have to do, there ſpoils in my abſence: O that I might return, and bring good news home with me, that my cauſe hath been fully heard, that my greivances are redreſſed according to Juſtice. With ſuch joyful hearts Job ſent away the poor, elſe he could not have ſaid in truth, I was a father to the poor.

Elegans paranomaſia in voce אב pater & אביון pauper eſt utriuſque vocis radix eadem etſi diverſa ratione; אב enim pater, à voluntate & affectu paterno in liberos dictus eſt אביון inopes vel egens, quod qui multis egeat, multa velit. Merc.

Again, Conſider here, as before, the Indefiniteneſs of the language; it was not to this or that poor man that Job was a father to, but the poor in general.

Hence note, Firſt, A righteous Magiſtrate knows no difference of perſons as to his doing them right.

If there be any difference in cauſes, 'tis his wiſdome to find it out, and his Juſtice to let them know he knows it. As 'tis a groſs peice of partiality to do for the rich and not for the poor; ſo 'tis as groſs partiality not to do alike in Judgment for all the poor, whoſe caſes are alike. Job did not pick and chooſe out poor men to beſtow his help upon; He helpt them as they came, and as he ſaw the matter did require. I was a father to the poor.

Secondly, Note, Magiſtrates ſhould carry the affection of a father to all their faithful ſubjects, cheifly to the poor and afflicted.

They ſhould love and pity them, they ſhould take care and provide for their good, as if they were their children. In a well-govern'd Common-wealth there's no want of Fathers: Where there are good Magiſtrates, there are no Orphans. As God himſelf is, ſo are they, in their place, Fathers to the fatherleſs. And of right, all that want fathers, ſhould have free acceſs to the Magiſtrate, as to their common father. His watchfulneſs ſhould be as a guard upon every houſe, and his care ſhould be every mans ſecurity. Heathen Magiſtrates have owned this as their duty; 'Tis the ſhame of thoſe who profeſs themſelves Chriſtians, if they do not. And wo to thoſe Princes who look upon their ſubjects rather as their ſlaves then their Children, who are rather devourers then Fathers of their Countrey. As if their ſubjects were made only to toyl for them, and not they to provide for their ſubjects. Such Magiſtrates are the mountains and the hills, the high towers and fenced walls, with whom the Lord will contend in the day when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the earth (Iſa. 2. 19.) What will become of thoſe Magiſtrates who deſign more to oppreſs and fleece the rich, then to help and protect the poor! I (ſaith Job) was a Father to the poor.

Omnium domos illius vigilia defendit, omnium otium illius labor. Sen. de Brev. vitæ.

And the cauſe which I knew not I ſearched out.

Magiſtrates are called Gods, yet they are not omniſcient; They ſhould know much, but they cannot know all things. Many cauſes come before them which they know not to the bottom, and 'tis their duty to ſearch that they may know the bottom of every cauſe; The cauſe which I knew not (ſaith Job) I ſearched out. As if he had ſaid, When any difficult caſe was brought before me in Judgment, I was careful to inquire into it, to enform my ſelf about it, and to attain a right underſtanding of it, I ſought it out. The word ſignifies not only to ſeek, but to ſeek out, to make an exact ſearch of and ſcrutiny about thoſe things which are moſt abſtruce and remote, which lye wrapt up in the dark, or are furtheſt from our ſight. Job did not caſt an overly look upon hard cauſes, but he laboured to look through them, and to ſift them to the very bran; he took pains to find the truth; he digged for that ſpecial wiſdom, and ſearched for it as for hidden treaſures. The Great work of a Miniſter is to ſearch out the truth of Doctrines and Opinions which he knows not, and the Great buſineſs of a Magiſtrate is to ſearch out the truth of Cauſes and Actions which he knoweth not. This was Job's conſtant courſe, The cauſe which I knew not I ſearched out.

Hence note, Firſt, Magiſtrates muſt know a cauſe before they give ſentence or Judgment about it.

That the ſoul be without knowledge is not good (Prov. 19. 2.) That holy Proverb is applicable to all perſons and caſes, but eſpecially to Judges, and difficult caſes under Judgment. How ſhall they judge of that which they do not know? Ignorance is bad enough in all, but worſt in Magiſtrates and Minſtiers. We can neither teach nor determine aright further then we know. Many act wrong againſt their knowledge, but none can act rightly without it, or if they do, 'tis not in judgment, but by accident; though they hit the right, yet they do not chuſe the right. Magiſtrates muſt be blind as to perſons; but woe be to thoſe Magiſtrates that are blind as to cauſes: Blind Magiſtrates are the peſt of the Common-wealth, and blind Miniſters are the peſt of Churches. The Magiſtrate muſt be a Seer as well as the Miniſter; he muſt do nothing blindfold, nor blindly. The common picture or Embleme of Juſtice is made with covered eyes; which intimates that Juſtice muſt take no notice of perſons, let the men be who they will, Juſtice makes no matter: but Juſtice hath an Eagle-eye upon the matter. Three things are great enemies to Juſtice. Firſt, Paſſion; Secondly, Precipitancy; Thirdly, Ignorance; He that is paſſionates hath not the uſe of his knowledge; and he that is precipitant will no ſtay to make uſe of his knowledge: But he that is ignorant hath no knowledge to make uſe of, and therefore of what uſe can he be?

Secondly, Note, A Magiſtrate muſt be very diligent to get the knowledge of every cauſe which he is to give ſentence upon.

As he muſt not judge till he knows, ſo he muſt make diligent ſearch that he may know; Job doth not ſay, the cauſe that I knew not I would not judge, but I ſearched it out that I might judge it. (Deut. 13. 12, 13, 14.) If thou ſhalt hear ſay in one of thy Cities which the Lord thy God hath given thee to dwell there, ſaying, Certain men, the children of Belial are gone out from among you, and have withdrawn the Inhabitants of their City, ſaying, let us go and ſerve other gods (which we have not known) What then? Then ſhalt thou enquire, and make ſearch, and ask diligently. Here are three words: Firſt, They muſt enquire, and if upon enquiry they got not information, then they were to make ſearch; and if upon ſearch they did not find, then they were to ask diligently; that is, to renew the enquiry, that by interrogating all perſons who probably knew any thing of the cauſe, they might ſearch out the cauſe which they knew not. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 25. 2.) It is the glory of God to conceal a thing (that is, it is his glory to do many things, ſo that none can ſee fully what he is doing, much leſs how or to what end he doth them; ſuch works are ſecrets to and concealments from man; and as it is his glory to conceal ſome of his own not only good but glorious works; ſo it is his glory to conceal our evil works gratiouſly and favourably; to cover and hide the ſin of man, that is, to pardon it, is the glory of God. But the honour of a King is to ſearch out a matter; to ſearch out the myſteries of true policy to govern by them; and to ſearch out the myſteries of iniquity to redreſs them; as alſo the myſteries of every mans caſe an d cauſe depending before him, that what he knows not he may be fitted to give Judgment upon; and that as others are cunning and crafty to colour over and cloak their evil actions or deſignments, ſo he may approve himſelf wiſe to diſcover and lay them open. And as it is the honour of Kings to ſearch out the cloſe unrighteouſneſs of ſome mens matters, ſo to ſearch out the obſcured righteouſneſs of other mens matters; according to that of wiſe King Solomon (Prov. 29. 7.) The righteous conſidereth the cauſe of the poor; but the wicked regardeth not to know it. By the righteous (I ſuppoſe) Solomon chiefly meaneth, either the righteous Advocate, or the righteous Judge, both theſe conſider the cauſe of the poor; that is, as Job here ſaith, they ſearch it out. The unrighteous Advocate conſiders the poor mans Fee firſt, and then his Cauſe, and accordingly pleads it. The unrighteous Judge conſiders the poor mans Perſon firſt, and then his Cauſe, and accordingly determines it. The righteous Advocate remembers that God is his Client in the poor man, and ſo he ſearcheth his cauſe to the utmoſt, that he may plead it right; and the righteous Judge conſidereth that he judgeth for God, and therefore he ſearcheth the poor mans cauſe to the utmoſt, that he may determine it right: Whereas the wicked, whether Advocate or Judge, regardeth not to know it; yea, he is willing enough to be ignorant of it, that ſo his ignorance may be ſome excuſe to him in not doing him right, or leaſt his knowledge ſhould conſtrain him to do what is right for him. That which is ſaid of the ſinfulneſs of ſome men in general, They are willing to be ignorant that they may ſin the more freely, may be ſaid of ſome Magiſtrates, as to a particular caſe, They are willing to be ignorant of the right, that they may do wrong more freely, or be leſs ſtirred by their own conſciences to do right. Evil men will not ſearch to know that which they care not to do; but good men, eſpecially good Magiſtrates, will ſearch out the cauſe which they know not, becauſe they would be the more moved and enabled to do juſtice accordingly.

To cloſe this point, we may take notice, that cauſes are unknown and obſcure two wayes: Firſt, By reaſon of the very intrinſecal knottineſs and difficulty of them. Some mens cauſes are ſo dark a text, that they put all the wiſdom the Magiſtrate hath hard to it, to give a right interpretation of them.

Secondly, Other cauſes are obſcure, not in the nature or matter of them, but by the ſubtilty or malice of the parties intereſted and engaged in them, ſetting their wits or rather their luſts awork, to put blinds upon the buſineſs, and to make good look like evil, and evil like good: For as ſome clear Texts of Scripture are rendred cloudy and hard to be underſtood by the vanity and perverſeneſs of their ſpirits, who labour more to bring the Scripture to their ſence and opinions, then to ſubmit their opinions to the ſence of Scripture; ſo in civil matters, ſome clear caſes are rendred very cloudy and hard to be underſtood, by the tricks and jugglings either of the parties, or of their pleaders. Now whether a cauſe lye in the dark upon either of theſe conſiderations, the Judge muſt ſhew his wiſdom in ſearching it out. As the Magiſtrate muſt not judge before he knows; ſo he ſhould (according to Job's example) ſearch that he may know. The cauſe which I knew not I ſearched it out.

Eas etiam cauſas inquiſivi, quæ ad me non deferebantur. Lazat

There is a ſecond way of expounding theſe words. As implying, that Job did not only ſearch out thoſe cauſes which were brought before him; but alſo enquired abroad, to get intelligence how things went. He enquired after thoſe cauſes which were not preſented to him, nor laid before him: He ſearched out greivances, though not complained of.

Hence Note, It is the Magiſtrates duty not only to do right in thoſe cauſes which are brought before him, but he muſt inquire and inform himſelf of things that are amiſs, though not before him.

He muſt enquire who ſuffers wrong that he may right them, what's out of order that he may redreſs and reform it, as well as do right and reform diſorders when complaints are made to him. That was a very princely ſpeech which is reported of Theodorick King of the Gothes; We abhor that the poor ſhould be oppreſſed; we are informed of their ſufferings, who do not complain to us; and the knowledge of theſe grievances comes the ſooner to us, by how much the patient diſſimulation of the ſufferer labours the longer to conceal them. There is a twofold ground why a Magiſtrate ſhould thus by his ſearching out cauſes prevent complainers by the ſpeedineſs of his remedies.

Deteſtamur miſeros premi, commonemur & non querentium malis velociùſque ad nos pervenit, quòd diſſimulatio patientis abſcondit. Theodoricus apud Caſſiod.

Firſt, Some are unwilling to complain of abuſes.

Secondly, Others who are willing enough to complain, but they dare not, they are low and poor, and they ſuſpect that either they ſhall not be heard, or that they ſhall be over-powered, and poſſibly checkt for their boldneſs in appearing. There are abuſes and grievances which moſt are afraid to touch upon or meddle with when the Intereſt, whether of profit, pleaſure, or the meer will of ſome great man is concerned; O they are afraid to anger him, and make him their enemy, he may ſoon ſit on their skirts, and undo them. Hence 'tis that ſeveral evils are not made known to the Magiſtrate; and therefore he ought to ſearch out the cauſe which is not brought to him; and which all are either unwilling or afraid to complain of.

There is yet another reading of theſe words, which carrieth a very profitable ſence in it, whereas we refer it to the matter, The cauſe that I knew not I ſearched out, that refers to the man; The cauſe of him whom I knew not I ſearched out. And this leads us to another excellent vertue and ornament of thoſe who are in authority. Many Judges and Magiſtrates will take pains to do Juſtice for them whom they know, and are acquainted with, They will beſtir themſelves for friends, and ſuch as are related to them; but for a man whom they know not, they'le do but little, or they will do it very ſlowly. Job was certainly a Magiſtrate of another frame and temper, and according to this tranſlation of the Text, we have him here fully and directly expreſſing it, I was a father to the poor, and the cauſe of him that I knew not I ſearched out.

Et litem ejus quem non cognoveram ipſam perveſtigabam. Jun.

Hence Obſerve, Magiſtrates ſhould be as ready to do right to him they know not, or who is a meer ſtranger to them, as to him who is their moſt confident familiar and neareſt acquaintance.

It is the ſin and ſhame of Magiſtrates to be led by relations; a Brother, or a Couſin, or a Neighbour, or an Acquaintance ſhould be no more in a cauſe then the man whoſe face they never ſaw before, and probably ſhall never ſee again. All perſons ſhould be known alike in judgment; that is, they ſhould not be known at all (as was toucht before) only cauſes and matters, not perſons and faces ſhould be known there. Every Judge (as Levi once did, Deut. 33. 9.) ſhould ſay to his father and to his mother, I have not known him, neither ſhould he acknowledge his brethren, nor know his own children; he that is faithful will ſearch his cauſe whoſe perſon he doth not ſo much as know, as much as his whoſe perſon he doth more then know.

Verſe 17. And I brake the jaws of the wicked, and pulled the ſpoil out of his teeth.

Here's the ſecond part of the Magiſtrates duty, he encourageth the good, and ſubdues the bad. He delivers the poor, and he breaks the oppreſſour. The whole work and buſineſs of Magiſtracy lyes between theſe two, reward and puniſhment; or between being a terror to evil works, that is, to evil workers, and a praiſe to them that do good, and thoſe whoſe cauſe is good.

In the two former verſes, beſides many more before, we have conſidered Job performing the firſt part of his Magiſtratical Office, here we have him at work upon the ſecond.

I brake the jaws of the wicked.

That is, I put forth my helpful power to abate their hurtful power. I brake their Jaw-teeth, or their Grinders, thoſe teeth wherewith they were wont to grind the faces of the poor, or of any over whom they were able to prevail. By their Jaw-teeth or Grinders of the wicked, we are to underſtand whatſoever is the Inſtrument of their cruelty, or a means by which they do miſchief. We ſay (proverbially) 'Tis well, the curſt Cow hath ſhort horns; and when any puſh with their horns, and tear with their teeth, 'tis fit they ſhould be ſawn off or knockt out. Job as a Magiſtrate took order that they who had a mind to do hurt, and whoſe hearts were ſet upon miſchief, ſhould have no power in their hand to do it. Broken Jaws cannot bite; I (ſaith Job) brake the jaws of the wicked.

Molares dentes denotant omnia inſtrumenta nocendi.

And I plucked the ſpoil out of his teeth.

The Magiſtrate deals two wayes with wicked men; ſometimes he breaks their Jaws that they cannot take the ſpoil; and ſometimes he plucks the ſpoil which they have taken out of their teeth. If they are not diſabled from ſpoiling by the former act, they muſt be ſpoiled of their ſpoil by the latter. When upon David's offer to accept the challenge of Goliah, Saul ſaid to him (1 Sam. 17.33.) Thou art not able to go againſt this Philiſtine to fight with him, for thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth. David replyed (ver. 34, 35.) Thy ſervant kept his Fathers Sheep, and there came a Lion and a Bear and took a Lamb out of the flock. And I went out after him and ſmote him, and delivered it out of his mouth: and when he aroſe againſt me, I caught him by his beard, and ſmote him, and ſlew him. Thus when Lion-like men, even beaſts in the ſhape of men prey upon men, and make ſpoil of them, then comes the good Magiſtrate, like David, and takes the ſpoil out of their teeth. Tyrannical Magiſtrates devour and ſwallow the innocent as a Lion doth a Lamb. Paul was in the mouth of, and almoſt ſwallowed by that Lion Nero, but he was delivered out of his mouth by the Power of Chriſt the true David. Juſt and merciful Magiſtrates will pluck the innocent Lambs out of the mouth of the Lion, and pluck the ſpoil from their teeth. In one of theſe two wayes the wicked muſt be dealt with, either their teeth muſt be broken, or the ſpoil muſt be pulled out of their teeth; elſe they make havock of all, and there's no living by them without danger either of life or livelihood.

Hence Note, Firſt, Wicked men are like wild beaſts ravening for their prey.

There had been no need to pluck the prey out of their teeth, if they, like Wolves or Lions, had not got the prey between their teeth. The wicked are often deſcribed in Scripture acting like beaſts, and the aid of God prayed againſt them in that notion (Pſal. 3.7.) Ariſe, O Lord, and ſave me; for thou haſt ſmitten all mine Enemies upon the cheek-bone; thou haſt broken the teeth of the ungodly. Again (Pſal. 58.6.) Break their teeth, O God, in their mouth; break out the great teeth of the young Lions, O Lord; that is, take away, O Lord, all their deſtroying ſtrengths, whoſe ſtrength is to deſtroy. The Lord by his Prophet awakens the drunkards with this ſad Alarm (Joel 1.6.) For (ſaith he) a Nation is come up upon my Land, ſtrong and without number, whoſe teeth are the teeth of the Lion, and he hath the cheek-teeth of a great Lion; that is, the enemies are fierce and cruel in their nature, and they have dreadful means and wayes of exerciſing their cruelty. The fourth Beaſt in Daniel's Viſion, which was dreadful and terrible, and ſtrong exceedingly, had great iron teeth (Dan. 7.7.) This Beaſt is deſcribed, firſt, having teeth; ſecondly, great teeth; thirdly, iron teeth; and all to ſhew what ſpoil that Beaſt ſhould make, both among the Nations and in the Church of God. The greateſt Powers and Princes of the World have acted like Beaſts; and the beſt Princes of the World have had many Beaſts in their Dominions againſt and upon whom to act their power.

Hence Obſerve, Secondly, It is the Magiſtrates duty to break and puniſh the wicked, as well as to protect and relieve the good.

Wounding work is a duty as well as healing work. They who have teeth like beaſts, muſt be dealt with like bruit beaſts, who are made to be taken and deſtroyed (2 Pet. 2.12.) The Apoſtle Paul deſcibing the power of Magiſtrates ſaith (Rom. 13. 3,4.) Rulers are a terror to evil works (that is, they ought to be ſo by vertue of their office) and thereupon he infers, If thou doſt that which is evil be afraid, for he beareth not the Sword in vain. The Rulers Sword is no ſcare-crow, nor is his a wooden Dagger. He ſheweth the Sword which he beareth; and a viſible Sword as the Emblem of his Office is uſually born before him; but 'tis not born for a ſhew. He muſt ſtrike with it as well as ſhew it, and make thoſe feel it, who are not awed with the ſight of it.

Thirdly, As Job ſaid at the fifteenth verſe, I was eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame; that is, I was alike helpful to all who needed my help; ſo here he ſaith, I brake the jaws of the wicked; that is, of all the wicked.

Whence Note, Juſtice is impartial in puniſhing as well as in relieving.

If men be wicked, be they who they will, rich or poor, high or low, be they near in relation, or be they far off, a Magiſtrate ſhould ſay in that caſe (as the Lord did concerning Coniah, Jer. 22.24.) Though ye were as the Signet on my right hand, yet will I pluck you thence: Or as Saul (1 Sam. 14.39.) Though it be in Jonathan my Son, he ſhall ſurely dye. As the day of the Lord is againſt the high hills, and againſt the mountains; that is, againſt the greateſt of the wicked; ſo ſhould the day of man be too. Juſtice muſt puniſh a ſin in ſcarlet, as well as a ſin in ruſſet; a ſin in robes, as well as a ſin in rags. As death goes with an equal foot, and knocks at the door of Princes, as well as at the Cottages of the poor; ſo muſt Juſtice, it muſt break the teeth of the wicked, whether they dwell in a Cottage, or in a Pallace, that's all one to Juſtice. When Job found any who were wicked and had done wickedly, he never demurr'd upon the matter, nor conferr'd with fleſh and blood, but did his duty, He brake their jaws, and plucked the ſpoil out of his teeth.

But what did Job with the ſpoil when he had plucked it out of the teeth of the wicked? Did he put it in his own pocket? Surely no, but he reſtored it to the grieved and oppreſſed party. What is wrongfully taken away, Juſtice returns to the perſons wronged. As Juſtice will not ſuffer the wicked to go away with the ſpoil of the innocent; ſo Juſtice will not go away with the ſpoil, but cauſeth the ſpoiler to refund it to the uſe of the ſpoiled. Magiſtrates muſt be careful of the ſpoil; when they pluck it out of the teeth of the wicked, they muſt not put it into their own coffers. They that do ſo, deſerve rather to be called wicked Broakers, then Breakers of the wicked. Such as theſe take vengeance for their own advantage, not for theirs who are wronged, and ſerve their own bellyes rather then the Commonwealth, whoſe ſervants they are.

From the whole verſe take theſe three Notes.

Firſt, Wicked men will never give back the ſpoil, or ſatisfie thoſe whom they have wronged till they are forced to it.

They do not reſtore in a way of repentance, but as beaſts do in a way of compulſion; they are made to reſtore, they have no mind to it. They hold faſt deceit (as the Prophet ſpeaks of the oppreſſing Jews, (Jer 8. 5.) that is, the things which they have deceitfully gotten and plucked away from others, till it be pluckt out of their teeth: They never chuſe to reſtore, but only reſtore when they cannot chuſe: 'Tis an act of violence upon them, though an act of Juſtice in the Magiſtrate.

Secondly, See how hard a task the Magiſtrate hath, who as he hath to deal with men, ſo alſo with beaſts in men, with Lions and with Bears in men, who having taken the prey, would make him a prey too if they could. I have fought with beaſts at Epheſus (ſaith Paul, 1 Cor. 15. 32.) that is, with men made up of inhumanity; and ſo muſt the Magiſtrate too, he muſt fight with beaſts, ſuch as would tear and rend him when he comes to take the prey out of their teeth, even as a hungry Lion would tear the man that comes to recover the prey out of his teeth. David at once ſhews of what ſpirit the wicked are, and how dangerous it is to deal with them (2 Sam. 23. 6.) The ſons of Belial ſhall be all of them as thorns thruſt away, becauſe they cannot be taken with hands; no man can meddle with thorns with his bare hand, they'le prick and ſcratch him; But the man that ſhall touch them muſt be fenced with iron, and the ſtaffe of a ſpear. Theſe ſons of Belial, who cannot abide to bear the yoak of Gods government, no nor the yoak of mans, are to their very Governours, as well as to their fellow-Citizens, like grieving thorns; and were they not fenced with iron, and the ſtaffe of a ſpear, that is, had they not an outward force and ſtrength as well as an authority, they could not handle them as they deſerve, and as in Juſtice they ought. When the Lord would ſhew Ezekiel what a hard and hot ſervice he was like to have of it, he thus encourageth him (Chap. 2. 6.) Thou ſon of man be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briers and thorns be with thee, and thou doſt dwell among Scorpions. Both Miniſters and Magiſtrates muſt expect to meet not only with thorns that will ſcratch them, and with beaſts that will tear them with their teeth, or puſh and gore them with their horns, but even with Scorpions, who would ſting and poyſon them to death. It was the ſaying of the Emperour Tiberius (who was himſelf a beaſtly Governour) to ſome who applauded his happineſs in having attained the Government of ſo great an Empire; O (ſaid he) you do not know what a beaſt the Empire is, how unruly and untoward, how head-ſtrong and hard to be governed. As Magiſtrates need much wiſdom, ſkill, and juſtice, ſo likewiſe much patience to bear the burden, and much courage to encounter the difficulties of their place. David who had ſo much valour in the field, that he did not think Goliah (who made a whole Army of Iſraelites tremble) too hard for him alone; yet was once heard to ſay (when Juſtice call'd aloud to him for revenge) Theſe men the ſons of Zerviah be too hard for me (2 Sam. 3. 39.) Job was a man of ſpirit as well as a man of Integrity, elſe theſe Lions had been too hard for him, nor had he ever pluckt the ſpoil out of their teeth.

Neſcitis quanta bellua ſit imperium; Dictum Tiberii. Apud Suet.

Laſtly, We ſee what a man Job was while he was in Power, with what a ſweet mixture of juſtice and meekneſs, of moderation and magnanimity, of compaſſion towards the poor, and reſolution againſt the moſt potent Oppreſſours, he ſteered the whole courſe of his Government.

Hence Obſerve, He that being raiſed to honour and high place, uſeth his power well, and perſeveres in his integrity, is a man of men, he is indeed a man taught of God.

Job was lifted up in the world, but his heart was not lifted up; He held the height of the Hill (as the Prophet ſpeaks of Edom, Jer. 49. 16.) but he was neither highminded, nor earthly minded. His power was great, and he uſed it for the beſt: Men uſually change to the worſe in manners, when to the better in honours. Among all the Roman Emperours, there was but one of whom it was ſaid, that when he got the Throne he was a better man. Among all the Kings of Iſrael there was not one good: And among the Kings of Judah there were many, yea, the moſt of them very bad. There is a great temptation in worldly greatneſs. And how weak do many grow in morals and ſpirituals, when they are ſtrong in civils and temporals! It is ſaid of Uzziah King of Judah (2 Chron. 26. 15, 16.) That he was marvellouſly helped till he was ſtrong. But by whom was he helped? The ſeventh verſe of that Chapter tells us, that he was helped by God himſelf, and he helped him marvellouſly, till he was marvellous ſtrong; and then ſee his marvellous weakneſs (for as it follows) When he was ſtrong his heart was lifted up to his deſtruction, for he tranſgreſſed againſt the Lord his God, and went into the Temple of the Lord to burn incenſe upon the Altar of incenſe. O what a weakneſs, yea, what a wickedneſs was that! And as that Prince ſhewed his weakneſs when he was ſtrong in medling with that which did not at all belong to his Office, or by uſurping the Prieſts Office; ſo have many others, either by neglecting of, or acting contrary to that which belongeth to their office. And whether the Powers and Princes of the World fail by doing what they ſhould not, or by not doing what they ſhould, their weakneſs is much alike. And we may ſay to any ſuch Prince (as the Lord God ſaid to the whole body of his people as one man, Ezek. 16. 30.) How weak is thine heart, ſeeing thou doſt all theſe things (not the work of a Princely man, or of a juſt and righteous Prince over men) but of an imperious whoriſh woman. 'Tis a very hard thing to mannage power well, to have power and not be overpowered with it.

Honores mutant mores.
De uno Tuo legitur, quod adepto imperio melior evaſerit.

How rarely do Princes pattern Job in delivering the oppreſſed, in being Eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, in being a father to the poor, and in breaking the jaws of the wicked. When men are once mounted high, and have aſcended to the Throne, they quickly diſcover either their luſts and vices, or their graces and vertues; they quickly tell the world either how good or how bad they are. None can appear either ſo good or ſo bad as they would be, while they want an opportunity; and of all opportunities to appear either way, Greatneſs is the greateſt. Magiſtracy ſhould alwayes be a ſhadow to others; yet 'tis never a ſhadow (in this ſence) to the Magiſtrate, but ſets him in the open Sun, and makes him ſhew himſelf of what make and ſpirit he is.

VERS. 18, 19, 20.

Then I ſaid, I ſhall dye in my neſt, and I ſhall multiply my dayes as the ſand.
My root was ſpread out by the waters, and the dew lay all night upon my branch.
My glory was freſh in me, and my bow was renewed in mine hand.

JOB being veſted with much Power and Authority and being ſo much affected by and applauded of all ſorts of men, even by men of Power and Authority (as hath been ſhewed in the former context, from the ſeventh to the ſeventeenth verſe incluſively, matters ſtanding, I ſay, thus fairly with him) he began to perſwade, or aſſure himſelf, that this mountain of his outward proſperity ſhould not be removed, or that he ſhould live long happily, and at laſt dye peaceably: This was ſtrongly ſet upon his ſpirit; and that's the ſum of the words now under diſcuſſion. That ſuch was his perſwaſion is clear and expreſs.

Verſe 18. Then I ſaid, I ſhall dye in my neſt, and I ſhall multiply my dayes as the ſand.

And to ſhew that this was no fancy nor irrational perſwaſion, he gives us the grounds and reaſons of it; which he both propoſeth and illuſtrateth by a twofold ſimilitude.

Firſt, By the ſimilitude of a Tree (in the nineteenth and part of the twentieth verſe, My root was ſpread out by the waters, and the dew lay all night upon my branch. My glory was freſh in me.

Secondly, By the ſimilitude of a bow, in the cloſe of the twentieth verſe; My bow was renewed in mine hand. As if he had ſaid, I had good grounds to hope that my good eſtate would continue, becauſe it was ſo well ſet, it had a root; and becauſe it did flouriſh ſo well, it had goodly branches, and theſe ſo far from withering that they were alwayes ſpringing, or I had a perpetual ſpring; my glory was freſh in me, and as my glory was freſh, ſo it was firm; my ſtrength was as a Bow in the hand of a mighty man which is renewed in his hand.

UMI

Then, I ſaid.

The word, then, is a word of relation, and it refers not only to the time or ſeaſon when Job ſpake this, which was the day of his fulneſs and flouriſhing condition, when all was green and beautiful about him; but, Then, refers alſo to the grounds and reaſons of his confidence laid down as was ſhewed in the two following verſes; Then, I ſaid,

It was not a ſlight ſay-ſo, but when he ſaith (I ſaid) his meaning is, I was perſwaded, or fully ſetled in my thoughts about this point, I did not take up a ſudden tranſcient opinion, but my judgment was convinced that it would be ſo; I believed, and I had reaſon to believe, that my eſtate ſhould not have ſuffered ſuch a change as now it hath.

Then, I ſaid.] To ſay, in Scripture ſence, is to be reſolved; ſo was David (if ever any man was) when he ſaid (Pſal. 39. 1.) I will take heed to my wayes; that is, I ſet this down with my ſelf, it was as a decree upon my heart, that my tongue ſhould not offend. And as he reſolved to keep his tongue from offending, ſo to employ his tongue in the bewailing of his offences (Pſal. 32. 5.) I ſaid I will confeſs my ſin; that is, I took up a full purpoſe to make a repentant confeſſion, and then thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin. David did not ſay it in a fit of extremity, or in a good mood, he did not ſay, as many ſay, from the teeth outward, we will repent and turn from our evil wayes, but he ſaid it from his heart, and was haſtning to the performance of it. The word is uſed (in the ſame ſence) by the Lord himſelf (Deut. 32. 26.) I ſaid I would ſcatter them into corners, and make the remembrance of them to ceaſe from among men, were it not that I feared the wrath of the Enemy. I ſaid; that is, I reſolved to ſcatter this ſinful and rebellious people, but that I was afraid of the wrath of the Enemy; not of the power of the Enemy againſt me, but of their wrath againſt my people, that they would ſhew them no mercy, and that they would blaſpheme my Name, and attribute all to themſelves. I ſaid I would ſcatter them, and they gave me too much cauſe to do it; but for this cauſe I forbear to do it. Once more, David ſpake thus (in Job's caſe, Pſal. 30. 6.) And in my proſperity I ſaid, I ſhall never be moved; my confidence was ſtrong that my condition was paſt danger of removal. In this ſtrength of confidence Job ſaid,

I ſhall dye in my neſt.

Moriar naturali morte, ex defectu virium ob ſenectutem. Piſc.

גוע Leniter expirare vel facile mori.

To dye is at once to depart out of the body and out of this world; death is the ſeparation of the ſoul from the body, and of both from worldly relations and enjoyments. Here the word tranſlated to dye, notes a ſweet death, an eaſie death: I ſhall breath out my laſt, and give up the ghoſt freely, I ſhall go out as a lamp whoſe oyl is ſpent and waſted by degrees, I ſhall not be blown out, nor tortured to death with painful and pining ſickneſſes: I ſhall not dye of any diſeaſe but old age; and when old age is the diſeaſe, there's no cure for it but death. As all this is intimated in the Hebrew word rendred to dye, ſo 'tis expreſſed in the next words, I ſhall dye

In my neſt.] Where's that? The birds neſt is her whole houſe; and a mans whole houſe is his neſt; yet mans neſt, in ſtrictneſs, is only that one piece of his houſe-furniture, his bed. And ſo, I ſhall dye in my neſt, is, I ſhall dye quietly at home in my bed, not in battel, nor in a ſtrange land: I ſhall not dye as a tyrant or oppreſſor of my people by a violent hand, but (as good old Jacob with his twelve Sons about his bed, ſo ſhall I) with my Wife and Children about me, to mourn over me and cloſe mine eyes. Or more largely, I ſhall dye in my neſt, is, I ſhall dye in a good condition. A neſt imports two things: Firſt, Warmth, or a fence againſt the cold. Secondly, ſafety, or a fence againſt danger. Neſts are builded cloſe, and ſo they are warm; and they are built, either on high, or out of the way in ſome ſecret place, and ſo they are ſafe (Hab. 2. 9.) Woe unto him that coveteth an evil covetouſneſs to his houſe, that he may ſet his neſt on high, that he may be delivered from the power of evil. Great perſons (ſuch as Job was) build high Palaces, and they build in high places. But how low ſoever their Palaces are, either as to the ſituation or ſtructure of them, yet their ſtate is high built, and they ſet their neſt on high, ſo high above other men, that they often preſume no power of man can reach them; yet then they are alike in the reach of God, and he can quickly bring them and their neſt not only into the hand, but under the foot of man. Thus the Lord rebukes the preſumptuous ſecurity of Edom in the third and fourth verſes of the Propheſie of Obadiah; The pride of thy heart hath deceived thee, thou that dwelleſt in the clefts of the rock, whoſe habitation is high, that ſaith in his heart, Who ſhall bring me down to the ground? Though thou exalt thy ſelf as the Eagle, and ſet thy neſt among the Stars; that is, though thou putteſt thy ſelf into the ſafeſt place, and thinkeſt thy neſt to be as much above any earthly annoyance as the Stars of heaven; yet thence will I bring thee down. So then, when Job hoped to dye in his neſt, he hoped to dye in a high and ſafe condition, in alluſion to birds, who dye in their neſts. Some Birds are ſhot, and ſome are taken and enſnared by the Fowler; others are devoured by Birds of prey; the Kite, the Hawk, or the Vulture catches them: But many Birds dye in their neſt, and Job hoped, yea was much perſwaded he ſhould dye like one of them. Then I ſaid I ſhall dye in my neſt.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, A godly man thinks of dying while he is in the greateſt proſperity of living.

Job had great hope to dye in his neſt, but he had no hope nor thought but to dye; That's a great truth though Apocryphal Scripture (Eccl. 41. 1.) O death, How bitter is the remembrance of thee to a man that is at reſt in his poſſeſſions, unto the man that hath nothing to vex him, and that hath proſperity in all things; yea unto him that yet is able to receive meat. 'Tis a kind of death to a worldly man at reſt in his poſſeſſions to think of dying; he hath no content but to think of building, and taking pleaſure in his neſt, he is a ſtranger to thoughts of dying in his neſt. But to a godly man the remembrance of death is ſweet, even while he is at reſt in his poſſeſſions; He is willing to meditate of death, or actually to dye, not only when he ſcarce knows how to live, but when he hath abundance of the things of this life about him. Some who have had as much for this life as they could, have, even then, deſired (if God ſaw it good) to depart out of this life. And every godly man (out of the caſe of temptation) can chearefully think and ſpeak of death, yea and obediently ſubmit to the call of God to dye, when he hath the fulleſt and freeſt enjoyments of this life.

Secondly, Job deſcribing his preſent bleſſings reckons this as a bleſſing in expectation, I ſhall dye in my neſt.

Hence Note, to dye in peace is a deſirable mercy.

To dye in ſpiritual peace, or in the aſſurance of eternal ſalvation is beſt (as old Simeon ſaid, Luke 2. 29.) Lord now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace according to thy word; for mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation; this, I ſay, is beſt) but to dye in temporal peace is very good. Such was the promiſe made to Joſiah (2 King. 22. 20.) Behold therefore I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou ſhalt be gathered unto thy grave in peace, and thine eyes ſhall not ſee all the evil, which I will bring upon this place. And though, as the ſacred hiſtory relates (2 Kings 23. 29.) Joſiah dyed in War, yet that promiſe was performed to him; for, Firſt, It was a war of his own ſeeking, God did not ſend a war upon him. Secondly, It was in a war abroad, not in his own Countrey, he having without any provocation interpoſed in a quarrel, that concern'd him not. So that, as he went to the grave with peace in his own conſcience (notwithſtanding that raſh attempt) ſo the Lord gave him no trouble in his own borders, which was his promiſe. David gave two very dreadful (though juſt advices) upon his death bed to Solomon his Son and ſucceſſour: The one concerning Joab (1 Kings 2. 6.) Let not his hoar-head go down to the grave in peace; the other concerning Shimei, at the ninth verſe of the ſame Chapter, His hoar-head bring thou down to the grave with blood. Neither of theſe obtained the mercy which Job expected and at laſt attained, to dye in their neſt.

Thirdly, Obſerve, Good men ſometimes grow up to a great hight of Confidence about their earthly felicity.

Job ſaid, I ſhall dye in my neſt; he preſumed his worldly proſperity would continue long, even as long as he continued in this world. As he had no deſire to live alwayes in the comforts of this world; ſo he did believe, that his worldly comforts would out-live him, and that he ſhould dye in a warm neſt, whenſoever he dyed.

But was not this a ſinful confidence?

I anſwer, there is a ſence wherein ſuch a confidence is not ſinful; and there is a ſence wherein 'tis very ſinful; it is not ſinful in it ſelf for a godly man to be confident that his proſperity ſhall continue. For if he may ariſe to a Confidence that he ſhall be ſafe in the midſt of dangers, that he ſhall dye in his neſt, even when he is in the Jaws or ſnares of death, mnch more may he have this confidence when all's peace with him, and no appearance of danger near him. David was confident of his own ſafety, though in the midſt and mouth of danger (Pſal. 3. 5, 6.) I laid me down and ſlept, I awaked, for the Lord ſuſtained mee; I will not be afraid of ten thouſand that ſet themſelves againſt me round about: Ariſe, O Lord, ſave me, O my God. David's faith ſpake this, not his preſumption. That man knows he is alwayes ſafe who hath God near him. One is a match not only for two, but ten thouſand enemies, if God be his friend. David ſpake at the ſame rate of confidence again (Pſal. 27. 1.) The Lord is my light and my ſalvation, whom ſhall I fear? The Lord is the ſtrength of my life, of whom ſhall I be afraid? He puts the Queſtion twice to put the matter out of Queſtion; Whom ſhall I fear? Of whom ſhall I be afraid? Let me ſee the man, let me ſee the Devil that can make me afraid; I fear no power, no not the powers of darkneſs, while the Lord is my light; I fear not deſtruction it ſelf, while the Lord is my ſalvation. And he holds out not only his own ſingle aſſurance, but the aſſurance of all the people of God (Pſal. 46. 1, 2.) God is our refuge and ſtrength, a very preſent help in trouble; therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed; and though the mountains be carried into the midſt of tht Sea. Now if a godly man may arrive at a confidence to out-live all the dangers and deaths that are about him, why may not he alſo have confidence that his proſperity and comforts ſhall out-live him, or that he ſhall dye in the midſt of his proſperity and comforts? It is a great part of the happineſs of our lives to have a confidence, or quietneſs of ſpirit, about the things of this life: Nor is any thing more uncomely for, or more uncomfortable to a Saint, then diſtruſtful thoughts and fears. To carry a troubled mind and a trembling frame of ſpirit about us, leſt ſome evil ſhould befal us, is more grievous then the preſent ſuffering of evil. Diſtruſt is one of the worſt diſeaſes or ſickneſſes of the mind. Philoſophers have highly commended chearfulneſs of ſpirit, or (as we ſpeak) to be of good chear. It is all one to him whether it be well or ill with him, who is alwayes in fear of, or ſuſpecting evil. To be afraid when we are ſafe, is as bad as to be in danger. To hang in doubt about temporals, is moſt unſutable to them (to Believers I mean) who may be aſſured of eternals. What can a Believer ſay more unlike himſelf then this; I have enough now, but I may have nothing to morrow; this year it is well with me, but the next I fear will be diſaſtrous to me and mine. It is a duty as well as a priviledge and a mercy to have the heart fixed about things that are ſubject to change every day: And to be anxious about our earthly enjoyments, is as bad as to truſt upon them. As our hopes ſhould be above the creature, ſo likewiſe ſhould our fears be. Only they live upon good terms in the world, who have neither troubleſome cares about what they ſhall get, nor troubleſome fears about what they may looſe to morrow: Let to morrow care for it ſelf, and let to morrow fear for it ſelf, ſufficient unto the day is the evil of it when it comes, we need not take it up aforehand or before it comes. And therefore Job might ſpeak as a good and ſpiritually wiſe man may and ought, when he ſaid, I ſhall dye in my neſt. And we may conſider a three-fold ground (as of Job's, ſo) of any godly mans Confidence, that he ſhall dye in his neſt, or live and dye comfortably.

Firſt, The Experience which he hath had of the former goodneſs of God to him in outward things, may aſſure him much that he ſhall yet praiſe God for the continuance of the ſame goodneſs. Experience worketh hope (Rom. 5. 4.) and as hope is not aſhamed, ſo it will not let us be troubled about any thing, becauſe the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt.

Secondly, The Teſtimony which a Godly man hath in his own Conſcience, that he hath not lifted himſelf up by unrighteouſneſs, nor built his own neſt by pulling down the neſts of other men, may be a ground of confidence that he ſhall dye in his neſt. Job's Conſcience told him that he had not raiſed his eſtate upon his neighbours ruines; that he had not torn his portion out of the bellyes of the poor; that he had not emptyed any man to fill himſelf, nor did he feaſt upon their ſtarvings. He that hath ſuch a Conſcience may have much confidence, that he ſhall dye in his neſt.

Thirdly, A Godly man may have this confidence with reſpect to the expreſs promiſes made to ſuch of outward proſperity. The Scripture is ſtored with ſuch promiſes, and they are the beſt tenure and free-hold in the world, even for worldly things. Promiſes are the Saints Great Charter. The twenty-eighth of Deuteronomy contains the Charter of outward bleſſings to the Jews, and they are particularly named, in caſe of obedience. For Moſes having given one promiſe in general (ver. 1.) It ſhall come to paſs, if thou ſhalt hearken diligently to the voyce of the Lord thy God, &c. that the Lord thy God will ſet thee on high above all nations. God (as he did for Job) would build them a neſt on high. And as they ſhould have the bleſſing of a high neſt, ſo their neſt ſhould be full of bleſſings (ver. 2, 3, &c.) And all theſe bleſſings ſhall come on thee, and overtake thee, if thou ſhalt hearken to the voyce of the Lord thy God; Bleſſed ſhalt thou be in the City, and bleſſed ſhalt thou be in the field, bleſſed ſhalt thou be in the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground, and the fruit of thy cattel, &c. The hundred, and twelfth Pſalm, beſides many other carries out the ſame promiſe eminently (ver. 1, 2, 3.) Bleſſed is the man that feareth the Lord, that delighteth greatly in his commandments; his ſeed ſhall be mighty upon earth; the generation of the upright ſhall be bleſſed; wealth and riches ſhall be in his houſe, and his righteouſneſs endureth for ever; that is, the fruit of his righteous dealings ſhall be upon his poſterity from generation to generation, or, as the Law ſpeaks, to a thouſand generations; and hence that in the ſixth verſe of the ſame Pſalm, Surely he ſhall not be moved for ever; and therefore we have him (ver. 7, 8.) even laughing dangers in the face; He ſhall not be afraid of evil tidings, his heart is fixed truſting in the Lord. Thus the promiſes of the old Teſtament ran much upon temporals, though ſpirituals were alwayes included, and ſometimes expreſſed; and though the promiſes of the new Teſtament run moſt upon ſpirituals, yet temporals are alwayes included, and ſometimes expreſſed (1 Tim. 4. 8.) Godlineſs is profitable for all things, and hath the promiſe of this life, &c. Now if the Lord make a promiſe, we ought to take him upon his word for earthly things as well as for heavenly; and if faith have taken hold on a promiſe, though it be but for earthly things, it will work the heart into a quietneſs about them, it will deliver us from troubleſome fears that they will alter, while in our judgments we are convinced of their ſubjection to alteration, both in reſpect of their own nature (which is exceeding mutable) as alſo with reſpect to the will and ſoveraignty of God. And therefore we muſt be caution'd, not to take ſuch promiſes without exception of the Croſs, as if they did oblige God to beſtow and continue outward comforts without any interruption. There's no word that gives us any ſuch aſſurance. The Lord hath not tyed up his own hands from afflicting us, by any promiſe whatſoever; yea, afflictions are a part of the promiſe, or of the thing promiſed, they being many wayes needful and expedient for the people of God, as hath been ſhewed from ſeveral paſſages of this book. And if Job's confidence was faulty in any thing, it was in this, that he did not well conſider that Exception of the croſs in the promiſes about outward things. Thus far it hath been ſhewed that a godly man may have a well-grounded Confidence of the continuance of his worldly proſperity, or that he ſhall dye in his neſt.

Yet it cannot be denyed, but there is a great deal of ſinful Confidence, yea the confidences which moſt men have about worldly things, are like thoſe of Iſrael (Jer. 2. 37.) Such as the Lord hath rejected, and in which they ſhall never proſper. David (Pſal. 10. 5, 6.) deſcribing the wicked man, ſaith thus of him, His wayes are alwayes grievous. Thy Judgments (meaning the Lords Judgments, both as commanding and puniſhing) are far above out of his ſight. As for all his enemies, he puffs at them, he hath ſaid in his heart, I ſhall never be moved, I ſhall never be in adverſity. Job's words were ſomewhat like theſe, and David (as I ſhall touch by and by) ſpake the ſame almoſt in ſound, but neither of them ſpake with this Spirit, though both ſpake too much. For Firſt, The man of whom David there ſpeaks, as alſo many other wicked men, are confident, and ſay in their heart, they ſhall never be moved, relying upon their own ſtrength, wit and policy, preſuming upon theſe to eſtabliſh their greatneſs, and maintain their neſt againſt all hazzards and oppoſitions. Look what opinion men have of their getting, the ſame they have of their holding worldly things. They think they get them by their own power and policy, as that Aſſyrian Prince did (Iſa. 10. 13.) He ſaith by the ſtrength of my hand I have done it, and by my wiſdom, for I am prudent : And as that other Prophet hath it (Hab. 1. 16.) They ſacrifice unto their net, and burn incenſe to their drags, becauſe by them their portion is fat (that is, they think it is ſo) and their meat plenteous. Now (I ſay) they who look no further nor higher then their own net (that is, then the means which they invent or uſe by their own wit and induſtry) for the getting of their portion, can look no higher for the holding of it. All ſuch confidence is rejected of God, and will prove (in the iſſue) unproſperous, yea fatal to man. We are never in ſo much danger of looſing what we have, either in temporals or ſpirituals, as when we truſt our ſelves with the keeping of them.

Secondly, Others look upon worldly things as if they had a certainty in themſelves ; They judge their Eſtates too big to be broken, and too well ſetled to be ſhaken. Thus the Spirit of God repreſents the vanity of their imaginations (Pſal. 49. 11.) Their inward thought is that their houſes ſhall continue for ever, and their dwelling places to all generations. I have purchaſed (ſaith one) ſuch lands, and I have got ſo good a title to them, that certainly they will continue mine and my heirs for ever ; never conſidering how all things here below are ſubject to ebbings and flowings, to turns and viciſſitudes every day.

Thirdly, Others ſay ſo, truſting upon the favour and power of men, they live in the love, in the embraces and aſſiſtances of the creatures ; They have great kindred and alliances, great friends , and confederates, ſuch and ſuch have profeſſed themſelves their ſervants, and therefore they ſay they ſhall never be removed, nor can their neſt be pulled down. But what ſaith the Lord, (Jer. 17. 5.) Curſed be the man that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh (the Greateſt fleſh) his arm, that is, his ſtrength and defence, and whoſe heart departeth from the Lord. And therefore we are dehorted from all ſuch confidences (Pſal. 146. 3.) Put not your truſt in Princes, nor in the ſon of man, in whom there is no help. Which is not to be underſtood, as if there are ſome of the ſons of men in whom there is help, and, that in ſuch we may truſt ; for their is no help in any of them, and leaſt of all in thoſe whom we truſt moſt, either for the building or maintaining our worldly neſt.

Fourthly, Saith another, I ſhall dye in my neſt, meerly pleaſing himſelf with outward proſperity, rejoycing in, and being drunken with earthly enjoyments (there is a drunkenneſs in our exceſſive delight, in having as well as in exceſſive uſing the things of this world) ſuch a man is eaſie to believe he ſhall ever have, what he ſo much delights to have. Such a man beſpeaks his ſoul in the language of that rich man (Luke 12. 19.) Soul, thou haſt much goods laid up for many years, take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry. A godly man makes uſe of the good things of this life which God gives him, but he doth not give himſelf up to them, nor live in them. He ſaith with David, Lord, lift thou up the light of thy Countenance upon me, thou haſt put gladneſs into my heart, more then in the time that their Corn and their Wine encreaſed. When Corn and Wine encreaſe, then worldly mens gladneſs is encreaſed ; and when (as we ſay) they have well feather'd their neſt, then they ſay, ſurely we ſhall dye in our neſt.

Yea, not only wicked and meer carnal men, but even the godly do ſometimes over-reckon themſelves in worldly things, and over-act their confidences about them. He that hath grace doth not alwayes act graciouſly ; and they whoſe hope is laid up in Heaven, may have too much hope about earthly things. Job little thought to have ſeen ſuch dayes as were upon him, having once ſuch abundance without, and alwayes ſuch integrity within, with the favour of God ſhining upon him. David in his proſperity ſaid, I ſhall never be moved (Pſal. 30. 6.) Lord, by thy favour thou haſt made my mountain to ſtand ſtrong. Though his was not a meer carnal confidence, yet it was more then a holy confidence ; he ſpake indeed of the favour of God ſtrengthning him, but he ſpake of more ſtrength then the favour of God aſſures any man of about moveable things, even that he ſhould never be moved. Hezekiah was a good man, yet his heart over-acted too (2 Chron. 32. 25.) when the Lord recovered him of his ſickneſs, it is ſaid, Hezekiah rendred not again according to the benefit done unto him, for his heart was lifted up. What was his heart lifted up in ? In his worldly greatneſs ; he boaſted himſelf of his riches and treaſure, when he ſhould only have boaſted of the Lord his God. He would needs ſhew his treaſures to the Ambaſſadours of the King of Babylon, as if he had been more deſirous to have it reported there how rich he was, then how good the Lord had been to him. And he ſhewed this diſeaſe of his ſoul, in ſhewing his riches, when he ſhould have been wholly taken up in ſhewing his thankfulneſs to God for recovering him out of his bodily ſickneſs. When Hezekiah ſhewed the Ambaſſadours of Babylon his goodly neſt, with all his treaſures and precious things, he little thought, that the King of Babylon (as afterwards he did) ſhould find the neſt, and gather up and carry away all the eggs, as himſelf proudly ſaid he had done (Iſa. 10. 14.) and as the Prophet threatned he ſhould do (2 Kings 20. 17.) Thus the heart of good Hezekiah was tumor'd with pride, while it ſhould have been lifted up in praiſe. There is a great danger in worldly things ; they ſometimes impoſe upon the beſt of men. Though (through grace) they are not altogether overcome, and ſtupified with worldly enjoyments, nor alienated from the love and life of God, as worldlings are ; yet, neglecting their watch and forgetting themſelves, they may grow over-confident. So David did, and ſo did Hezekiah, who yet (as the Scripture ſaith, 2 Chron. 32. 26.) humbled himſelf for the pride of his heart (both he and the Inhabitants of Jeruſalem) ſo that the wrath of the Lord came not upon them in the dayes of Hezekiah. He dyed peaceably in his neſt. And though we may judge that there was ſomewhat of a carnal confidence in Job too, when he ſaid, I ſhall dye in my neſt ; yet he alſo humbled himſelf for that and all his undue paſſions in the time of his tryal, as appears in the forty-ſecond Chapter of this Book. So that, though there might be a failing in him, when he ſaid, I ſhall dye in my neſt, yet the breach was made up ; and though once he had no hope to do ſo, as before he had too much, yet in the cloſe he did ſo : He alſo dyed peaceably in his neſt. And notwithſtanding all that hath been ſaid as a probable proof of Job's error in this ſpeech, There is one paſſage in this Book very pregnant to prove that Job's Confidence was ſomewhat mixt and allayed with thoughts of a change, and that as he had hope of a proſperous courſe while he was in this world, and of a proſperous concluſion when he went out of it : So he was not altogether without fears, or at leaſt without due and often conſideration that it might be otherwiſe with him then it was before he dyed. We hear him making this profeſſion expreſly (Chap. 3. 26.) I was not in ſafety, neither had I reſt, nor had I quiet, yet trouble came. Theſe words being ſpoken at the beginning of his troubles, ſeem to intimate, that Job in the height of his proſperity (for to that time he points) was not ſafe in his own apprehenſion ; that is, he did not think himſelf ſo ſafe, that trouble could not come at him, nor reach him. He was not in the reſt of ſecurity, though he was in the reſt of peace ; nor did he judge himſelf ſo ſetled that he ſhould never be removed : He had ſome bodements or miſgivings upon his ſpirit, that his reſt and quiet condition might be diſturbed before he dyed, even while he was ſaying, I ſhall dye in my neſt,

And multiply my dayes as the ſand.

That's the ſecond point of his hope. As Job thought when ever he dyed, he ſhould dye in a proſperous condition ; ſo he thought it would be long before he ſhould dye, I ſhall multiply my dayes as the ſand. There are two other readings readings of this part of the verſe; I ſhall but name them, and pitch upon our own. Firſt, Some render the words thus; I ſhall multiply my dayes as the Palm tree; and the reaſon is, becauſe the Palm tree endures very long: So that to multiply our dayes as the Palm tree, is to have very many dayes. And ſo the Septuagint explains it; As the body of the Palm tree, I ſhall live a long time. It is ſaid (Pſal. 92. 12.) The righteous ſhall flouriſh like the Palmtree; his flouriſhing in ſpirituals, is there aimed at, he doth ſo alſo in temporals.

Et ſicut Palma multiplicabo dies. Vulg. i. e. vivam diutiſſimè. Sicut truncus Palmæ, multo vivā tempore. Sept.

Sicut Phænix multiplicabo dies meus. Tygur. Cajet. Eſt genus quoddam Palmæ quod cum emortuū fuerit ex ſeipſo renaſcitur; unde putat datū nomen Phænici avi Plinius, lib. 13. c. 4. Apud Græcos Palmæ & Phænicis nomen commune eſt. Pined. Phænix eſt ſymbolum vitæ longiſſimæ. Vivere 660 annos aſſerit Plinius lib. 7. c. 47. Vivere 500 Annos ſcribit Ambroſius lib. de fide reſur. Et quater egreditur cornicis ſæcula cervus. Alipedem cervum ter vincit corvus & illum. Multiplicat novies Phænix reparabilis ales. Auſon.

Secondly, Others read, I ſaid I ſhall multiply my dayes as the Phenix. Tertullian in his Book of the reſurrection, tranſlates that (Pſal. 92. 11.) of the Phenix, The righteous ſhall grow up as the Phenix. In the Greek tongue, one word ſignifies both a Phenix and a Palm tree. And as the Palm tree, ſo the Phenix is put ſymbolically to note a long life. Some aſcribing five hundred, ſome ſix hundred, ſome a thouſand, yea, ſome fourteen hundred years to the life of the Phenix. And as the Phenix lives very long; ſo the Phenix (as ſome report) dying in her neſt, another riſeth up out of her aſhes, which is conceived to be the reaſon why ſome of the Ancients (as I ſhall touch further in the cloſe of this context) tranſlate here, I ſhall multiply my dayes as the Phenix; as if Job had ſaid, I ſhall dye in my neſt, and riſing from thence as the Phenix I ſhall multiply my dayes. But I ſhall not ſtay upon either of theſe readings; For though the Palm tree among the trees of the earth, and the Phenix among the birds of the air are long-lived, and ſo both tranſlations accommodate and illuſtrate the general ſence and ſcope of the Text, yet neither of them have any alliance, that I can find, with the Original word of the Text, by us properly tranſlated ſand. And therefore I ſhall inſiſt only upon our own reading.

I ſhall multiply my dayes as the ſand.

Which as it clearly expreſſeth the Hebrew word, ſo the matter of it is more expreſſive of Job's meaning then either of the two former; For what's the number of the years of a Palm tree, or of the Phenix, to the number of the ſands of the Sea, which are (as to man) ſtupendiouſly innumerable. So that, this is the higheſt proverbial of the three.

To multiply as the ſand, is not only to multiply exceedingly much, but 'tis to multiply beyond all poſſibility of mans arithmetick or account. When the Lord would make a promiſe of the greateſt multiplication imaginable to Abraham concerning his ſeed, he ſaid (Gen. 22. 17.) In bleſſing I will bleſs thee, and multiply thy ſeed as the ſtars, and as the ſand which is on the Sea-ſhore. This promiſe was renewed to Jacob in terms equivalent (Gen. 28. 14.) Thy ſeed ſhall be as the duſt of the earth; and when he feared that Eſau would come and ſmite him, and the Mother with the Children, he urged God in prayer with that promiſe in terms (Gen. 32. 12.) And thou ſaidſt, I will ſurely do thee good, and make thy ſeed as the ſand of the Sea that cannot be numbred for multitude. When Joſeph, before the time of the great dearth in Egypt, ſtored up abundance of Corn, it is ſaid (Gen. 41. 49.) He gathered Corn as the ſand of the Sea, very much, till he left numbring, for it was without number. The Prophet having denounced that ſad threatning of the Lords diſpeopling the ten Tribes, Call his name Loammi, for ye are not my people, and I will not be your God; he preſently comforts them with a promiſe of their reſtoring (Hoſ. 1. 10.) Yet the number of the people of Iſrael ſhall be as the ſand of the Sea. When David would ſhew that he was much in the meditation of God, or that he had a multitude of delightful thoughts in God, he alludes to the innumerableneſs of the ſand (Pſal. 139. 17, 18.) How precious are thy thoughts unto me O God? How great is the ſum of them? If I ſhould count them, they are more in number then the ſand. I need not multiply Scriptures to prove that this phraſe of Scripture implyeth the greateſt imaginable multiplication. I ſhall multiply my dayes as the ſand.

While Job reckoned up many outward bleſſings, he reckoned upon this as the moſt neceſſary of them all; For what are riches and honours to us if once life be gone? Life is a bleſſing without which we cannot enjoy any bleſſing. Some live long, who have no outward bleſſings, but none can enjoy outward bleſſings without life. As the hoary head is a Crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteouſneſs (Prov. 16. 31.) ſo the hoary head, or long life, is the Crown of all our other Glories. What would the Glory of heaven be to us, if we had not long life, even a life eternity-long to enjoy it in? And what are any of the glories of the earth to us, ſeeing our dayes are few upon the earth? And therefore when Job had ſpoken of all the glory and honour of his preſent ſtate, he adds this as the glory of it all, that he hoped to have a long time for the enjoyment of it, or that he ſhould multiply his dayes (in that felicity) as the ſand. Long life muſt needs be a bleſſing, becauſe it is under a promiſe (Exod. 20. 12.) Honour thy Father and thy Mother, that thy dayes may be long in the land, &c. And the Apoſtle (Epheſ. 6. 2.) calls that the firſt Commandment with promiſe; that is, with a promiſe expreſs'd. And the ſhortning of life is threatned as a Curſe (Pſal. 55. 23.) The wicked ſhall not live out half his dayes; that is, not half thoſe dayes which he might have lived by the courſe of nature.

Secondly, In that Job ſpeaks thus largely of his life, Then I ſaid I ſhall multiply my dayes as the ſand.

Note, Even a good man while he ſpeaks and thinks of death, is apt to put death a great way from him.

Worldly men look upon death alwayes as afar off; and when in all probability they have but a few ſands in their glaſs to run, they are ready to ſay, that they ſhall multiply their dayes as the ſand. They who think it beſt to live would never dye; and they who either know not of or have no ground to hope for a better life, muſt needs think this the beſt. And though Believers are perſwaded through grace, that there is a life not only better, but ſo much better then this, that the beſt of this compared to it is a kind of death; yea, though they have ſome comfortable evidence of their intereſt in that life; yet there are but few Godly men living, who enjoy, as Job did, the comforts of this life, but have, at leaſt, ſecret hopes of, and fair inclinations not only to the continuance of it, but to the contiance of it long; and uſually the longer they live, and the more of their dayes are ſtoln away, the more doth the deſire of long life, or of multiplying their dayes ſteal upon them. A good man once profeſſed, that when he was but twenty-five years old, he had no thought nor hope of living till thirty; and yet when he was ſeventy-four he had great hopes of living to fourſcore. It is not ſinful to think that we may live long; but we may quickly think and ſpeak too much of long life; it becomes a godly man to be ſpeaking and thinking rather how ſhort this life is, then how long it may be. That was David's prayer (Pſal. 39. 4.) Lord make me to know mine end, and the meaſure of my dayes, what it is, that I may know how frail I am. He did not deſire to know that he ſhould live long, much leſs to know (preciſely) how long he ſhould live (that's a ſecret which God reſerves to himſelf, and which man ſhould not curiouſly enquire after, nor pry into) but he would know or be made ſenſible of it, that he had not long to live. O let me know how frail I am. And that is indeed a gracious and a ſpiritual enquiry. 'Tis good to enquire and conſider how our dayes are diminiſhed and dayly ſubſtracted, and how ſoon they will be all gone. He that reckons his life a day beyond what he is in, reckons of more then he hath of his own, and may come ſhort of his reckoning. He anſwered well, that being invited by his friend to morrow, ſaid, he had not had a to morrow for a long time before. There are two very profitable meditations for us at all times: Firſt, The everlaſtingneſs of the next life: Secondly, the ſhortneſs and tranſitorineſs of this. The Apoſtle Peter ſaid (2 Epiſt. 1. 14.) I know that I muſt ſhortly lay down this Earthly Tabernacle, even as our Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath ſhewed me. And though the Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath not ſhewed every man by a word ſpoken to him in perſon (as he did to Peter) yet he hath ſhewed every one of us by a word written in common to us with all other perſons, that we muſt ſhortly lay down this Earthly Tabernacle; and therefore we ſhould rather be preparing for our laſt day, then be hoping for many dayes. Our age ſhould be but little in our own eyes; for as David ſaid (Pſal. 39. 5.) before God it is nothing; our life is as a vapour, a ſmoak, 'tis gone preſently, when it ſtayeth longeſt in this world. Though long life be a bleſſing, and we may look for long life (walking with God) according to the promiſe, yet we ſhould rather think how ſoon the ſand of our glaſs may be run out, then of multiplying our dayes as the ſand.

Verſe 19. My root was ſpread out by the water, and the dew lay all night upon my branch.

In this verſe, and in the next (as was ſhewed) Job gives the reaſon why he was ſo confident (though poſſibly (as hath alſo been ſhewed) more confident then he had reaſon to be) that he ſhould dye in his neſt, and multiply his dayes as the ſand. And that was the conſtant kindneſſes with which God had encompaſſed and followed him all his dayes. As if he had ſaid, I perceive my ſelf riſing up and encreaſing wonderfully in all manner of felicity, the bleſſing of God abiding continually upon me; he hath bleſſed me in my family, he hath bleſſed my fields and flocks, my basket and my ſtore, he bleſſeth me in what I do, and in all that I enjoy; therefore I am as fair as any man living for a long life, and for a life as comfortable as long.

My root was ſpread out by the water, and the dew lay all night upon my branch.

Job had as good ground to think that his Eſtate would not only abide but flouriſh, as we have to believe that a tree will do ſo, which is rooted neer a pleaſant river, and whoſe branches are filled with dew every night.

My root was ſpread out by the water.

A Root properly is the lower part of a tree, by which it is faſtened in the Earth, and receives moiſture or nouriſhment from it. The root of a thing is ſo much the faſtneſs or ſtedfaſtneſs of it, that to ſay a thing hath no root, or is unſtedfaſt, and will endure but a little while, is the ſame (Math. 13. 6.)

Secondly, A root is taken for the foundation, baſis, or lower part of any thing which ſuſtains it. Thus in the former Chapter of this Book (ver. 9.) we read of the roots of mountains.

Thirdly, The root is put for the beginning of any thing. Thus the Apoſtle calls the love of money, the root of all evil (1 Tim. 6. 10.)

Fourthly, A mans root is his ſtock or parents, from whom he ſprings, as the body or boughs of a tree do from the root. (Iſa. 14. 30.)

Fifthly, The root is put for the iſſues or branches that come from the root. So Chriſt is called the root of David (Revel. 5. 5.) whereas we know David; did not ſpring from him, but he from David, according to the fleſh. In a ſpiritual ſence Chriſt was the root of David, but in a natural ſence David was the root of Chriſt; for according to the fleſh Chriſt came of David; yet Chriſt is called the root of David, that is, he was a branch that did iſſue forth of his root. So we are to expound thoſe Scriptures (Iſa. 11. 19. Rom. 15. 12.) where the root is metonymically put for the branch which iſſueth from it. Here when Job ſaith,

My root was ſpread out by the waters,

We may expound his root to be whatſoever was the ſtrength and eſtabliſhment of his Eſtate, or whatſoever was the means of its encreaſe or continuance: All theſe the root are to the tree. Some have a great preſent eſtate, but their eſtate hath no root, nothing for encreaſe or continuance. It is reported that when an Ambaſſador of Spain, was brought into the Treaſury of Venice, and there ſhewed huge heaps of Gold, he turned up ſome of the Gold at the bottom; and being asked, why he did ſo, anſwered, I do it to ſee whether this goodly Golden Treaſure hath any root: Implying that his Maſters Treaſure had a root, his Mines in the Indies, which cauſed it to grow and renew every year. Job's riches had a root, and a root by the water, nor was his root only planted by the water, but as the original word ſignifies, opened to the water: It is poſſible for a tree to be planted by the water, and the water not come at it, therefore Job ſaith, My root was opened or was ſpread by the water. A tree planted by the water is often put in Scripture as the Emblem of a flouriſhing Eſtate both in temporals and ſpirituals. And that's the ſcope of Job here; I did once flouriſh, and it was moſt probable my Eſtate ſhould flouriſh; Why? Becauſe my root was ſpread out by the water. It is a Maxim, That where ſufficient cauſes are in act, there of neceſſity the effect muſt follow. A good root with proper and plentiful moiſture coming to it, are ſufficient cauſes of a trees growth and fruitfulneſs, and therefore where theſe are we may conclude (according to the courſe of Nature) the tree will flouriſh. It is ſaid of the Godly man (Pſal. 1. 3.) He ſhall be like a tree planted by the rivers ſide, that bringeth forth his fruit in his ſeaſon; his leaf alſo ſhall not wither, that is (as the next words expound it) whatſoever he doth ſhall proſper. Here was Job's reaſon why he ſhould not wither, &c. He was as a tree planted by the rivers ſide. The Prophet inſiſts upon the ſame ſimilitude (Jer. 17. 8.) Bleſſed is the man that truſteth in the Lord; Why? He ſhall be as a tree planted by the waters, that ſpreadeth out her root by the rivers, and ſhall not ſee when heat cometh; that is, ſhall not feel any annoyance by the heat; when it is very hot and dry weather, if a tree have a river by it, it is not dammaged, his leaf is green, and fruit plentiful, ſuch a tree is not afraid in the year of drought, or of a dry ſummer. Though the heavens be as braſs over it, yet while the earth under it is not as iron, there's no fear but it will hold its own, and yield its fruit. The Prophet Ezekiel (Chap. 47. 12.) ſpeaking of the ſpiritual flouriſhing of the Church, ſaith, And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this ſide, and on that ſide, ſhall grow all trees for meat, whoſe leaf ſhall not fade, neither ſhall the fruit thereof be conſumed; it ſhall bring forth new fruit according to its months, becauſe their waters they iſſued out of the Sanctuary, and the fruit thereof ſhall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine. The Prophet aſſerts the fruitfulneſs of theſe myſtical trees, becauſe they were planted upon the bank of the river, and had the waters of the Spirit iſſuing out of the Sanctuary, to nouriſh and refreſh them. My root (ſaith Job) was ſpread out by the waters,

And the dew lay all night upon my branch.

As trees are watered below at the root by raines or rivers, ſo they are watered above and from above, by dewes. The dew is a moyſture drawn up by the Sun in the day, and gently falling in the night. My ſpeech (ſaith Moſes, Deut. 32. 2.) ſhall diſtill as the dew. The Grace of regeneration is compared to the dew (Pſal. 110. 3.) In the beauties of holineſs, from the womb of the morning thou haſt the dew of thy youth. Paralel to which is that of the Prophet (Micah 5. 7.) And the remnant of Jacob ſhall be among many people; as a dew from the Lord, as ſhowers upon the graſs, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the ſons of men. God will encreaſe his people as the dew, which is wonderfully mutiplied; and as that falls down in innumerable drops for the refreſhing of the earth, ſo ſhall the Church (called the remnant of Jacob) refreſh the Nations with the truths and promiſes of the Goſpel. Job had theſe ſweet heavenly diſtillations lying all night upon his branch; and he rightly ſaith all night, becauſe the dew falls in the night, and is exhaled in the morning. Whence the Prophet compares the vaniſhing goodneſs of the Jews, to the early dew which paſſeth away (Hoſ. 6. 4.) And becauſe their good actions were in that ſence but as the dew, therefore the ſame Prophet threatens them that their perſons ſhould be ſo too (Hoſ. 13. 3.) They ſin more and more, &c. Therefore they ſhall be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew that paſſeth away. The dew (ſaith Job) lay all night upon my branch.

Ros eſt humidum quid è ſerenitate concretum minutatim labens.

As the root ſignifies whatſoever doth eſtabliſh and nouriſh us or our eſtate, ſo the branch is that which groweth out from us. A mans branches are his riches and poſſeſſions, his branches are his children, and his ſervants, his branches are his actions and undertakings, his branches are his thoughts and meditations; theſe laſt eſpecially in Scripture are called branches, becauſe they ſhoot out from the mind of man as branches from the tree.

Again, The word which we render branch, ſignifies the Harveſt or Gathering in of Corn and Fruits. And ſo ſome render here; The dew lay all night upon my Harveſt. And in the land of Canaan, where there was (as ſome affirm) no rain uſually from the month by us commonly called May, till October (the rain of this month being called the former, and of that the latter rain; I ſay, the rain coming but at thoſe times) the dew falling every night was a great refreſhing to the branch, and a cauſe of fruitfulneſs. Job had water for his root, and he had dew for his branches.

But what was this water? What this dew? They are both

Terra Canaã rore facundabatur majore parte anni, cum bis tantum in ea pluat, ſc. in Marcheſvan, quæ pluvia propriè dicitur יורה & in Sivan quæ appellatur מלקש Druſ.

both to be underſtood in a ſpiritual ſence; the water by his root, and the dew that lay all night upon his branch, were the favour and good will of God to him: As he had Grace in his heart, ſo a bleſſing upon all he took in hand. Job was in a proſperous condition, and he had good reaſon to hope his proſperity would continue, becauſe he had this water nigh his root, and this dew upon his branch.

Hence Obſerve, It is the bleſſing and favour of God that makes us and all we have to proſper.

He that hath the bleſſing of God, hath a river by his root, and the dew upon his branch. When the Angel ſaid to Jacob (Gen. 32. 2.) Let me go for the day breaketh: Jacob anſwered, I will not let thee go except thou bleſs mee. Bleſs me and I am well enough, I and my root and branch. The bleſſing of God is the river running by our root, and the dew lying upon our branch; our temporal and ſpiritual comforts can no more continue without a daily ſupply from the bleſſing and favour of the Lord, then a tree can live and flouriſh, that hath neither water at the root, nor dew upon the branches. As God is to his people a place of broad rivers and ſtreams to keep them ſafe (Iſa. 33.21.) ſo he is to his people a river and a ſtream to make them fruitful. David puts this as a diſtinguiſhing mark of favour between the Godly and the wicked; For when he had ſaid (Pſal. 1. 4.) The godly man is like a tree planted by the rivers of waters, that bringeth forth his fruit in his ſeaſon; his leaf alſo ſhall not wither, and whatſoever he doth ſhall proſper; Preſently he adds, But the ungodly are not ſo: Though an ungodly man doth ſometimes flouriſh in outward things as a green tree, having goodly branches, yet it is not from this water and dew of divine love; it is but by common providence whereby God bleſſeth all the trees of the forreſt, not by that ſpecial providence with which the Lord bleſſeth the trees of his encloſed garden. The roots of wicked men are ſpread by the filthy and ſtinking puddles of this lower, of this corrupt and corrupting world, they know not the fountain of living waters, yea, they (as the Lord by his Prophet reproved Iſrael, Jer. 2. 13.) have forſaken the fountain of living waters, and have hewed them out ciſterns, broken ciſterns that can hold no water. They have either no water by their root, or 'tis but a ciſtern a broken ciſtern of water. What's the water of a ciſtern, to the water of a fountain? What is it to have a Garden watered with a pot; in compariſon of a watering from the clouds, or by the ſhowers of Heaven? Yea the wicked are ſo far from having this river water at their root, or this dew upon their branches, that they ſhall have a fire at laſt upon both. So the Prophet threatens them, (Mal. 4. 1.) Behold the day cometh that ſhall burn as an Oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly ſhall be ſtubble, and ſhall burn them up, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, and ſhall leave them neither root nor branch; that is, nothing at all. The extremity of the curſe of the wicked is thus expreſt (Iſa. 5. 24.) Their root ſhall be rottenneſs, and their bloſſom ſhall go up as duſt. When the root hath no moyſture from the earth, it rots in the earth; and when the bloſſom inſtead of diſtilling dews, hath blaſts of mildews, then it goes up as duſt, you may grind or rub it to powder between your fingers. Now as the whole ſtate of the wicked, root and branch, ſhall be utterly conſumed, both being under the curſe of God; ſo a godly mans root and branch are under the bleſſing and favour of God, which keep him alwayes green and flouriſhing in ſoul and body, both in ſpirituals and temporals, as Job ſpeaks in the next verſe..

Verſe 20. My glory was freſh in me, and my bow was renewed in my hand.

Gloria mea ſemper innovabitur. Vulg.

This verſe ſhews the effect of the former. The water at his root, and the dew upon his branch, kept him freſh and ſtrong. Some read it in the future tenſe, My glory ſhall be freſh; as if it were a confident perſwaſion of his ſucceeding proſperity, as in the former verſe; I ſaid that I ſhall dye in my neſt, and multiply my dayes as the ſand; I ſaid my glory ſhall be freſh in me, and my bow ſhall be renewed in my hand. Others read it in the preſent tenſe, My glory is freſh in me, and my bow is renewed in my hand; but I rather follow our reading, which gives it both as an effect of the continued favour of God to him, and as a further reaſon of his former confidence; My glory was freſh in me, and my bow was renewed in my hand. As if he had ſaid, The Lord by his conſtant kindneſs to me, kept me up in ſuch a freſhneſs of honour, power, and proſperity, that I had no cauſe to doubt any witherings or decay.

My glory was freſh.

Glory is the crying up of a mans name with Commendation, that's glory ſtrictly taken. But further, glory is that which doth magnifie and render either things or perſons great and illuſtrious in the eyes of others. The goodneſs and mercy of God is his glory, becauſe he is and ought to be alwayes glorified for his goodneſs and mercy. (2 Cor. 4. 6.) God who commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined in our hearts, to give us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt. As the light of the power and greatneſs of God ſhines through and irradiates the whole work of creation; ſo the light of the goodneſs and mercy of God ſhines cheifly in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, and that's his glory. When Moſes deſired to ſee the glory of God, God ſaid I will make all my goodneſs paſs before thee (Exod. 33. 19.) The goodneſs of God is called his glory, becauſe that renders him glorious, to a wonder, in the eyes of all believers. God is glorious in nothing ſo much as in his goodneſs and pardoning mercy to poor ſinners. Who is a God like unto thee (ſaith the Prophet, Mic. 7. 18.) That pardoneth iniquity, and paſſeth by the tranſgreſſion of the remnant of his heritage? Some have (vainly enough) imagined themſelves like the moſt high (Iſa. 14. 14.) in power and greatneſs, but who, among ſuch Gods, hath ever had ſo much as a liking, much leſs an holy ambition or emulation to be like unto God in pardoning goodneſs and mercy, which is the proper glory of God? Now as that which makes God glorious is his glory; ſo whatſoever makes man glorious, giving him a name and lifting him up in the eſtimation of others, that's his glory too: In which latitude we are to underſtand Job's affirmation in this text,

My glory was freſh in me.

Job's glory did not fade nor wax old, it did not decay, much leſs dye, but was as freſh every morning as if that had been the firſt morning of its birth and blooming.

And my bow was renewed in my hand.

As if he had ſaid, The Lord encreaſed mine honour dayly, and ſupplyed me with ſeaſonable aſſiſtances upon every occaſion, he both confirmed and encreaſed my power, to bring my counſels to paſs and to execute thoſe righteous ſentences which I had given. Job's bow was his ſtrength, or executive power. Whence Hannah ſaith (1 Sam. 2. 4.) The bows of the mighty men are broken, and they that ſtumble are girt with ſtrength. The word bowes in the former part of the verſe, is the ſame with ſtrength in the latter, and her meaning in both is, that while worldly men, who think themſelves mighty in power, and who aim at great matters, endeavour to bring them to paſs, or to hit the mark they aim at, preſently their bow breaks, the means by which they hoped to effect it utterly fails them; whereas Godly men who were ſo weak and feeble, that they were ready to ſtumble at every ſtraw that lay in their way, have their ſtrength ſo renewed that they can even leap over a wall, or remove the greateſt difficulties out of their way. Jacob ſpake thus of Joſeph (Gen. 49. 24.) His bow abode in ſtrength, that is, he continued in power. The bow being a warlike Inſtrument, and the chief Inſtrument of war in thoſe times, yea that (with the ſword) being, in a manner, all the Inſtruments of war in thoſe times, therefore the bow might rightly ſignifie ſtrength, and that a three-fold ſtrength.

Mea potentia quotidiè inter meas manus incrementum recipiebat. Bez.

Firſt, Natural ſtrength, the ſtrength of the body.

Secondly, Civil ſtrength. The Magiſtrates Authority or Civil ſtrength, is that whereby he ſhoots at the wicked, and is as terrible as a bow with a quiver full of arrowes to all that fall under the revenging power of his Juſtice.

Thirdly, By the bow, we may underſtand ſpiritual ſtrength too, that's our beſt bow. Job's bow (that is, his three-fold ſtrength, his natural, his Civil, and his ſpiritual ſtrength)

Was renewed, or reſtored in his hand.

The word ſignifies, to paſs by or to paſs through; So 'tis חלף Propriè eſt tranſire vel pertranſire, aut mutari pertranſeundo. Pined.

elegantly aſcribed unto the bow, which being renewed and ſtrengthned in the hand, makes the arrow to paſs through, or to paſs away with a mighty force, like the bow of Jonathan which turned not back, without effectual execution, from the blood of the ſlain, and from the fat of the mighty. Job's bow was renewed or changed in his hand: How changed? Not from ſtrong to weak, or from good to bad, or from better to worſe; but from good to better, and from ſtrong to ſtronger. So the word is uſed (Iſa. 40. 30.) They that truſt in the Lord ſhall renew or change their ſtrength; that is, their ſtrength ſhall encreaſe, by changing to a greater degree of ſtrength. Their ſtrength ſhall change as a young mans doth, by receiving more ſtrength then they had, not as an old mans ſtrength changeth, by looſing the ſtrength which they had.

> Hence note, It is from the Lord, and 'tis a high favour from the Lord, when the eſtimation, power, and Authority of Magiſtrates, are renewed and dayly confirmed to them.

That of the Prophet reaches both the perſons and conditions of all men (Iſa. 40. 6, 7.) All fleſh is graſs, and the goodlineſs thereof is as the flower of the field, the graſs withereth, the flower fadeth. How often have we ſeen the glory of thoſe that have been in Power fading as the graſs, and their Goodlineſs, their honour and ſplendour withering like the flower of the field. Their bow hath been weakened in their hand, and at laſt fallen quite out of their hand. And whence is all this? Surely as the Prophet ſpeaks in the ſame place concerning the withering of the flower, 'tis becauſe the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon them. When the Spirit of the Lord bloweth a cold chilling wind, every thing decayes and dyes, as it is ſaid (Hag. 1. 9.) Ye looked for much, and lo it came to little; and when ye brought it home I did blow upon it; that is, I ſent an unkind and rough wind upon it. And when the Spirit of the Lord bloweth a favourable gale, or breathes a bleſſing, then every thing flouriſheth, and not only retains, but renews its ſtrength and beauty. 'Tis this breath of the Lord upon the Magiſtrate, which keeps his glory freſh, and reneweth the impreſſions of his power upon the hearts of his people every day. Moſes ſpeaking of the Idolatry of the Children of Iſrael, ſaith (Deut. 32. 17, 18.) They ſacrificed to new Gods that came newly up, whom their Fathers feared not; but of that Rock that begat them they were unmindful, and forgot the God that formed them. Even the glory of the ever-living and all-Glorious God is not alwayes freſh in the heart of man. They muſt have new Gods, elſe their devotion groweth old. And if there be ſuch a principle of wickedneſs in the heart of man to be weary of the immortal God, how much more of any mortal God. The reſpect and honour of Magiſtrates is more ſubject to decaying and dying, then their perſons are. It is the Lord, who preſerves both his own Glory and the Magiſtrates glory freſh among the people. And 'tis he alſo that reneweth the Magiſtrates bow in his hand, that maketh his authority terrible as a bow with arrows in the hand of a mighty man. The Pſalmiſt ſaith (Pſal. 127. 4.) As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man, ſo are children of the youth. And while the Magiſtrates bow or Authority (for that's it out of which he ſends forth or ſhoots his arrows) remains, like children in their youth, freſh and ſtrong, and is dayly renewed in ſtrength, all ſubmit to his government, and the wicked tremble at it. And, though the Archers, as 'tis ſaid of Joſeph (Gen. 49. 23, 24.) ſorely grieve him, and ſhoot at him, and hate him; that is, ſpeak bitter words againſt him, and wound him with their tongues in ſecret; yet as it is alſo ſaid there of Joſeph) His bow ſhall abide in ſtrength, and the arms of his hands ſhall be made ſtrong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; from thence is the Shepheard and ſtone of Iſrael. In alluſion to which I may conclude, that 'tis only by the hands of the mighty God, that Magiſtrates are upheld as Shepheards to feed the people, and are made firm in their power, as a Rock or ſtone, to uphold or bear up the whole body of a Common-wealth. And if ever there be a cheapneſs, or an undervaluing of their perſons, if ever there be a withering and a ſtain upon their glory, or a weakneſs upon their bow, 'tis becauſe the dew of bleſſing from above, and the hands of the mighty God are withdrawn from them.

Thus we have ſeen Job's confidence, with ſome grounds of it opened, He hoped to dye in his neſt, and he therefore hoped it, becauſe his root was ſpread by the waters, and the dew lay all night upon his branch, which made his glory freſh in him, and his bow to renew in his hand.

Before I paſs from theſe words, I ſhall only mind the Reader that theſe three verſes are expounded with reference to the Reſurrection of the body, and of eternal life, by ſome of the Ancients. As if Job had ſaid; I ſhall dye in my neſt comfortably, and after a while I ſhall riſe again Glorioully, and then I ſhall multiply my dayes as the ſand, I ſhall live Eternally (The dayes of Eternity are more innumerable then the ſand of the Sea) Then ſhall I ſpread out my roots by the Everlaſting Springs of divine love, and the dew of Heavenly tranquility ſhall lye continually upon my branch, my Glory ſhall be alwayes freſh, and my ſtrength ſhall be for ever new; I ſhall renew my ſtrength, and mount up with wings as the Eagle, I ſhall run and not be weary, walk and not faint. This is a truth in it ſelf, and theſe words may be piouſly expounded as an alluſion to that bleſſed ſtate; yet I do not at all apprehend that Job aimed at more here then the continuance of his preſent felicity to the utmoſt line of this life; he having given ſufficient proof of his faith in the Reſurrection to Eternal life, at the nineteenth Chapter of this Book, ver. 25, 26, 27.

VERS. 21, 22, 23.

Unto me men gave ear and waited, and kept ſilence at my counſel.

After my words they ſpake not again, and my ſpeech dropped upon them.

And they waited for me as for the rain, and they opened their mouth wide, as for the latter rain.

These three verſes contain yet more grounds, or at leaſt a further illuſtration of the former, why Job was ſo confident (in younger times) that his flouriſhing ſtate ſhould not wither, nor his outward proſperity fail. That Job was honoured by all the people, hath been ſhewed particularly and at large before; and yet here he enlargeth the ſame point, in other particulars.

Firſt, From the great attention which all gave while he was ſpeaking; ver. 21. Unto me men gave ear.

Secondly, From the great weight which his words bare when he had ſpoken; He prevailed where ever he came, and carried all before him; ver. 22. After my words they ſpake not again, &c.

Thirdly, From that great and paſſionate deſire which they had to hear him ſtill, they were as greedy and thirſty for his counſel as the dry ground for rain, they gaped as if they would have catched his words before they came out of his mouth; ver. 23. And they waited for me as for the rain, &c.

From theſe three Conſiderations Job ſeems to argue thus.

He that is reſpected as an Oracle by all men for his wiſdom and counſel, hath reaſon to believe that he ſhall live and dye in honour, or that he ſhall multiply his dayes exceedingly, and then dye in his neſt or houſe comfortably.

But thus it was with me, all men admired my wiſdom, and were greedy of my counſel. Therefore I had reaſon to believe, that I ſhould dye in honour.

This appears to be the mind and general ſcope of Job in theſe three verſes, which are now to be opened and diſtinctly inſiſted upon.

Verſe 21. Unto me men gave ear.

The word, men, is not in the Original, there 'tis only unto me gave ear, that is, all ſorts, all ages, and degrees of men, none excepted, were attentive, or lifted up their ears, when once I began to lift up my voyce. And when he ſaith, Unto me men gave ear, he implyeth ſuch an attentiveneſs unto himſelf, as if none elſe had been attended to or regarded when they ſpake, beſides himſelf.

Unto me men gave ear.] To give ear, is but one word in the Text, yet it contains variety of matter. To give ear carrieth a much fuller ſence, then barely to hear. When we ſpeak to God, who is infinitely above us, earneſtly deſiring that he would hear us, we pray that he would bow down his ear (2 Kings 19. 16.) His hearing is a great condeſcending.

deſcending. And when we ſpeak to men who are earneſtly deſirous to hear us, they are ſaid to give ear to us. To give a man the hearing, when he ſpeaks; is, in our language, to ſlight or little to regard what he ſpeaks; but to give ear to a man when he ſpeaks, is ſeriouſly to attend to what he ſpeaks.

More diſtinctly when Job ſaith, To me men gave ear, it may note theſe five things.

Firſt, That all hearkned to him with great attention and diligence; they made a buſineſs of hearing.

Secondly, That all hearkned to him with great reverence and obſervance. They highly eſteemed him, while they heard him.

Thirdly, That all hearkned to him with great chearfulneſs and delight. It was a pleaſure to them, and their high content to hear him.

Fourthly, That all hearkned to him believingly, they gave credit to what he ſpake; faith was working in their hearts, while his words were ſounding in their ears. As faith comes or is wrought by hearing (Rom. 10. 17.) ſo to hear is an act or work of faith. And in Scripture-language to hear and to believe are the ſame, or hearing is believing. (John. 9. 27.) The Blind man (when the Phariſees urgingly enquired the manner of his cure) ſaith, I have told you already, and ye did not hear; his meaning is, ye did not believe, or ye gave no credit to what I ſaid. When the Apoſtle had inſtructed Timothy, how to behave himſelf in the Houſe or Church of God; He concludes in caſe of his ſubmiſſion to thoſe inſtructions (1 Tim. 4. 16.) In ſo doing thou ſhalt both ſave thy ſelf, and them that hear thee; that is, them that believe what they hear. Many thouſands hear the Word, (in common notion) who are not ſaved, but periſh in their ſins. Only they are ſaved, who hearing, believe, and reſt upon the Grace of God in Chriſt, revealed by the Word which they hear.

Fifthly, That all heard him obedientially, they ſubmitted to what he ſpake; to give ear, is to obey: So ſome read it here expreſly, Not as we, truly, according to the letter of the Text, To me men gave ear; but, fully, according to the ſence of the Text, Men obeyed me; they yielded themſelves up to the words of advice and counſel given them. And, indeed, they that hear and do not obey, do not ſo much as hear; we never rightly hear the Word, till we reſign up our ſelves to the obedience of the Word: So then, to give ear, notes all theſe, diligence, reverence, delight, faith and obedience in hearing. He that hears any word ſpoken, or the Word preached, thus, gives ear to it; but he that hears it, and not thus, doth only give it the hearing.

Mihi obediebant. Mont.

Now, in as much as to give ear, ſignifieth all this, and Job reckons up this among thoſe honours and reſpects which he had in the world; To me men gave ear.

> Obſerve, As it is an honour to be rightly heard; ſo he that is heard careleſly and irreverently, he that is heard without delight, without faith, without obedience, hath a ſlight put upon him as often as he is heard; or rather he is not heard at all.

It is no eaſie matter to ſpeak well, and 'tis as hard to hear well. To be a good ſpeaker is a very good gift of God; but to be a good hearer is a far better gift, yea, it is a precious Grace of God. Till God gives us a heart, we never give an ear to his Word, how much or how often ſoever we hear it. And how much or how often ſoever we hear the Word, we ſlight it till we give ear to it. And hence it is that God himſelf doth often complain by his Prophets, that he was not heard in his Prophets. But did not the people hear the Prophets? Yes, they heard them many times, but they ſeldom gave ear to them, they ſeldom either believed or obeyed them. Hear O my people (ſaith the Lord, Pſal. 81.8.) and I will teſtifie unto thee, O Iſrael, if thou wilt hearken unto me. Thus the Lord did even entreat Iſrael for audience. But what did Iſrael? We have their carriage towards God (ver. 11.) My people would not hearken to my voyce, Iſrael would none of me. They could not but hear the voyce of God (whether he ſpake immediately from himſelf, or mediately by his Prophets) but they would not hearken or give ear to it. And not to give ear to or obey the Word of God is to reject it; and to reject the Word of God, is to reject God himſelf, as appears in the next words; For as ſoon as ever the Lord had ſaid, Iſrael would not hearken to my voyce, he adds, Iſrael would none of me. Thus he complained (Jer. 44. 4, 5.) I ſent unto you all my ſervants the Prophets, riſing early and ſending them, ſaying, O do not this abominable thing that I hate: But they hearkned not nor enclined their ear. They heard the meſſages which God ſent by his Prophets, but they did not encline their ear to them, nor ſubmit to them. And how ill the Lord reſented it, even as an affront or contempt put upon him, that they ſhould hear but not give ear to him, was not only to be heard but ſeen ſoon after among them, and their ſight told them what ill hearers they had been, as it follows in the next verſe, Wherefore my fury and mine anger was poured forth, and was kindled in the Cities of Judah, and in the ſtreetes of Jeruſalem, and they are waſted and deſolate as at this day. When God cannot be heard, he will be felt. And when men will not give ear to his counſels, their eyes ſhall ſee and their hearts tremble when they ſee his Judgments. It will turn to a ſad account, at laſt, with the world, when the Lord ſhall ſay, I ſpake and men did not give ear; whereas if luſt ſpake, yea if the Devil ſpake they did give ear. And how will men anſwer it, when if a wiſe man or a Magiſtrate ſpeak about civil or worldly things, they will give ear; but if God ſpeak by his Meſſengers about ſpiritual and heavenly things, they have never an ear to give him. To me men gave ear, ſaith Job,

And waited, and kept ſilence for my counſel.

Waiting is an act; Firſt, Of patience; Secondly, Of obſervance; Thirdly, Of hope and earneſt expectation; He that waiteth truly, looks with his eye, and liſtens with his ear, and puts himſelf body and ſoul into ſuch a poſture, as if he were made up of theſe three; you may read, patience, obſervance, expectation, written upon every member of him. He that waiteth, muſt have patience to ſtay the time and leiſure, yea, perhaps the pleaſure of others; and he that doth ſo, gives them much reſpect and obſervance; and 'tis rare that any do ſo but upon ſome hope or expectation of advantage to themſelves. No wiſe man will wait for nothing, nor will he wait about trifles; what we wait for, we account to be of worth, at leaſt it is ſo in their account that wait for it. When Job ſaith, To me men gave ear, and waited. It ſhould ſeem all men eſteemed his anſwers and reſolves as Oracles, or that they reſorted to him as to an Oracle.

They waited at my counſel.

They did not think it long nor loſs of time, though tarried ſomewhat long, before I gave them my counſel I if they had it not at the firſt call or hour, they would ſtay my leiſure. The Pſalmiſt deſcribes the Iſraelites very forward, even upon the ſpurt to give God glory for the mercy they had received in their deliverance at the red Sea (Pſal. 106. 12.) Then believed they his words, they ſang his praiſe: Yet it follows immediately (ver. 13.) They ſoon forgate his works, they waited not for his counſel. Which neglect of theirs may be underſtood two wayes. Firſt, That they waited nor for his open or declared counſel, to direct them what to do, but without asking his advice would needs venture and run on upon their own heads, to do what ſeemed good in their own eyes. Secondly, That they waited not for the accompliſhment of his hidden and ſecret Counſel concerning them; they would not tarry Gods time for the bringing forth and bringing about his counſels. Not to wait upon God either way is very ſinful. Not to wait for his counſel to direct us what to do, and not to wait for his doing or fulfilling of his own counſel, argues at once a proud and an impatient ſpirit; in the one men do even ſlight the wiſdom of God, and in the other vainly preſume and attempt to prevent his providence. And therefore Job notes this both as an honour to himſelf, and as a duty in them that he had to do with, They ſtaid, they waited at my counſel.

Again, When he ſaith, they waited, Job ſeems to imply, that although he was long in giving them counſel, yet he was not tedious to them: Though he ſpake much, they waited, and were not tired with waiting. As ſome are raſh and haſty in giving counſel, ſo others are in as much haſte to receive it; if they may be diſpatcht preſently, or in a word or two, they will receive your counſel; but a long diſcourſe, though no longer then needs, is troubleſom and tedious; they are weary and will not wait. As they who are weary of doing good, will not wait to do more; ſo they who are weary of hearing good, will not wait to hear more, though by neglecting to hear all, they looſe the fruit of all that they have heard. Wiſdom hath her gates, and Wiſdom hath her poſts, and Wiſdom ſaith (Prov. 8. 34.) Bleſſed is the man that heareth me, watching daily at my gates, waiting at the poſts of my doors. This Wiſdom is Chriſt, revealing the myſtery of his will in the Goſpel. Chriſt pronounceth him bleſſed that heareth him, yet not barely ſo, but that waiteth at his gates to hear him. They that have a deſire to hear, muſt have the patience to wait, yea, and to watch at the gates of wiſdom. If counſel come not preſently, we muſt ſtay till it comes; and 'tis worth while to ſtay till it cometh, though it be long in coming; nor is it enough for us to wait at Wiſdoms poſts for a day, we muſt wait (as that text ſaith) daily. He that thinks he hath heard or learned enough, hath as yet learned nothing, how much ſoever he hath heard. We need daily grace and daily counſel as well as daily bread; and therefore we muſt daily wait for both. As the habits of Grace and Knowledge muſt be acted and exerciſed continually; ſo we muſt act and exerciſe our ſelves continually in all thoſe wayes, by which the habits of Grace and Knowledge are encreaſed.

And they (ſaith Job) waited and kept ſilence at my counſel.

Siluit, tacuit, quievit.

We may take this their ſilence two wayes: Either, firſt, They were all huſht and ſilent when I ſpake; or, Secondly, They were quiet and ſilent till I ſpake. The word which we tranſlate to keep ſilence, is ſometimes tranſlated, as the former, to wait. Thus David profeſſeth the quietneſs of his heart, either under the ſaddeſt diſpenſations of God, or amidſt the ſtrongeſt oppoſitions of his enemies (Pſal. 62. 1.) Truly my ſoul waiteth upon God, from him cometh my ſalvation. As if he had ſaid, As my affliction cometh from God, ſo alſo doth my ſalvation; or as my dangers are of men, ſo my ſafety is of God; and therefore let men do what they can, and let God do what he will, My ſoul waiteth upon God. We put in the Margin, My ſoul is ſilent upon God. They that keep ſilence wait, and they that wait ſhould keep ſilence; and that ſoul which waits in faith upon God for the receiving of any good, or for the removing of any evil, will keep ſilence, and not either murmur at or diſpute the matter.

They kept ſilence at my counſel.

Conticuere omnes, intentique ora tenebrant. Virg.

When a man of Authority, of excellent parts, ſpeech, and wiſdom, comes into a meeting or publick place, all are ſilent, and hold their peace, expecting what he will ſay or do. Job was a man of ſuch eſtimation for the gravity of his Perſon, for the righteouſneſs of his Government, as alſo for his ability of Speech, that as ſoon as he appeared openly, and once began to ſpeak, all kept ſilence.

There is a twofold ſilence: Firſt, Of neceſſity: Secondly, Of choice. Some are ſilent, or ſay nothing, becauſe they have nothing to ſay, they have no matter in them: many (I know) who are but empty veſſels ſound moſt; and many who are but ſhallow rivers run with greateſt noiſe; yet others, who are conſcious of their own inability to ſpeak, have the modeſty not to ſpeak; and ſome who have not only a mind to ſpeak, but ſomewhat in their minds to ſpeak, yet cannot ſpeak their mind. To keep ſilence upon this account is ſilence of neceſſity; and though a man who holds his peace, becauſe he cannot ſpeak, is defective in a great part of wiſdom; yet to hold our peace, becauſe we know we are ill ſpeakers, or cannot ſpeak much to purpoſe, is a good point of wiſdom: For as Solomon tells us (Prov. 17. 28.) Even a fool when he holdeth his peace is counted wiſe, and he that ſhutteth his lips, is eſteemed a man of underſtanding. A Heathen, ſeeing one ſit mute or ſilent at a feaſt, not offering a word while much matter of diſcourſe was offered, ſaid to him, Sir, if you are a fool you have done wiſely; but if you are a wiſe man you have done like a fool. That's no commendable but a ſullen or affected ſilence, when having both ability and opportunity to ſpeak we ſit ſilent. 'Tis better to be ſilent for want of power, then for want of will to ſpeak. The former is our affliction; but the latter (when duty calls) is our ſin. To have a will fully to ſpeak what we ought not, or not to ſpeak when, and where, and what we ought, is an argument of an evil heart, or at leaſt, that the heart is in a very evil frame. Some offend by not uſing, though moſt by abuſing their tongue. Job's Auditors did not keep ſilence in either of theſe ſences.

Simonides, ſilentium perpetuum in convivio ſervanti dixit; Si es ſtultus ſapientèr agis; ſin ſapiens inſipientèr.

In corde ſapientum es illorum, in ore fatuorum cor illorum.

Theirs was a laudable ſilence, a ſilence by choice or election; and when any are ſilent upon ſuch grounds as theſe which follow, theirs alſo is a laudable ſilence.

Firſt, When any are ſilent, becauſe it is not ſeaſonable to ſpeak: For as Solomon hath taught us (Eccleſ. 3. 5.) There is a time to keep ſilence, and a time to ſpeak. He that hits the ſeaſon of ſilence, is as wiſe as he that hits the ſeaſon of ſpeaking. Some are given much to ſilence, and they ſeldom hit the time of ſpeaking; others are given much to ſpeaking, and they ſeldom hit the time of ſilence. They are men of choice wiſdom who hit theſe times, both ſpeaking and holding their peace in ſeaſon.

Secondly, 'Tis good to keep ſilence our ſelves, when others that are better able to ſpeak are in company, as hath been ſhewed from other paſſages of this Book.

Thirdly, 'Tis good to be ſilent and ſay no more, when enough hath been ſaid to any point already. As ſome over do, ſo others over ſay their matters. We ought to be ſilent, when ſo much hath been ſaid as will ſerve turn. Why ſhould words run waſt? And why ſhould time be waſted in ſpeaking waſte words? It is ill to ſpend our breath, and worſe our time in vain. 'Tis a great point of wiſdom to ſpeak in proportion. A large diſcourſe to a little matter, is like a large garment to a little body, very unhandſome.

Fourthly, It is good to keep ſilence, that we may learn or be better fitted to ſpeak. One of the old Philoſophers enjoyned his Scholars five years ſilence, before he ſuffered them to ſpeak as Scholars; that is, to deliver any opinion in Philoſophy. We muſt learn to be ſilent before we can learn to ſpeak; much more before we can ſpeak learnedly. The direction which the Apoſtle gives about all women (1 Tim. 2. 11.) is not unuſeful; for ſome men, let them learn in ſilence.

Fifthly, It is good to keep ſilence, when we perceive we ſhould offend by ſpeaking. As there are ſome caſes in which we muſt ſpeak, how much ſoever men are offended; ſo it is a high point of prudence to avoid all unneceſſary offences.

Sixthly, 'Tis good to be ſilent, to ſhew our conſent and ſubmiſſion to what hath been rightly ſpoken; as alſo

Subjectionis ſignum eſt ſilere coram alio.

Seventhly, That we may further meditate upon and conſider of it. When Job ſaith, They kept ſilence at my counſel, we are to underſtand it of a ſilence ariſing from their conſent to and reverence of what, after their waiting, he had ſpoken; as if he had ſaid, they did not only wait to receive my counſel; but they ſubmitted to it. Silence is a ſign of ſubmiſſion both to the word and works of another. And thus the Prophet calls all fleſh to teſtifie their ſubmiſſion to the works of God (Hab. 2. 20.) The Lord is in his holy Temple, let all the earth keep ſilence before him: That is, let all ſubmit to his diſpenſations, both to what he is doing, and to what he will do. Another Prophet gives the ſame admonition upon the ſame ground (Zech. 2. 13.) Be ſilent, O all fleſh, before the Lord, for he is raiſed up out of his holy habitation: As if he had ſaid, 'Tis beſt for all fleſh, good and bad, to be quiet, and now to get their hearts into an humble ſubmitting frame to the will and pleaſure of God, for he is about to do ſome great work, he is not aſleep, but raiſed up out of his holy habitation; he is (as it were) come out of his houſe, and is upon his way and advancing towards you in ſome eminent manifeſtations of his power and wiſdom, of his righteouſneſs and juſtice, therefore let no murmurings nor diſcontented words be heard from any of your lips. To keep ſilence (in this ſence) ſpeaks a quiet and gracious reſignation of our ſelves, either to the Counſels and Commands of the Lord, or to his dealings and adminiſtrations.

Thus Job's Subjects, or thoſe over and among whom he govern'd, kept ſilence at his counſel: And this ſilence ſtands in a ſix-fold oppoſition,

First, To the denyal of what is ſaid.
Secondly, To murmuring at what is ſaid.
Thirdly, To reſiſting or oppoſing what is ſaid.
Fourthly, To neglecting what is ſaid.

Fifthly, To diſobeying or doing the contrary to what is ſaid.

Sixthly, This ſilence is oppoſed to the very deferring of our acceptance of or obedience to what is ſaid or given in Counſel. 'Tis alwayes our duty to keep ſilence in oppoſition to all theſe ſpeakings and actings, whenſoever or whatſoever God ſpeaks to us; and this ſilence is our duty alſo, when men (as Job did) ſpeak right and righteous things, according to the mind and will of God.

They kept ſilence at my Counſel.

But what's Counſel? When any thing is ſpoken in truth and faithfulneſs, whether it be by way of direction, or exhortation, or conſolation, we may call it Counſel in a large ſence. All the words of wiſdome are comprehended under two titles, Counſel and Reproof (Pro. 1.26.) Ye have ſet at nought all my Counſel, and would none of my Reproof; that is, ye have refuſed with indignation all that which I have ſpoken, either to direct you what to do, or to correct what you have done amiſs. Counſel ſtrictly taken is direction what to do in hard matters, in difficult caſes, it is the very Spirit and quinteſſence of our reaſon and underſtanding. Counſel is the iſſue and reſult of mans moſt ſerious meditations. Counſel is the thoughts of man made up; we may have many looſe ſcattered tranſient thoughts about matters; but when our thoughts are made up and fixed and faſhioned, when they are put into a due frame and order, adviſing proper means to honeſt ends, then they are Counſel.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Good Counſel is precious.

Be it in civil and political affaires, or be it in ſpiritual, good Counſel is a Jewel. They are wiſe who can give Counſel, and ſo are they who are willing to receive it. And ſome can give Counſel better then take it, and others can take Counſel better then give it. They are perect men who do both give and take it well; and they who are willing to take it, will riſe apace above their imperfecti-ons. Jobs people ſaid much for themſelves, while (in the manner already opened) they kept ſilence at his Counſel.

Obſerve, Secondly, It is the duty and ornament of Maſtrates, or men in power, to be able to give Counſel.

Eloquentia eſt copioſè loquens ſapientia. Cic. lib. 3. de Orat.

A Magiſtrate ſhould be a man of underſtanding, and a Maſter of reaſon. He ſhould be as much above the people in wiſdome as he is in power; he ſhould be as able to rule their judgments as their perſons. 'Tis fit Magiſtrates ſhould have their Counſel; for in the multitude of Counſellers there is ſafety (Prov. 11. 14.) But when Magiſtrates can give good Counſel, and ſee with their own eyes, that's their honour. Some weak Princes have been very happy and ſucceſsful in their Government, when, as they have had a wiſe Councel, ſo they have been willing to be adviſed by them; but this is rather to be governed then to be a Governour. And uſually thoſe Princes who have been weakeſt to give good Counſel, have been (for inſtance Rehoboam, 1 Kings 12. 8.) moſt wilful in refuſing it. And therefore the Lord threatens it as a ſore Judgment upon the Jewiſh Nation (Iſa. 3. 4.) I will give Children to be their Princes, and Babes ſhall rule over them. Which may be underſtood either of Children in age, who as yet have not attained to any maturity of years, much leſs of wiſdome and underſtanding to lead the people under them; or of Children in diſpoſition, who the older they are, the worſer they are, becauſe the more averſe to receive impreſſions from the counſel of thoſe who are truly wiſe and experienced in publick affaires. Of both or either of theſe ſorts of Children, we may expound that of the kingly Preacher (Eccleſ. 10.16.) Woe unto thee O Land, when thy King is a Child, being either unfit to give or unwilling to receive good Counſel when 'tis given. Jeſus Chriſt who is a King of Kings and Lord of Lords, and who hath the government upon his ſhoulders (Iſa. 9. 6.) hath this put by the Prophet among his other Royal titles, The Counſeller. As Jeſus Chriſt is the Prince of peace, ſo the Counſeller; as he hath all power, ſo he is able to mannage it, he can give Counſel as well as Commands to all his people. And doubtleſs, 'tis a great bleſſing to Nations when men of power are alſo men of Counſel and able to direct; when they who ſit at the helm know which way to ſteer, and how to make both their own courſe and the courſe of their people under them.

Thirdly, Obſerve, It is the duty of the people quietly to wait for and receive the counſel of thoſe that are in power over them.

Jobs people came to him for counſel, yea they waited for it, and kept ſilence when they had it. Here's the picture of a good Prince, and the picture of a good people; the Prince is giving counſel, and the people are attending him to receive it. And I may add, here's alſo the picture of a good Paſtour, of a gracious Miniſter, and a Godly people. The Paſtor is to give counſel from the Lord, in the great affairs of eternal life, according to the Soul-ſtate of every man, which is indeed of greater concernment then States and Kingdoms. And the people of God ought with all readineſs to give ear, to wait and keep ſilence at his counſel. When Cornelius had ſent for a Soul-Counſeller, the Apoſtle Peter, he tells him (Acts 10. 33.) Now therefore we are all here preſent before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God; we have waited for thee, we are ready to hear thee, and we will keep ſilence at thy word. It is ſaid in the Goſpel, that when Chriſt was preaching, the people were attentive to hear him (Luke 19. 48.) or (as we put in the Margin) hanged on him. They hung upon him hearing, as Bees (ſo ſome expound it) upon a flower, to ſuck out all the ſweetneſs and the honey of his holy and heavenly Counſels. Grace was powred into his lips (Pſal. 45. 2.) and he powred it out at his lips. Chriſt ſaith of his Spouſe, that her lips dropped like a honey-combe (Cant. 4. 11.) how much more did and do the lips of Chriſt?

Verſ. 22. After my words they ſpake not again, and my ſpeech dropped upon them.

In the former verſe we ſaw the great attendance and readineſs of the people to receive Jobs counſel; in this, we ſee they were fully ſatisfied with the counſel which he gave them.

After my words they ſpake not again.

They forbare to ſpeak, not only becauſe he being chief or Preſident of the Councel, ſpake laſt, and ſo gave the concluding opinion; but they forbare to ſpeak after him, as I apprehend, upon this threefold conſideration.

Firſt, Becauſe he ſpake ſo fully, that nothing could be added.

Secondly, Becauſe he ſpake ſo truly, that nothing could be objected.

Thirdly, Becauſe he ſpake ſo clearly, that nothing could be doubted. There's no reaſon, when a man hath ſpoken ſuch words as theſe, why any man ſhould ſpeak a word after them, unleſs it be to approve and thank the ſpeaker.

שנה Iterum ſecundo vel denuo agere.

The Hebrew (ſtrictly rendred) is, After my words they did not iterate, duplicate, or reply, they did not turn upon me again, to draw the matter into further debate; when I had done, there was no repeating. The word is ſo tranſlated (Pro. 17. 9.) He that repeateth a matter, ſeparateth very friends; if he that hath heard a matter, will needs be a tale-bearer, he will alſo be a peace-breaker; or, he that looketh again and again; that is, over-curiouſly and critically into every word ſpoken or thing done (the Text is indifferent to either reading) by another, to eſpy and cenſure every ſlip and failing in it, this man will ſoon forfeit his beſt friend. Love doth not like theſe kind of repetitions or ſpeakings again. A friend doth not love to hear either the courteſies repeated that have been received by him, or the infirmities that have paſſed from him. Solomon uſeth the ſame word in that advice (Pro. 24. 21.) My Son, fear God and the King, and meddle not with them that are given to change; that love to turn from every thing, and fix in nothing: that are alwayes repeating matters, but never ſtating them. They turn and change as often as the year, yea often in a year. This word in the Original ſignifies a year, becauſe of its continual changes, both by reaſon of its alteration and iteration. Yet further (which comes near Jobs ſcope and purpoſe) the word here uſed ſignifies any oppoſing of or differing from what is done or ſpoken; ſo Mr. Broughton tranſlates, After my words they differed not; they were ſo far from reſiſting or riſing up againſt my power, that they did not ſo much as diſſent from my opinion or judgment; nor did I leave any breach or diſſent among them; my words reconciled and healed all their differences,I made them all of one mind, and agreed them in my determination of their matters.

More diſtinctly, when Job ſaith, After my words they ſpake not again; we may underſtand it theſe four wayes.

Firſt, They ſpake not again by way of addition, as if I had not ſpoken enough to the point, but needed a ſupplement from them.

Secondly, They ſpake not again, by way of diſſatisfaction. or as not being pleaſed with what I had ſpoken. When Eliſha gave Naaman counſel (2 Kings 10. 11.) Go waſh in Jordan; Naaman was diſſatisfied, and ſpake again, I thought the Prophet would have come out, and have laid his hands upon me; he expected more; he did not reſt in the word of the Prophet, as that blind man did in the word of Chriſt (John 9. 7.) Go waſh in the Pool of Siloam : he went his way therefore, and waſhed, and came ſeeing. When Job gave the word of direction, no man ſpake again in a way of diſſatisfaction, all were ready to do as he directed. Many good men have ſpoken again when God hath ſpoken; and though they have not reſiſted his word, yet they have had many fears and ſcruples about it. See how Moſes, a holy man, was diſſatisfied when God bid him go to Pharoah (Exod. 4 10, 11.) ſaith he, I am not eloquent (or a man of words) I cannot ſpeak, I am ſlow of ſpeech, and of a ſlow tongue, I am heavy mouth'd (as the Original Text ſpeaks) or meal mouth'd, I am unfit to ſpeak at Pharoahs Court; Courtiers have nimble tongues, and oyled mouths, I am none of thoſe. Therefore the Lord doth at once reprove and encourage him; Who hath made mans mouth? Or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the ſeeing, or the blind? Have not I the Lord? As if the Lord had ſaid, fear not Moſes, I who have given thee a command to go and ſpeak to Pharaoh, can give thee an ability, yea a facility and fluency of ſpeech. Thus alſo Jeremie ſpake again (Chap. 1. 6.) and ſo did Ezekiel (Chap. 4. 14.) as diſſatisfied with the Lords Commiſſion, till he gave incouragement to the one, and ſome diſpenſation as to the ſtrictneſs of his command, to the other. Yea Peter himſelf having heard the Lords voice in a viſion, ſaying, Ariſe Peter, kill and eat; ſpake again (Acts 10. 14, 16.) not ſo Lord (he was not ſatisfied) I have never eaten any thing common or unclean. Jobs happineſs was very great in this; his Auditors ſpake not again as ſcrupled at or diſſatisfied with what he had ſpoken.

Thirdly, Much leſs did they ſpeak again by way of open and profeſſed contradiction, as Paul's Jewiſh hearers did at Antioch, when he had preacht the whole body of Goſpel-Divinity to them, both from the holy Propheſies and Hiſtories of Chriſt; a Sermon it was ſo full of light and life, that the Gentiles, that is, the greater part of the Gentiles who heard it, were ſo far from ſpeaking again, that is, from gain ſaying, or contradicting it, that they deſired Paul to ſpeak the ſame things again (Acts 13. 42.) The Gentiles beſought that theſe words might be preached to them the next Sabbath. But (verſ. 45.) when the Jews ſaw the multitude, they were filled with envie, and ſpake againſt thoſe things which were ſpoken by Paul, contradicting and blaſpheming. The Prophet Jeremie met with ſuch a ſpeaking again, after he had ſpoken (Jer. 43. 1, 2.) And it came to paſs, that when Jeremiah had made an end of ſpeaking to all the people, all the words of the Lord their God, for which the Lord their God had ſent him to them, even all theſe words : Then ſpake Azariah the Son of Hoſhaiah, and Johanan the Son of Kareah, and all the proud men, ſaying unto Jeremiah, thou ſpeakeſt falſly : The Lord our God hath not ſent thee to ſay, go not into Egypt to ſojourne there. Theſe men were grown as impudent as they were diſobedient; they did not go behind the door, but gave the Prophet the lye to his face. Yea Jeſus Chriſt himſelf who ſpake as never man ſpake, had them that ſpake thus after him (Heb. 12. 3.) He endured the contradicting of ſinners againſt himſelf : Many oppoſed both his words, and works. In this ſence the Apoſtle (Titus 2. 9.) forbids Servants to ſpeak again, after the Word of their Maſters. Servants muſt not diſpute their Maſters orders, but do them; they muſt not queſtion, much leſs contradict, but readily obey in whatſoever they are bound to obey. Thoſe Servants quite forget or miſtake their duty, who will be ſpeaking again, and again, after their Maſters word, rather then do it once.

Fourthly, When Job ſaith, After my words they ſpake not again, his meaning may be this, they did not go to any other Oracle for counſel or better reſolution in that matter. It is uſual with Clients in weighty and difficult caſes, to take advice, firſt of one Counceller, and then of another, hoping to have ſomewhat more light in their cauſe from the ſecond then they have had from the firſt; and when dark and doubting Souls have been with one Miniſter, to hear what he can ſay, they will yet go to another, and another, for ſatisfaction. But ſaith Job, After my words they ſpake not again, but did acquieſs in my opinion.

I ſhall only add by way of Caution, that we owe no ſuch blind obedience to any man living, as to take up all he ſaith by an implicit faith, and not to ſpeak after him, not to examine the reaſonableneſs or ask a reaſon of what he ſaith. The Apoſtles rule is (1 Theſ. 5. 20.) Prove all things, hold faſt that which is good; we muſt conſider and argue about the opinions and poſitions of the wiſeſt and holieſt men in all things, in holy and ſpiritual things eſpecially, whether they be ſuitable to the mind of God or no. The Apoſtle John gives both a negative and a poſitive command about this (1 Eph. 4. 1.) Beloved (ſaith he) believe not every Spirit : Try the Spirits whether they are of God: Try them by the touchſtone of truth, whether they ſpeak according to truth. Thus when the Apoſtle preached (Acts 17. 11.) The Bereans ſpeak again, though not by way of oppoſition and contradiction, yet by way of examination, whether the things which he ſpake were ſo or no, and they were accounted honourable for doing ſo. The affirmation and authority of man, is no ſufficient ground for our faith; nor may we ſwear unto the words of the greateſt Maſters, whether of words or reaſon. This is due to none but God, and to him 'tis highly due. After his words we muſt not ſpeak, no not by way of examination; the word of God muſt be received for its own Authority, the Scripture hath its perfection and proof in it ſelf, it doth not receive confirmation or addition from man, nor may any man ſpeak after it, to make the leaſt addition. The word of God concludes with a dreadful ſentence againſt thoſe who adventure to add one word or tittle to the matter of it (Rev. 22. 18.) If any man ſhall add unto theſe things, God ſhall add unto him the plagues that are written in this Book. Who would add words to the words of God, when God tells him that he will add plagues to them that add words. Man muſt not dare to add a word to the word of Gods precept or promiſe, to the word of Gods command or threatning, to the word of any divine doctrine or propheſie. This honour belongs abſolutely to God beyond all men, that no man muſt ſpeak after him. And Job had this honour beyond many men, yea beyond moſt men that ever lived, all were content to ſit down ſilent when he had ſpoken. After my words they ſpake not again.

And my ſpeech dropped upon them.

Theſe words carry an alluſion to rain. The old Prophets were called droppers, and their propheſying was called dropping (Ezek. 20. 46.) Son of man, ſet thy face toward the South, and drop toward the South, and propheſie againſt the Forreſt of the South Feild. In this language the Prophet Amos reproves Amaziah the Prieſt of Bethel (Amos 7. 16.) Thou ſayeſt propheſie not againſt Iſrael, and drop not thy word againſt the houſe of Iſaac. The Sermons of the Prophets were called droppings, eſpecially when (as theſe inſtanced in) they denounced threatnings and terrours from the Lord, which were to fall upon Nations like fierce and ſtormy ſhowers, with much force and violence; but I rather conceive that their propheſies were generally ſo expreſſed, becauſe their buſineſs was to ſoften the hearts of the people, and make them fruitful, as the Clouds of Heaven do the Earth with drops of rain. This it ſeems was a well known metaphor in Jobs time.

מטפים Sallatores, quod illorũ officiũ erat populum verbo dei tanquam pluvia irrigare.

My ſpeech (ſaith he) dropped upon them.

It did not drop beſide them, nor did it drop out of them; againſt which the Apoſtle cautions the Hebrews (Chap. 2. 1.) To give the moſt earneſt heed to the things which they had heard, leaſt at any time they ſhould let them ſlip or drop out of them, as water doth out of a leakie Veſſel. Some hearers are like Stones or ſtopt Bottels, into which the word cannot drop, though it drop upon them : And others are like Sieves or crackt Bottels, out of which the word quickly drops, and they become dry and empty.

Secondly, When Job ſaith, My ſpeech dropped upon them, it implyeth that he ſpake gently and ſweetly to them; he did not fall upon them like a Storm, his words were not like hailſtones or thunder-bolts, but like drops of rain. I grant, that ſome men muſt be ſtorm'd, elſe they will not be taken. The word muſt come down ſometimes like Hail-ſtones or Thunder-bolts, but uſually like a ſoft and refreſhing ſhower. Jobs word dropt ſweetly: His hearers did not ſay as ſome ſaid in the Goſpel when Chriſt himſelf ſpake, This is a hard ſaying, who can bear it? Drops of rain are ſoft, and eaſily born, they break no bones. Droppings in the houſe upon our beds and ſtools (to which the contentions of a Wife are elegantly compared, Prov. 19. 13.) are very troubleſome and afflicting, but droppings in the Feild upon our Graſs and Corn is very welcome and refreſhing.

Thirdly, When Job ſaith, his words dropped upon them, there is (at leaſt) an intimation of his care and prudence, in accommodating himſelf to his hearers, or that he ſpake (which Chriſt is ſaid to do) as they were able to receive it. A Veſſel with a narrow mouth or neck, cannot receive the water by whole Bucket-fulls, but you muſt poure it in by degrees, or let it drop in, as from a ſtill. The latine word, to drop, is the ſame with our Engliſh, to diſtil or Limbeck. And then properly the ſpeaker droppeth his words, when he ſpeaks according to the capacity of thoſe who hear it. He that ſpeaks hard points and high flown notions, or who ſpeaks in a high language about any point to them that are low in parts, ſpeaks more to ſet forth himſelf then to profit them. The Apoſtle adviſeth thoſe that teach others, to divide the word aright, that is, to adminiſter to every man his proper portion, as he is fit and able to receive it. For as in regard of the matter, that which is accommodate to the condition of one man, is not to another; One muſt have milk, and another muſt have meat, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of his own Miniſtry to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 3.2.) And again (Heb. 5. 13, 14.) Every one that uſeth milk is unskilful in the word of righteouſneſs, for he is a babe; but ſtrong meat belongeth to them that be of full age, &c. Now as we muſt diſtinguiſh the matter of our Miniſtration, ſo the manner of it; ſome can receive much at once, others can take but a bit, a ſpoonful, or a drop or two at a time; or how much ſoever they receive, they muſt receive it but by drops. And ſo when the Prophets denounced Judgments, they may be ſaid to drop them, becauſe they did not declare the whole diſpleaſure of God, nor open all the treaſures of his wrath at once, but gradually, or by drops. As we call ſome leſſer ſhowers, heat drops, which are an argument of a greater rain behind; ſo the Prophets are ſaid to drop ſome angry words among or upon the people, when the Lord was purpoſed to ſend down mighty ſhowers, and a ſweeping rain afterwards to carry them away as with a flood.

Stillare prophetas idioma ſcripturarum eſt; quod non totam ſimul dei inferant iram, ſed parvas ſtillas comminatione denuncient. Hier. in Amos cap. 7.

Fourthly, This dropping of the word may reſemble the dropping of rain from the houſe-eves; we ſay the eves of the houſes drop. And as ſuch droppings wear the ſtones, and make them hollow by continual falling; ſo the ſtony heart of man is wrought by the frequent hearing of the word. And hence Laſtly, I conceive this dropping denotes, generally, in Scripture, the efficacy of divine or heavenly doctrine, which falling upon, and gently ſoaking or ſinking into the Soul, doth not only moiſten and ſoften it, but nouriſh and refreſh it, and cauſeth it to bring forth fruit, according to the nature of the ſoile, of the ſeed ſown, or trees planted upon it. As will appear more fully in the opening of the next verſe.

Verſ. 23. And they waited for me as for the rain, &c.

They waited for me, that is, for my Counſel, as he ſpake at verſe 21. They waited for me as for the rain, that is, that I ſhould drop upon them like rain, as he ſpake in the former part of this verſe. It was propheſied of Chriſt (Pſ. 72. 6.) He ſhall come down like rain upon the mowen graſs; which many of the ancients following the Septuagint and the Vulgar Latine tranſlations render, He ſhall come down like rain upon a fleece of wool, alluding to the wetting of Gideons fleece (Judg. 6. 37.) And 'tis true, the Original word ſignifieth a fleece of wool as well as the mowen graſs, yet the words following in the ſame verſe (as ſhowers that water the Earth) ſeem rather to juſtifie our reading, He ſhall come down like rain upon the mowen graſs. So indeed Jeſus Chriſt came down, not only to the comforting but ſaving of millions of Souls, who elſe had not only been parched, but muſt have periſhed (though not conſumed) with the ſcotching fiery beams and everlaſting burnings of the wrath of God. And as Jobs hearers waited for him as for the rain, ſo much more did the old believers before he came in the fleſh, and many now under the legal terror, or the hidings of his favour, wait for his coming in the Spirit, as the Earth in a time of drought waiteth for the rain. They waited for me (ſaith Job) as for the rain.

And they opened their mouth wide, as for the latter rain.

To open the mouth, is a preparatory to ſpeaking; 'tis often ſo expreſſed in the Goſpel, Then Jeſus opened his mouth and taught or ſpake; but here opening the mouth refers not to ſpeaking, but to ſilent hearing, or it notes a Soul-deſiring, hungring, thirſting, greedily looking for holy and wholeſome Counſel. As the Earth when it wants rain, opens its mouth, and by its clefts and chaps, doth (as it were) cry to the Lord for a draught of rain to quench its thirſt. Thus the people came to Job with open mouthes, that is, enlarged deſires to receive his Counſel; they opened their mouthes as a hungry man for wholeſome food, or as a man opens his mouth for the freſh air, when he is almoſt ſtifled, or over-heated. David ſaith (Pſal. 119. 131.) I opened my mouth and panted, for I longed after thy Commandements; his heart did work for life after the word of life.

Further, This phraſe of opening the mouth, in Scripture notes a readineſs to give out as well as to take in. Paul ſaith to the Corinthians (2 Cor. 6. 11.) Our mouth is open to you, our heart is enlarged: why was his mouth open? Not to receive any thing from the Corinthians, but to beſtow ſome thing upon them, he was deſirous to beſtow ſome ſpiritual gift, that they might be edified and comforted. Pauls mouth was open to fill them with the treaſures of Goſpel knowledg, not to be filled by them. But moſt uſually, a man is ſaid to open his mouth for receiving; They opened their mouth wide,

As for the latter rain.

We find this diſtinction of rain into the former and latter in many places of Scripture (Deut. 11. 13, 14.) It ſhall come to paſs, if you ſhall hearken diligently to my Commandments, &c. that I will give you the rain of your land in his due ſeaſon, the firſt rain and the latter rain, that thou mayeſt gather in thy Corn, and thy Wine, and thine Oyle. Read the ſame diſtinction (Jer. 5. 24. James 5. 7.)

But why doth Job mention the latter rain, and put an Emphaſis upon that, rather then the former rain? Why doth he not ſay, they waited for me as for the former rain?

I anſwer, Firſt, more generally; Job uſeth thoſe expreſſions in this place, which might moſt properly ſet forth the great longing of the people to hear him ſpeak, and their delight when they heard him ſpeak; and therefore that the latter rain carrieth ſomewhat in it more then ordinary cannot be doubted.

I anſwer, Secondly, Both the former and the latter rain were exceedingly deſired and prized. The former rain falling in the ſeventh moneth, which was ſeed time, prepared the Earth both for the receiving and bringing forth of the ſeed, and was therefore much deſired; but the latter rain was much more deſired, as may appear (Jer. 3. 3.) Therefore the ſhowers have been withholden, and there hath been no latter rain; that is, none of that rain which is ſo much deſired, as falling in the firſt moneth called according to the Syriac Nyſan, but according to the Hebrew Abib, which ſignifies an ear of Corn, becauſe in that moneth their Corn was eared, and then rain was exceeding welcome, for the filling of the ear, and ripening of the Corn; and upon this ground the Prophet (Zech. 10. 1.) bids them ask even that rain of the Lord, and he would give it, Ask ye of the Lord rain, in the time of the latter rain, as if that were the ſpecial ſeaſon for rain to be looked after and prayed for. And when Solomon would ſhew how deſirable a thing the favour of a King is, he puts it into that compariſon (Prov. 16. 15.) In the light of the Kings countenance is life, and his favour is as a cloud of the latter rain. So that, when he ſaith, They opened their mouth wide, as for the latter rain, the meaning is, they did wait for my Counſel as a thing moſt deſirable, and profitable, as that which was ſweet and pleaſant to them, even as the latter rain. And poſſibly when he ſaith, They opened their mouthes wide, as for the latter rain, it may intimate, that they did importunately beg of him that he would comfort and refreſh their minds with ſome wholeſome and ſeaſonable Counſel, even as men uſe by earneſt prayer to beg of God that he would ſend the latter rain in the ſeaſon of it.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Good Counſel and inſtruction are to the mind of man as rain is to the Earth.

Moſes being to ſpeak his laſt to Iſrael, ſaith (Deut. 32. 1, 2.) My doctrine ſhall drop as the rain; my ſpeech ſhall diſtill as the dew, as the ſmall rain upon the tender herb, and as the ſhowers upon the graſs. If a Preachers ſpeech be not ſuch, he is but a Cloud without rain. Good Counſel or holy doctrine, may be compared to rain in two reſpects.

Firſt, 'Tis like rain in regard of its Original, good Counſel comes, as the rain, from Heaven, 'tis water from above; ſavory doctrine is not of an Earthly extraction, God is the ſpring and Author of it. All Scripture is of divine inſpiration; holy men ſpake as they were moved by the holy Ghoſt. The Apoſtle Paul gave thanks without ceaſing, becauſe when the Theſſalonians received the word of God, which they heard of him, and of his fellow-labourers in the Goſpel, they received it not as the word of man, but, as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh in them that believe (1 Theſ. 2. 13.) Though the moſt faithful Miniſters of the Goſpel cannot now ſpeak with the ſame authority and infallibility as the Apoſtles then did, yet they ſhould ſpeak nothing in the name of God, but what is the word of God, and, unleſs upon ſome examination it prove otherwiſe, what they ſpeak ſhould be received as the word of God. No man ought to vent his private ſence in the name of God, and woe be to thoſe who judg what is ſo ſpoken to be but of man, becauſe 'tis ſpoken but by a man. As God is the Father of the natural rain (he hath the key of the Clouds in his hand) ſo he is the Father of the ſpiritual rain. Divine truth is nothing elſe but the diſcovery of the heart and mind of God. All that wiſdome which is firſt pure and then peaceable, comes from above, and calls for our conformity to the mind of God.

Secondly, Holy Counſel is as the rain, if we conſider the effects of it.

For firſt, as the rain ſoftens the Earth; ſo doth that the heart. The Earth is like Iron, till the Lord watereth the ridges of it, and makes it ſoft with ſhowers (Pſal. 65. 10.) Such is the heart of man, hard as Iron, even harder then the nether milſtone, till the Lord by his word and Spirit is pleaſed to moiſten and mollifie it.

Secondly, As the rain ſoftens the Earth, ſo it refreſheth and reneweth the face of it; the Trees, and all Plants, the Flowers, the Corn, the Graſs, even all Vegetatives, or whatſoever groweth or moveth upon the face of the Earth, are renewed by the rain. Thus the word and holy Counſels of God, make a new face of things in the Soul. That which was dead gets life, that which was weak gets ſtrength, that which was withering looks freſh and green, Yea this rain doth not only renew the face or actings of the Soul, but (as a means in the hand of God) it reneweth the heart, or makes the heart new, ſo that as they who are decayed in ſpirituals are bettered and made more ſpiritual, ſo they who were altogether carnal are made ſpiritual by this rain.

Thirdly, The rain doth not only refreſh the Earth, but makes it fruitful. That Earth is curſed upon which it raineth not (2 Sam. 1. 21.) much more that which is not fruitful, though it be rained upon. Under this ſimilitude the Apoſtle earneſtly and rightly provokes the Hebrews to fruitfulneſs under the teachings of the Goſpel (Heb. 6. 7, 8.) For the Earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dreſſed, receiveth bleſſing from God. But that which beareth Thorns and Bryers, is rejected and is nigh unto curſing, whoſe end is to burned. But (as he ſweetly inſinuates in the next words) Beloved, we are perſwaded better things of you; that is, you (I hope) having had ſo much of the heavenly rain ſhowered down upon you, will not only not be barren, nor bring forth Bryers, but abundance of good fruit. This the Apoſtle affirms of the Coloſſians, to their comfort and high commendation (Col. 1. 6.) The word of the truth of the Goſpel is come unto you, as it is in all the World, and bringeth forth fruit, as it doth alſo in you ſince the day you heard of it, and knew the grace of God in truth. We may know many, yea, I ſuppoſe all the truths of the grace of God, and yet not at all know the grace of God in truth. But if where the word of the truth of the Goſpel comes, it cometh alſo in truth, they who receive it cannot but be fruitful. The rain of the word falls by direction; ſome have it not at all (when their Neighbours, like Gideons fleece, are wet with it, they like the Earth round about are dry) theſe muſt needs be unfruitful; others receive this word-rain (how much or how long ſoever it falls among them) only at the ears, it wets only the outſide of them, but ſoaks not in, theſe alſo remain unfruitful. But whenſoever the rain of the word, like (as we call it) a good ground-ſhower, goes to the root, the heart and conſcience of man, which is the ſame with that expreſſion of the Apoſtle to the Coloſſians, if it be known in truth, the Soul can no more withhold its fruit, then good ground can when ſeaſonably and ſufficiently rained upon. The Apoſtle Peter (2 Eph. 1. 5, 6, 7.) exhorts the Saints to much diligence in adding grace to grace, and concludes (verſ. 8.) For if theſe things be in you, and abound, they make you that you ſhall neither be barren, nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. But why doth the Apoſtle ſay, if theſe things be in you, they make you that you ſhall not be unfruitful in the knowledg of Chriſt, ſeeing theſe are our fruitfulneſs? I conceive the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the manifeſtation of their fruitfulneſs, not of the manner of the cauſation of it; as if he had ſaid, by theſe things being and abounding in you, it will appear that you are not barren nor unfruitful in the knowledg of Chriſt. For indeed the knowledg of Chriſt, which comes to us in the rain of the Goſpel, is that, which gives all thoſe graces both their being and abounding in us, and makes us that we cannot be barren nor unfruitful.

Further, This ſpiritual rain hath ſome effects, for which there is no paralel in the natural rain; as firſt (which was intimated before) it changeth the very nature of the ſoil. Natural rain doth only draw out that vertue and fatneſs which is in the Earth; whereas this ſpiritual rain falling upon hearts as barren as the Wilderneſs, makes them fruitful, like a Paradiſe or the Garden of God; yea falling upon a Rock, a flinty Rock, it hath (through the preſence of the holy Spirit going with it) a power to transform it into good ground fit to be ploughed or planted for ſpiritual uſes. And again, ſecondly, whereas natural rain draws forth the weeds and makes them proſper, this rain kills and withers them, even all thoſe luſts which dayly grow out of our hearts, and often ſhew themſelves in our lives. The rain of the word nouriſhes nothing but our graces, and our holineſs. And therefore the Apoſtle treating of this ſpiritual rain (Heb. 6. 8.) concludes that ground under rejection which being rained upon brings forth Bryars and Thorns, yea that it is nigh unto curſing, and the end of it is burning. If they who are thus watered bring forth weeds, they have nothing to expect next but fire, they and their weeds ſhall ſurely be bundled up together and caſt into everlaſting burnings.

Secondly, Job being able and ready to give good Counſel, they waited for it as for rain, and opened their mouth wide, as for the latter rain.

Hence Obſerve, All good Counſel, eſpecially the ſaving doctrine of the Goſpel, ſhould be as welcome to us as the rain, as the latter rain.

The word of truth and grace is the moſt deſirable thing in the world; and they that know either the worth of it, or their own want of it, cannot but deſire it, as the Earth deſireth rain; O what longings, what thirſtings are there in poor humbled parched Souls, for the word of God! they eſteem it more then the expected rain, more then their appointed food, as was ſhewed at the Twelfth verſe of the Thirty-ſecond Chapter of this Book. If a man be hungry, a little a little bidding will ſerve the turn to perſwade him to eat; Nature teaches men to eat when they are hungry, to drink when thirſty, and to look for rain when the earth is dry; and doth not grace teach and provoke us to pray and wait for ſpiritual food and rain, that our ſouls may live and fructifie! How forward are we to pray for natural rain, in its ſeaſon, and the Lord looks that we ſhould; he loves to be entreated for it: And ſhall we be backward to receive ſpiritual rain, which (though it be ſometimes more, yet) is at all times ſeaſonable! When once we are ſenſible of our ſpiritual dryneſs and barrenneſs, of our wants and weakneſſes, we ſhall as earneſtly deſire and prize the good counſels, the feeding raines of the Word, as ever we did rain in the extreameſt heat of the dryeſt Summer. 'Tis much to be lamented, 'tis to be lamented with ſhowers of teares, that thoſe ſhowers of holy inſtruction are ſo little valued and deſired; how much more is it to be lamented, that many wiſh there might be no more of this rain, that theſe drops might drop no more, that theſe Heavens over them might be as braſs, and the bottles of theſe clouds ſtop for ever. And as many think we have too much of this rain, ſo others are afraid of it; and therefore they get to ſhelter, as men do in a rainy day, leſt they ſhould wet their fine cloaths, or take cold by it. And whereas, they are moſt unwilling to be in the common rain who have their beſt clothes on, they only are unwilling to come into this rain who have their worſt; O how loth are ſinners (who have nothing on them but the filthy garments and rotten rags of old Adam) to come into this rain! And 'tis rare to find or hear of Job's hearers any where, ſuch, I mean, as open their mouths wide for holy counſel as for the latter rain. The men of the world are like the land of Egypt, from whence the Iſraelites came, of which Moſes ſaith (Deut. 11. 10.) Thou watered'ſt it with thy foot; that is, by digging channels in the earth, thou didſt conveigh water to it; But the people of God are like the land of Canaan (to which the Iſraelites were going) of which Moſes ſaith at the eleventh verſe of the ſame Chapter, It drinketh water of the rain of heaven. Earthly water will ſerve their turn who are earthly; but they who are heavenly, or are to be made heavenly, muſt have water from heaven.

I ſhall conclude with that word, that notable word of the Lord concerning his own word, under this continued Metaphor or Allegory of rain (Iſa. 55. 10, 11.) As the rain cometh down and the ſnow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give ſeed to the ſower, and bread to the eater; ſo ſhall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: It ſhall not return unto me void, but it ſhall accompliſh that which I pleaſe, and it ſhall proſper in the thing whereto I ſent it. What the Prophet diſcourſeth and affirmeth here concerning that ſpecial word of God, his word of promiſe for pardon and reconciliation, is true concerning the whole counſel of God revealed to us in his word, it returneth not (as the rain and ſnow do not) till it hath watered every ſoul it is ſent to. Some ſlight the word preacht (as they do an ordinary ſhower) not conſidering that God ſends it, who never ſent, nor did, any thing in vain. And whatſoever the thoughts of vain men are, it will appear at laſt, that not only no whole ſhower, but not any one drop of it was either ſent or returned in vain. Though men make no preſent account of it, yet God will have an account of it hereafter; He will enquire whether we have been bettered, and made fruitful by it; He will enquire what we have brought forth, and how much. As the rain and the ſnow do not return back without accompliſhing that which God pleaſeth, ſo neither ſhall his word; an effect it ſhall have either to convert or to condemn, it will be a ſavour of life or of death to every ſoul that hears it. And if Sermons be not as ſhowers to refreſh, they will make a deluge to overflow. As once the world was overwhelmed with a deluge of water, ſo it will (in this ſence) again; and they who are not made fruitful by ſhowers of Goſpel-doctrine, ſhall be ſunk, choaked, and drowned in them. It is ſad to periſh for want of this word-rain, or rain of the word; but it is much more ſad to periſh in it and by it.

VERS. 24, 25.

If I laughed on them, they believed it not, and the light of my countenance they caſt not down.

I choſe out their way, and ſat as chief, and dwelt as a King in the Army, as one that comforteth the mourners.

JOB ſtill proceeds to ſhew what reaſon he once had to be very confident, that as he then was, ſo he ſhould continue in a flouriſhing condition, that neither his root nor fruit ſhould fail, but he dying in his neſt, ſhould multiply his dayes as the ſand. This he argueth, as more then probable, from the ſame Topicks as before, for the general matter of them, though here otherwiſe moulded and expreſſed; that is, from the reverence which all men ſhewed him, as alſo from the good offices which he was ready at all times to do for all deſerving men.

Verſe. 24. If I laughed on them, they believed it not.

Laughter is proper to man as the effect and iſſue of his reaſon. For though many laugh when they have no reaſon to laugh, yet none can laugh who have no reaſon. And therefore though laughter be attributed to thoſe things which not only are without reaſon, but without ſenſe, yet 'tis ſo only improperly or metaphorically in alluſion to man.

The word here uſed is applyed to a threefold laughter in Scripture.

Firſt, To a ſcorning or a deriding laughter, ſo in the thirty ninth of this Book at the ſeventh verſe; God, deſcribing The wild aſſe, ſaith, He ſcorneth the multitude of the City, his houſe is the wilderneſs, and the barren land his dwelling, what cares he for crowded Cities? We have the ſame notion of laughter (Pſal. 2. 4.) The Lord beholding what work the world was at, the people raging, and the Princes taking counſel together, and all againſt the Lord and againſt his annoynted, the Spirit of God there tells us what work, or rather (if I may ſo ſpeak with reverence) what ſport God was at, He that ſitteth in the heavens ſhall laugh, the Lord ſhall have them in deriſion: the Lord ſcornes all the rage of the people, all the plots and counſels of the Princes, as knowing that they ſhall never be able to hinder his deſign, nor give check to his bleſſed plot and counſel, in ſetting his King upon the holy hill of Zion.

Secondly, Laughter ſignifies a pleaſant ſpirit and cheerful countenance, or ſmiling in good will (Eccl. 10. 19.) A feaſt is made for laughter; that is, a feaſt is not only for the repair of nature, or for ſtrengthning of the body, which is the ordinary end of eating, but we make feaſts for honeſt mirth, and to ſhew good will one to another, by loving and friendly entertainment.

Thirdly, Laughter imports any freedom and affability of behaviour towards others, and ſo 'tis oppoſed not only to ſorrow and melancholy, but to ſeverity and auſteerneſs. (Prov. 29. 9.) If a wiſe man contendeth with a fooliſh man, whether he rage or laugh, there is no reſt. Some make the Antecedent to the Relative He to be the fooliſh man, and then the ſence is, whether a fool or wicked man be in a good temper or a bad, a wiſe man ſhall never make a good end with him. But I rather conceive, that He, in the latter part of the verſe, referrs to the wiſe man in the former; and then the meaning is clearly this, if a wiſe or godly man, hath to do with a fool, with any perverſe or obſtinate ſinner, either to convince him of the evil which he hath done, or to perſwade him to do better; whether the wiſe man be angry (as the text ſhould rather be rendred then by the word rage) that is, whether the wiſe man deal ſharply with the fool (as he deſerves) or laugh, that is, deal mildly and ſweetly with him, there is no reſt; that is, the fool will not be ſatisfied, nor ſit down quietly under any way of conviction. Thus it is with wicked men, not only while wiſe men, but while the moſt wiſe God hath to do with them, either immediately by himſelf (alluring them by his favours, or ſcourging them with his rods) or mediately by his Miniſters, either offering them promiſes of mercy, or threatning them with judgments; let God have to do with them in all or any of theſe wayes, there's no reſt; they will not ceaſe to provoke him by their folly. This is the ſpirit of folly (to touch that only by the way) which Chriſt at once diſcovered and reproved in the Jews (Matth. 11. 16, 17.) Whereunto ſhall I liken this generation? It is like little children ſitting in the market place, and crying to their fellows, and ſaying, we have piped unto you, and ye have not danced, we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented; that is, ye have not been won to a conformity by any form of diſpenſation, or way of Miniſtry, neither by the ſtrictneſs of John, nor by my ſociableneſs and openneſs in dealing with you: But you have put a croſs and crooked interpretation, not only upon our anger and ſorrow, but alſo upon our cheerſulneſs and laughter.

When Job ſaith, If I laughed on them, we are not to underſtand it of the laughter of ſcorn and deriſion; but of the laughter of courteſie and affability, ſuch as we commonly ſhew towards our friends at feaſts; as if he had ſaid, If I uſed an open, free, and familiar courteous carriage towards them, what then?

They believed it not. Why not? Did they think that Job's face was (not the diſcovery, but) the diſguiſe of his heart, or that he put on a cuzzening countenance when he came ſmiling among them? Did they think that when he appearingly laughed, he was really angry, or covered his ſecret diſpleaſure with a ſeeming pleaſantneſs. It is (I grant) a too frequent practice with many, both to fain that love which is not in them, and to diſſemble that wrath which is; their words and looks are ſmoother then Oyl, when drawn ſwords are in their hearts. As when ſome mourn and weep, we have no reaſon to believe they pity us, their tears are falſe: So when others rejoyce and ſmile, we have no reaſon to believe they love us, or delight in us, for their laughter is falſe and flattering. Surely Job was not guilty of, much leſs given to, leaſt of all given up (as ſome have been) to this piece of unmanly policy: That was no Maxime or principle of his King-craft (which ſome have boaſted in) He that knows not how to diſſemble, knows not how to live. Job was a plain-hearted man, a man perfect and upright both towards God and towards man. And as he had ſo much courage that he durſt appear what he was; So he had too much honeſty and integrity not to be what he appeared. But if he was a man of this ingenuous ſpirit and temper, why did not the people, who addreſſed to him, or attended upon him, believe it when he laughed?

I anſwer, Firſt, Theſe words repreſent Job a man of that eſteem and reverence among the people, for wiſdom and ſincerity, that if at any time he was pleaſant in his deportment towards them, if at any time he did attemper his gravity with mirth, and ſhew his affability as well as his Authority, yet they would not believe that it proceeded from any lightneſs of ſpirit, or vanity of mind, but interpreted his very mirth ſeriouſneſs, and his laughter grave. His jeſt had a kind of earneſt in it, and his ſmiles did not at all leſſen his repute. He maintained or kept up his reverence in the midſt of his recreations, and gave no man occaſion to think he was loſt in his pleaſure, while he took it.

Jocus non redoleat levitatem, & hilaritas authoritatis non minuat gratiā. Bern. Ep. 227.

In tanta opinione eram apud illos, ut etiam jocabundi ſermonem ſerio acciperent. Jun.

Secondly, If I laughed on them they believed it not; that is, they did not grow familiar with me preſently: To this ſence Mr. Broughton tranſlates fully; When I laughed on them they would not be bold. Though I did let my ſelf down to them ſometimes, yet they never came up to me, nor bore themſelves as if I had been their equal, or their fellow.

Thirdly, We may expound theſe words as an argument of the peoples high content to ſee him merry and pleaſed: As if he had ſaid, All were ſo over-joyed when they ſaw me chearſully ſhewing any kindneſs to them, or acceptation of them, that they would not believe it, as if it were too much, or too great a favour for them, So it is ſaid of the Diſciples of Chriſt, After he had ſpoken to them, and ſhewed them his hands and his feet (which gives light to this paſſage) (Luke 24. 41.) They yet believed not for joy, and wondered, &c. Chriſts appearing to his Diſciples, as returned from death and the grave, was ſo great a mercy, that for joy they could not believe it; they thought it (for a while) too good to be true, a bleſſing too big for them. We find a like uſe of the word (Job 39. 24.) where among other deſcriptions of the Horſe, this is given as one, He ſwalloweth the ground with fierceneſs and rage: Neither believeth he that is the ſound of the Trumpet; he is ſo glad of the battel that he can ſcarce believe it for joy; or he doubteth whether it be the battel or no, becauſe he is ſo deſirous of it. Thus here, If I laughed on them they believed it not; they were ſo over-joyed to ſee me well pleaſed and pleaſant with them, that they could not believe it ſor joy.

Fourthly, The words are taken by ſome as a ſignification of that great reſpect which the people gave to Job's Judgment, or how much they were taken with his opinion in any buſineſs brought before him; ſo that if he laughed on them, that is (according to this interpretation) if he did but by a ſmile give any intimation of his diſlike, they believed it not; that is, they began to ſuſpect that the matter was not right, which themſelves had preſented or reported to him, or that he had eſpyed ſome hole, ſome error, or weakneſs in it. This Expoſition ſtill heightens the honour of Job, and that eſtimation which all had of his wiſdom and ſagacity. As if men could ſcarce believe their own ſenſes, about what they had heard and ſeen; or that they could hardly believe that to be ſo, which they knew to be ſo, when he did but by a geſture or the change of his countenance hint the contrary. In the ſence before given the relative particle it (they believed it not) referred to Job's laughter: But in this it refers to the matter whatſoever it was, reported to Job by themſelves for his Judgment and determination; at the hearing of which if he did but ſmile a little (as Judges ſometimes do) they were ready to doubt their own cauſe, and lay down their former good thoughts of it, as thinking that he ſaw what they did not ſee. And then the latter part of the verſe, The light of my countenance they caſt not down, may be interpreted, in a proportion to that; as if he had ſaid, When I gave countenance to, or ſhewed my approbation of a buſineſs by the caſt of my eyes, they did not caſt down the light of my countenance; that is, they did not refuſe or oppoſe me, but they lookt upon that ſign as a rule to go by.

But (to open that a little further) we may more diſtinctly enquire; Firſt, What Job meant by the light of his countenance? Secondly, What by their not caſting it down? To the former Queſtion, I anſwer, that as The light of the countenance of God, ſignifieth his favour and ſpecial kindneſs to man (Pſal. 4. 6.) Lord lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us, that is, ſhew thy ſelf favourable and gracious to us. So there is ſuch a light ſhining from the countenance of man upon man, eſpecially from the countenance of Princes and Magiſtrates; as Solomon ſpeaks expreſly (Pro. 16. 15.) In the light of the Kings countenance is life.

Secondly, The light of the countenance, is the chearfulneſs of the countenance; joy is light in the mind, and it puts a beauty upon the face, and makes it ſhine. Hence alſo in Scripture, ſorrow is called blackneſs and darkneſs (Joel 2. 6.) Before their face the people ſhall be much pained: All faces ſhall gather blackneſs: The Hebrew is a pot; that is, a pot-like colour or blackneſs, ſuch as ſcullions contract by lying among the pots: To which the Pſalmiſt alludes (Pſal. 68. 13.) Though ye have lien among the pots, yet ſhall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with ſilver, &c. that is, though through ſorrow and affliction ye have ſtained your beauty, yet ye ſhall recover it again. Thus ſaith the Prophet, All faces ſhall gather blackneſs, they ſhall be ſo full of ſorrow that the characters and marks of it ſhall be ſtamped and impreſt upon their faces. Again (Nahum 2. 10.) She is empty, and void, and waſte, and the heart melteth, and the knees ſmite together, and much pain is in all loyns, and the faces of them all gather blackneſs. Lamenting Jeremy bewails the ſad effects of famine in the ſame ſtile (Lam. 4. 8.) Her Nazarites were purer then ſnow, they were whiter then milk; But now their viſage is blacker then a coal, or (as we put in the Margin of our tranſlation) darker then blackneſs. There's no light, no day in their faces, no morning there: The light of the countenance is joy and chearfulneſs.

Lumen eſt hilaritas vultus; q. d. non contriſtabant me viciſſim jocando tanquam cum æquali. Piſc.

Nullo mærore afficiebant me, in omnibus placebant et gratificabantur mihi. Jun.

Thirdly, The light of a Magiſtrates countenance, is his gravity; that renders him very illuſtrious and beautiful in the eyes of his people. A light look, much more lightneſs of ſpirit, obſcures the honour of Princes, and makes them little leſs then contemptible, almoſt ridiculous. When David danced before the Lord (at the bringing home of the Ark) with all his might, girded with a linnen Ephod (2 Sam. 6. 14.) Micol (the Queen) Sauls daughter looked through a window, and ſaw King David leaping and dancing dancing before the Lord, and ſhe deſpiſed him in her heart; and when ſhe came out to meet him (v. 20.) ſhe ſaid (in ſcorn) How glorious was the King of Iſrael to day, who uncovered himſelf to day in the eyes of the handmaids of his Servants as one of the vain fellows ſhameleſly uncovered himſelf. Though Michol beheld this action of David in a falſe light, and weighed it in a wrong ballance, not conſidering the ſeriouſneſs, yea and ſpiritualneſs of Davids heart in communion with God, while he appeared thus in the eyes of men. Yet taking the action abſtractly from thoſe religious circumſtances of it, and his gracious intentions in it, there is no doubt but his carriage was much below the dignity of his condition, and much unbeſeeming the State, Majeſty, and gravity of a King, eſpecially of the King of Iſrael, God's ſpecial People. And had Michol ſeen him do ſo upon any ordinary occaſion, ſhe might have had reaſon enough, if not ironically, to deride and jeer him, with how glorious was the King of Iſrael to day! Yet faithfully and plainly to have reproved and admoniſhed him, with, My Lord O King, you have this day forgot who you are, you have gone out of your place, you have acted like one of the common People, not like a Prince, and ſo have darken'd your own glory. A well temper'd gravity in ſpeech and geſture, is the beſt beauty and light of a Kings countenance. And this ſome conceive to be principally intended here by Job, and I ſhall readily ſubſcribe to it, if withal we give this gravity a tincture of that chearfulneſs before ſpoken of, which doth exceedingly quicken it, and is both the life and grace of it. Gravity alone is ſomewhat too dark a colour to be called the light of a mans countenance, but put a little chearfulneſs to it, and there's nothing more beautiful and taking in the eye of the wiſe. What can better become a Magiſtrate, then a grave chearfulneſs, or a chearful gravity.

Fourthly, The light of a mans countenance is that boldneſs and confidence of Spirit which appears and ſhines much in the face, when the conſcience is clear and all's well within. A guilty perſon hath a dark countenance, nor dares he ſhew his head: But light breaks out as from the eye lids of the morning, from his eyes who is full of innocency and integrity. Thus 'tis ſaid of Stephen the Protomartyr (Acts 6. 15.) All that ſate in the Councel, looking ſtedfaſtly on him, ſaw his face as it had been the face of an Angel; Not that an Angel hath a viſible face, but 'tis phraſed ſo to note excellent beauty; Stephen had not the dark or gaſtly appearance of a guilty conſcience in his face, but the ſweetneſs and light of his countenance preſented the innocency of his cauſe, and printed (as it were) a legible not guilty in his very lookes. And as innocency caſt a light upon the countenance of that bleſſed Priſoner at the Bar; ſo integrity cauſeth a light to ſhine from the countenance of any Judge upon the Bench, or Prince upon the Throne. This, yea, all theſe ingredients, favour, chearfulneſs, gravity, integrity, made up the light of Job's countenance; of which he ſaith, (which is the ſecond thing to be opened in this ſentence) that they (meaning the People) did not caſt it down; that is, they did not abuſe my favour, nor diſapprove my chearfulneſs, they did nothing either to grieve me or to ſhame me. The countenance of a man is caſt down two wayes. Firſt, with ſorrow; Secondly, With ſhame: and both two wayes. Firſt, With ſhame and ſorrow for what others have done amiſs; Secondly, For what we our ſelves have done amiſs, eſpecially when having done amiſs, we are either reproved by others for our faults, or diſappointed of our hopes. Thus when God had no reſpect to Cain and his offering, the Text ſaith (Gen. 4. 5.) Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell; and (v. 6.) The Lord ſaid unto Cain, why art thou wroth? And why is thy countenance fallen? Cains countenance fell, becauſe indeed God had caſt it down. The Lord juſtly put a ſlight upon his perſon, and upon his performances, and then he could not hold up his head. Now as God can quickly caſt down the countenance of the moſt lofty and high lookt men; ſo one man may caſt down the countenance of man, and he doth it, that puts another either to ſhame or ſorrow. So then we may gather up the ſence of the whole Verſe into this briefer paraphraſe. As if Job had ſaid; I alwayes lived in ſuch good repute with my People, and maintained my honour in ſuch an evenneſs with them, that they did never think me vain becauſe I ſometimes laughed or was free with them, nor did they ever caſt down the light of my countenance, As if my chearfulneſs had proceeded from lightneſs, or was unſutable to my place and dignity, for they knew well enough that it was only to ſhew the content which I took in them, and the favour which I bare them; yea they knew that my mirth was duely allayed with gravity, and that I had integrity enough to bear me out confidently in it; and therefore they took no ombrage or offence, nor ſhewed they any diſlike at it, much leſs did they contemn and ſlight me for it; or give me any cauſe after ſuch entertainments of my ſelf among them to hold down my head, as if I had forgotten who and with whom I was. All this (and 'tis very like ſomewhat, if not much more then this ſence hath reacht) we may conceive as Job's intendment in this cloſe and darkſome paſſage; If I laughed on them they did not believe it, and the light of my countenance they caſt not down.

Hence Note, Firſt, Laughter or mirth is not ſinful in it ſelf; nor unſuitable to a Godly Magiſtrate.

Job had his laughing time, his times of refreſhing and unbending himſelf from buſineſs. Solomon tells us (Eccl. 3. 4.) There is a time to weep, and a time to laugh, theſe have their interchangeable ſeaſons; yea the Goſpel tells us, that our whole time is for laughter, Rejoyce evermore (1 Theſ. 5. 16.) Grace doth not deny but qualifie and correct our mirth (Phil. 4. 4.) Rejoyce in the Lord alway, and again I ſay rejoyce. But ſaith not Chriſt (Luke 6. 25.) Wo unto them that laugh now? And ſaid not Solomon (long before, (Eccl. 2. 2.) of laughter, it is mad, and of mirth what doth it? I anſwer, there is indeed a ſinful mirth, and a mad laughter; mirth and laughter are ſo, when they ariſe any of theſe four wayes.

Firſt, From unbeleif; when Sarah heard the Angel Prophecying to Abraham from the Lord that ſhe ſhould have a Son (Gen. 18. 11, 12.) Therefore Sarah laughed within her ſelf, ſaying, After I am waxed old, ſhall I have pleaſure, my Lord being old alſo? She did not believe the promiſe, and ſo ſmiled at it. Her laughter was ſinful, and ſhe was reproved for it. When Abraham heard that good news before from God (Gen. 17. 17.) He fell upon his face and laughed, and ſaid in his heart, Shall a Child be born to him that is an Hundred Years old? And ſhall Sarah that is Ninety Years old bear? Abraham laughed, not doubting or ſtaggering at the performance of that promiſe through unbeleif (Rom. 4. 20.) but admiring the goodneſs of God to him in it. Whereas Sarah, though ſhe did not laugh in deriſion as the wicked do, yet ſhe laughed with ſome mixture of diffidence; elſe the Lord had not rebuked her for it, nor ſhould ſhe have had any reaſon to deny it, had ſhe laughed only in faith, rejoycing at the mercy, as Abraham did.

Secondly, There is a laughter proceeding from carnal ſecurity. When that good King Hezekiah ſent his Meſſengers throughout all Iſrael, ſaying, Turn again unto the Lord God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Iſrael, and he will return to the remnant of you that are eſcaped out of the hand of the Kings of Aſſyria, &c. And ſerve the Lord your God, that the feirceneſs of his wrath may turn away from you: they laughed them to ſcorn, and mocked them (2 Chron. 30. 10.) They thought there was no danger, all was well with them, and they preſumed things would ſo continue, why ſhould they trouble themſelves with ſuch fooliſh fears, or go about ſo needleſs a work as they ſuppoſed themſelves invited to.

Thirdly, There is a laughter that proceeds meerly from levity. Some (as we ſay) will laugh at the wagging of a feather, or the ſtirring of a ſtraw, this alſo is vanity and madneſs.

Fourthly, There is a laughter, that proceeds from Epicurean ſenſuality, or carnal delight in the creature. Theſe ſay, Lets laugh and be fat; theſe (as the Prophet deſcribes them, Amos 6. 4, 5, 6.) Lie upon Beds of Ivory, and ſtretch themſelves upon their Couches, and eat the Lambs out of the Flock, and the Calves out of the midſt of the Stall, and chaunt to the ſound of the Viol, &c. To theſe Chriſt ſpeaks (Luke 6. 25.) Wo to you that laugh now, for ye ſhall weep and mourn; they who live ſenſually, are near, not only the ſorrows of death, but a ſorrowful life. Their pleaſures dye ſooneſt, who live in pleaſure. And therefore Solomon had great cauſe to ſay of this laughter it is mad, and of all ſuch mirth what doth it ? Even this it doth, it leaves men not only melancholy but miſerable. As all creatures in their beſt uſe are vain as to that great end, the attainment of eternal happineſs, ſo when they are abuſed, that is, exceſſively uſed, they will ſoon be a vexation of ſpirit.

Now, as there is a vain and ſinful, ſo a holy and commendable laughter, and that flows from theſe three Fountains; Firſt, From faith in or aſſurance of the promiſe, that we ſhall in due ſeaſon eate the fruit and enjoy the comforts of it. Such was Abrahams joy or laughter when a Son was promiſed him, as was toucht before. As God laughs at the wicked in ſcorn, knowing that himſelf both can and will do what he hath threatned againſt them, (Pſal. 2. 4.) So godly men laugh in faith, knowing that God both can and will do all that for them which he hath promiſed. And (to be ſure) there's enough promiſed to make any man laugh that believes it. Worldly men laugh at the ſimplicity of Saints in believing the promiſe; and Saints laugh becauſe of the rich treaſure of good things contained in the promiſes, as alſo becauſe of the faithfulneſs and All-ſufficiency of God in making them good. We rejoyce (ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. 5. 2.) in hope of the glory of God, yea, believing (ſtrongly, and by faith ſeeing things hoped for clearly) we rejoyce with joy unſpeakable and full of glory (1 Pet. 1. 8.) That joy which we cannot ſpeak we may laugh; and then the Soul is full of joy indeed when we cannot utter it by words, but by laughter.

Secondly, There's a gracious laughter ariſing from confidence of deliverance in times of danger. Thus Eliphaz aſſures a godly man (Chap. 5. 22.) At Deſtruction and Famin thou ſhalt laugh. But are Deſtruction and Famin laughing matters? Doth not God then call us to mourning, and to faſting? I anſwer, Nothing is more unbecoming a godly man then to laugh at the Judgments of God, as ſlighting them. Nor is any thing more comely and honourable for a godly man, then to laugh at them in a confidence upon the promiſe of God to be delivered from or protected and provided for in them. He that can laugh in a well grounded aſſurance that God will take care of him and do him good in the midſt of ſuch evils, is a believer indeed. To know and be ſenſible of the dreadfulneſs of Gods hand in ſuch terrible diſpenſations, in ſuch an evil day, and yet to know that God will not be a dread nor a terror to us in that evil day (as Jeremy prayed the Lord would not be to him (Jerem. 17. 17.) is to live by faith to purpoſe.

Thirdly, There is a gracious laughter, of thankfulneſs after deliverance received, or upon the receiving of any mercy. And they who have laughed in a confidence that they ſhould be delivered or receive any ſpecial mercy before it came, will certainly laugh in thankfulneſs when any deliverance or mercy is come. The Church bethinking her ſelf how the Lord had even ſurprized them with a wonderful return out of bondage, could not contain from laughing (Pſal. 126. 1, 2.) When the Lord turned again the Captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream; then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with ſinging. They who can laugh upon any of theſe terms, may laugh as much as they will; while faith in the promiſe that we ſhall receive good, and truſt that we ſhall be delivered from evil, or thankſulneſs to God when we are delivered, ſet us a laughing, our laughter is as much our duty, as it is our refreſhing. The wicked mans heart is ſorrowful in laughter (Pro. 14. 13.) A godly mans heart ſhould laugh in ſorrow, how much more up all true occaſions of Joy. Godly ſorrow is better then carnal laughter, for by the ſadneſs (ſuch ſadneſs) of the countenance the heart is made better, (Eccl. 7. 3.) But ſpiritual laughter is better then Godly ſorrow, for by that chearfulneſs of the countenance the heart is made not only better but beſt of all. The laughter of fools is like the crackling of Thorns under a Pot (Eccl. 7. 6.) It makes a noiſe, but is apter to burn then to warm thoſe that are near it, and 'tis ſoon extinct. But the laughter of the wiſe is like well-tun'd muſick at the Table, which doth at once glad and compoſe the minds of thoſe that hear it. Some have put a diſgrace upon the Spirit and wayes of God, as if that Spirit whoſe name is The Comforter, did make the heart ſad, or as if thoſe wayes which are pleaſantneſs, did make men melancholy, then which nothing is more contrary either to the Spirit or wayes of God. The Goſpel doth not only diſpence with, but diſpenceth a Holy laughter, a regulated joy. As for that joy which doth either diſ-ſpirit or unfit us for duty, the Gopel knows nothing of it, but to reprove it.

Further, conſider the words as ſpoken by way of ſuppoſition, if I laughed on them, which intimates that it was a rare, not a common thing, for Job to laugh, and to be familiar with his People.

Hence Note, Gravity ought to be the uſual poſture of Magiſtracy.

If Rulers laugh, it muſt be very ſparingly. It being once ſaid to a Judge, Sir, You are not merry; he anſwered well and wiſely, and like himſelf, I am merry enough for a Judge. Job ſpeaks of it, as a matter ſomewhat beſides his cuſtome, and below his ſtate, to do ſo, he condeſcended when he laughed.

Thirdly, Whereas he ſaith, If I laughed on them they believed it not. The Interpretation before given of thoſe words, They did not believe it, may give us this further Obſervation.

Men of known ſeriouſneſs, will be ſo accounted, even while they appear leſs then ſerious.

The laughter of a wiſe man is more ſtayed then the gravity of a fool. Men are not reckoned what they are by this or that action, but their conſtant temper and diſpoſition. As a common lyar is ſuſpected to ſpeak falſly, even when he tells the truth; ſo a man of known compoſedneſs and ſobriety, is not ſuſpected of wantonneſs or levity, when he takes his greateſt liberty. What we uſe to be, that we ſhall be thought to be, though we ſeem to be otherwiſe. 'Tis not an act, but the habit which doth denominate.

Fourthly, Whereas Job reckons up this, and puts it into the Inventory of the favours of God to him as a Governour, that, if he laughed, they (as hath been ſhewed) believed it not, and the light of his countenance they caſt not down.

Obſerve, As 'tis an honour among men, ſo a mercy from God to Governours, when due reverence towards them is kept up in the hearts of the People under them, or when their ſubjects both know and keep their diſtance.

There is much of God ſeen in maintaining the value of Princes, that they grow not cheap in vulgar opinion. When a Magiſtrate hath loſt his eſtimation, he hath little elſe to looſe; and while he keeps that unblemiſhed and untoucht, he cannot be at any great loſs for any thing elſe. The honour of Magiſtrates is as uſeful to them, as credit is to Merchants. As theſe can neither Buy nor Sell, neither Trade nor Traffick without the one, ſo neither can they either reward or puniſh, nor are they either loved or feared without the other. When the Lord was purpoſed to bring utter confuſion upon the Jewiſh State, he threatens by the Prophet (Iſa. 3. 5.) The Child ſhall behave himſelf proudly againſt the ancient, and the baſer, or man of light eſteem (as the Original word ſignifies) againſt the honcurable, or men of weight and worth. 'Tis as bad as can be with a People, when they will not know their betters. There's but little difference between the levelling and the ruining of a Nation. And therefore as it is the command and appointment of God, that men ſhould be ranked into and live in a comely ſubordination, ſo it is an act of his mighty power, yea of his gracious favour to keep them to it. When once men break their bounds, they will quickly break their peace; and they who do not acknowledge and honour a Head in their own, muſt unavoidably be made the taile of all other Nations. Not to reſpect thoſe who are above, is to bring all under; and they who will not ſubmit to Government, muſt, whether they will or no, ſubmit to deſtruction. Naturaliſts ſay, The Elements are not burdenſom in their proper place; nor are men (in civil reſpects) while they keep theirs; we never burden nor trouble one another while we keep our own place, and act towards our ſuperiors as conſidering their place. Let all take heed how they caſt down the light of the countenance of Magiſtrates, leſt thereby they put out their own; or (as it was ſaid to David the cheif Magiſtrate in another caſe, 2 Sam. 21. 17.) Leſt they quench the light of Iſrael. For if the light of a Nation may be quencht, when a Prince falls by an over-valorous venturing of himſelf againſt an Enemy, much more is the light of a Nation in danger to be quencht, when a Prince falls by the undervaluings of his own People.

Fifthly, Whereas Job intimates that becauſe the People did not believe it, or did not make too bold with him, when he laught on them, that therefore they did not caſt down the light of his countenance, or, they did not make him aſhamed or ſad.

> Obſerve, 'Tis both ſhame and ſorrow to ſuperiors, when they who are under them, take advantage by their freedom to be bold with them, and grow upon them.

Natural Parents are often put to ſhame by their Children upon this account, cockerings and indulgence make Children forget their duty and reverence. And many experiences have taught us, that thoſe parents who have laughed much on their Children, have had cauſe enough from them to mourn, and even mingle their drink with weeping. Familiarity with inferiors, doth commonly breed contempt; and if ſuperiors are not very wary and diſcreet in laughing either on them or with them, they hazzard their own honour, and are in danger of being laughed at by them. Doubtleſs Job was as wiſe as merry whenſoever he gave himſelf leave to be merry with, or in the ſight of his Subjects and Servants; and therefore they never put him to ſhame, nor was the light of his countenance caſt down after thoſe relaxations wherein he had been moſt lightſome or (as we ſay) game-ſome with them.

> Laſtly, Note, 'Tis not for the People to take all that Princes give, nor to take notice of the familiarity which they uſe towards them, much leſs thereupon to be familiar with them.

Princes may ſometimes for their recreation lay by their State a little, and deſcend to their Subjects and Servants; but Subjects and Servants muſt not take ſtate upon them, and aſcend to their Princes and Maſters. If they laugh on them they ſhould not believe it.

Job gives yet a further proof of his great authority and reſpect among the People, and ſo ſhuts up.

Verſ. 25. I choſe out their way, and ſat as cheif, and dwelt as a King in the Army, as one that comforteth the Mourners.

In this Verſe Job concludes his whole diſcourſe about the grounds of his confidence, that his worldly proſperity ſhould continue, as was ſhewed at the eighteenth Verſe of this Chapter. He was a man of ſuch approved wiſdom and integrity, that all gave up themſelves to his counſel, and were ruled at his diſcretion. Job was as the Oracle of his Age.

I choſe out their way.

That is, they made application to me for advice what to do, and how to ſteer their courſe in every doubtful buſineſs, or knotty caſe, and what I ſaid, that they ſubmitted to, not only with good content, but with good ſucceſs.

Eligebam quod illos facere oportueret, et qua ſe ratione ac via debuerunt gerere. Merc.

I choſe out their way.] The holy Prophet profeſſeth both his own inſufficiency, and the inſufficiency of all men to chuſe their own way. (Jer. 10. 23.) O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himſelf: It is not in man that walketh to direct his ſteps. And as this is above the ability of man, ſo 'tis beſides his duty. No man can, and no godly man would be the chuſer of his own way; 'tis his deſire and daily prayer that the Lord would chuſe it for him. Now, as God chuſeth out the way of his People, ſo Magiſtrates (who are Gods on earth) ſhould be able (in their way) to chuſe out the way of their People. A wiſe and faithful Ruler may be that (in a qualified ſence) to a multitude of men, yea to a whole Nation, which God is to all men, even to all Nations, the chuſer and directer of their wayes. When men know not which way to go, nor where to tread their next ſtep, ſome wiſe man, much more a wiſe Magiſtrate may ſhew them. Thus did Job, I choſe out their way. And what then?

I ſat cheif, or a cheif.

That is, I had the ſupream power, and authority, and was advanced above all. Job ſat cheif; Firſt, In the hearts and affections of the People; Secondly, He ſat cheif in power and authority over all the People. Whence, Thirdly, whereſoever he came he had the uppermoſt room or cheif place in all meetings with the People. Thus he ſat cheif, and (as it followeth)

Si mihi viſum eſſet me illos dimittere atq; accomodare, illi tamen, ſolitum mihi honorem deferentes, ſemper me ſummo ponebant loco. Merc.

Dwelt as a King in the Army.

Mr. Broughton reads, I dwelt as a King in a Garriſon, the meaning is, I was in as much honour amongſt my People, as a King is among or with his Army; or thus, Though I did not terrifie nor keep them under by any Military force, or by the power of an Army, yet I was as much obeyed and honoured as if I had dwelt in an Army, and had made my Court a Garriſon. My Magiſtratical Sword was as much feared and ſubmitted to, as if I had alwayes kept it up and made it good by the Military Sword. I dwelt as a King in the Army.

That word of ſimilitude as a King, doth not deny that Job was a King, nor doth it affirm that he was but the ſhadow of or ſomewhat like a King; for either Job was formally ſo, or at leaſt, equivalently he had Kingly power. He was a King in effect, if not in title. For as when 'tis ſaid of Chriſt (Phil. 2. 8.) He was found in faſhion as a man, it doth not imply, that he had only the ſhape or faſhion of a man, but was not a true man; ſo here when Job ſaith, I ſat as a King, it doth not imply that he was not indeed a King, he might have both name and thing, both truth and title for all that.

Again, the note of ſimilitude is not to be reſtrained to that ſingle term King, but to the whole clauſe or ſentence, A King in the Army. Job was truly a King, but he was but as a King in the Army; he had not an Army alwayes about him, only he was feared and honoured as if he had. And

As one that comforteth the Mourners.

The vulgar Tranſlation reads, I was notwithſtanding the comforter of the Mourners; as if he had ſaid, Though I was cheif in Authority, and had either the power of a formed Army, or power like that of an Army to back me; yet I did not ſlight the afflicted, nor forget the ſorrowful; I did not think it below me to adminiſter comfort, as well as counſel, to give Goſpel as well as Law to the People. Or thus; Notwithſtanding I had the command of an Army, or an Army, upon any occaſion, at my command, yet I was not harſh and rough to poor ſuiters (as Souldiers often are) nor did I uſe any violence (as Souldiers often do) I was meek and tender, as one whoſe buſineſs it was to comfort Mourners, and refreſh ſad hearts.

Eram tamen Mærentiũ conſolator. Vulg.

At the eleventh Verſe of the ſecond Chapter of this Book we read, that when Job's Friends heard of all the evil that was come upon him, they came every one from his own place: Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite; for they had made an appointment together to come to mourn with him, and to comfort him. It was (probably) very uſual in thoſe times and places, when they heard of any friend in affliction, to make a journey to comfort him. Now as Job's three friends did to him, ſo he had done to others; I (ſaith he) was as one that comforteth the Mourners.

Some reſtrain theſe words to thoſe immediately foregoing, I dwelt as a King in the Army, as one that comforteth his mourning Army, after they have been worſted in Battel, or after ſome great defeat. As Joab adviſed David to do (2 Sam. 19. 7.) when upon his extream paſſionateneſs for the death of Abſalom, his Conquering Army was ſo diſcontented and dejected, that they were like a beaten and Conquered Army; the Text is expreſs at the ſecond and third Verſes of that Chapter; and the Victory that day was turned into mourning unto the People, for the People heard ſay that day how the King was grieved for his Son. And the People gat them that day by ſtealth into the City, as people being aſhamed ſteal away when they flee in battel. Hereupon upon Joab (ver. 5.) came into the houſe to the King, and ſaid, thou haſt ſhamed this day the faces of all thy ſervants, &c. Now therefore ariſe (ſaith he, ver. 7.) go forth, and ſpeak comfortably unto thy ſervants; (that is, to the Army) for I ſwear by the Lord, if thou go not forth, there will not tarry one with thee this night, and that will be worſe unto thee, then all the evil that befel thee from thy youth until now. The Army of Iſrael was grieved to ſee the King ſo much grieved with the death of his Son, that would have been his death, if he could. Therefore Joab gave good Counſel, Go forth and comfort them. 'Tis a great part of a Generals wiſdom to bear up the courage of his Army in hope of a better day, or of better ſucceſs, when ſome hardſhip or diſaſter is befallen them. Thus Job is conceived to have been among his people, as a King comforting his mourning Army.

Cum conſolatur milites qui in luctu ſunt propter cladem acceptam aut alia de cauſa. Druſ.

Ut rex inter turmarios ſuos quando lugentes conſolatur. Jun.

But which way ſoever we take it, we have here an excellent example, of a wiſe and gracious Prince, who doth not deſert, but is ready to take part with and uphold the Spirits of his people in their worſt condition.

From the words thus opened,

> Obſerve, Firſt, It is an honour to be able to direct others, and to chuſe out their way for them.

He is a wiſe man that underſtands his own way, or is able to guide himſelf. The wiſdom of the prudent is to underſtand his way (Prov. 14. 8.) But to be able to underſtand the way of others, and to be a publick guide, is an argument of greater wiſdom.

Secondly, Job who choſe out their way, had the character of Magiſtracy upon him.

> Whence Obſerve, It is the duty of the Magiſtrate, to be a leader and directer of the people, to chuſe out their way for them.

It is the duty of the Miniſters of Chriſt, to chuſe out or direct the way of man in Spiritual things: As the Apoſtles did (Acts 2. 37, 38.) when many of the Jews who had pierced Chriſt were prickt at the heart upon the hearing of Peters Sermon, and ſaid unto him, and to the reſt of the Apoſtles, Men and Brethren, what ſhall we do? Then Peter ſaid, Repent and be Baptized, &c. A Miniſter ſhould be able to chuſe or chalk out the way of ſalvation to and for thoſe who are either quite out of the way, or are, as it were, in a wilderneſs, where they ſee no way to be ſaved. Thus alſo it is the duty of Magiſtrates to chuſe out the way for the people in all civil things. Jethro giving advice to Moſes whom to ſet over the people, ſaith (Exod. 18. 21.) Thou ſhalt provide out of all the people able men, ſuch as fear God, men of truth, hating covetouſneſs. He doth not only ſay, provide ſuch as fear God, and are honeſt men; but they muſt alſo be able men. But who are they? He doth not mean able men of body, that is, ſtrong men; nor able men only of purſe, that is, rich men; but able men of parts, and of gifts, men of underſtanding. It is not enough to make a man a Magiſtrate, no nor a Miniſter, that he is godly; every one that hath grace is not fit to teach others; nor is every one that hath grace fit to rule others; they muſt be able men, men able to chuſe out the way of the people (as Job was) who act in the ſphere either of Magiſtracy or Miniſtry. They that rule muſt know the Law, elſe how ſhall they direct others according to the Law? And therefore it is denounced as a curſe upon a people (Iſa. 3. 4.) I will give children to be their Princes, and babes ſhall rule over them. And what work they are like to make in the Government, we may read at the Twelfth verſe of the ſame Chapter, As for my people children are their oppreſſours, and women rule over them: O my people, they which lead thee (namely, theſe thy childiſh and womaniſh Governours) cauſe thee to err, and deſtroy the way of thy paths. The Scripture doth not ſpeak thus in contempt of women and children, as to Government; for Deborah a woman governed magnanimouſly; as we have had a Famous experience even of maſculine vertue in the reign of our Elizabeth; yea, children have governed well, witneſs young Joſiah in Judah, and Edward the Sixth in England. So that when the Lord threatned his people with women and children to rule over them, there is no neceſſity of underſtanding it at all properly of women in ſtrict notion, who are the weaker veſſel according to their ſex, or of children (in ſtrict notion) who are but weak of underſtanding, according to their age, ſeeing God can furniſh theſe when he pleaſeth, beyond both ſex and age, with a Spirit of Government; But the meaning is, that even thoſe men, though ancient men, who ruled over them, ſhould be as the weakeſt of women and children, that is, as it follows in the Prophet, they ſhould cauſe them to err (or lead them into errors) and deſtroy the way of their path. They ſhould be ſo far from Job's noble uſefulneſs to chuſe out their way, that they ſhould lead them quite out of the way. Thus falſe Prophets and unſound Teachers, are leaders of the people, cauſing them to err; and ſo are unskilful Magiſtrates.

When Job ſaith again, I choſe out their way, and ſat cheif, > Obſerve, Magiſtracy is an Eminency. The exerciſe of that power doth unavoydably ſet ſome above others, or one above all. There's no governing upon even ground. To ſit chief is the Circumlocution of Government.

Fourthly, Job who ſate chief, was a good man, a godly man, a man fearing God.

> Hence Note, Sometimes good men are great men; and they who are uppermoſt with God, get uppermoſt in the world. A Job ſits cheif.

Fifthly, See what a happineſs the people lived in while Job ſate cheif; the eye that ſaw him bleſſed him, and when the ear heard him it gave witneſs to him, becauſe he delivered the poor that cryed, and the fatherleſs, and him that had none to help him, the bleſſing of him that was ready to periſh came upon him, and he cauſed the widows heart to ſing for joy. 'Tis well with a people (as to their rights) when they have godly and righteous Governours. Good men make good times.

Sixthly, He ſaith, I ſate cheif, as a King in the Army. Job ſeems to intimate the readineſs of all to obey him, by alluding to the readineſs of Souldiers to obey their Officers, eſpecially their chief Officer.

> Military diſcipline is the ſevereſt and ſtricteſt diſcipline.

A Souldier muſt obey every look of his Officer, much more his orders; if he doth not (in many caſes) he dyes for it.

> Hence Note, Magiſtrates ought to have ready obedience.

The obedience of Subjects is only limited, as that of Servants is, it muſt be in the Lord; that is, in all things honeſt and lawful, and ſo far Subjects ought to obey their Governours, as Souldiers do their Generals with all readineſs. The Centurion (Mat. 8. 9.) ſaid, I am alſo a man under authority, having Souldiers under me (that is, I am under the command of ſuperior Officers in the Army, and I being an Officer have Souldiers under my command) and I ſay to this man go, and he goeth; and unto another come, and he cometh; and to my Servant do this, and he doth it. So it was with Job, he was among his people as a King in his Army, and his ſtrength was the good will and free ſubmiſſion of his Subjects; that's the beſt Army.

> Seventhly, Obſerve; It is both the honour and duty of Magiſtrates, how great ſoever in power, to be a comfort and ſuccour to their people.

Job was as a King in the Army, yet he was alſo as one that comforteth the mourners; He ſaid of his friends, miſerable comforters are ye all, but Himſelf was to all, a comfortable comforter. Princes muſt condeſcend to the poor, and mingle the exerciſe of pity with the exerciſe of their power. 'Tis well, when Rulers, who are a terrour to evil doers, are alſo a comfort to mourners. How ſweet is it to ſee Princes deſign the love of their people, as well as their obedience. He ſpake more like a Monſter among men, then a Ruler over men, who ſaid of his Subjects, Let them hate me if they will, ſeeing they muſt fear me; I can overpower them, I care not for their love. The Lord promiſeth his people (Iſa. 49. 23.) That Kings ſhall be their nurſing Fathers, and Queenes their nurſing Mothers; that is, they ſhall provide for them, protect them from harms, and deal tenderly with them, as Nurces do with their children. Woe to thoſe Princes who are ſo far from ſuccouring their people (as Nurces do their Children) when they cry, that they make them cry, and force them who lived comfortably to mourn; inſtead of comforting the mourners. How unlike are they to Job in the text, and how like to Pharoah (Exod. 1. 10, 11.) who think they never deal ſo wiſely with their Subjects, as in ſetting Task-Maſters over them to afflict them with burdens, till they break not only their backs, but, their very hearts, and cauſe them (as Pharoah did the Iſraelites, Exod. 23. 24.) to ſigh by reaſon of the bondage, and to cry, till their cry come up unto God, by reaſon of the bondage. There is a neceſſity upon Magiſtrates ſometimes to uſe ſeverity; but it ſhould be their choice and delight to uſe clemency; 'tis their work to puniſh the contumacious, but to comfort the mourners is the beſt and moſt honourable part of their work; God himſelf beareth this ſtile and title (Rom. 15. 5.) The God of conſolation: And (2 Cor. 1. 3.) The God of all comfort. Then Princes act like God, when their Government is ſo juſt and righteous, that they make no mourners; and when their perſons are ſo merciful and compaſſionate, that they comfort mourners. He Governs well, that makes no mourners, but he is the beſt Governour who comforts mourners.

From Job's whole diſcourſe upon this point we may take the draft or picture of an excellent Prince, and of a happy people, of a Prince ruling well, of a people obeying well, and of both pleaſed well. What can a people deſire more in a Magiſtrate then, that he ſhould be a man ſo wiſe as to chuſe out their way, and ſo tender as to eaſe them of their ſorrow; that he ſhould have a knowing head, and a ſympathizing heart; that he ſhould be a man of underſtanding, and a man of Bowels; that he ſhould have power like an Army to defend them, and compaſſion like a Friend to comfort them?

Principem venerabilem potius eſſe deberet quam terribilem, dixit Socrates.

I have now finiſhed this Chapter, and Job's deſcription of his former light and proſperous eſtate. In the next he turns the Table, and ſhews us his preſent dark and diſconſolate eſtate. This Chapter concludes with, If I laughed on them they believed it not, &c. That begins with, Now they that are younger then I, have me in deriſion, He himſelf was laughed at. The caſe was alter'd.

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER,

TO

Thoſe eſpecially of this CITY, who yet continue helpful to this WORK.

I Have ended my work upon JOB's words; ſo his diſcourſe in the two Chapters now expounded and publiſhed concludes, The words of, JOB are ended. But I have ſtill a great way, a Fourth part, at leaſt, of the whole way to travel, before I can arrive at the end of this Book, my intended Journey (which, whether I ſhall have time or ſtrength to reach, is alone in his breaſt who is our ſtrength, and in whoſe hand our times, with all the changes of them unchangeably are) yet 'tis matter of ſome ſatisfaction to my ſelf, and may, I hope, be ſo to others, that I am come to this Signal end, though not to the Total end of my work, or that I am come to the end of that part which JOB acted, though not to the end of all the parts acted in this Book.

What's done in nine ſeveral pieces upon one and thirty Chapters, makes up a compleat piece, or a full Narrative (the Text is ſo) of that great and ſolemn tranſaction between JOB and his three Friends, Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar: The two former having charged him thrice, and the third twice, and JOB having charged him thrice, and the third twice, and JOB having as often anſwered each of them ſeverally, and all of them joyntly in a long defenſative, containing five Chapters throughout, they all ſat down in ſilence. JOB's three Friends ſpake not a word more, though ſomewhat more be ſpoken of them. And though JOB ſpake once or twice more, yet not one word more in oppoſition againſt his Friends, no nor ſo much as of Apology for himſelf; what he ſpake more was only in way of humble ſubmiſſion to God, and of ſelf-abhorrence.

I have much cauſe to acknowledge the great goodneſs of God, as alſo his very gracious aſſiſtance and patience, in holding that weak and ſinful hand, which hath held the Pen thus long. And as I ought to give no other reaſon (in chief) why I have done it, but to pleaſe Him; ſo I can give no other account how I have done it, but his good pleaſure, becauſe it ſeemed good in his ſight as to put the Pen into my hand, ſo to keep both heart and hand upon it unto This Day.

I may well give it with an Emphaſis unto This Day; ſeeing the day in which I am come to this End of my work, is ſo very like the day wherein I began it; full of motion, ſomewhat dark and ſtormy.

Indeed (as notice was taken in the præfatory Epiſtle to the firſt part of theſe Expoſitions) the ſtate of JOB in them ſet forth, bears (though much of death be in the image) the lively image and repreſentation of theſe times. He, as the Holy Scripture reports, had a troubleſome time of it; and I would there were not too much Evidence that our times have been, and in a degree are ſo to this day. And how ſhould I (with all that fear God and love the Appearing of Chriſt Jeſus our Lord) rejoyce to ſee, at laſt, as happy a change in the face of theſe times, as the latter part of this ſacred Hiſtory aſſures us JOB found in his.

My hearts deſire and prayer for England, with the united Dominions, is that it may be ſo; That after all our breakings we may be bound up, that after all our dividings we may be united, that after all our ſhakings we may be ſettled upon ſure Foundations; and that thoſe three fair Daughters (for whoſe full birth and growth among us the ſouls of many thouſands have been in travail with groans, and prayers, and tears theſe many years, that I ſay thoſe three fair Daughters of holy JOB, who were the faireſt in all the Land) Jemima, The light of Truth, more clear then the day; Kezia, The Perfume of Godlineſs and Righteouſneſs, more pleaſant then Caſſia; together with Peace and Plenty more beautiful then Keren-happuch, the Horn of Beauty, may be the Trine-iſſue of theſe three Nations, after all the dolorous throes and pangs which hitherto they have endured; or which is the ſum and Crown of all, That Jeſus Chriſt, The Man-child long ſince born miraculouſly into the World, may now be brought forth in our World Glorioſly, in all adminiſtrations both Spiritual and Civil, every knee bowing to him, every heart triumphing in him, every tongue ſpeaking, every hand working for him in the advancement of his Name both here at home and abroad to the ends of the Earth: This (I ſay again) is the prayer and hearts deſire of,

AN EXPOSITION WITH Practical Obſervations UPON THE THIRTIETH AND THIRTY-FIRST CHAPTERS Of the Book of JOB.

CHAP. XXX. Verſ. 1.

But now they that are younger then I, have me in deriſion, whoſe Fathers I would have diſdained to have ſet with the Dogs of my flock.

IN the former Chapter, we have heard Job diſcourſing of, and diſcovering his former felicity, a felicity of the higheſt pitch and firſt magnitude, as to the having and enjoyment of a numerous progeny, with riches, honour, and peace. A felicity, as he ſuppoſed, not higher built then well bottom'd and ſure, ſo ſure that he concluded, I ſhall dye in my neſt, and multiply my dayes as the ſand.

In this Chapter we ſee, how much he was miſtaken, and had over-reckon'd himſelf, in that point, or perſwaſion. He that runs may read; and he that reads cannot but cry out with wonder, Alas, alas, how unlike is Job (in temporals) to what he once was? O how is the caſe now altered with him! He that ſaw him before and ſees him now, will ſcarce believe his own eyes, that he ſees the man now whom he ſaw before.

And (no doubt) Job ſets theſe oppoſite ſtates one over againſt the other, that he might the more illuſtrate, or aggravate the one by the other, and give us a proſpect of his old and new, of his flouriſhing and withering condition in one view. Here are repreſented as in the ſame Landskip, a pleaſant Paradiſe and a deſolate Wilderneſs, a goodly building and a ruinous heap. Nor indeed can there be two Chapters of a more different title and tenour then theſe; in which we may read and conſider ſuch a variety, or contrariety rather, of affairs and iſſues in the ſame perſon, as can hardly be parallel'd in any Hiſtory ſacred or prophane.

Oppoſita juxta ſe poſita magis eluceſcunt;

In this Chapter the ſorrowful man gives us a deſcription of his poor, deſolate, ruin'd condition, in as rich and rhetorical a ſtrain, as he did before of his paradiſical or proſperous one: Sorrow is as eloquent as joy can be. Nor did ever any draw the picture of a riſing or raiſed man to the beſt of an earthly happineſs, with a happier fancy then others have done a falling or a fallen man to the worſt of an earthly unhappineſs: Nor could ever any do either the one or the other, ſo well for others, as Job (by the breathings of the Spirit with his pen) hath done both for himſelf. His fallen ſtate is expreſſed in this Chapter four wayes.

Firſt, He makes report of that extream contempt which was poured upon him even by men of contempt. In his proſperous eſtate all ſorts of men, even the beſt of men, reſpected and reverenced him, many admired and only not adored him, both young and old beheld him, as if he had been a man dropt out of the Clouds, or of a divine extraction; But in his calamitous eſtate all deſpiſed and ſleighted him, as if he had crept out of a Dunghil, or had derived his pedigree from the very dregs of baſeneſs. He begins this ſad relation at the firſt verſe of this Chapter, and purſues it to the end of the tenth.

Secondly, He aſſigns a reaſon, or gives an account about the ſpring of this contempt that was poured upon him, which he proſecutes from the Eleventh to the Eighteenth verſe; Becauſe he hath looſed my cord and afflicted me, they have alſo let looſe the bridle before me: As if he had ſaid; If you inquire of me, how it comes to paſs, that I who was honour'd by all, and above the moſt of men, am now trodden upon as the meaneſt worm, yea as the mire in the ſtreets, I muſt confeſs 'tis the hand of God upon me. I do not much look upon, much leſs ſtay in theſe poor creatures that deſpiſe me, but know and acknowledge, that 'tis God which hath looſed my cord and afflicted me, 'is he that hath broken the band of that authority by which all were held in ſubjection to me.

'Tis God who hath untyed the knot of duty, which once firmly faſtned reverence and reſpect to my perſon; and now I am deſpiſed and become the very ſcorne of men, and a reproach among the people.

Thirdly, He ſets forth, as the contempt of his perſon, ſo the ſickneſs and diſeaſes of his body, together with their ſad Symptoms and effects, towards the making of him yet more compleatly miſerable. This he doth at the eighteenth and nineteenth verſes; By the great force of my diſeaſe, is my Garment changed, it bindeth me about as the coller of my coat, he hath caſt me into the mire; and I am become like duſt and aſhes.

Fourthly, He urgeth his preſent miſery by (which is worſe then all this) the hidings of Gods face and favour from him, as alſo by the ſtops and denyals which the Lord put upon his prayers and groans, at the Twentieth verſe; I cryed unto thee, and thou doſt not hear me; I ſtand up, and thou regardeſt me not. When Job was brought to this paſs, that man did not regard him at all, and (as to ſenſe) God regarded him as little; what could be added, in this life, to make him either more unhappy, or more ſenſible of his unhappineſs? Therefore after ſeveral re-inforcements of his ſorrow, by other additional arguments and conſiderations, he concludes this doleful ſtory in a proverbial lamentation (ver. 28, 29, 30, 31.) I went mourning without the Sun, I ſtood up and I cryed in the Congregation. I am a brother to Dragons, and a companion to Owls. My skin is black upon me, and my bones are burnt with heat. My Harp alſo is turned to mourning, and my Organ into the voyce of them that weep.

Again we may analiſe the whole Chapter thus;.

Firſt, Job ſhews his preſent miſery, by the injurious and reproachful ſpeeches and revilings, which he received from the worſt of men, in the firſt ten verſes.

Secondly, he ſhews it, by their injurious actings and affronts put upon him, to the Sixteenth verſe; Upon my right hand riſe the youth, they puſh away my feet, &c.

Thirdly, By the extream grief and pain which he ſuffered, through the ſores and ſickneſſes which afflicted his body, from the ſixteenth to the nineteenth verſe.

Fourthly, By the ſevere and enemy-like carriage of God towards him, from the Twentieth to the Twenty-fifth verſe.

Fifthly, By that little compaſſion and leſs relief which he found from others in his affliction, though himſelf had been full of compaſſion to the afflicted, ver. 25, 26, 27. all which he ſhuts up with a ſad complaint from the twenty-eighth verſe to the end of the Chapter.

Verſ. 1. But now they that are younger then I, have me in deriſion.

In theſe words we have two things conſiderable.

Firſt, The contempt caſt upon Job. Secondly, The perſons, who contemned him. Job aggravates the afflictiveneſs of this contempt, very much by the character and condition of his contemners; They were mean, yea vile, and he deſcribes their meanneſs and vileneſs ſeveral wayes.

Firſt, By their youth (ver. 1.) They that are younger then I, (men below me in years, yea very Boyes or Children) have me in deriſion.

Secondly, He deſcribes them, by the baſeneſs of their pedigree or parentage; Whoſe Fathers I would have diſdained to have ſet with the Dogs of my flock.

Thirdly, He deſcribes them further, by their uſeleſneſs, at the ſecond verſe; Yea, whereto might the ſtrength of their hands profit me? They were ſuch a generation of men, as were unſerviceable and unprofitable, not worth the taking up in the ſtreetes for any honeſt imployment.

Fourthly, He deſcribes them by their poverty and want of all things: none are more neceſſitated then they who (as he ſpeaks ver. 3, 4.) cut up Mallows by the buſhes, and Junipers root for their meat; they were ſurely men of a low condition, who had no better fare, or could make no better proviſion for their Tables.

Fifthly, They were not only poor, but juſtly deſpiſed for their ill qualities, and as bad behaviour, at the fifth verſe, They were driven forth from among men (they cryed after them as after a Thief) Honeſt men deſerve eſteem with all, and have it with ſome men, though never ſo poor; but theſe like theeves were caſhier'd from the ſociety of all honeſt men, yea of all men who were not as bad as themſelves, and joyned hands with them in doing miſchief.

Sixthly, By their miſerable habitation or place of abode (ver. 6, and 7.) To dwell in the clefts of the valleyes, in caves of the earth, and in the Rocks. Among the buſhes they brayed, under the nettles they were gathered together. 'Tis like to prove a good brood, that was thus neſted. We read indeed of many holy ones (of whom (as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 11. 38.) the World was not worthy) who wandered in deſarts, and in mountains, and in Dens, and Caves of the Earth; But, Theſe men were turn'd out and purſued, like men unworthy to live in the World, much more unworthy to be admitted into any civil ſociety.

Laſtly, Job argues their vileneſs by the fooliſhneſs of their Fathers, an evil Bird hath an evil egg; Thus he ſpeaks at the eighth verſe, they were Children of fools, which ſome underſtand of the young men, others of their Fathers, their Fathers were wicked and ſtark nought, they were children of fooles, yea Children of baſe men, they were viler then the earth; This was the beſt character which Job could give the men that deſpiſed him, they were baſe and of a baſe extraction, they were ſprung from an ill root, and themſelves were evil branches, Though we cannot alwayes conclude of the branch (in a moral ſence) by the root, yet moſt branches are fruited in morals according to their root.

As Job hath thus aggravated the ſcorne and contempt put upon him, by the inconſiderableneſs of the perſons who did contemn him.

So Secondly, He doth it by a particular innumeration of thoſe actions or wayes, by which they expreſſed their contempt; they did not only contemn him in their hearts, as Michal deſpiſed David dancing before the Ark, but they acted their contempt outwardly. And we have five particular acts of their contempt inſtanced in.

Firſt, They made him their ſong, at the nineteenth verſe.

Secondly, They made him their by-word, at the latter end of the ſame verſe.

Thirdly, They abhorred him, at the tenth verſe.

Fourthly, They fled from him, they ſo abhorred him that they avoided him, as if he had been (as Turtullus the Orator ſaid of Paul) the Plague, or as we tranſlate, A Peſtilent fellow.

Fifthly, They did even ſpirt in his face; then which nothing can be done more reproachfully.

Thus you have, the reſolution; Firſt, of the whole Chapter; and, Secondly, A more diſtinct diſcovery of the firſt ten verſes, which hold forth, the contempt and diſhonour which Job ſuffered from men, while he was ſorely ſuffering and ſmarting under the hand of God. The greatneſs of which ſufferings appears; Firſt, By the conſideration of the perſons from whom he ſuffered. Secondly, by the actions under which he ſuffered. So much of the General ſence of this context.

I ſhall in the next place open the words diſtinctly.

Verſ. 1. But now they that are younger then I, have me in deriſion.

But now,] This now points at the ſorrowful turn of his ſtate, as if he had ſaid; It is not with me now, as it hath been; he ſpeaks in the grief of a ſad heart, commemorating what he had been, and comparing it with what he was; It is a great miſery, to have been happy; None are ſo low, as they who now can only ſay, they have been high; none ſo poor as they, who now can only ſay, they have been rich; none are ſo cut and pincht with diſgrace as they who having been in honour are forced to ſay, Now they have me in deriſion; ſuch was Job's caſe.

Miſerum iſtuc verbū & peſſimum eſt, habuiſſe & nihil habere. Plaut. in Rud. Acts 5. ſc. 3.

Now they that are younger then I, have me in deriſion. The Hebrew is, They that are ſmaller of dayes then I, that is, they that have not lived ſo many dayes as I; The word rendred young, ſignifies ſmall or little, two wayes.

צעיר Exiguus quantitate & qualitate; Opponitur רב (Gen. 25. 23.) quod amplitudinem, authoritatem eminentiam denotat; Apoſtolus per μεῖζων & ἐλάσσων reddit, Rom. 9. Merc.

Firſt, In degree whether of quantity or quality. In the fourteenth Chapter of this Book, at the twenty-firſt verſe, Job ſaith of a deceaſed Father, His Sons come to honour, and he knoweth it not, and they are brought low, (or made little, it is this word) but he perceiveth it not of them. Thus it imports a declined or deſpicable condition among men. As Gideon ſaid (Judg. 6. 15.) Oh my Lord, wherewith ſhall I ſave Iſrael? Behold my Family is poor (or as the Margin hath it, My Thouſand is the meaneſt) in Manaſſeh, and I am the leaſt in my Fathers houſe. So (Mic. 5. 2.) But thou Bethlehem Ephrata, though thou be little among the Thouſands of Judah, yet, &c.

Secondly, It notes ſmall in number, or a few; and ſo the word put alone without the addition of the word dayes, or years, ſignifies one that is young, or younger then ſome others to whom the relation is made. When Lot went up out of Zoar and dwelt in a Cave, he and his two Daughters, the firſt born ſaid unto the younger, our Father is old, &c. (Gen. 19. 30, 31.) And ſo the word is uſed again in Joſeph's addreſs to his aged Father, with his two Sons for a bleſſing, (Gen. 48. 14.) And Iſrael ſtretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraims head, who was the younger, or the leſſer. In both theſe Scriptures, the word of the Text is put alone to ſignifie the younger, without any expreſs mention of time of dayes.

Minim. Sept. Infimi. Auguſt. Breves præ me diebus; Aquil. Parvi præ me ſecundum dies. Piſc. Dubium an amicos notet ut juniores. Bold. Certe quæ ſequuntur viris illis honoratis non competant. Scult.

From theſe ſeveral renderings of the word, ariſe ſeveral readings of the Text. One ſaith, The leaſt; another, The loweſt; A third, They that are ſhort of me in dayes; A fourth, They that are ſmall to me in dayes, have me in deriſion. It is queſtioned by ſome, whether Job by thoſe that were, or whom he calls younger then himſelf, meant not his oppoſing friends, eſpecially Zophar and Bildad, who are conceived to have been younger then Job, and whom he had often charged with mocking him. But, ſurely, Job had better thoughts of his friends (though much offended with them) then the word of this Text will bear; Their Fathers doubtleſs, were not ſuch as Job would have diſdained to have ſet with the Dogs of his flock; They were not men forced by want and famine, To cut up Mallowes by the buſhes, and Juniper roots for their meat; They did not flee into the Wilderneſs, much leſs were they driven from among men; They were no fooles, nor were they Children of fooles: Job's friends were wiſe and godly men, though quite out and miſtaken in their judgment about him: They were men of credit and honour in their Countrey, and therefore the deſcription of the men who derided Job will no way fit them.

So then, by the younger here ſpoken of, we are to underſtand ſome others that had to do, or dealt with Job thus deſpightfully, as he ſpake in his complaint (Chap. 19. 18.) Yea, young Children deſpiſed me; I aroſe, and they ſpake againſt me: So here, They that are younger then I (though poſſibly men in years)

Have me in deriſion.] The word was rendred laughed, at the twenty-fourth verſe of the former Chapter; If I laughed on them they believed it not: There the Reader may find, the ſeveral ſignifications of it. The General ſence of that verſe and this, ſtand directly oppoſite; That ſhewed Job a man of ſuch honour among the people, that though he laughed or was merry with them, yet they maintained the ſame reſpect to him, and would not laugh out with him, or in his preſence. But this verſe ſhews, that the vileſt of men did not only take the boldneſs to be familiar or laugh with him, but had the impudence to laugh at him, as the word in this conſtruction ſignifies. He doth not ſay, they were merry with me, but, They have made themſelves merry with me; they did not ſport with me, but made me their ſport. To be derided, is more grievous then to be reproached; ſorrow never gets ſo cloſe, nor ſtrikes ſo deep, as when we ſee and hear others rejoycing and jeering (both thoſe acts enter into the compoſition of deriſion) at our ſorrowes; This was Job's burden above and beſides all that he bear before; They (ſaith he) that are younger then I, have me in deriſion.

Non jocantur aut ludunt mecū, ſed irridant ſanniſque & excipiunt me, hoc שחק ſignificat, quando cum על conſtruitur, ridere autē & jocari quando conſtruitur cum אל Merc. Druſ.

Nunc monent me minores tempore. Sept. Auguſt. Grave eſt ſenem qui multos antea commonefecit, à junioribus admoneri. Nicet.

The Septuagint render, young ones reproved or admoniſhed me; as if he had ſaid, Now they that are younger then I, take upon them to teach, yea to check, and admoniſh me. And well might Job put this among his afflictions; Seeing it cannot but be burdenſome to ancient men, who have long and often counſelled and directed others, to ſee young upſtarts, and green heads preſuming to teach and direct them. This is a truth, but the Original Text will not bear that Tranſlation, our own is full and clear. But now they that are younger then I, have me in deriſion.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The beſt eſtabliſhed eſtate of man in this world is ſubject to changes up and down, forward and backward is our lot in this life.

What a vaſt difference is there (as was toucht before) in the face and complexion of this and the former Chapter? 'Tis not eaſie to believe they ſhould both concern the ſame man. Princes are chiefs among men; all men are ready to powre honours upon them, and ſome, flatteries; yet as the Pſalmiſt hath it (Pſal. 107. 40.) He (that is God) powreth contempt upon Princes; And that may be the lot of good Princes, as well as of bad ones; So it was with Job, and he acknowledgeth it was God who ſuffered, yea, ordered that contempt to fall upon him, and ſo abaſed him in the eyes of that people, by whom he had been ſo highly honoured. The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 7. 31.) gives the reaſon why Saints ſhould live at a diſtance, and keep their diſtance from worldly things, Mourning about them, as if they mourned not, rejoycing about them, as if they rejoyced not, and uſing them, as not abuſing them, becauſe the faſhion of the World paſſeth away; the World cannot keep faſhion with any man long; Nor need we wonder that it doth not: For ſeeing Heaven and Earth, which are as (I may ſay) the foundation and the roof of that great houſe which God hath built (the World is but a great houſe for man to dwell in: ſeeing (I ſay) theſe two, the Heaven and the Earth) paſs away, and are changed, how ſhould we imagine that any ſtate or thing under Heaven is free from changes: (Pſal. 102. 25, 26.) Of old haſt thou laid the foundation of the Earth, and the Heavens are the work of thine hands; they ſhall periſh, but thou ſhalt endure, yea, all of them ſhall wax old like a Garment, as a veſture ſhalt thou change them, and they ſhall be changed: but thou art the ſame, and thine yeares ſhall have no end. The Heaven and the Earth contain and uphold all things; Now, if theſe are changed as a Garment, much more are all things between theſe, ſubject to continual viciſſitudes and changes (Iſa. 40. 6.) All fleſh is graſs, and all the goodlineſs thereof, as the flower of the field; the graſs withereth, the flower fadeth, but the Word of our God ſhall ſtand for ever; nothing abides but God and his word: Is there any ſtability or continuance in graſs and flowers? There's no more in man. We ſaw Job a flouriſhing flower in the former Chapter, but we ſee him a withered flower in this.

Secondly, as Job's outward ſtate changed, ſo did the opinion of men about his perſon.

Hence Obſerve, Men are very unconſtant to their eſteem and opinions of men.

Variety of opinions often ariſe concerning the ſame men, even while the men are the ſame, much more when their condition alters; They that were elder then Job, had him in honour formerly. But, Now they that were younger then he, had him in deriſion. And if we look upon the young men in the Twenty-ninth Chapter, they were all in awe of him, and hid themſelves, they durſt not appeare where he was preſent; He was a man of ſuch authority, and carried it with ſuch a Majeſtick gravity, that he was above reproach; yet now, even youths, grew not only bold with him, but abuſive. We read (Acts. 14. 11.) how highly Paul and Barnabas, were eſteemed by the Heathen Lyſtrians; thoſe holy men, had much a do to ſtave off the people from adoring, and ſacrificing to them; They cryed them up for more then men, ſaying, The Gods are come down to us in the likeneſs of men. So that Paul was forced to uſe his beſt oratory to perſwade them out of that laviſh opinion, and idolatrous devotion; (ver. 15.) Sirs, why do ye theſe things, we alſo are men of like paſſions with you, and preach unto you that you ſhould turn from theſe vanities unto the living God: yet at the eighteenth verſe, they drew them out of the City, and ſtoned them as men not worthy to live. And as Paul had here a change from the better to the worſe, ſo from the worſe to the better (Acts 28. 4, 5, 6.) When the Barbarians ſaw the venomous beaſt hang on his hand, they ſaid among themſelves, no doubt this man is a murderer, &c. And though he ſhook off the beaſt into the fire, and felt no harm, yet they looked when he ſhould have ſwollen, or fallen down dead ſuddenly; but after they had looked a great while, and ſaw no harme come to him, they changed their mindes, and ſaid that he was a God. Thus upon events or changes of providence, many change their apprehenſions of men, ſometimes for the better, but uſually for the worſe. Though there is nothing more certain then what the ſtate of a good man is, and ſhall be in the thoughts of God; yet there is nothing more uncertain, then what he ſhall be in the thoughts of men.

Hence take theſe two inferences of advice.

Firſt, Be not lifted up, by the applauſe and approbation of man, be not much taken with their good word, and eſteem. Saints muſt learn to eſteem themſelves, by the eſteem they have with God. The Apoſtles approved themſelves as the Miniſters of God, not only, in much patience, in afflictions, in neceſſities, &c. But, By the armour of righteouſneſs, on the right hand; and on the left, by honour, and diſhonour, by evil report, and good report. Honour among men, is one of the greateſt tryals of man. An ill report is very burdenſome; and 'tis no eaſie matter rightly to bear a good report. As the fining pot is to the ſilver, ſo is a man to his praiſe (Prov. 27. 21.) that is, (as the ſcope of the proverb carries it) ſo is praiſe to a man. He that is praiſed, is not only much approved, but much proved; This fining pot, will indeed try what metal he is made of. As praiſe is due to worth, ſo it makes a diſcovery of worth; And look what worthleſsneſs, what droſs, or lightneſs is in any mans ſpirit, praiſe will diſcover that alſo.

Secondly, Seeing there is ſuch a changableneſs in the judgements, and opinions of men; Then, as we ſhould not be lifted up with their applauſe, ſo not caſt down by their deſpiſings; (Iſa. 2. 22.) Ceaſe ye from man, whoſe breath is in his noſtrills, for wherein is he to be accounted of? his praiſe is not to be accounted of, nor is his reproach, his good will is not much to be accounted of, nor is his diſpleaſure. We are not to rejoyce much in what man can do, or ſay for us, nor are we to be troubled much at what he doth, or can do, at what he ſaith, or can ſay againſt us, while we are innocent.

Againe, Conſider, Job was in an afflicted condition, when they that were younger then he, had him in deriſion.

Hence Note, A change in our outward condition, cauſeth many to change their opinions concerning us.

While Job did ſwim in the full ſtreames of riches and honour, all reſpected him; but no ſooner were the waters fallen, and his worldly greatneſs ebb'd or abated, but all ſorts of men, eſpecially the worſt of men abated their reſpects to him. No ſooner was he afflicted, but ſlighted and derided. Job was as perfect, and upright, he feared God and eſchewed evil as much as ever, his inward ſtate changed not, only his outward did; he was not ſo rich and pompous as before, he made not ſo faire a ſhew in the fleſh as before, that beauty was darkened, ſtained, and gone, and then they ſaw no form, no comelineſs in him, that they ſhould deſire him. They who judge according to appearance, cannot judge righteous judgment, either concerning things or perſons. How ſuddenly did Shimei take an advantage, to revile and rail upon David, when he ſaw him in a troubled ſtate. David was as gracious a man as before, he was as much after Gods heart as before, but becauſe he was in diſtreſs, how doth the tongue of Shimei rage and rant againſt him! 'Tis the happineſs and comfort of Believers, that God alters not his apprehenſions of them, upon any outward alterations which befal them: Let their eſtate vary ten times a day, as to worldly things, yet the judgment of God varieth not concerning them; They are as much honoured and loved of God upon a dunghil, as upon a Throne. And that men alter their opinion of us upon theſe alterations, is argument enough that they are but men, that are blind, and ignorant, that they judg by appearance, and not in righteouſneſs; We ſhould walk by faith, and not by ſight, ſometimes towards others as well as our ſelves. And when we judge of men, we ſhould not look at what they ſuffer, but at what they are, elſe we may ſoon paſs a wrong ſentence upon them. What the Apoſtle ſaith to another purpoſe, is true of this (2 Cor. 4. 18.) Look not at the things that are ſeen, but at the things that are not ſeen; If you look at the things which are ſeen, you will ſay ſuch a man is happy and good, becauſe he enjoyeth good, and proſpers; and you will conclude ſuch a man is miſerable, and ſtark nought, becauſe poor, and laid low in the World. Therefore learn to judge of men, by the things that are not ſeen in their nature, but in their fruits and effects, by their grace, and ſpiritual Glory, by their faith, and righteouſneſs, by their patience, and meekneſs, by their holineſs, and uprightneſs. Judge others by their beſt part, and right ſide, elſe you will make a wrong, a crooked judgment of them, and deride thoſe whom you ought to reverence.

Fourthly, From the thing it ſelf of which Job complaines,

Obſerve, To be ſcorned and derided amongſt men is a great affliction.

Chriſt numbers it with perſecution (Math. 5. 11.) Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall revile you, and perſecute you, and ſhall ſay all manner of evil againſt you falſly for my ſake. And among all ſufferings, this to ſome is the ſoreſt, and the greateſt. The Apoſtle exhorts the Saints (Heb. 10. 32.) To call to remembrance the former dayes, in which after they were illuminated, they endured a great fight of afflictions: he calls it a great fight, the word is tranſlated a manifold fight; now what was this great fight of afflictions? The next words anſwer, partly, whilſt you were made a gazing ſtock both by reproaches and afflictions; (They are made a gazing ſtock, whom men deride and ſcorn.) And, ſaith he, In this you endured a great, a manifold fight of affliction, as if they had contended with many enemies, yea, with many Armies of enemies, while they ſtoutly received the charge of their deriders. And to ſhew that deriſion or ſcorn is a great affliction, the Prophet foretold, that a very great part of Chriſts ſufferings, ſhould be paid him in deriſions. (Iſa. 53. 3.) He is deſpiſed and rejected of men, a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with grief (it was no ſmall grief and ſorrow to him, to be deſpiſed) ſo it was propheſied of him, and the hiſtory of Chriſts ſufferings proves the fulfilling of it to the full.

Neſcio quomodo omnibus penè rebus amarius ſolent mordere maledicta, cum certè multi ad laqueum convolarint famæ opprobria non ferentes. Chryſoſt. Hom. 15. in Matth. Quaſi cum multis hoſtibus confligit qui cum una contumelia depugnat.

Fifthly, Job complains much that he was derided; what was Job? He was a man that had formerly been in great honour and eſteem, and now to be derided, went near, and ſtuck cloſe to him.

Hence Note, When a man who hath been much reſpected comes to be derided, his affliction is double.

If a mean man, who never knew what honour meanes, be deſpiſed, it is ſomewhat to him, but it touches a man to the quick that hath been high in honour, to ſee and hear himſelf diſhonoured. Some out of a true nobleneſs, others out of a ſullenneſs, or cinicalneſs of ſpirit, ſlight the reſpects and applauſe of the World; it is a ſmall matter to ſuch, though all deſpiſe them: but for thoſe, who either have, or would have reſpect with men, for thoſe who have a deſire, and an appetite after honour, or a care of, and reſpect to their honour, (ſo a good man may have: Ambitiouſly to deſire honour, and aim at it, is not good, but to take care of our honour and credit is good, and a duty) now for ſuch a man to be diſhonoured or ſlighted by men, is a great tryal: And this aggravated that contempt and reproach which was poured upon Chriſt, becauſe he was a perſon ſo infinitely honourable, he was honoured of the Father, he was honoured and adored by the Angels, he thought it no robbery to be equal with God, and yet when he came down into the World, he was reputed a Devil, and called This fellow. O how heavy is the burden of reproach to them who have been loaded with honour! Indeed our Lord Jeſus Chriſt was above the reproaches of men. He (as 'tis ſaid Heb. 12.2.) deſpiſed the ſhame; that is, he ſleighted it as that which could not reach him; but in it ſelf, reproach is a morſel of very hard digeſtion; only grace, and a ſence of acceptance with God, can get it off the ſtomack of man. He only that truly honours God, can comfortably entertain diſhonour among men; and when men refuſe to give us the honour due to us, it is good for us to conſider, whether we have not fayled in giving honour to God, to whom all honour is due.

Sixthly, Job argues his affliction, not only becauſe having been in honour, he was now derided, but becauſe he was derided by young men.

Hence Note, When aged and grave men, are depiſed by thoſe that are young, this hightens the affliction.

Job put that in, as a ſpecial ingredient, young men did it: There are three conſiderations about perſons reproaching us, which increaſe the ſence of our reproach; Firſt, When we are reproached by friends, Theſe ten times have ye reproached me, ſaid Job to his friends (Chap. 19.3.) To be reproached by thoſe that are intimates, familiars, and companion friends, is moſt unfriendly and cuts deeply. Secondly, To be derided by wiſe men (ſuch were Job's friends) that's more cutting. Thirdly, (as herein the Text) to be derided by young men, by perſons much below us, is another cutting circumſtance of our reproach. When Eliſha went up unto Bethel, as he was going up by the way (ſaith that Scripture) there came forth little Children out of the City, and mocked him, and ſaid unto him, Go up thou bald head. This provoked the holy Prophet to the quick, ſo that (not in a paſſion, but ſerious deliberation) he curſed them in the Name of the Lord, (2 King. 2.23,24.) Young men, not only by the Law of God, but of Nature, and of Nations, ought to give reſpect to the ancient; to ſee all theſe Laws broken at once upon us, cannot but be a heart-affecting, if not a heart-breaking affliction.

Seventhly, Job complains of this uncomely carriage, not only as it was an affliction to him, but as it was a wickedneſs in them.

Hence Note; A deriding Spirit, is a wicked Spirit.

A dull ſpirit is far better, then a deriding ſpirit. 'Tis better to be a fool, then a flouter. They in the firſt Pſalm, who ſat down in the Chair of the ſcorner, were aſcended to the higheſt ſtep or top of wickedneſs. Men are bad to the utmoſt, when once they deride the good, or their betters; and yet I can ſcarce determine which is worſt, to deride the bad, or the good, ſeeing the condition of the one calls for pity and compaſſion at our hands, as faſt and as loudly as the condition of the other calls for reſpect and honour. The Apoſtle propheſieth of a Generation of ſcorners, as the dregs of mankind, in the dregs of time. (2 Pet. 3.3,7.) Knowing this, that there ſhall come in the laſt days ſcoffers, walking after their own luſts. They throw off the Law, and walk by their luſts, who ſcoff either at the word of God, at the wayes of good men, or at the wickedneſs of thoſe who are bad.

Eighthly, Note, As it is ſinful to deride any, ſo it is more ſinful to deride the aged, and moſt ſinful to deride the aged, when they are in miſery.

Both theſe were complicated in Job, he was an ancient man, and an afflicted man; to deride a young man in his proſperity is a ſin, but to deride an old man in miſery, is (who can tell how) many ſins; it is woful to be in miſery, but wo to them who deride the miſerable.

Ninthly, Job was not only an aged, and an afflicted man, but he was a good and a godly man, and that made the ſin yet worſe, and the more exceeding ſinful.

Laſtly, From the perſons deriding, they were young men,

Note, Youth is very apt to evil, young men are ready to abuſe themſelves and others.

As young mens counſels are dangerous, (Jeroboam loſt ten Tribes by following them) ſo young mens affections are boyſterous and unruly. Paul exhorts Timothy to fly youthful luſts. Old age hath its luſts; no age, but there is a luſt that belongs to it; but youth hath more luſts haunting it, then any age of man. It is a great argument of the power of grace, when grace ſubdues luſt in young men; to ſee young men converted to God, and godly in converſation; to ſee young men ſubject to the Scepter of Chriſt, and mortifying their corruptions; to ſee young men ſerving the Lord, and honouring his ſervants in their afflictions, this ſhews the mighty power of grace ſubduing luſt, which is ready to get into the Throne, and at once to rule and ruine all. Paul gives this counſel to his Son Timothy, Let no man deſpiſe thy youth. Young men had need take care to keep themſelves from being deſpiſed; and young men have as much need to be counſelled, yea admoniſht not to deſpiſe others, eſpecially the ancient. By how much men of any age, are more obnoxious to any luſt, by ſo much the more ſhould they be both awakened, and watchful againſt it. They that are younger then I, have me in deriſion: Whoſe Fathers I would have diſdained to have ſet with the Dogs of my Flock.

As Job's deriders were young men, or men inferiour to him in age, ſo they were mean men in degree, ſuch they were (ſaith he)

Whoſe Fathers I would have diſdained to have ſet with the Dogs of my Flock.

We may take theſe Fathers, either for their immediate Fathers, or for thoſe at a further remove, any from whom they were deſcended may be comprehended under their Fathers. This relative term Father, is a name, Firſt, Of Age; Secondly, Of honour; Thirdly, Of vertue, it imports graciouſneſs, wiſdom and gravity. We may ſuppoſe Ancients or Fathers fully ſtored with treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, of grace and goodneſs. And hence, ſome by Fathers here underſtand, ſuch of them as were wiſeſt and of greateſt underſtanding, or ſuch of them as were beſt and of greateſt experience. But I rather take the word properly for natural Fathers.

Whoſe fathers I would have diſdained.] The word imports loathing, or nauſeating, which is properly a troubleſome affection of the ſtomack at unpleaſing meat; as if Job had ſaid, I was ready to ſpew or vomit at the ſight or thought of them, they were a burden to my Soul. I looked upon them as loathſome creatures, and therefore unworthy of the meaneſt place or office; even to have ſet them with the Dogs of my Flock; that is, to have appointed or diſpoſed them with the Dogs of my Flock. Dogs are accounted the meaneſt of creatures, though ſome Dogs have many very good qualities in them, and are very uſeful, which hath given occaſion to very grave writers to ſpeak much in their commendation: Yet in Scripture ſpeech and ſence, a Dog is a term, not only of ſome diminution, but of utmoſt diſgrace. When Eliſha Propheſied what ſad and black work Hazael would make in the World, he anſwered with higheſt indignation, (2 Kings 8.13.) What is thy ſervant a Dog that he ſhould do this great thing? He ſuppoſed the Prophet had the loweſt opinion of him when he foretold that he ſhould act ſuch cruelties; and himſelf knew no lower expreſſion of that low opinion which the Prophet might have of him, then to ſuppoſe himſelf a Dog. We have a Parallel place, (2 Sam. 16.9.) Then ſaid Abiſhai the Son of Zerviah unto the King, Why ſhould this dead Dog (meaning Shimei) curſe my Lord the King? Let me go over, I pray thee, and take off his head. Chriſt ſpeaks at the ſame rate (Mat. 15.26.) It is not meet to take the Childrens bread, and to caſt it to Dogs; that is, to vile perſons, or to the Gentiles, who were then a deſpiſed People, yea not a People. (Mat. 7.6.) Give not that which is Holy unto Dogs; that is, to prophane men, who are the vileſt of men. At this day, the Jews and Turks call any that are not of their Religion, Dogs. And it is the cuſtome of many Nations, to call thoſe whom they deſpiſe or hate, Dogs. The Jews called the Gentiles Dogs, becauſe as the Dog was an unclean creature, ſo the Jews accounted the Gentiles common and unclean: And that was the Apoſtle Peters opinion of them, till God taught him another leſſon (Acts 10.) The Apoſtle

Paul (Phil. 3.2.) exhorts the Church to beware of Dogs; that is, of falſe Teachers, who are like Dogs, becauſe baſe and unworthy; they are filthy Dogs, and fawning Dogs, they are alſo ſnarling and biting Dogs; and they are fitly called Dogs, for they will take a great deal of pains, they will compaſs a great deal of ground, as Spaniels do, yea as Chriſt ſpake of the Phariſees, they will compaſs Sea and Land, to get their game, or make a Proſelyte. Dogs are under many diſparagements all the Bible over, and it, almoſt, ends with this dreadful ſentence (Rev. 22.15.) Without are Dogs: Therefore when Job ſaith, I would not have ſet them with the Dogs of my Flock, he implyeth a very low, the loweſt eſteem of them; and 'tis probable this was a vulgar or proverbial ſpeech in thoſe Countreys, to figure out an unworthy man, He is not worthy to ſit with the Dogs; we may give Job's ſence more particularly thus; either

Non dignabar patres ponere, i. e. componere comparare cum canibus gregis mei. Vivit ſiliquis & pane ſecundo. Hor. lib. 2. Epiſt. 1.

Firſt, That the Fathers of thoſe young men lived a worſe life then the very Dogs that kept his flocks. And then to ſet them, is to compare them with his Dogs; as if Job had ſaid, I made as good account of the Dogs of my Flock, as of ſuch men, or my Dogs did lead as good a life as they, and feed as well as they; you may read their Bill of fare, or how they were dieted, verſ. 3, 4.

Or Secondly, Seeing Job would not ſet them with the Dogs of his Flock, it ſhews they were as vile, as vile could be, not only ſuch as were of the loweſt rank and courſeſt ſort of men; but ſuch as were below the loweſt, and courſer then the courſeſt of men; not fit for any good mans company, no nor for any mans company, yea ſuch as were ſcarce fit for the company of beaſts, or ſuch as were not fit for their company who are placed and reckon'd amongſt the loweſt of beaſts, or of thoſe who are lower then beaſts, Dogs; And thoſe Dogs too, the lower ſort of Dogs; not ſuch Dogs, as the Lord or Maſter of the family delights in for Hauking and Hunting, nor ſuch as the Miſtreſs of the Family ſometimes lays in her lap, where the Children ſhould be, and where ſhe would poſſibly diſdain to lay a poor mans Child, but they were more deſpicable then (as we ſay) an ordinary Shepheards Cur.

Thirdly, We may expound theſe words as expreſſing the unfitneſs of thoſe perſons, for any buſineſs or office; as if Job had ſaid, I would not truſt them with the keeping of my Sheep, or I would rather truſt my Flock of Sheep with my Dogs, then with them; my Dogs would be more careful and ſerviceable then they.

Indigni quibus canum Cuſtodia committeretur, vel qui canes curarent. Chryſoſt. Num me præfectum canibus exiſtimas?

Fourthly, When Job ſaith, Whoſe Fathers I would have diſdained to have ſet with the Dogs of my Flock: We may give the ſence thus; I would not make them my Dog-keepers, or I would not ſet them over my Dogs. So ſome expound that of Abner (2 Sam. 3.8.) Am I a Dogs-head, &c. That is, am I a Dog-keeper, am I General or Commander of Dogs, rather then General of an Army? Am I ſo mean! This expoſition ſuits well with the words following. For wherein could the ſtrength of their hands profit me?

Here it may be queſtioned, whether it did become Job to ſpeak thus contemptibly of men, though his contemners? May any man ſpeak thus of men? Or think them not fit to ſit with his Dogs, or to be ſet over his Dogs? May a man prefer his Dogs before men? What though they were poor, and nought, yet as men they were above all beaſts; yea as good as any man, in their general ſtate or nature, as men. The meaneſt Beggar, hath as much of manhood, or of humanity ſtrictly taken, as the greateſt Prince: why then doth Job ſpeak thus diſdainfully of them here? In the former Chapter he ſpake in another tone of the poor, he was a helper to the Fatherleſs, he deſpiſed none for their low eſtate.

I anſwer, Job did not diſdain them becauſe poor, he only ſhews what kind of poor they were who derided him, even ſuch as no man would imploy, no not to keep Sheep; he diſdained them not becauſe poor in ſtate, but becauſe wicked in life. 'Tis ſinful to revile any that bear the Image of God, to call them Dogs, or to ſet them with their Dogs; yet in many, ſo little of the Image of God appears, and ſo much of the Image of the Devil, that to call them Dogs, yea to call them Devils, is to give them their due. Man that is in honour and underſtandeth not, is like the beaſts that periſh, (Pſal. 49. 20.) What then are they like, who have neither honour nor underſtanding?

Hence Note, Firſt, Men of a low and vile conditions, are often lower and viler in their conditions.

Some poor in this World, are rich in faith, as the Apoſtle James ſpeaks, (Chap. 2. 5.) Theſe are bleſſed poor. Chriſt ſaith to the Church of Smyrna (Rev. 2.9.) I know thine affliction, and thy poverty, but thou art rich; thou art in a poor ſtate, as to the World, thou haſt ſcarce bread to put into thy belly, or cloaths to put on thy back, but thou art rich in grace, and cloathed with the righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt. Others are poor in faith, as well as poor in purſe; they are poor in Purſe, and poorer in grace; theſe are miſerable and wretched poor.

Note, Secondly, Some are ſo vile and baſe in their qualities and conditions, that they are not fit for the meaneſt office, not ſo much as to keep Sheep, no nor to keep Dogs.

O conſider how ſin hath degraded man! O how low are we fallen by ſin! Every man hath ſomething of a divine light by nature (reaſon is a divine light) yet by ſin man acts not only below grace, but reaſon, and renders himſelf unfit to be truſted with the keeping of beaſts. God hath furniſhed ſome men with light and grace, with gifts and parts, with wiſdom and underſtanding, to adminiſter and manage all ſorts of affairs, both in Civils and Spirituals; but ſin hath rendered others unfit for any, the meaneſt ſervice, even to keep Sheep; what are beaſtly, ſwiniſh, and Dog-like conditions good for? And how ſad is it when ſuch as a good man would diſdain to ſet with the Dogs of his Flock, are ſet in the higheſt imployments and offices among, yea over men. The Prophet Iſaiah ſpeaks of Shepheards, myſtical, Spiritual Shepheards, that were not fit to keep Dogs; and theſe he compares to Dogs, (Iſa. 56. 10, 11.) His watchmen are blind, they are all ignorant, they are all dumb Dogs, they cannot bark, ſleeping, lying down, loving to ſlumber; yea they are greedy Dogs, which can never have enough; and they are Shepheards that cannot underſtand. And when men ſhewed themſelves thus brutiſh, no marvail, if the Prophet cryed, (verſ. 9.) All ye beaſts of the Field come to devour, yea all ye beaſts in the Forreſt. Some men are ſet to rule men, who keep no rules; and ſome men are ſet to teach men, who cannot teach themſelves; many take upon them to guide others to Heaven, who are themſelves going to Hell; this is a lamentation, and ſhould be for a lamentation. Yet ſuch are ſometimes offended that they get not great Imployments, whoſe wickedneſs unfits them for any Imployment, a wiſe man would not ſet them over his Dogs. When Pharaoh had heard of Joſeph's brethren, he ſaid to him (Gen. 47.6.) if thou knoweſt any men of activity amongſt them, then make them Rulers over my Cattel. Pharaoh would not have men rule his Cattel, unleſs they were men of activity; that is, men both diſcrete and induſtrious. He would not truſt droans nor ſlugs with looking to his Sheep or Oxen; how then ſhould we look out men of parts and honeſty for civil offices over the outward man, and how much more for Spiritual offices over the Souls of men?

Laſtly, Note, Though no man is to be upbraided meerly for his poverty; yet they that are poor and wicked too, may juſtly be upbraided with it.

The Apoſtle having ſaid (1 Pet. 2. 17.) Honour all men, preſently adds, Love the brotherhood, Fear God, Honour the King. As there is a ſpecial love due to the brethren, that is, to Saints, or godly men, and a peculiar honour due to Magiſtrates, or mighty men; ſo there is a common honour due to all men, which yet they forfeit who act and walk below the duties of man. That dreadful ſentence of God upon proud Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 4. 16.) falls upon many a man, though not ſo ſenſibly as upon him; Let his heart be changed from mans, and let a beaſts heart be given unto him. He that hath a beaſts heart will ſoon after act the beaſts part; and when once men act like beaſts, they forfeit their honour as men; and what can they expect then, but to be turn'd out and reckon'd among beaſts? How diſhonourable are thoſe poor men, who thus diſhonour honour their very poverty. Saints muſt prefer one another in honour (Rom. 12. 10.) And again, the Holy Apoſtle adviſeth them (Phil. 2. 3.) Let nothing be done through ſtrife or vain-glory, but in lowlineſs of mind, let each eſteem other better then themſelves. Saints ſhould walk humbly, and think themſelves leſs then the leaſt of Saints, giving the hand of honour to any other Saint: But as for the wicked, we muſt take heed of preferring them in honour; David gives this as the mark of a godly man, (Pſal. 15.4.) He is one, in whoſe eyes a vile perſon is contemned, but he honoureth them that fear the Lord; a vile perſon is contemptible, though great; bare greatneſs, is no guard againſt contempt. The Silver and Gold of a wicked man, cannot hide him from diſgrace; the fine Linnen and Purple of a wicked man, cannot cover his nakedneſs; and the rags of a godly man cannot obſcure his worth, nor hinder him from true honour in the hearts, and from the tongues of thoſe that truly fear and honour God. But where any are poor and wicked too, they draw double contempt upon themſelves. Job ſets theſe poor ones below his Dogs; poverty ſubjects men to diſgrace, but impiety is a diſgrace; poverty had made theſe men low, but ſin made them lower.

VERS. 2, 3.

Yea, whereto might the ſtrength of their hands profit me, in whom old age was periſhed?
For want and Famin they were ſolitary, fleeing into the Wilderneſs, in former time deſolate and waſte.

JOB proceeds to give a further Character of his deriders, about whom 'tis queſtioned (and that queſtion reaches the whole context) whether that which is ſpoken at this ſecond Verſe, and ſo on to the end of the tenth Verſe, be applicable to the young men, or to their Fathers. Interpreters vary in their opinions concerning this query; ſome referring this whole diſcourſe to the Fathers of thoſe young men; others applying it to the young men themſelves, and that Job ſaith no more of their Fathers, but what he had ſaid at the firſt Verſe, Whoſe Fathers I would have diſdained to ſet with the Dogs of my Flock.

I conceive that the matter here ſpoken of, may be referred to either; for as we ſay, like will to like, ſo, like is of like, the Children uſually bear the Image and ſuperſcription of their Fathers, not only as to their Naturals in feature and conſtitution, but as to their morals alſo in qualities and conditions. And as to Job's ſcope, it is very indifferent whether we underſtand this deſcription of the Fathers, or of their Sons, or whether we make application of it to them both. His purpoſe in the whole being only to ſhew, that his deriders were a very courſe and an unworthy ſort of People.

Verſ. 2. And whereto might the ſtrength of their hands profit me?

In theſe words Job ſeemes to give a reaſon, why he did not judge thoſe Fathers of the young men, who derided him, worthy of the meaneſt Employment; we may reſolve it into their utter inability to do him any conſiderable ſervice: And if we refer the words to the young men, they carry the ſame force of a reaſon too.

Whereto might the ſtrength of their hands profit me?] The Hebrew word rendred ſtrength, ſignifies either the faculty and power of acting and doing, or the act done. We may render the words ſtrictly thus; Whereto is the ſtrength of their hands to me? For what, or to what is their ſtrength uſeful? What doth the ſtrength of their hands ſerve for? What's the benefit of it? Which if we underſtand as ſpoken of the young men, then the words ſeem to carry this ſence; they who derided me were ſtrong enough, able enough for buſineſs, as to the Bulk of their bodies, but they were ſo idle, ſo vain, that I could have no benefit by them: Whereto did the ſtrength of their hands profit me? Theſe men had ſtrength of hands, and yet were unprofitable drones, good for nothing; like the Cretians, who as the Apoſtle deſcribes out of their own Poet (Tit. 1.12.) were Evil beaſts, ſlow bellies.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The ſtrength of mans hand, or the Power of working, is given to profit withal.

Our Natural ſtrength ſhould be improved for advantage, Firſt, To our ſelves, Secondly, to others, whether thoſe others are private relations within our own Walls, or more publique, Nations or perſons: Every power or ability of the mind, as alſo bodily ſtrength, is a Talent received from God, and muſt be accounted for. The ſtrength of the hand is not to be hid in a Napkin, nor to be put under ground, but to be traded with, to ſome good encreaſe. Some have ſtrength enough, yet no good comes in by it either to themſelves or others. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of the various gifs of God in the Church, ſaith (1 Cor. 4. 5, 6, 7.) There are diverſities of gifs, but the ſame Spirit; and there are differences of adminiſtrations, but the ſame Lord; and there are diverſities of Operations, but it is the ſame God, which worketh all in all; and then adds, But the manifeſtation of the Spirit is given to every one to profit withal. Now as every man who hath received the manifeſtation of the Spirit, hath received it to this end, for profit to the Church of God; ſo our portion of bodily gifts is beſtowed on us to profit withal. Therefore let us not be ſloathful in buſineſs, as the Apoſtle counſels us (Rom. 12. 11.) Strength is a Truſt, and if ſo, Firſt, take heed, ye be not found making no uſe of it; the diligence of the hand is under a promiſe, The diligent hand makes rich (Pro. 10.4.) Many have ſtrength enough, but they do no good with it, they are Idle, they are ſluggards, their hands are in their pockets, or warm in their Gloves, not warm at work. They have hand-ſtrength enough, but they have no heart-ſtrength; Wherefore is there a price in the hand of a fool to get wiſdom, ſeeing he hath no heart to it? That which the Prophet adviſeth in a good ſence (Iſa. 30. 7.) they follow in a bad, Their ſtrength is to ſit ſtill. They ſit ſtill, though they are ſtrong. Ephraim is called a ſilly Dove without a heart (Hoſ. 7. 11.) Ephraim was not without a hand, but he had not a heart to act and do, either for God or for himſelf to purpoſe, he had no courage, no activity of ſpirit to the ſtrength of his hand. Secondly, above all take heed that you be not found making an ill uſe of it; do not employ your ſtrength to your own diſſervice and deſtruction; ſo all they do who ſerve the will of the fleſh, and the will of Satan, or who walk according to the courſe of the World which lies in wickedneſs; the ſtrength of moſt men runs out all theſe wayes, and only in theſe. They are ſtrong to do miſchief, they do evil with both hands (that is, with all their working abilities) earneſtly (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Mic. 3. 7.) yea if they had (as the Heathen Poets feigned their Briareus) an Hundred hands, they ſhould all be employed and buſied in doing evil. 'Tis bad enough to let the ſtrength of your Bodies run to waſte, but 'tis worſe when it runs to evil uſes and purpoſes. Naturaliſts call the Hand, the Organ of Organs, or the chief inſtrument of action. Great things are done by it, when duely ſet awork. The Apoſtle ſaith of evil men (Tit. 1.16.) They are abominable, diſobedient, and to every good work Reprobate. If a good work be not choſen it cannot be done; where the heart elects not, the hand acts not. Whereto ſhould the ſtrength of their hands profit? What this unprofitable ſtrength was will appear yet further in the next Clauſe.

In whom old age was periſhed?] This form of ſpeaking is often uſed in Scripture. That which failes in a man, or wherein a man hath failed, is ſaid to periſh in or from him; and that which continues or abides in him, is ſaid not to periſh. (Jer. 18. 18.) Then ſaid they, Come let us deviſe deviſes againſt Jeremy, for the Law ſhall not periſh from the Prieſt, nor counſel from the wiſe. (And Ezek. 7.26.) we have the Affirmative of this Negative, The Law is periſhed, or the Law ſhall periſh from the Prieſt: As if they had ſaid, This Jeremy, who differs in opinion from all the Prieſts and wiſe men, while he skares us with clouds of blood hanging over our heads, and ready to diſſolve upon us, muſt needs be in the wrong, ſeeing the Law cannot periſh from the Prieſts, or they cannot be ſo miſtaken, who yet with one conſent Propheſie better things and more propitious times unto us. So did Zedekiah and the reſt, when Michaiah foretold the ruin of Ahab, 2 Kings 22. Again (Amos 2. 14.) Flight ſhall periſh from the ſwift; that is, they ſhall not be able to eſcape by flying; though they are ſwift as the Roe, and wing'd as the Bird, in regard of bodily ſtrength and activity, yet flight ſhall periſh from them; that is, they ſhall have no place to flee to, at leaſt, no opportunity to fly, or make an eſcape. Thus the old age of the men here ſpoken of was periſhed, they had no uſe of it, no advantage by it. Maſter Broughton reades to this ſence fully, Whoſe aged time came to nothing.

The word which we Tranſlate, old age, doth not properly ſignifie old age in general, or as common to all men, but a flouriſhing old age, which we alſo call a good old age. Some men break little, though they live long, they have not a drooping and withering old age, but do even bud and bloſſom in their old age. There is a weak decrepit old age ſignified by another word in the Prophet (Iſa. 65. 20.) There ſhall be no more thence an infant of dayes, nor an old man that hath not filled his dayes; Which may be underſtood either thus, that old men ſhould live to be very old, and ſo be full of dayes when they dyed, or (as I conceive) that they ſhould fill their dayes both with good done by them, and with good beſtowed upon them. In all which reſpects that phraſe in the Prophet ſeems to ſtand in direct oppoſition to this of Job in the Text, when he ſaith theſe men were men in whom old age was periſhed. As if he had expreſſed himſelf thus; they either dyed before they attained a full old age, or they had but a miſerable old age, they had only the dregs, the worſt of old age when they were old. Old age is periſhed in thoſe who either dye before they are old, or living to old age, are lame, blind, weak, or unfit for any ſervice: In ſome, old age flouriſheth, in others old age periſheth, they not having that vigor which appears and acts in many old men.

Secondly, The word rendred old age, may be taken for time in general, and the Text rendred thus, in whom time is periſhed; that is, who have miſerably ſpent and outworn their time; they were ſuch a generation of wretches, that they waſted and laviſht out all their dayes, partly in idleneſs, doing nothing, partly in wickedneſs, doing that which is worſe then nothing; they might well be ſaid not to have lived at all, becauſe not to any purpoſe. This Interpretation hits or ſutes the Character of vile perſons very fitly, they do not redeem time, as the Apoſtle exhorteth Saints to do, but utterly looſe and laviſh it quite away. They are prodigals who waſte their ſtate, but they more, who waſte their time.

Ἐπ' αὐτοὺς ἀπώλετο συντέλεια; ſuper eos peribat conſummatio, quaſi ſit כלה nam id valet συντέλεια. Ἀπώλετο αὐτοῖς πᾶν τὸ πρὸς ζωήν. Perierat illis, quicquid ad vitam facit. Symmach.

Thirdly, The Septuagint render the Text, (as they often-elſe where do) with too great a liberty of variation from the Original; Whereto (ſay they) could the ſtrength of their hands profit me, in whom perfection was periſhed? Which may imply, either the perfection of their perſons, or the perfection of their ſtate. To which latter ſence, ſome incline; as if he had ſaid, They were men ſo poor and low, that all the beauty of their outward ſtate was gone, they were deſtitute of all things needful and neceſſary for mans life, or for a comfortable ſubſiſtence. So the words are a deſcription of their poverty, as noting them a company of beggarly varlets, who had nothing left to maintain life, or to live upon: But I paſs this.

Fourthly, We may alſo take old age here, ſtrictly and preciſely for the later part or end of their or any mans life; and then the ſence of the words (in whom old age was periſhed) is plainly this; They were ſuch as never arrived at old age, or they never came to be old men, their luſts conſumed them, and they were cut off either by, or for their wickedneſs (Pſal. 55. ult.) Bloody and deceitful men ſhall not live out half their dayes. Old age muſt needs periſh in them, who dye in the midſt of their dayes, and ſo never live unto it. As the debauchery of ſome young men, makes their old age nothing elſe but an unweildy burden of bodily infirmities, ſo others by their debauchery in youth, are quite unburden'd and diveſted of their bodies before they reach old age: whereto could the ſtrength of thoſe young mens hands profit Job, in whom old age periſhed, by dying in their youth?

Senectus pro ſenili prudentia. Metaphora ſubjecti. Piſc. Simpliciter intelligo, in ſenili ætate eos ſenes non fuiſſe ſed adhuc pueros. Merc.

Fifthly, Old age may be taken in this place, for the adjuncts of old age, or for thoſe excellencies of wiſdom and gravity, of prudence and experience, or of ability and fitneſs to give counſel about, and aſſiſtance in bunſieſs, which often both accompany and honour old men. This, poſſibly might be the meaning of the Septuagint, rendring in whom perfection was periſhed; that is, the perfections of old age. Thus both in Scripture and in common ſpeaking, there is an old age which is not meaſured by the length of dayes, but by the improvement of them. When young men are wiſe and ſober, old age appears in them. And old age is periſh'd in the aged, when wiſdom is not with them. Thus the words are expounded by a metaphor of the ſubject for the adjunct. The prudent (though young) are to be numbred with the Ancient; and vain imprudent old men deſerve to be numbered among Children. Hence all great Councels of Senates (as among the Lacedæmonians and Romans, &c.) are called Senates, and their Councellors, Senators or Ancients, not that all who were taken into thoſe Counſels, were old in Years, but in wiſdom and gravity. Some bear the fruits of old age, in the greenneſs and ſpring of their life, being well ballanced and ballaſted by a ſerious judgment, well ſetled and grounded by ſtudy and experience; others are light-headed and frothy, light-ſpirited and fooliſh, though gray-hair'd; Theſe want old age, even in their old age; or in them old age is periſhed. So then, when Job ſaith, old age was periſhed in theſe men, we may underſtand him thus; they were ſo far from being fit for any employment in their youth, that in old age, when mens luſts and vanities uſe to decline, even then in that little remainder, or fag end of their dayes, they did not incline to any honeſt buſineſs, nor dedicate themſelves to what was good, they did not live ſoberly and temperately, much leſs holily in their old age. Though they did not periſh in their youth, yet both their youth and their old age periſhed. There is a truth in any of theſe Interpretations. Only for the clearer grounding of Obſervations, we may apply the words:

Inepti erant ad quidvis agendum, & in ipſa ſenectute, ſenectute carentes.

Firſt, To the young men; Whereto could the ſtrength of their hands (that is, of theſe young mens hands) profit me, in whom old age was periſhed; they loſt their old age before they came at it; ſome preſerve their youth in old age, others looſe their old age in their very youth. Thus Job ſeems to ſpeak concerning theſe young men; what though they were ſtrong, or had ſtrength of hand, yet their old age was periſhed in them.

Hence Note, Old age flouriſhed ſometimes in youth.

We may ſee that which is the honour of an old man in ſome who are young. Solomon was young, but old age, that is, wiſdom flouriſhed in him; Joſiah was young, but old age, that is, piety flouriſhed in him; he flouriſht in godlineſs, tenderneſs of heart, and zeal for reformation, when he was very young and tender; Timothy was a very young man, yet old age was not periſhed, but flouriſhed in him; Paul exhorted him, and he doubtleſs carried it ſo, that no man deſpiſed his youth; he was an example of the believers, in word, in converſation, in charity, in ſpirit, in faith, in purity. Wiſdom, gravity, prudence, temperance, are not alwayes confined to thoſe who have wrinckled faces and furrow'd brows, dim eyes and palſie hands, leaning upon a ſtaff: All the vertues of the ancient have ſhined in young men; grace makes all the glory of old age viſible in youth. But as in Job's young men, ſo in many more, old age is periſhed; there's nothing to be ſeen in them but youthful vanity.

Secondly, Comparing the former and the later part of the Verſe together, Obſerve,

The ſtrength of a young man profits little, if he have not the vertues and good qualities of an old man.

Though a man have the ſtrength of a Giant, yet unleſs he have judgment and prudence, what is he good for? Surely for nothing that's good. Strength without grace and holineſs ſerves for little, and without prudence it ſerves for nothing. Moral wiſdom is better then ſtrength, ſpiritual wiſdom is better then weapons of War, the underſtanding of a man will do more then his hands can. Whereto can the ſtrength of young mens hands profit us, in whom old age is periſhed, or in whom nothing of the old mans wiſdom and vertue is to be found?

Further, As theſe words may be applyed to old men; Whereto might the ſtrength of their hands profit me, in whom old age was periſhed?

Note Firſt, Some old men have nothing of old age in them, but the Infirmities of it.

They have no wiſdom nor underſtanding, they are neither grave nor prudent; theſe beauties of old age are faded and extinct in them. (Jer. 49. 7.) Concerning Edom, thus ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, Is wiſdom no more in Teman?

Is Counſel periſhed from the prudent? If a man be prudent, how can Counſel be periſhed from him? The meaning is, they who ſhould be prudent in regard of their age, from them wiſdom is periſhed. This is diſcernable in many at this day, Who when (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Heb. 5. 12.) for the time they ought to be teachers, have need that one teach them again which be the firſt principles of the Oracles of God, and are become ſuch as have need of Milk (ſuch are babes) and not of ſtrong meat, which belongeth to them that are of full age. That's a dreadful threatning (Iſa. 29. 14.) The wiſdom of their wiſe men ſhall periſh, and the underſtanding of their prudent men ſhall be hid: As all our outward good things, riches and honours, are in the power of God, (he can take away the ſtrength of the body, and turn it into weakneſs) ſo all the inward Endowments of wiſdom and prudence, are in the hand of God, and if he withdraw they quickly periſh; thus, wiſdom often periſheth from the prudent, and from the ancient, in a judiciary way, or in judgment either to themſelves or others. Now as the wiſdom of ſome ancient men is taken away by the juſt judgment of God, ſo others of them never attain to wiſdom through their own neglect and ſloath.

Again, conſider Job's ſcope, he lays it as a blot upon them, that their old age was periſhed.

Hence Note, It is the ſhame of old men to be without the wiſdom of old men, or without thoſe accompliſhments which uſually accompany old age.

Solomon ſaith (Prov. 16. 31.) The hoary head is a Crown of Glory, if it be found in the way of righteouſneſs. Old age hath no glory, without wiſdom to do righteous things; and when an old man is without righteouſneſs, his old age is not his Crown, but his reproach. He may be aſhamed of his gray hairs, of his hoary head, he may be aſhamed to ſhew his head, while he hath ſo little wit in it to do good. Of ſuch we may ſay, The more years they have, the leſs honour they deſerve to have. And therefore Solomon concludes (Eccl. 9. 13.) Better is a poor and a wiſe child, then an old and fooliſh King, who will no more be admoniſhed. The precedency of age is great before childhood; and greater is the preheminence of a King above a poor man; yet (ſaith Solomon) better is a poor and wiſe child, that is, a child which is ready to hear and follow good counſel and inſtruction (that's the proper wiſdom of a child) then an old fooliſh King. To be a King is an addition of higheſt honour to old age. To be old is an addition of honour to a King: But to be a fooliſh old King, is not only a diminution but a deprivation of all honour, both from the King and the old man. To be old is a bleſſing of Nature, to be a King is a prerogative of State; to be fooliſh is to be unworthy of both; eſpecially to be ſo fooliſh, as not to endure admonition, ſo fooliſh, as neither to be able to counſel himſelf, nor ſo tractable as to receive counſel from others. At once, to grow old in years, and ſo old in wilfulneſs and ſelf-conceitedneſs, as to out-grow all admonition, is the worſt of childiſhneſs in old men, and makes a poor wiſe child better then the oldeſt of ſuch fooliſh Kings. Thus as ſome through their Natural weakneſs, or the decays of Nature, are twice children; ſo others, through their moral and ſpiritual weakneſs, are alwayes worſe then children. And though they once had the corporal ſtrength of young men, yet they have not, nor had the intellectual ſtrength or wiſdom of many children. Theſe fall juſtly under Job's reproof, Their old age is periſhed. It is far better to dye young, then not to live when we are old, or not to have old age live in us when we are old. Indeed their old age doth not live in them (but as the Text ſaith 'tis periſhed) nor do they live in old age, who wear not the ornaments of old age. The widdow which lives in pleaſure is dead (that's the Apoſtles cenſure of her) whilſt ſhe liveth; much more may we ſay of old men who live in folly and vanity, they are dead while they live. And he that is dead while he liveth, O how dead will he be when he dyeth! He will then be not only twice dead (as the Apoſtle Jude ſpeaks of Apoſtates from a life of holy profeſſion and converſation, even while they live) but thrice dead, being utterly pulled up by the roots by death, Verſ. 3. For want and famin they were ſolitary.

As in the former Verſe Job ſhewed the vileneſs and baſeneſs of that rable which derided him, by their ſloath and uſeleſneſs; ſo here he ſhews it further, by their poverty and baggerlineſs. And he doth this only as making report what ſort of men they were, not as laying their poverty (conſidered in it ſelf) as a reproach upon them; no man is to be upbraided with his want, unleſs he hath brought it upon himſelf by the abundance of his idleneſs and ill living. Such were theſe wretches, whom Job deſcribes ſolitary for want and famin, no man looking after them, or regarding them. They who have any thing of good in them, any thing of God, or but any thing of man (upon the matter) in them, though they are in want and ready to periſh with hunger, yet ſome or other will look after them, and pity them; how wicked and ungodly then, how deſtitute of all goodneſs then were theſe poor Souls, whom no man looked after?

Homines erant uſq; adeo deteſtabiles, ut ne in ſumma quidem egeſtate et fame quiſquã eos ferret. Beza.

For want and famin they were ſolitary.] The word rendered want, ſignifies a defect of all outward conveniencies; theirs was not only want, but extream want, or want of neceſſaries. Which is fully expreſt in the next word, want and famin, or want even to famin and ſtarving. The word rendred here, famin, is Syriac, and is not found elſe-where in all the Bible; for though in the Old Teſtament Famin is often ſpoken of, yet alwayes by another term. Famin is want in triumph, want in the height; there may be much want, and yet no Famin, but wheresoever there is Famin, there is a want of all things, or want to the uttermoſt; life cannot ſtay long where Famin enters.

כסר Defectum denotat rerum omnium Druſ.

Fames hic כפן dicitur vocabulo ſyriaco, quæ alias Hebraicè רעם appellatur. Druſ.

Famin is cauſed three ways.

Firſt, By the common ſcarcity and dearth of vital ſupports in the places where we live, when God makes the Heavens as Braſs, and the Earth as Iron; when he withers the Graſs, and burns up the fruits of the Earth, Famin follows: And this the Lord often threatens among his foreſt Judgments, which are three, Plague, Sword, and Famin; and we may well call Famin, though the ſecond or third named, yet the Firſt of the three.

Secondly, As there is a common Judgment of Famin upon Nations, ſo there is a private Famin upon ſome perſons or Families: When there is publique plenty enough, ſome are not only in a wanting but in a ſtarving condition; and that ſometimes becauſe they are either unable to labour, or have loſt the fruit of their labours.

Thirdly, Famin comes upon others through their own idleneſs and default; as Solomon ſpeaks (Prov. 23. 21.) Sloathfulneſs, or idleneſs, cloaths a man with rags. And as idleneſs cloaths a man with rags, ſo it feeds him with ſcraps, and they are better far then any man can earn or deſerve, by doing nothing or ſtanding idle. The Apoſtle gives the rule to the Church (2 Theſ. 3. 11.) He that will not labour, neither let him eat. And as he hath no right to eat, ſo we ſee by frequent experience, that they who labour not, have little or nothing to eat; I grant that which was the ſin of Sodom, is at this day the ſin of many. But what was the ſin of Sodom? The Prophet tells us (Ezek. 16. 49.) Fulneſs of bread, and abundance of idleneſs. We at this day have fulneſs of bread, great plenty, let us take heed that abundance of idleneſs be not found among us too. Sometimes there is in this Conjunction, fulneſs of bread and abundance of idleneſs; yea many are abundantly idle, becauſe they abound with bread. But uſually and very often, abundance of idleneſs brings ſcarcity and want of bread, both upon Nations, Families, and Perſons; moſtly, they who abound moſt in idleneſs, abound only in wants.

The Famin of theſe vile perſons in the Text, aroſe from, or was cauſed by their idleneſs. They did not live in a Land where bread was not to be had, yet they had no bread to uphold their lives. The Famin was not national, but perſonal, and they brought it upon themſelves by their neglect of duty, and ſloathfulneſs, either in or unto buſineſs.

For want and famin They were ſolitary.] Job curſing the time of his birth, ſaith, (Chap. 3. 7.) Let that night be ſolitary. We may conſider this word, Firſt, In general; Secondly, More particularly; in general it notes any ſad or ſorrowful condition;

tion; as if it were ſaid, For want and famine they were very ſad and melancholy; we put in the Margin of our Bibles, They were dark as the night, that is, their ſpirits were dark; when they had brought this miſery upon themſelves by their ſin and wickedneſs, then their minds were mopiſh and wofully benighted with black fears and fancies.

Hence Note, When graceleſs men have brought want upon themſelves, as to the things of the World, they are in want of all other comforts and contentments.

When they want bread, they want all; when they want the light, or good things of this life, they are as dark as the darkneſs of death. He that hath not, nor deſires to have the light of God's countenance, muſt needs be in darkneſs, when he hath not, or cannot have Corn and Wine. Thus ſuch are deſcribed (Iſa. 8. 21.) And they ſhall paſs thorow it, hardly beſtead and hungry, (and what ſhall they do?) and it ſhall come to paſs, that when they ſhall be hungry, they ſhall fret themſelves, and curſe their King, and their God, and look upward. They ſhall look upward with their eyes, while their hearts hang downwards, deeply downwards, even to deſpair. They ſhall even eat themſelves with fretting, becauſe they have nothing to eat. Now though a godly man be pincht with want and famine, and finds it a very great affliction upon him, yet he is not (in this ſence) ſolitary, he is not dark as the night, much leſs deſperate. For as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of himſelf, ſo grace teaches every godly man to ſay (Phil. 4. 11, 12.) I have learned in whatſoever ſtate I am, therewith to be content, &c. Though he be in want, though he be pincht with Famine, yea in whatſoever ſtate (that's a large word) he can be, he hath learned to be content; and as Paul there exemplifies it, he can ſay (in a meaſure) I know how to be abaſed, and how to abound: Every where, and in all things I am inſtructed, both how to be full, and to be hungry; both how to abound, and how to ſuffer need. A godly man knows how to be hungry, and how to abound, a carnal man knows neither; a godly man knows how to have a feaſt in Famin; ſo Habakkuk had (Hab. 3. 17.) Though the Fig-tree ſhould not bloſſom, &c. Though he hath nothing to eat, though want and famine compaſs him about, yet he is not ſolitary; no! He hath that which is better then bread, ſweeter then the ſweeteſt. He rejoyceth in the Lord, and joyeth in the God of his Salvation. They who have God, who is unchangeable, for their Portion, ſhall not, cannot want a portion of joy and comfort in the worſt of changes.

More diſtinctly. They were ſolitary.] To be ſolitary, is firſt to be without Children, they are ſweet company, the beſt goods, the richeſt filling and furniture in any mans Houſe: So that, to want Children, is ſome part of poverty, and a great part of ſolitarineſs, what company ſoever we have beſides. So this word is uſed by Iſaiah in that Propheſie of Sions joy at the return from the Babylonian Captivity (Iſa. 49. 21.) Then ſhalt thou ſay in thy heart, who hath begotten me theſe, ſeeing I have loſt my Children and am deſolate, ſolitary, a Captive, and removing to and fro? What the Church ſpake of her Spiritual Children, is true alſo of natural Children, to be without them, or bereaved of them, is to be ſolitary; So ſome underſtand the Text in hand; They were ſolitary for want and famine, that is, they were ſuch baſe beggarly Companions, that no honeſt Women would marry them, and ſo wandering up and down alone without Wife or Child, they were utterly forlorn and ſolitary.

Secondly, To be ſolitary, is to be forſaken and abandon'd of men, all avoyding our company; as it was ſaid of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt (who endur'd all ſorts of afflictions) (Matth. 26. 46.) Then all left him and fled, his Diſciples and all left him. And Paul ſpeaks thus of himſelf (2 Tim. 4. 16.) At my firſt anſwer (before Nero he meant) no man ſtood by me: But all men forſook me. That man is ſolitary whom all friends forſake, though he have Troops of ſtrangers, multitudes of enemies about him.

Thirdly, Others are ſolitary by flying and abandoning the company of men; and of this ſort we are to underſtand theſe ſolitary ones, they themſelves left the company of men, flying into the Wilderneſs, as the Text ſpeaks in the words following. But why did theſe make themſelves ſolitary, and leave the company of men? I anſwer, there are ſeveral grounds upon which men leave all company and chuſe to be alone. Sometimes (which is a bleſſed way of ſolitarineſs) a godly man out of a deſire to have more intimacy and communion with God, leaves the company of all men; he goes alone, that God and he may be alone (if I may ſo ſpeak) together. It is ſaid, (Gen. 32. 42.) Then Jacob was left alone; not that his company left him, but he left his company, he withdrew that he might ſpread his caſe and condition before the Lord. We read what a Heavenly meeting and wreſtling there was that night between God and Jacob; We are never leſs ſolitary then when we are thus ſolitary.

Secondly, Others are ſolitary, fleeing and abandoning the company of men, as being grieved with the ſins and evil manners of men; upon this conſideration Jeremy wiſhes (Chap. 9. 2.) Oh that I had in the Wilderneſs a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my People and go from them; for they be all Adulterers, an aſſembly of treacherous men. The manners of that People were ſuch as burdened the holy Prophet, he could not bear them, and would therefore retire that he might get ſome eaſe from thoſe heavy preſſures.

Thirdly, Others are ſolitary, abandoning the company of men for fear of their cruelty; a man may as well converſe with ſo many Bears, Lions, and Tigers, as with ſome men. And thus many of the beſt of Saints have been ſolitary (Heb. 11. 36, 37.) They wandered about in Sheepskins, &c. in Deſerts and Mountains, in Dens and Caves of the Earth: They were ſolitary, to avoyd the cruelty breathed againſt them by merciles Perſecutors.

Fourthly, There are many ſolitary, abandoning the company of men for fear of their Juſtice: And theſe are of two ſorts; Firſt, Malefactors that run from the Magiſtrate to avoid the dint and ſtroak of his Sword, or leſt he ſhould puniſh them for their evil deeds. The Theif, the Murderer flees for it and hides himſelf; if one know or ſee this ſort of men, they are (as Job ſpeaks, Chap. 24. 17.) in the terrours of the ſhadow of death. Secondly, Debtors, when they know not which way to anſwer their Creditors, or pay what they owe, flee and live ſolitary, leſt the Law ſhould take hold of them.

Fifthly, Not a few are ſolitary and abandon the company of men, being aſham'd to be ſeen among men; ſome are ſo nought and have run ſuch lewd courſes, that they cannot but bluſh to be ſeen of any to whom they are known. Others, whoſe vanity and prodigality hath cloathed them with rags, will needs live ſolitary, and out of ſight, becauſe they cannot make a fairer ſhew in the fleſh, nor anſwer the equipage of their old acquaintance. Thus ſome being aſhamed of their wickedneſs and villany, others being aſhamed of their want and poverty, will needs retire out of the view of the World, and live ſolitary. They are poor and proud too, they have high ſpirits in their low ſtate, and ſo are at once ready to ſtarve for want, and aſhamed to make their wants known, or to ask relief; they had rather dye in a Corner then go for an Alms. Poſſibly the men in the Text withdrew from men, becauſe their ſpirits were too high for their eſtates. For want and famine they were ſoſolitary.

Hence Note, A wicked man is aſhamed of his affliction, or of his croſs.

A godly man made poor by the hand of God, is not aſhamed of his poverty, nor doth he hide himſelf from men (how much ſoever he is afflicted) as aſhamed of his afflictions. But they who deſire to make a fair ſhew in the Fleſh, had rather not be ſeen of men, then not be ſeen in ſome kind of pomp and fair ſhew. This is a truth, yet I conceive, that the fourth cauſe of ſolitarineſs here ſpecified, was rather the cauſe why theſe men were ſolitary, eſpecially conſidering that at the fifth Verſe of this Chapter, 'tis ſaid, They were driven forth from among men, and cryed after as a Thief. The offences of theſe men made them obnoxious to the Sword of Juſtice, and therefore they ran into ſolitary places to ſhelter themſelves.

Hence Note, As there is a terror of God, ſo a terror of the Magiſtrate upon evil doers.

When they have done evil, they do think good to ſtand to what they have done. But you ſhall have them (as it follows in the latter part of the Verſe) leaving their Houſes, taking their heels, and Fleeing into the Wilderneſs in former time deſolate and waſt.

ציה Siccitas, ſiccum, ſiccus aridus locus. Huic ציים ſolitudinicolæ.

The word tranſlated Wilderneſs, ſignifies dry, or a dry place; and the very People dwelling in ſuch places are expreſſed by it. (Pſal. 72. 9. Pſal. 74. 14.) The People that inhabit the Wilderneſs are called Tſiim. Mr. Broughton tranſlates here, They flee into the unwatered Land, or into the Land where there is no water; ſo David explains it (Pſal. 63. 1.) In a dry and thirſty Land, where no water is. A Wilderneſs is uſually a dry Land, an unwatered Land. The Iſraelites ſuffered much thirſt in the Wilderneſs. So that to flee into the Wilderneſs, is to flee into any barren or fruitleſs place. The Church (Revel. 12. 14.) had two wings of a great Eagle given her that ſhe might flee into the Wilderneſs. The People of God flie into the Wilderneſs, and the wicked flie into the Wilderneſs; here's a flying on both ſides, and both into a Wilderneſs.

Hence Note, In regard of outward diſpenſations, it falls alike to all.

Wicked men flie, and the Church flies into the Wilderneſs: And have we not ſeen thouſands of them flee out of this Nation into the waſt howling Wilderneſs? The Church or People of God flee into the Wilderneſs, becauſe the World is unworthy of them, (Heb. 11. 38.) Wicked men, or evil doers, flee into the Wilderneſs, becauſe they are unworthy of the World. The profeſſion of truth or the practice of holineſs, ſends the People of God into the Wilderneſs, becauſe the World is not ſo good as to bear them in either; prophaneneſs and ſinful practices drive the wicked into the Wilderneſs, becauſe the World is not ſo bad as to bear them altogether in either. Fleeing into the Wilderneſs

In former time] (We put in the Margin (yeſter-night) deſolate and waſt.) The word rendred former time, ſignifieth either yeſter-night or yeſter-day, (Gen. 31. 29.) The God of your Fathers ſpake unto me yeſter-night. (2 Kings. 9. 29.) Surely I have ſeen yeſter-day the blood of Naboth: We tranſlate by former time, indefinitely, yet

Some take former time more ſtrictly, for lately, very lately; yeſter-day, or the former time, takes in all time paſt; as to morrow takes in all time to come; yet we are here to take it more narrowly, yeſter-day, for lately; and then the ſence runs thus, If theſe men have got any thing now about them, or are better houſed, yet 'tis not long ſince 'twas bad enough with them. They were lately in a very low, obſcure, and ſolitary condition, it was but lately, as it were but yeſterday, that they were forced to hide their heads in a doleful deſolate Wilderneſs; they were deſolate in their condition, and ſo was the place to which they fled, for a habitation. Fleeing into the Wilderneſs.

In former time deſolate and waſt.] That is, having no Inhabitant, or where no man dwelt: We read in Scripture of deſolate perſons, as well as deſolate places. It is ſaid of the widow (1 Tim. 5. 5.) She is deſolate, that is, in a deſolate condition; though a Widow ſhould have many friends and Children about her, yet ſhe is deſolate becauſe ſhe wants that company which was moſt ſutable to her, her Husband. And ſo thoſe places are deſolate which want their ſpecial company, though they are filled and crowded with other company. Thus Chriſt tells the Jews (Mat. 23. 38.) Behold your Houſe is left unto you deſolate; becauſe God (who is the filling of the Houſe) was departing thence. When neither the gracious preſence, nor the Spirit of God would ſtay there, the Houſe was deſolate. The greateſt throngs and Congregations are deſolate places, unleſs God by his Spirit be with them in their adminiſtrations. Churches are deſolate, when God is not in them; a Wilderneſs is deſolate, becauſe men are not in it; the Wilderneſs is a deſolate place in the largeſt ſence, having none but beaſts in it, who are unfit for the ſociety of men. In former time deſolate

And waſt.] The word waſt, is of the ſame root with the word deſolate, and yet it ſeems to intimate ſomewhat more: A Wilderneſs may be called waſt, not only as having little in it, but as having all taken from it. And ſo the Scripture ſpeaking of the Judgment of God upon a Nation, ſaith, The Land is before them as the Garden of Eden, and behind them a deſolate Wilderneſs, yea and nothing ſhall eſcape them (Joel 2. 3.) The moſt pleaſant Land becomes a Wilderneſs when all is laid waſt, how waſt then is a Wilderneſs when 'tis ſpoyled and laid waſt. In oppoſition to which, we read of that gracious promiſe (Ezek. 36. 34, 35.) And the deſolate Land ſhall be tilled, whereas it lay deſolate in the ſight of all that paſſed by, and they ſhall ſay, This Land that was deſolate is become like the Garden of Eden. The Wilderneſs which is waſt by Nature, is ſometimes made waſt by providence; ſuch a Wilderneſs might that be, here intended by Job, both waſt, and waſted.

Hence Note, Sin drives men into a Wilderneſs.

Sin drives all men into a Wilderneſs, though not in a proper, yet in a figurative ſence; Sin drives all that live and continue in it into a Wilderneſs, or deſolate condition, into a bewilder'd troubleſom condition, wherein (as in a Wilderneſs) there is no way, no plain way to walk in, and no clear way to get out. Sin leads into trouble, but ſhews us no way out of our trouble: It brings us into a bad condition, and there it leaves us, till Chriſt, who is the way, the truth, and the life, directs us the true way to life. Sin promiſeth men a Paradiſe, and that it will lead them into a pleaſant Land, into an Eden, into a Garden of God, but indeed ſin leads them into a Wilderneſs, into a perplexed ſtate, where they meet with nothing but Bryars and Thorns, with nothing but Serpents and Scorpions, with nothing but that which is grievous and vexatious. What fruit have ye then in thoſe things whereof ye are now aſhamed (ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. 6. 21.) even then ye had no fruit but ſuch as grows in a Wilderneſs, wild and unſavoury, yea poyſonous and deadly, as it follows in that place, for the end of theſe things is death. Sin is a Spiritual death, and the end of it is eternal death; that's a howling wilderneſs indeed, out of which there is no way.

Again, From this deſcription of a Wilderneſs, (what's a Wilderneſs? 'Tis waſt and deſolate) we ſee reaſon to be thankful that we are not in one, and remember thoſe that are; that either are in a Wilderneſs, or in a Wilderneſs condition; either as having nothing at all, or as having loſt what they had. We live in a Paradiſe, while many better then we live in a Wildeneſs: let us bleſs God that we have a pleaſant and a comfortable Land to dwell in, and that we enjoy ſo many mercies and comforts (as we do at this day) in our Land.

In this Verſe we ſee wicked men fleeing into the Wilderneſs, in the next we ſhall ſee what proviſion the Wilderneſs affords them; and then we ſhall more fully ſee the goodneſs of God in keeping us out of it.

VERS. 4, 5, 6, 7.

Who cut up Mallows by the Buſhes, and Juniper roots for their meat.
They were driven forth from among men (they cryed after them as after a Theif)
To dwell in the clifts of the Valleys, in Caves of the Earth, and in the Rocks;
Among the Buſhes they brayed, under the Nettles they were gathered together.

JOB proceeds to deſcribe the miſerable, and baſe condition of his deriders; as in the third Verſe he did it by ſhewing their flight into ſolitary places, ſo in this fourth by the meanneſs of their fare, and the pitiful ſhifts they were put to, to preſerve themſelves from ſtarving.

Verſe 4. They cut up Mallows by the Buſhes.

The Hebrew word rendred Mallows, is near in ſound, both to the Latine and Engliſh verſion; it cometh from a root which ſignifieth ſalt; thoſe Herbs are ſo called, becauſe they grow in ſalt and barren places, and are of a ſaltiſh taſt. Mr. Broughton reads it, Which pluck up ſalt Herbs among Trees. Some Mariſhes or ſalt places are altogether barren; and what any of them bear ſavours like themſelves. Uſually in Scripture, a ſalt Land, and a barren Land, are the ſame; the Lord deſcribing the wild Aſs, ſaith, (Job 39. 6.) Whoſe houſe I have made the Wilderneſs, and the barren Land his dwellings; the Hebrew is, ſalt places, as we put in the Margin; ſo (Jer. 17. 6.) The man who makes fleſh his arm, ſhall be like the Heath in the Deſert, and ſhall not ſee when good cometh, but ſhall inhabit the parched places, in the Wilderneſs, in a ſalt Land, and not inhabited; a barren Land is unfit for habitation, becauſe it yields but little or no ſuſtenance to the Inhabitants. Theſe inhabitants of the wilderneſs found but ſorry ſuſtenance there.

Malva cibus eſt viliſſimorum hominum. Plut. in Sympoſ. Septem ſapient. Alima vel Alimus ab a privitiva particula & λιμὸς fames, eo quod famem ſedat. Druſ. Apud Mauritanos appelatur Mollochia atque per Babyloniam circumferentes in manuales faciculos componentes clamitabant Mollochia, Mollochia. Serap. Eſt a vox (mea ſententia) generale nomen eſt complectes herbas agreſtes. Bold.

They cut up Mallows for their meat.] Naturaliſts ſay, Mallows are medicinal, and of much uſe in Phyſick; and as they are for medicine to the beſt, ſo for meat to the meaner and lower ſort of People. And ſome tell us, that the notation of the word in the Greek tongue implies that it is a proper food for poor and hungry bellies, becauſe it hath a peculiar vertue in it to appeaſe the rage of hunger, and cloy the ſharpneſs of a craving ſtomack, ſo that, the poor feeding upon it, were quickly filled, and found a kind of ſatiety or glut upon their appetite. Some of the Ancients affirm, that among the Moors this was a very common food for the poorer ſort, and that being tyed up in handfuls or little bundles, it was wont to be cryed up and down in the Streets (as many other Herbes are in great Towns and Cities) Mallows, Mallows; however we need not ſtay to find out, or critically to deſcribe the Nature of this Herb; it is enough for the opening of this Scripture, to know in general, that it was a vulgar, hard and homely kind of feeding; They cut up Mallows.

Nor need we here take this word Mallows ſtrictly, for that particular Herb, but, proverbially, to note any courſe diet or fare. So that when Job ſaid, they cut up Mallows by the Buſhes, it is as if he had plainly told us, they were very poor, and mean, even men of that ſame rate and rank in the World, with them that uſe to feed upon Mallows: As the Prophet ſaith (Amos 7. 14.) I was no Prophet, neither was I a Prophets Son, but I was a Herdſ-man, and a gatherer of Sycomore fruit; that is, I was a poor man, a man of a low condition. The Sycomore fruit, which ſome Interpreters upon that place ſay, was a kind of wild Egyptian Fig, was a food in uſe among the poorer ſort of thoſe times; As if Amos had ſaid, I did not turn Prophet for my belly, I had learned to fare hardly, which you (O Amaziah and your fellow-Court-Prieſts) can hardly do, and therefore you ſmooth up the King in his Idolatrous worſhip that you may ſerve your own turns, but Sycomore fruit will ſerve my turn. Now as to eat Sycomore fruit, ſo here, to eat Mallows, or to be a Mallows-eater, is a Circumlocution, denoting a poor man: That which follows is the ſame ſtrein of Rhetorick; They cut up Mallows by the Buſhes,

And Juniper roots for their meat.] The roots of many Trees are eatable, as ſeveral Authors, with experience teſtifie; but Juniper roots are thought very hard meat, if at all Mans-meat. We read of a City (Num. 33. 18.) called Rithmah from Retham (the word here uſed) becauſe 'tis ſuppoſed many Juniper Trees grew about it, or near to it. When it is ſaid here, They cut up Juniper roots for their meat, we are not to underſtand that they did it of choice, but for need, or of neceſſity; they were forced to it, becauſe they had no choicer food; ſome out of a meer wanton humour, chuſe to eat uncouth meats, but theſe did eat Juniper roots for want of better. The Septuagint, poſſibly, being unſatisfied that Juniper roots could be eaten and digeſted into nouriſhment, tranſlate the Text not particularly of the root of this Tree, but generally, They did eat the roots of Trees through the extremity of their penury and preſſing hunger. But 'tis a greater liberty then becomes a Tranſlator, to render that of any kind, which the text reſtrains by an expreſs ſpecification to one, eſpecially ſeeing both the experience of ſome, and the reaſon of others, have made it out, that even ſuch roots being well prepared and dreſſed may be eaten.

Radices lignorum manducabant propter magnam famem. Sep. Dubium non eſt quam plurima radicum genera hominum uſui deſervire: At ex illis fuiſſe radices Juniperi non reperio, nec mihi facil perſuadeo; ſed mediate & arte aliqua in cibū vel in panem præparatas inficiari noluerim. Bold.

There is yet another reading of this clauſe, which quite eſcapes this difficulty. They cut up Mallows by the Buſhes, and Juniper roots to warm themſelves by. The word which we render for their meat, or bread, they derive from a root which ſignifieth, to heat, or to warm. And I find it ſo uſed (Iſaiah 47. 14.) Behold they (that is, the Aſtrologers, Star-gazers, and Monthly Prognoſticators ſpoken of in the former Verſe) ſhall be as ſtubble, the fire ſhall burn them, they ſhall not deliver themſelves from the power of the flame: There ſhall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to ſit before it. As if Job's meaning were, they had Mallows for meat, and Juniper roots for fire to burn and warm themſelves by. Some report ſtrange things of Juniper fire, both as to the extream heat of it, and the long continuance of it. The Scripture ſeems to intimate much that way, (Pſal. 120. 4.) where David ſpeaking of his angry enemies, ſaith, What ſhall be given unto thee? Or what ſhall be done unto thee, thou falſe tongue? Sharp Arrows of the mighty, with coals of Juniper (theſe ſhall be given thee.) As if he had ſaid, thou ſhalt have the hotteſt coals, ſuch coals as will maintain heat longeſt, implying that the hotteſt and laſting wrath of God ſhould be their portion. Some Naturaliſts ſay, the coals of Juniper rak'd up in the aſhes, will keep fire a whole Year; but I ſtay not upon this.

Sunt qui legunt, radices Juniperorum ad calandū: Ut לחמם ſit Gerundium a חמם & lamed ſit ſervile. Merc. Aiunt ex Junipero factos carbones tanta eſſe vi, ut per annum integrum ignem ſervent incorruptum. Scal. contra Card. Exercit. 328. Prunæ Juniperi cinere opertæ uſq; ad annum perveniant. Hieron. de 42. Manſ.

For though this Tranſlation, They cut up Juniper roots to burn, carries a fair ſence in it, yet Job here deſcribing the miſery and afflicted condition of thoſe men, could not have this meaning; for what miſery is there in this to have ſweet Juniper roots to burn? Again, had it been only to burn, what needed they to get the roots, ſeeing they might eaſier cut down not only the bows, but the whole body of the Tree for fire. Therefore ſpeaking of the roots, it is more proper for feeding then burning. And ſo I conceive rather, that theſe Juniper roots were cut up for food, at leaſt, that ſence is intended; and we may take it, as the former, for a proverbial ſpeech, not ſtrictly for the thing it ſelf, as if they did feed upon thoſe roots, but that they fed very hardly; as we ſay, I will make you to eat ſtones, that is, ſuch things as ſeem to have no more nouriſhment then ſtones; thus they did eat Juniper roots, that is, thoſe things which had no more ſavour in them, then a ſtick, or the root of a Tree, or a rotten poſt.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Hunger will make meat of any thing.

Mallows and Juniper roots will go down when hunger hath throughly whet the Appetite. Darius the Perſian Emperour being in extream heat and thirſt after his overthrow by Alexander, was glad of a cup of puddle water, and ſaid, It was the moſt pleaſant draught that ever he had in all his life. It is good for us to remember this in the plenty and abundance of all things which we enjoy; we who have the fat, and the ſweet, Corn and Wine, Fiſh and Fowl, ſhould think of thoſe that are glad to eat Mallows, and Juniper roots; that is, who live upon ſuch things, as we can ſcarcely count or call Mans-meat. The rich uſually ſin with their plenty, and ſo ſin away their plenty; God may juſtly bring thoſe to Mallows and Juniper roots, who are wanton in the uſe of their pleaſant meats and full Tables. We read in the Hiſtory of the late German Wars, and of that in Ireland, how, Famin prevailing, many did eat thoſe things which are the abomination of Nature; and that ſome were found dead with Graſs in their mouths, and worſe then Mallows and Juniper roots in their bellyes; as for Dogs, Rats, Cats and Mice, they were reckoned rich fare, and happy was he that could get them. Yea Famin forced many to boyl and eat old leather, as a very choice diſh. O how ſevere hath this hand of God been upon many Cities and Nations! The Scripture aſſures us how it was with Samaria (2 Kings 6. 25.) There an Aſſes head was ſold for Fourſcore pieces of Silver; The fleſh of an Aſs (beſides that among the Jews it was unclean) was very ſorry food., and the head of an Aſs could yield but little food yet Famin made it ſweet though courſe, and much though little, and cheap though dear; Ten Pounds (ſo the price is caſt up in our Money) was readily payed as the price of a poor Aſſes head. And (which ſeems more) the fourth part of a kab of Doves-dung was ſould for Five pieces of Silver; They who before did feaſt it, even to ſurfet, upon Doves fleſh, upon the rareſt fiſh and fowl that could be gotten for love or money, did then ravin after the dung of Doves, giving Ten or twelve Shillings (ſo 'tis computed) for a pint of it. There are ſeveral opinions about it, ſome (to allay the matter) conceive it was the dung of the Doves which was taken out of their crawes, before it had paſſed through the body by digeſtion; others, (and I think more truely) ſay it was their digeſted dung, and that this was uſed as meat, or at leaſt as Sauce becauſe of the ſaltneſs of it. Rabſhakeh threatned Jeruſalem with a Siege, that ſhould make them eat not only Doves-dung, but their own dung, and drink their own piſs, (2 Kings 18.27.) Oh what hard ſhifts Famin puts man to! And at the twenty-ninth Verſe of that Chapter before cited, we read of a woman pitifully complaining to the King, who ſaid to her, What ayleth thee? And ſhe anſwered, this Woman ſaid unto me, give thy Son, that we may eat him to day, and we will eat my Son to morrow; ſo we boyled my Son and did eat him; and I ſaid unto her on the next day, give thy Son that we may eat him, and ſhe hath hid her Son. This was a ſad ſuite. Yet not only Idolatrous Samaria, but Idolatrizing Jeruſalem was reduced to this woful exigence, as lamenting Jeremy reports it (Chap. 4. 10.) The hands of the pitiful women have ſodden their own Children, they were their meat in the deſtruction of the daughter of my People. Thus hunger hath compell'd Parents to fill their bowels with their own bowels, and of Mothers to become Murderers; Nature pincht, forgets to be Natural. To the hungry Soul (ſaith Solomon) every bitter thing is ſweet, (Pro. 27.7.) And what ſhould be ſo bitter to a Mother, as the fleſh of her own Child? Yet hunger makes that ſweet: even Mallows, and Juniper roots, ſcraps and crums are welcome to the hungry Soul, while the full Soul loatheth the Honey-comb.

'Tis ſo in Spirituals; the hungry Soul is glad of any Spiritual good thing, a little comfort, a little truth, though homely dreſt, and brought, not in a Lordly, but, in a homely diſh, O how acceptable is it to a hungry Soul! And how heartily fed on! While the dainties of the Goſpel are taſtleſs, if not bitter to a full Soul. The moſt delicious promiſes, have no ſavour in them to an impenitent unbeliever. He prefers his meſs of Pottage (any ſenſible, yea ſenſual contentment) before the Birth-right, and all the bleſſings which are tendered in the name of Chriſt.

Secondly, Obſerve, Hunger cauſeth man to take any pains for the ſupply of Nature.

They will dig up Trees by the roots, rather then not have ſomewhat to eat; as although their fare was courſe, yet they contented themſelves with it, ſo though 'twas hard to come by, yet they were content to take any pains for it; they would not only cut up Mallows, but ſtub up roots for it; we ſay, Hunger breaks through ſtone walls, that is, a hungry man oppoſeth all impediments, and uſeth utmoſt endeavour to be ſatisfied; hunger doth not only compel to eat Mallows, and Juniper roots, when ſet before us, but it compels, both to labour and ſuffer, to work and fight for them, rather then go without them, or dye for want. A hungry man is paſt modeſty and complements, he will eat unbidden, yea you cannot beat him off from eating, where bread is to be had. He will not only give his mony, but venture his life for bread, rather then dye or live only a pining life in the want of bread. When Eſau came hungry and faint out of the Field, he ſpar'd no coſt for his relief (Gen. 25. 32.) Behold I am at the point to dye, and what profit ſhall this Birth-right do me? Doubtleſs Eſau was in no great danger of death. It was the greedineſs of his appetite, the greatneſs of his paſſion, or rather the impotency of his Spirit, that made him ſpeak and give at ſuch a rate for a meſs of pottage, indeed the moſt coſtly meſs that ever was eaten in this World; the higheſt of the Roman luxury, never went to Eſau's price for a meſs of meat. Now if Eſau was thus forced by an inordinate, if not a wanton appetite, to ſuch a condeſcention, what will not a ſtarvingly hungry ſtomach force the hand unto. And thus 'tis alſo in ſpirituals; they who hunger and thirſt indeed for Chriſt and his Righteouſneſs, will dig for it, they will toyl and labour to ſweat for it, as Chriſt commands (John 6. 22.) Labour for the meat that endureth to everlaſting life. Who would not endure labour, as long as life laſteth, for meat that endureth to everlaſting life? Some pretenders to Chriſt will ſcarce pull their hands out of their pockets, or put their foot over the threſhold for Spiritual food, but if their Souls were hungry indeed, they would overcome all difficulties for it. The hunger of the Soul will carry us through more difficulties, then that of the body; the hunger of the body bids us dig through Stone Walls, but Soul-hunger will make us venture through the fire for food. The lazineſs and cowardize of many Profeſſors, are an argument that they have no hunger, no holy appetite after Spiritual food; they that feel it, will both labour and venture, they will take any pains, and endure any pain that they may be filled.

Thirdly, Note, Nature will live with a little, and with that which is mean and courſe.

Nature is content with a little, and grace with leſs. See the goodneſs of God in this; had he given us nothing but Mallows and Juniper roots, that diet might have ſufficed to keep us alive; and he might have required all kind of duty and ſervice from us, though he had given us no more, nor no better food then would have ſerved the turn barely to keep us alive, or (as we ſay) to keep life and Soul together. But as the Lord hath not dealt with us according to our iniquities, ſo not meerly according to our neceſſities; yea he hath given us full Tables, variety of meats, Fleſh and Fiſh, Corn and Wine, all the good things of the earth, and Air, and waters are proviſion for us, and ſerved up at our Tables. Such is the open handedneſs, the bounty and liberality of God, that he doth not only hold our Souls in life, but ſweetens our lives to us. Surely, if (as the Lord threatned his ancient People (Deut. 28. 47,48.) We ſhould not ſerve the Lord our God with joyfulneſs and gladneſs of heart, for the abundance of all things, he might juſtly cauſe us to ſerve enemies in hunger and in thirſt, and in nakedneſs, and in want of all things; even (as the prodigal Son was reduced) in the want of the huskes which the Swine leave after eating, or (as this Text ſpeaks) in the want of Mallows and Juniper roots for our meat.

Verſ. 5. They were driven forth from among men, (they cryed after them as after a Theif.)

This Verſe diſcovers the true cauſe why the men before ſpoken of, lived ſolitary in the Wilderneſs, and deſert places; their retirement was not elective, but compulſive.

They were driven forth from among men.] The word ſignifieth, to be ejected or caſt out as a baniſhed man, and that not ſimply, but with ſhame and diſgrace, yea to repudiate, as a Husband puts away a diſloyal Wiſe. When Pharoah ſought to ſlay Moſes becauſe he had ſlain the Egyptian, Moſes fled from the face of Pharoah, and dwelt in the Land of Midian (Exod. 2. 15.) where a Son being born to him, he called his name Gerſhom, for he ſaid, I have been a ſtranger in a ſtrange Land (verſ. 22.) Moſes was driven out of Egypt by a juſt fear, leaſt an unjuſt ſentence might be executed upon him. Many men are driven out of their own Land, or from their home, by the execution of a juſt ſentence upon them, either by man or God himſelf. Thus the word in the Text is uſed (Exod. 34. 11.) to expreſs Gods dealing with the Heathen Nations, in whoſe room he planted his own People Iſrael; They did not go out, till they were thruſt or driven out, And he ſaid, Behold I drive out before thee the Amorite, and the Canaanite, and the Hittite, and the Perizite, and the Hivite, and the Jebuſite. The Lord in his own counſel made an Act of baniſhment, or ſent a Writ of Ejection againſt all thoſe Nations, He drove them out. The title of the thirty-fourth Pſalm is, A Pſalm of David, when he changed his behaviour before Abimileck, who drove him away, and he departed, ſo we Tranſlate; as if Abimileck or Achiſh had expelled him the Court: Others render it as a friendly requeſt, to withdraw becauſe his Court-Lords either envied or ſuſpected him, which Achiſh profeſſed he did not, and therefore treated him fairly (1 Sam. 29. 7.) Wherefore now return and go in peace, that thou diſpleaſe not the Lords of the Philiſtines; yet the word in the Pſalm commonly ſignifieth to thruſt out by force. Caſt out this bond Woman, and her Son, ſaid Sarah to Abraham (Gen. 21. 10.) When God had examined, convicted, and ſentenced tenced Adam, and after all had graciouſly given him a promiſe of help by Chriſt, yet he would not truſt him any longer in Paradiſe, but drove out the man, and he placed at the Eaſt of the Garden of Eden, Cherubims, (Gen. 3. 24.) It was ſuch an expulſion or baniſhment, of which Cain complained (Gen. 4. 14.) Behold thou haſt driven me out this day from the face of the Earth. By all we ſee that when Job ſaith, They were driven forth from among men; his meaning is, they were baniſhed, or ignominiouſly thruſt out. As they were aſhamed to abide in Cities or Towns, becauſe of their wickedneſs, ſo the cry and clamour of the People, or the force of Law, with the power and Authority of the Magiſtrate, drove them forth from among men. The Hebrew is, They were driven from among men, or, from the Body, that is, (as I conceive) from Towns and Cities, where the bodyes of men, or men in bodyes, that is, in civil Corporations and Societies, do inhabit and reſide, or they were as perſons excommunicate from the body of the Church. Thus a learned Tranſlator renders the Text, They were driven out of the body; What body? There is, Firſt, A Natural body; Secondly, A civil body; and Thirdly, an Eccleſiaſtical body; he doth not mean it of the Natural body, they were not preſently put to death, but they were driven out of the civil body of the Common-wealth, out of Cities and Corporations, out of Colledges and Univerſities; yea out of the Spiritual body, or Church-ſocieties of the faithful People of God. They were ſuch a generation of men, as were admitted no where, or no where permitted. They were driven forth from among men. The Original doth not determine from whence, or from what body they were driven; but ſaith only they were driven from the body; to ſhew, that they were not fit to be in any body or ſociety of men whatſoever; but were looked upon as polluted, and abominable, as unſutable to the manners, and burdenſome to the Spirits of all honeſt and well-meaning men.

Hence Note, Sin makes men unfit for the company of men.

A wicked generation are not worthy to live, how much more are ſuch unworthy to live in the company of good men. And if good men, if juſt and honeſt men, think the wicked unfit for their preſence, will God (think you) admit them into his? Therefore David ſaith (Pſal. 5. 4, 5.) Thou art not a God that hath pleaſure in wickedneſs (his meaning is, thou art highly diſpleaſed with it) neither ſhall evil (that is, any evil perſons) dwell with thee; the fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in thy ſight, or, before thine eyes. And hence the Apoſtles concluſion is peremptory (Heb. 12. 14.) Without holineſs no man ſhall ſee God, that is, no man ſhall enjoy the preſence of God, or have communion with him. God will drive and baniſh all the wicked, the prophane and unholy from his preſence for evermore. David's reſolve is as peremptory againſt ſuch (Pſal. 101. 3.) They ſhall not abide in my ſight. As if he had ſaid, I will drive them out of my doors, yea I will ſhut my doors upon them. And if they are unfit to abide in the Houſes of godly men, how unfit are they to be entertained in the Church of God? And therefore the Apoſtles advice, or command rather, to the Church, is, Put away from among your ſelves that wicked perſon (1 Cor. 5. 13.) As baniſhment is a civil Excommunication, ſo Excommunication is a ſpiritual baniſhment; Magiſtrates muſt drive Malefactors out of civil Societies, and the Churches muſt drive them out of their Spiritual Societies. The godly muſt come out from the World, they muſt be ſeparated and touch no unclean thing, when they will gather into a Church, the Houſe of God; and when they are gathered, if they find the World, that is, evil men among them, they muſt drive them out. They who are unfit for civil converſe, are much more unfit for Spiritual communion.

Secondly, Note, To be driven forth from the company of men, is one of the greateſt puniſhments that can be inflicted upon man.

Job deſcribes the miſery of thoſe men, as well as their wickedneſs; Cain complaines of this, as his greateſt burden, (Gen. 4. 14.) Behold thou haſt driven me out this day from the face of the Earth, and from thy face ſhall I be hid, and I ſhall be a fugitive, and a vagabond in the Earth. This was his cut, Thou haſt driven me from the face of the Earth, that is, from the face of men dwelling upon the Earth; this was a great cut, yet a worſer follows, Thou haſt driven me from thy face, that is, from Church ſociety, and ordinances, which the Scripture calls the face of God. How heavily did David take it, that he was thus driven out, (1 Sam. 26. 19.) Now therefore, I pray thee, (ſaid he to Saul) let my Lord the King hear the words of his ſervant: If the Lord hath ſtirred thee up againſt me, let him accept an offering: But if they be the Children of men, Curſed be they before the Lord: For they have driven me out this day from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord, ſaying, Go ſerve other gods. David was as a baniſhed man at that time, and having got Saul at an advantage, he tells him of his condition, Curſed be theſe wicked men before the Lord, for they have driven me out, ('tis the word of the Text, they have driven me out) from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord, that is, in Judea, the Land which the Lord owns for his, above all Lands, as his peculiar inheritance. They have driven me out from the Lords land, this was his great affliction; for in ſo doing they bid him go and ſerve other gods.

But did any bid David, go and ſerve other gods? I anſwer, None ſpake thus to him formally and directly in ſo many words, Go and ſerve other gods; But all his enemies ſpake thus to him equivalently or vertually, they ſpake it in a Parable, though not in plain terms; they that drove him out from the inheritance of the Lord, or from the ſociety of God's People, they did as much as ſay, Go and ſerve other gods, for they thruſt him among Idolaters, where he was in danger to be infected, and inſnared, either with the falſe worſhip of the true God, or in the worſhip of ſtrange and falſe gods. This David lookt upon and felt as his foreſt burden and greateſt danger, in being driven out from his own Countrey, the inheritance of the Lord. To be driven out only from the common ſociety of men, is ſo great an evil that nothing can bear up the Soul in it, but the preſence of God; that indeed will anſwer, and more then anſwer, or make up the want of the company and ſociety of men, yea of the holieſt men. (Iſa. 66. 5.) Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word; your Brethren that hated you, that caſt you out for my Name ſake (they were their Brethren, of one Nation, of one Profeſſion and Religion, yet upon ſome point of difference, they hated them, and caſt them out, and that at leaſt in a pretence of zeal for God, for they did it (ſaith the Lord) for my Names ſake) yea they ſaid, Let the Lord be glorified. Now what relief had they in this caſe? Surely none, but in their own innocency, and in the preſence of God with them; which is expreſly promiſed them in the cloſe of the ſame Verſe, But he ſhall appear to our joy, and they ſhall be aſhamed. Thus Chriſt at once forewarns his Diſciples of, and fore-arms them againſt this kind of expulſion, (John 16. 1, 2.) Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, that you ſhould not be offended, They ſhall put you out of the Synagogues; yea (as it follows, out of the World) The time cometh, that whoſoever killeth you, will think he doth God ſervice. Our only comfort in either caſe is, they who are thruſt out of the Church, or out of the World for God's ſake, ſhall find more then a ſupply of man's preſence by the preſence of God with them, in whoſe preſence there is fullneſs of joy, and at whoſe right hand there are pleaſures for evermore.

Thirdly, In that it is ſaid, They were driven out from among men;

Note, Man doth not eaſily part from among men.

He muſt be driven out, he would not go out. Man is a ſociable creature, and naturally loveth to cohabit with men. When God created man in the perfection of Nature, as a ſingle perſon, he ſaith (Gen. 2. 18.) It is not good that the man ſhould be alone, I will make him an help (that is, a helper) meet for him. God made all other creatures for the help of man, yet not one of them was a meet help for man. The Angels were too high, and more then man's match, the beaſts of the earth were too low, and wanting both ſpeech and reaſon, could not match man; therefore the Lord created the woman, and gave man a wife for his companion, that mankind might be multiplied and,

and live in ſuch company as was meet and fit for communion. Monchury, Anchoriſm, or a lonely life, which ſome chuſe and boaſt in as a ſtate of the higheſt attainment and greateſt perfection in this life, is not of God's inſtitution. God made man for ſociety; Therefore they overthrow the inſtitution of God, who withdraw themſelves from the ſociety of men. For though we may withdraw for a ſeaſon, upon good occaſions, yet no man ought to make a profeſſion of ſuch ſeperation. And 'tis againſt the grain of Nature in its pure primitive and unſtained integrity to do ſo. Theſe in the Text were evil-doers, yet in this they did well, that they did not leave the company of men, till they were driven out from among men.

They cryed after them, as after a Thief.

Theſe words are brought in by way of Parentheſis, and they carry a reaſon why thoſe men were driven forth from among men; they were as out-lawed perſons, they were expulſed the ſociety of men, becauſe they were falſe and unfaithful, at beſt ſuch as no man would truſt, all cryed out upon them, yea cryed after them,

As after a Thief.] That is, either they were Theeves, or they were under as much diſtaſt and diſgrace with all people as Theeves are.

Hence Note, Sleathful perſons are to be numbred among Theeves; they who will get nothing for themſelves by labour, ſteal all they have from others.

Vagrants may well be liſted among Robbers, and therefore to nouriſh idle perſons is to nouriſh theft; to ſuccour lazy poor, is not ſo much a relieving of their wants, as a ſtrengthning of their Vices. And as idle perſons are to be ranked with Theeves (though poſſibly they do not ſteal, either by outward force, or by ſecret fraud) ſo idleneſs makes many Theeves; They who will keep their hands from labouring and working, ſhall hardly keep them from picking and ſtealing. 'Tis ſaid of theſe men in the Text (ver. 1.) that they were not fit to be ſet with the Dogs of a Flock, and (*ver.*2.) that the ſtrength of their hands turn'd to no profit; and here, They cryed after them as after a Thief.

Secondly, Note, Theeves in all Ages have been a hateful Generation among men.

Thus it was in Job's dayes, they purſued Theeves (as we ſay) with Hue and cry through Town and Countrey. Theeves are enemies to mankind, like droans in the Bee hive, that ſuck out the Honey, but make none; they ſteal away what others labour for. I intend not to inſiſt upon the iniquity of that ſin, there is a plain command againſt it, (Exod. 20. 15.) Thou ſhalt not ſteal. And the Apoſtles counſel is (Eph. 4. 28.) Let him that ſtole ſteal no more, but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good. Stealing is hateful both to God, and man; the light of Nature is againſt it, and reproves it, while the corruption of Nature is for it, and proſecutes it. In all Ages propriety hath been maintained, and therefore Theeves excluded. If there were no owners there could be no Theeves. God orders all things for the good of mankind, that we might live in peace, and doing our own buſineſs, might eat our own bread, They cryed after them as after a Thief.

Verſ. 6. To dwell in the cliſts of the Valleys, in Caves of the Earth, and in the Rocks.

This ſixth Verſe is to be connected with the former part of the fifth Verſe, They were driven from among men, to dwell in the cliſts of the Valleys. The words are a deſcription of thoſe vile perſons, by the vile dwellings and lodgings which they found in the Wilderneſs, whither they were driven; as he before ſhewed their courſe diet, ſo here their pittiful Houſes, or what a poor ſhift they made for Houſing. Some have goodly dwellings in wilderneſſes, we read of Towns in the Wilderneſs, and we have at this day many Towns in our Forreſts. But as theſe men in the Text were driven into the Wilderneſs, ſo they abode there, without any other Houſe then ſuch as the wild Beaſts have.

To dwell in the cliſts of the Valleys, &c.

The word Cliſt cometh from a root, that ſignifieth to break, becauſe a cliſt is a broken ground or earth; the earth is ſometimes broken by the Wind, ſometimes by the Water, ſometimes by the labour of man; a cliſt is any broken or hollow ground. Theſe are called cliſts of the Valleys, becauſe they are uſually in Valleys, or they make a Valley where they are; we may alſo render it, Cliſts of the Rivers. As if Job had ſaid, When they could no longer be endured, in Towns and Cities, they ſought ſome hole to hide themſelves in. The Natural Hiſtorian, ſpeaks of a ſort of men, that conſtantly lived in ſuch kind of Houſes, the cliſts of the Valleys, or, as it follows here,

Specus excavant, hæ illis domus. Plin. 5.c.9. de Troglodytis.

In Caves of the Earth.] The word which we Tranſlated Caves, is ſometimes rendred Holes, (Iſa. 42. 22.) As alſo, Net-work, which are full of holes or meſhes, (Iſa. 19. 9.) The word is likewiſe Tranſlated Baskets, (Gen. 40. 16.) And we put in the Margin Full of holes. The ſence is the ſame whether we Tranſlate Caves or Holes of the Earth. The Hebrew in ſtrictneſs is, Caves or Holes of Duſt. The beſt Houſes and dwellings of men, are indeed little better then holes of duſt: But duſt may be conſidered two wayes: Firſt, There is natural, Secondly, Artificial duſt; the beſt Houſes which are made, are Artificial duſt concocted by fire, and formed up into a beautiful Fabrick: But the Caves or Holes where theſe lived, were only Natural duſt. Their abode was in or under the Earth, In Holes or Caves of the Earth,

And in the Rocks.] The word here uſed for a Rock, is properly a Syriack word, and bears the ſame ſignification as Peter in Greek; that ſame Apoſtle being called both Cephas and Peter. Chriſt alluding to his name, ſaith (Mat. 16. 18.) Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church. This being ſpoken as a further aggravation of their miſerable condition, כפא Syriacum magis quā græcum vocabulum; idem quod Petrus qui & Cephas dictus. Druſ.

Note, An ill habitation, or the want of a good one, is a great affliction.

To have no other Houſe then the cliſts of the Valleys, or a Rock, is an uncomfortable dwelling: And therefore Jeſus Chriſt, who was to ſuffer all thoſe evils which are common to man in this life, ſpake much of his ſuffering in reference to his Houſing or lodging. When he came into the World, his Houſe was an Inn, and his Chamber the worſt part of the Inne, a Stable among the Beaſts, and his Cradle was a Manger, there he was laid as ſoon as he was born, and wrapt in his ſwadling cloaths. Thus ungloriouſly was Chriſt the Lord of Glory entertained at his firſt ſtep upon the Stage of this World: He had no ſtately Palace prepared for him, but an Inn, a Stable, and a Manger. Nor was he better provided afterward (Math. 28. 20.) The Foxes have holes, and the Birds of the Air have neſts, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head. Chriſt had no certain dwelling place, while he was purchaſing a Houſe for us not made with hands, but eternal in the Heavens. God (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Acts 17. 26.) hath made of one blood, all Nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the Earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation. Let them ſee the goodneſs of God, the bounds of whoſe Habitation are determined in Cities, in goodly Manſions and Pallaces, not in the cliſts of the Valleys, nor in Caves of the Earth, and in Rocks, where wild beaſts inhabit.

Secondly, Where did theſe men who were driven out from among men, find ſhelter? Even in the cliſts of the Valleys, &c.

Hence Note, Men of barbarous and beaſtly Spirits, ſhall be driven into barbarous places, and live among beaſts.

I grant many men of Angelical ſpirits have been driven to live amongſt beaſts, to dwell in the Valleys, and holes of the Earth; No man knoweth love or hatred by all that is before him: But this is a Judgment which God often powreth upon the wicked; their habitation is poor and mean, they dwell in the cliſts of the Valleys, and in the holes of the Earth; and though this be enough to make them miſerable in this life, who know not the happineſs of a better life; yet Job hath ſomewhat more to ſay, of theſe mens miſery.

Verſ. 7. Among the Buſhes they brayed, under the Nettles they were gathered together.

שיח Generale eſt ad arbores & frutices atq; adeo ad omnia virgulta nomen. נהק Aſinorum vocis proprium. Druſ.

The word rendered Buſhes, ſignifies generally any kind of Trees or plants; yet here the ſence carries it more reſtrainedly to Thorns, ſcratching Shrubs or Buſhes; among theſe

They brayed.] The Aſs among beaſts is properly ſaid to bray. Doth the wild Aſs bray when he hath Graſs? Saith Job (Chap. 6. 5.) Theſe beaſtly men are elegantly ſaid to bray, or make a harſh horrid noiſe like wild Aſſes. As wicked men in great power, roar like Lions in the Forreſt, ſo being brought into great diſtreſs, they bray like Aſſes among the Buſhes.

Noſter interpres clamare in bonam partem intellexit; quod lætaretur, quum poterant loca inter arbores invenire, ubi latitarent; ſed verbum נהק Non reperio niſi in malum. Merc. נהק In genere ſignificat, meſte inclamare; Affine eſt verbo נאק Piſc. Exclamabant læſi. Jun. Qui inter plantas agreſtes ſonabant famelicum quiddam. Symmach.

Some Interpret this braying as a ſound of Joy, and content, or as a merry Song among the Buſhes; as if they were glad of any place of refuge and retirement from the out-cry made againſt them. But we find not that word either in Scripture, or in any good Author, importing joy in what is good, but ſorrow at the feeling of what is evil, eſpecially hunger and cold. That Text named before (Chap. 6. 5.) is a clear proof of it, Doth the wild Aſs bray when he hath Graſs? Implying fully that the wild Aſs brayeth not, but when he is pinched with hunger, or when ſomewhat troubles him. A late Tranſlater expreſſeth it fully to that ſence, Under the Buſhes they cryed out as being hurt: And one of the Ancient Greeks renders thus; among the Buſhes they whin'd a hungry or mournful ditty. So that Job's meaning is plainly this, They brayed among the Buſhes as men half ſtarved with their Mallows and Juniper roots. They were hard put to it, being grievouſly afflicted, either with hunger and want of food, or with bad and unſavoury food.

Some men in their proſperity behave themſelves more like beaſts then men; they are boyſterous, cruel, wanton; and in their adverſity they vex and rage like beaſts, and bray like Aſſes. The Church ſaid in her great affliction, We roar like Bears, we mourn ſore like Doves. (Iſa. 59. 11.) They could do nothing but lament and bemoan their miſery; yet as they did roar like Bears, to ſhew the extreamity of their ſufferings, ſo they did mourn like Doves, to ſhew the meekneſs and ſimplicity of their Spirits under ſufferings. The godly and the wicked fall often into the ſame ſufferings, but they are never the ſame in their ſufferings. They who refuſe to bear the yoak of Chriſt holily, cannot bear the Croſs of Chriſt quietly; They who want patience, muſt needs be impatient under their wants. They being among the Buſhes of a perplexed ſtate, are ſo far from patience and quietneſs, that they are in a continual toſs and trouble of Spirit; they bray like Aſſes, and roar like Bears, but they know not how to mourn like Doves. The Prophet deſcribes ſuch ſufferers, (Iſa. 51. 20.) Thy Sons have fainted, they lie at the head of all the Streets; as a wild Bull in a Net, they are full of the fury of the Lord, the rebuke of thy God. Paul had learned in every eſtate to be content, he knew how to be full and to be hungry, how to abound and ſuffer want; that's the learning and leſſon of Saints in Chriſt's School of affliction. They are often driven into a Wilderneſs, they are thruſt out among the Buſhes, yet they do not bray, but rejoyce there for Chriſt's ſake, in a good cauſe, and for a good conſcience; Paul and Silas ſang, they did not rage, and rail in the Stocks; Saints are often brought into a Brake, or among the Buſhes, and they can ſing there, while the witneſs of the Spirit with their Spirit makes them muſick; but as often as the wicked are among the Buſhes, they bray there both becauſe the trouble pinches them much, and their conſciences more.

חרול Sunt qui carduum interpretantur & recenſent inter decem genera ſpinarum. Druſ.

Under the Nettles they were gathered together.] I need not tell you what the Nettle is; the word ſo Tranſlated ſignifieth any thing that is ſtinging or pricking. Under the Nettles they were gathered (or joyned) together: Mr. Broughton renders, Under the Nettles they ſmarted, or, were ſtung, as another reads, which is proper to a Nettle: We may put both together, they gathered themſelves under the Nettles, and there they were ſtung, ſo ſtung that (as ſome expreſs it) they became ſcabbed. The ſtinging of a Nettle makes pimples, and a kind of ſcab upon the fleſh. All this ſets forth their miſerable condition, they brayed under the Buſhes, and under the Nettles they were ſtung. Why went they among the Buſhes, and Nettles? They hoped none would ſeek them there, or if they did, that they ſhould not find them; a man that is driven out, fears that every man he meets is an Enemy to ſlay him, or an Officer to attach him, and therefore he runs to covert like a ſavage beaſt, and hides himſelf among the Buſhes and Nettles.

Sub urtica pungebantur. i. e. urebantur, adeo ut puſtulæ & abſceſſus ex urticarum contactu exorirentur. Jun. vid. Piſcat. in locum.

Hence Note, They that have an evil conſcience, are all for hiding, they love and hope to be hidden.

They who are driven from among men, would be hidden from men. Buſhes and Nettles are their beſt ſhelter, who want the ſhelter of a good conſcience. Adam having ſinned, ran preſently among the Buſhes, there was the beginning of this pitiful ſhift; when God ſummoned him, he was afraid and hid himſelf; even Adam was braying among the Buſhes (as I may ſay) after he had ſinned; ſin putteth us upon poor helpes to hide our ſelves from God, and from man too.

Secondly, Note, Sinful man becomes fooliſh.

He hides himſelf with that which cannot conceal him, and ſhelters himſelf with that which cannot defend him. Theſe made hard ſhift for their food, and no better for their ſhelter; and as this is true in reference to bodily hiding and ſheltring, ſo much more in reference to ſpiritual: Sinners will hide themſelves with that which cannot hide them. (Iſa. 30. 1.) Wo to the rebellious Children----that cover with a covering, but not of my Spirit, that they may add ſin to ſin. This is to hide our ſelves among Nettles. What pitiful work do men make to cover their guilt from men, and far worſe to hide it from God. All the denials, pleas, or excuſes which ſinners make, are but a gathering of themſelves under Buſhes and Nettles. And what are Buſhes and Nettles? Buſhes are but ſcratching Shrubs, and Nettles are but ſtinging Weeds, yet under theſe they gather themſelves for ſuccour.

Thirdly, Hence Note, How ſilly are ſinners, who hide themſelves not only under that which cannot hide them, but will hurt them, or be no better then a Nettle to ſting them, and a Buſh to ſcratch them.

All the Curtains and Coverings that men make to ſhadow and conceal their ſins, without Chriſt, are but as ſo many Nettles, which will not cover but ſting them, yea ſting them worſe then Nettles. Nettles ſting the fleſh only, but theſe will ſting the heart and conſcience; ſinners will find all that they hide ſin with, even their gifts, and parts, (while out of Chriſt) much more falſe, though fair pretences and carnal reaſonings, but a Buſh of thorns and bryars to tear and rend them, or a bank of Nettles to vex and ſmart them.

Lay all theſe things together; Firſt, The food of theſe men, which was Mallows, and Juniper roots; Secondly, Their lodging, which was in Clifts, and Caves, and Rocks; Thirdly, Their ſhelter, which was among the Nettles, and the Buſhes.

Hence Obſerve, The effects of ſin, are ſad and miſerable, even in this preſent life.

Sinners receive but ill fare from the hand of ſin; and that lodges and protects them as ill, as it feeds them. Here's a wicked Generation, how are they fed? Have they a Table ſpread? Are they ſerved with the beſt? They are fed with Mallows, and Juniper roots, that is the chear ſin makes for them; yea wickedneſs will be as Gravel in their teeth, and as poyſon in their bowels. I grant many ſinners are full fed, they have liberal, large, and plentiful Tables, but in the iſſue ſin will feed them all with far worſe then Mallows, and Juniper roots, and moſt of the ſervants of ſin are no better provided for now: Sin uſually keeps but a very poor houſe; and while men make (from which the Apoſtle dehorts, Rom. 13. 14.) proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof, their luſts are making very lamentable proviſion for them. The Lord ſpeaks in a Holy paſſion (Pſal. 81. 16.) Oh that my People would have harkened unto me, &c.---- I ſhould have fed them with the fineſt of the wheat, and with honey out of the Rock ſhould I have ſatisfied them. But ſin fed them with gall and wormwood, with husks and bran. If we look upon the greateſt Number of men in the World, that live miſerably, we ſhall find they are ſuch as live wickedly.

Again, how did theſe men lodge? What Chambers and Beds did ſin prepare for them? Nothing but Clifts, and Holes, and Rocks. Where did they meet and gather together? Among the Buſhes, and the Nettles; what do they there? They bray like Aſſes, and vex themſelves like wild Aſſes that have no graſs. And if ſin make man thus miſerable in this life, Oh what will ſin do in the life to come! Then it will drive the wicked into the Wilderneſs indeed, into Clifts, and Holes, and Rocks indeed: And whereas now ſin ſtings them like Nettles, it will hereafter ſting them like Scorpions; the little finger of ſin, in the next life, will be heavier then the loins of it in this; that is, God who is the avenger of ſin, will then pour vengeance upon ſinners to the utmoſt.

From the conſideration of all theſe ſad iſſues of ſin laid together, take this Corollary.

Sin is very deceitful. As all ſin is againſt the truth of God, ſo it ſelf hath no truth at all in it. Sinful man breaks all the Commandments of God, and ſin breaks all its promiſes with man. The Apoſtle exhorts us (Heb. 3. 13.) To exhort one another dayly, while it is called to day, leſt any of us be hardned through the deceitfulneſs of ſin. Now, ſin hardneth us, when we dare venture upon the committing of it; and what makes thus daring and fool-hardy to run ſuch an adventure? Surely the hopes of ſome good we ſhall get by doing it, or at leaſt an aſſurance of impunity or freedom from evil, though we do it. For both theſe ſin undertakes, and will give us its word, if we will take it; and are there not enow who will and do take it every day? Sin hath more credit with the moſt of men then God himſelf hath: He promiſeth, and few believe him: Sin promiſeth, and there are only that few who believe it not: But ſin which is ſo large and free in promiſing, is not only narrow and ſlow in performing, but utterly denies performance; or its performances run quite croſs to its promiſes. Sin promiſes Gold and pays with Droſs, it promiſeth Bread and pays with Stones, it promiſeth Honour and pays with diſgrace, it promiſeth a Paradiſe and payeth with a Wilderneſs, it promiſeth liberty and payeth with bondage; in a word, it promiſeth us all manner of content, and pays us with utter diſappointment and diſſatisfaction: If any man hath a mind to be fed with Mallows, and lodg'd in Caves, and torn with Buſhes, and ſtung with Nettles, and ſcorcht with everlaſting burnings, let him hearken to the voyce, believe the promiſes, and take the word of ſin.

Thus we have in theſe words a deſcription of the ſtate or condition of thoſe perſons, who deſpiſed Job; a further deſcription of their perſons and pedigree, as alſo of their actions followeth,

VERS. 8, 9, 10.

They were Children of fools, yea Children of baſe men: They were viler then the Earth.

And now I am their ſong, yea I am their by-word.

They abhor me, they flee far from me, and ſpare not to ſpit in my face.

JOB having ſhewed in the former Context, how miſerable his deriders, or their fathers were in their preſent condition (they fed upon Mallows and Juniper Roots: They brayed among the Buſhes, and gathered themſelves among the Nettles) proceeds in this 8. verſe to ſhew how ſordid they were in their Original, or from how baſe a Root they ſprung; he gives us their pedigree, not only from the degree or Title of their Parents, but from their qualities.

Verſe 8. They were Children of fools, yea Children of baſe men.

נבל Stultus ſtolidus, qui de mente defluxit.

The word which we render fools, denotes a man fallen or failing and withered in his underſtanding, a fool wants filling, or furniture for his mind, he is but bare walls or an empty Houſe. Thus Abigail deſcants, and, not lightly but diſcreetly, plays the Critick upon her Husbands name (1 Sam. 25. 25.) Nabal is his name, and folly is with him; as if ſhe had ſaid, He is a man of no underſtanding, his upper Rooms are ill tenanted or inhabited. Our preſent Text ſaith of theſe men, They were Children of Nabal, that's the word. A Son of Nabal, is of the ſame ſignification in holy language with a Son of Belial: Sons of Belial are diſobedient rebellious ones, who will not endure the yoak, nor do what they know: Sons of Nabal, are fooliſh ones, ſuch as know not what they ought to do, or how they ought to do it. Mr. Broughton renders, vile Children: And another in the Superlative, Men moſt wicked or flagitious.

Homines flagitioſiſſimi. Jun.

There are two ſorts of fools: Firſt, ſuch as want wit or underſtanding; and they are in two ranks, either ſuch as have no wit or underſtanding at all, whom we call meer fools and naturals. Secondly, ſuch as have but a little wit, or are but thinly furniſht in their Intellectuals, ſuch as have not an underſtanding ſutable to their undertakings.

Secondly, In Scripture that man is called a fool, not only who wants underſtanding, but who wants honeſty and integrity; not only is he a fool, who hath little or no wit to chuſe his way, but he who makes little or no conſcience of his ways. Such I conceive Job intends in the preſent Text, they were not Children of ſuch fools as wanted underſtanding, or had no underſtanding, but they were Children of ſuch fools as want honeſty in their actions, and conſcience in their dealings.

Again, For the opening of this denomination, Children of fools, we may expound it by an Hebraiſm, not as reſpecting their parents from whom they deſcended, but themſelves, they were fools themſelves, what ever their parents were. Children of fools, are fools; ſo frequently in Scripture (Pſal. 4. 2.) O ye Sons of men, that is, O ye men, how long will ye turn my glory into ſhame? The Pſalmiſt having ſummon'd all at once to attention, Hear this all ye people, give ear all ye inhabitants of the Earth (Pſal. 49. 1.) preſently puts them in this diviſion (verſ. 2.) Both low and high; the Hebrew is, Sons of men, and Sons of men, that is, men in high place, and men in low place, as the exigence of the Text makes the difference between the two Original words, Adam and Iſh, ſignifying man. So (Iſa. 1. 8.) Daughter of Sion, that is, Sion; and (Pſal. 137. 8.) Daughter of Babylon, that is, Babylon; and (Jer. 46. 24.) Daughter of Egypt, that is, Egypt. Thus here they were Children of fools, that is, they were very fools.

Etiam filii hominis, etiam filii viri. Mont. Filii ſtultorum & ignobilium, iidem ſunt qui ſtulti & ignobiles. Sanct.

The general ſenſe of the Text ſutes to both Interpretations, either that their parents were fools, or that they were ſuch: Now both or either of theſe being fools of the ſecond ſort, ſuch as wanted honeſty and goodneſs.

Obſerve, A wicked man is but a fool.

The Scripture calls them ſo more then once, eſpecially in the Book of wiſe Solomons Proverbs. The whole body of the Jews was called a fooliſh people and unwiſe, becauſe they were a ſinful people (Deut. 32. 6.) Such uſually judge all others fools, becauſe they walk not in their paths, nor run with them into the ſame exceſs of riot, they think others have not ſo much underſtanding as they, and therefore do not what they do, whereas the true reaſon is, not becauſe they have leſs underſtanding, but becauſe they have more Conſcience then they. To fear God is mans wiſdome, and to depart from evil, is his underſtanding; what wiſdome or underſtanding have they, who neither fear God, nor depart from evil? The ungodly man is a fool;

Firſt, Becauſe he knows not what is good and right in it ſelf.

Secondly, Becauſe if he know it, yet he will not do it, and that makes him a fool much more. 'Tis folly enough not to know what is right, but to know what is right and not to do it, is the height of folly.

Thirdly, He is a fool, becauſe he knows not what is good for himſelf, yea he miſtakes ſo extreamly wide in that point, that what he thinks good for himſelf, is not only bad but worſt for himſelf. He is ready to conclude, he doth beſt for himſelf when he doth that which is right in his own eyes, though he neglects or refuſeth to do what is right in Gods eyes, nor can he be perſwaded, but that is beſt for himſelf, which is ſo in his own eyes, till both his ſight and feeling tell him the contrary. David ſaith both of and to the wicked man (Pſal. 49. 18.) Though whiles he lived he bleſſed his Soul, and men will praiſe thee when thou doeſt well to thy ſelf; that is (as I conceive) though a worldling have a high opinion of his wayes and works, and preſumes he hath done very wiſely for his Soul as well as for his body; and though flatterers will commend him highly when he pampers and provides for himſelf, and makes much of himſelf, living in pleaſure, and taking the cream of the Creature (this, in the account of carnal men, is for a man to do well to himſelf, as they ſaid (Pſal. 4. 6.) Who will ſhew us any good? That is, any good chear, plenty of corn and wine, as the next words in Davids choice, explain it; now, I ſay, though others or a mans ſelf ſhall think he hath done beſt, and therefore moſt wiſely for himſelf in running ſuch a courſe as this) yet ſuch a man hath done very ill, and therefore very unwiſely, indeed like a very fool for himſelf, as the words which follow in that 49 Pſalm (v. 19 20.) fully inform us; for as well and wiſely as he hath done for himſelf while he lived, he (when he dyeth) ſhall go to the generation of his fathers, they ſhall never ſee light: From whence this general concluſion (which concludes all ſuch men in the number of fools) is inferred, Man that is in honour, and underſtandeth not, is like the Beaſts that periſh. Such a man poſſibly, carried a reputation in the world, as if he had engroſſed all the wit and wiſdom from the reſt of the world. But at laſt he ſhall ſee himſelf like a Beaſt that periſheth, and then both himſelf and his learned flatterers will be forced to cry out, We fools, we thought the people of God to be a company of hare-brain'd mad people, but now we ſee we are ſo. They are Children of fools,.

Yea Children of baſe men.] The Hebrew is, Of men without a name, that is, obſcure and vulgar men. Mr. Broughton renders, yea a kind without fame, that is, men whoſe names are not taken notice of. Whereas by an Hebraiſm, men of great renown, or famous men, are called men of name (Gen. 6. 4.) The names of great men are upon every mans tongue while they live, and when they dye their names are Chronicl'd and kept upon Record for poſterity. Job's deriders took away his good name, being themſelves men without name, or rather men of an ill name, being of a low degree, yea of the loweſt degree, for ſome render the Original up to a Superlative; The moſt Ignominious among men. They were ſuch as either never lived in any reputation, or (which is worſe) they had out-lived it. Such was their parentage, who made it their buſineſs to diſparage and deride that worthy man, that man to whoſe worth God himſelf had given teſtimony. They were Children of baſe men.

Etiam homines ignominioſiſſimi. Jun.

There are two ſorts of baſe men ſpoken of in Scripture: Firſt, ſuch as are baſe in their blood, and birth; for though it be a truth, that God hath made of one blood all Nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the Earth (Acts 17. 26) yet it cannot be denied, but men may be diſtinguiſhed by their blood; ſome are of a more noble blood then others, their Anceſtors or Predeceſſors were men of honour and power, beyond their contemporaries. Though all men are made of one blood materially, yet they are made of blood differing circumſtantially. In common ſpeech he is a baſe man, that is born of mean parents,

Secondly, There are baſe men in Scripture language, who are ſuch in their conditions. Some are high and great in birth, place, power, and ſway in the World, who yet muſt be numbered among baſe men.. In the book of Daniel, that great King Antiochus is called a vile perſon; and David (Pſal. 15. 4.) giving the character of a Son of Sion, ſaith he is one in whoſe eyes a vile perſon is abhorred. The vile perſon there intended is not one poor and low in the world, a man that bears not a breadth, nor carries a Grandeur in the eyes of men; but the vile perſon there is the wicked and unrighteous man.

Hence Note, Wickedneſs and unworthy actions render men vile and baſe in the ſight of God and all good men.

Godlineſs and holineſs put a beauty upon men (Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of them) though they are very low and unbeautiful to the eye. It is ſaid of the faithful Elders among the Jews, that through faith they obtained a good report, (Heb. 11. 1.) The holy actions of their faith made them famous. But wickedneſs obſcures the name and debaſeth the blood and Spirits of men: No man hath reaſon to boaſt of his great Titles, Power, or high place in the World, as if honour lay in them; true honour, is Honeſty, Juſtice, Grace, Righteouſneſs; when theſe ſhine in the lives and actions of any, they are honourable indeed (Iſa. 42. 2.) Since thou waſt precious in my ſight (none but the Godly are ſo in the ſight of God) thou haſt been honourable. Suppoſe the World hath not called nor accounted thee ſo, yet thou haſt been ſo in my account.

Again, Theſe men who acted ſo baſely towards Job, were the Children of baſe men.

As every Child is his Father multiplyed, ſo moſt Children are their fathers exemplified. In one ſence, every Child that comes into the World bears the Image of his Father. It is ſaid of Adam (Gen. 5. 3.) He begat a Son in his own likeneſs, after his Image; Having fallen and ſin'd, he left the impreſſion of his ſinful nature, contracted by that fall, upon his Son: Poſſibly, Seth (the Son of Adam) there ſpoken of, was not very like his father in his feature as a man, but certainly he was very like him in his frailty as a ſinner. Thus every Parent whether good or bad conveighs his Image, and it is a black Image, to his Child; but as ſome Parents (beſides the ſinfulneſs of their natures) are tainted with ſpecial ſins in their life, ſo are their Children; Such a Son, ſuch a Father; the Child treads in the ſteps of his Father. And though no Child derives any thing naturally from his Parents but their ſin (even the Children of the godly receive no godlineſs by their natural birth) yet moſtly the Children of godly Parents bear their Image in godlineſs, they prove and act godly. We cannot affirm univerſally either way, that all the Children of ungodly men are ungodly in their lives, or that all the Children of godly men are godly in their lives: That's often croſt (Generation and regeneration proceed from quite different principles) holineſs runs not in a blood; and though ſin doth, yet the power of grace can change the courſe of nature: God makes exceptions to the general rule as himſelf pleaſeth. Good Parents have evil children, and ſome evil parents have good children; but for the moſt part the Children of godly men, being under the Covenant of grace, hold forth the gracious Image of their Parents; and the Children of wicked men, being ſtrangers from the Covenant, hold forth the Image of their Parents, which is corrupt according to the deceitful luſts. They were Children of baſe men,

They were viler then the Earth.

Or (as we ſay) men unworthy to go upon the ground; thus Job heaps up ſeveral expreſſions, to make their deſcription full. Viler then the Earth.

It ſeems, the Earth is vile, elſe theſe men could not be called viler then the Earth?

I anſwer, The Earth is vile, not in it ſelf, for the Earth is the Creature of God, and ſo good, for all was good that God made: And there's an excellency in the Earth as to it's uſe and ends; as alſo an anſwerableneſs in it to thoſe ends and uſes for which God did Create it; therefore in that reſpect the Earth is not vile, 'tis not vile in its own nature: But the Earth may be called vile;

Firſt, Comparatively to other parts of the Creation, becauſe it is loweſt, and as it were, the ſink of the World, according to the courſe of nature; 'tis alſo the groſſeſt part of the World, the water is finer and more pure then the Earth, the air is finer and more pure then the water, and the fire is finer and more pure then the air; the Earth is the groſſeſt part, and, upon the matter, but the droſs of the other parts.

Ipſo quod pedibus calcant ſolo dejectiores. Bez.

Secondly, The Earth may be called vile, as to vulgar opinion and eſteem. 'Tis that which every one treads upon; both men and beaſts have it continually under their feet; ſo that in common account the Earth is a vile and low thing. Duſt thou art (ſaith the Lord, Gen. 3. 19.) and to duſt thou ſhalt return; as if he had ſaid, thou art vile and mean in thy Original, and thou ſhalt conclude where thou didſt begin: Though now man ſeemeth to be ſomewhat better then duſt, yet to duſt he ſhall return. And hence the body of man is called vile (Phil. 3,21.) Who ſhall change our vile body: Our bodies are called vile from ſeveral grounds, eſpecially as they are defiled with, and inſtrumental unto ſin, it is not my purpoſe here to inſiſt upon that, or thoſe other grounds why the body of man is wrapt up in that humbling Epithete by the Spirit of God; but among the reſt this Text leads me to call our bodies vile in reference to the matter of them: The body of the firſt man was formed out of the Earth, and he is ſaid (by the Apoſtle 1 Cor. 15.47.) To be of the Earth, Earthly; and as in the firſt mans body, ſo in the bodies of all men, Earth is the predominant Element; and therefore ours are vile bodies, the chief ingredient of their mixture being the Earth, which comparatively to thoſe nobler and higher Elements is but vile. The Earth is vile in this conſideration, but theſe men are called viler then the Earth, as to their manners and converſations.

Hence Note, The vileneſs of mens qualities and conditions, makes them viler then that which is vileſt in their conſtitution.

The bodies of the moſt ſin-leſs and holy Men are vile Earth, but the ſinfulneſs and unholineſs of men, renders them viler then the Earth. Abraham, believing Abraham, ſaid to God (Gen. 18. 27.) I am but duſt and aſhes: The beſt of the Saints are but duſt materially as God made them, and they are but aſhes meritoriouſly, even they have deſerved, that God ſhould make them aſhes, that is, conſume in them and for their ſin to aſhes, as he did Sodome, for which Abraham interceded when he made this confeſſion, I am duſt and aſhes. Now what is duſt and aſhes? Duſt is Earth made by the heat of the Sun, and aſhes is Earth made by the heat of the fire; he that is duſt and aſhes (ſo the beſt of Saints are) is the ſmalleſt and vileſt Earth, yet the worſt of Saints is not viler then the Earth. A wicked man is Earth, and not only ſo, but he is viler then the Earth. A Saint is made of vile Earth, as the wicked are, in his natural conſtitution, but a Saint is made more excellent then the Heavens by ſpiritual regeneration. Thus he is Earth, and better then Earth. A wicked man is but made of vile Earth, yet himſelf is viler then the Earth; he is Earth, yet worſer then the Earth, yea worſe then Hell, by moral corruption. Grace ſets us above the Earth, he is heavenly that is godly: Sin ſets us below the Earth, he is helliſh that is wicked, and ſo is viler then the Earth. A wicked man hath Hell in his Soul, as he hath Earth in his Body: But a Godly man hath Heaven in his Soul, while he hath a Body of Earth, The one is Heavenly minded, and the other is Earthly minded, or minds only Earthly things, and to be Earthly minded, is to be Helliſhly minded; that wiſdome (as the Apoſtle James ſpeaks, Chap. 3. 15.) is not from above, which ſets the mind upon things below, yea it is not only (as he there adds) earthly and ſenſual, but deviliſh, and therefore, without doubt Helliſh.

They were viler then the Earth.

There are yet other reading of the Text. Firſt, ſome thus; They were ſmitten out of the Earth. Secondly, Mr. Broughton thus; They were baniſhed from the Earth: A third to the ſame ſenſe; They were moſt miſerable wanderers; and ſo a fourth, They were ſmitten and caſt out of the Earth; and a fifth, With blows or ſtripes they were driven from the Earth: The reaſon of theſe various tranſlations is, becauſe the word here uſed ſignifies to ſmite as well as to be low, or vile; we ſay, They were viler then the Earth: Theſe readings ſay, they were baniſhed, beaten, ſmitten out of the Earth. The word in Scripture is uſed to ſet forth the work of repentance, which conſiſts in a contrite Spirit, in a heart ſmitten and beaten to duſt, under a ſenſe of ſin. So we read it (Iſa. 66. 2.) To this man will I look, even to him (ſaith the Lord) that is of a contrite Spirit, Now a contrite or ſmitten Spirit is a Spirit vile in its own eyes, though moſt precious in the ſight of God. And as this word is applied by a metaphor to the breaking of the Spirit, ſo properly the breaking of the body in any of the limbs or members of it. Thus a lame man, is called a man ſmitten or broken in his feet. The Kings of Egypt were generally called Pharaoh, and we read of one of them (2 Kings 23. 29.) who for diſtinction, was called Pahraoh Necho, that is; Pharaoh the lame, or the Halter; which additional Title is made by the word in this Text. And as this word is uſed here in Job comparatively, to the Earth, for the ſetting forth of his deriders; ſo David uſeth it alone to ſet forth his (Pſal. 35.) where having ſhewed how compaſſionate he was to his enemies in their affliction (v. 14.) he preſently ſhews (v. 15.) how incompaſſionate, or barbarouſly cruel rather, his enemies were to him in his. But in my adverſity they rejoyced, and gathered themſelves together, yea the abjects gathered themſelves together againſt me. Abjects are vile perſons, men ſmitten in their eſtates and credits, yea often as Slaves or ill Servants ſmitten with cudgels, or whips; ſo a learned tranſlator renders the Pſalm; The ſmitten gathered againſt me; that is, vile men who deſerve and uſe to be beaten and cudgel'd. Thus here Job's deriders were deſcended of broken and beaten men, they were men (as ſome ſpeak) of broken fortunes, and beaten for their ill manners out of the Earth. This reacheth our tranſlation fully: For what are they who are beaten and driven out of the Earth? They are moſtly a vile generation, men viler then the Earth, which all men tread upon. The godly are often baniſhed and beaten out of the Earth, for that which is their true worth, but theſe were driven out of the Earth, and baniſhed for their unworthineſs. This tranſlation heightens the ſenſe, and lays the parentage of Job's deſpiſers, as low as words can lay them. They were viler then the Earth.

Job having thus deſcribed the perſons that derided him, proceeds to ſhew how they derided him, or what affronts and injuries they put upon him, what hard thoughts they had of him in the 9. and 10. verſes. Theſe were of three ſorts.

Firſt, In words, in verſe 9. And now I am their ſong, yea I am their by-word.

Secondly, In heart, at verſe 10. They abhor me.

Thirdly, In deed, or in act; and that two wayes; firſt, refuſing his ſociety, they flee far from me; ſecondly, abuſing his perſon, and ſpare not to ſpit in my face.

In verſe 9. he deſcribes the abuſes they put upon him in their words, and evil ſpeakings.

Verſe 9. And now I am their ſong.

They ſpake like themſelves, they were baſe, and they ſpake baſely. (Iſa. 32. 6.) The vile perſon will ſpeak villany. Theſe perſons were viler then the Earth, and that they were ſo, their ſpeech bewrayed them: They ſpake nothing but villany. And now (ſaith Job) I am their ſong. There is an Emphaſis upon that now (as was noted at the firſt verſe) Intimating that the time was when none durſt or would be ſo bold with him; time was when good men honoured and reverenced him, and the worſt of men, they who reſpected him not for his goodneſs, were yet afraid of his power; but now (ſaith he) in this time of my affliction, now I am bound up in miſery, they take liberty to abuſe me and offer me any injury; I am their ſong, that is, I am the matter or ſubject of their ſong, they make ſongs, they make ſcoffing ſongs upon me and my afflictions. The word notes ſongs, not only ſung with the voice, but play'd upon an Inſtrument of muſick. For both the Act of the Muſician in playing, and the Muſician himſelf, as alſo his Inſtrument, are expreſt by this word in ſeveral forms, eſpecially in the titles of Davids Pſalms (Pſal. 4. Pſal. 6. Pſal. 54. Pſal. 61. &c.) To the chief Muſician upon Neginoth, a muſical Inſtrument ſo called. Now I am their ſong. Not only a ſong ſung with the voice, but a ſong played, implying that to wind up their ſpirits to the higheſt peg of vain mirth at Job's miſery, they not only made ſongs of him, but played them upon an Inſtrument.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Ungodly men deſpiſe the godly, yea though deeply afflicted.

The afflicted ſhould have comforting ſongs ſung to them, not ſcoffing ſongs ſung at them. There are ſongs of praiſe and thankſgiving; and there are ſongs of abuſe and reproach. God was Davids ſong, or David made God his ſong, his praiſing ſong. That is, he made ſongs of praiſe to God (Pſal. 118. 14.) The Lord is my ſtrength and ſong, and is become my ſalvation. And as David, ſo Moſes made God his ſong (Exod. 15. 2.) what ſong? His praiſing, his rejoycing, his triumphing ſong; but wicked men make the godly (even in affliction) their ſcoffing, their reproaching, their abuſing ſong. To make abuſive ſongs of others, is the worſt way of abuſe, 'tis the height of deriſion, to deride in ſongs. For it ſhews that the derider hath it much in his Spirit; and takes high content in it, when he can take time to turn his malice into a ſong, and poetize in reproaches, yea it ſhews that it not only ſutes his Spirit much, but is ſoakt into and ſetled upon his Spirit. That which we ſing, ſinks deeper and effects more then that which we barely ſay or make report of. And as ſongs ſink deep into the mind of him that makes or ſings them, ſo they go deeper or more to the heart of him in whoſe diſparagement they are made or ſung. To be abuſed by the looſeſt word that falls from the looſeſt lips, will ſtick upon moſt mens Spirits; but to be abuſed in a ſong, or compoſure of words, to be ſung and cryed about, ſticks much more: There is as it were an indelible Character of Infamy left upon men, when once they are made ſongs, or ſongs are made of them. Therefore among ſober Heathens, it was forbidden under a very great penalty that any ſhould make ſcornful ludibrious ſongs, verſes, or poems of any, eſpecially of great men. And among the Romans it was death to do it, becauſe ſuch ſcurrilities gave occaſion many times of very great diſturbances, and mens blood being heated by ſuch abuſes to revenge it, might proceed not only to blows, but ſhedding of blood. And as ſome (they are ſo pained till delivered of it) had rather loſe their friend, then their frothy jeſt; ſo others have loſt their life for their jeſt; it is no wonder if that hath fallen under the reſtraint of Laws which endangers life. Beſides, Honour is one of the moſt precious things in the World (a good name is better then precious oyntment, Eccl. 7. 1.) therefore if Magiſtrates ſhould take care of the goods of men, much more of their good names, and of their honour. I will not ſtay to give further evidence how vile a thing it is to make jeering ſongs of men, eſpecially to make ſuch ſongs of men in miſery; in which caſe it is not only a great Injury, but the greateſt Inhumanity.

Lege 12. Tabularum ſancitum eſt; ne quis maledicum carmen in quēquam ſcriberet ut ultimo afficeretur ſupplicio. Tul lib.4.Queſt

Again, We may conſider theſe ſongs not only as an abuſe put upon Job, of whom they were made, but as the recreation and merriment of thoſe that made them: For why or when do men uſually ſing? The Apoſtle James will tell us (Chap. 5. 13.) Is any merry, let him ſing Pſalms? Men ſing Pſalms or ſongs, either when they are merry, or would make themſelves merry; then it follows, that theſe men did much pleaſe themſelves with Job's affliction, who thus ſpeaks of them, I am their Song.

Hence Note, Ungodly men rejoyce in and at the afflictions of others, eſpecially at the afflictions of the godly.

The Philiſtines having taken Sampſon, bound him and put out his eyes, then called him, when their hearts were merry, to make them ſport (Jud. 16. 25.) And the Text ſaith, that he made them ſport. Surely Sampſon, being both a holy man, and an afflicted priſoner, had as little mind, as he had cauſe or reaſon to make the Philiſtines ſport. When therefore 'tis ſaid, he made them ſport, we muſt underſtand it paſſively, that he was the ſubject of their ſport, not the actor of it; they pleaſed themſelves to ſee the man grope out his way, or ſtumble in it; every one had a jeſt or a flout to beſtow upon him; they little thought how quickly he would change the ſcene, and turn their Comedy into a doleful Tragedy, their laughter into deadly groans and lamentable out-cryes. But as God ſhewed his juſtice, ſo they their cruelty and their ſcorn; they muſt needs make ſport with their Captive, a man in miſery. Thus David deſcribes the behaviour of his enemies in his ſelf-humiliation (Pſal. 69. 10, 11, 12.) When I wept and chaſtned my Soul with faſting, this was to my reproach; I made ſackcloth alſo my garment, and I became a proverb to them; they that ſit in the gate ſpeak againſt me, I am the ſong of the drunkard; as if he had ſaid, my mournings are their rejoycings: And my tears their wine. And as they jeared him in his voluntary or ſelf-humiliations, ſo when the hand of God humbled him (Pſal. 35. 15.) In mine adverſity they rejoyced, and gathered themſelves together, yea the abjects (for the opening of which word this Text was lately alledged) gathered themſelves together againſt me, and I knew it not, they did tear me (that is, my honour and good name with reproaches and ſcornful ſlanders) and ceaſed not; with hypocritical mockers at feaſts they gnaſhed upon me with their teeth. Mocking was the muſick of their feaſting, and they glutted themſelves with ſcorn more then with meat and drink, or rather (as we ſpeak proverbially) mocking and ſcorning was meat, drink, and cloth to them. Sad Jeremy found the ſame Spirit working in many at the calamities of Jeruſalem; for thus he brings in the Church of the Jews bemoaning her captivity (Lament. 3. 14.) I was a deriſion to all my people (that is, to all the perfidious ones among my people, or to Moab, Amalek and Edom, who were formerly ſubject to me as my people) and their ſong all the day long. We uſe to ſay, Love me a little, and love me long, but theſe (ſaith he) did not only ſcorn me much, but ſcorn me long, even all the day long; and (verſ. 63.) Behold their ſitting down (to eat) and their riſing up (from eating, or in the whole courſe of their time) I am their muſick. O how they inſulted over the poor Church in her affliction! Thus alſo ſome expound that in the Prophet (Ezek. 33. 32.) And lo, thou art to them as a very lovely ſong, of one that hath a pleaſant voyce, and can play well upon an Inſtrument: That is, his hearers went away and made lovely merry ſongs of him, in ſcorn and deriſion, either of his perſon or doctrine. Thoſe words of the former verſe, For with their mouth they ſhew much love, ſtrictly rendred out of the Original confirm this interpretation, as appears in the Margin of our own Bibles, where the Hebrew is thus expreſs'd; They make loves or jeſts. It ſeems the fine wits of thoſe times uſed to make libellous rithms or ſonnets upon Ezekiel, and his Sermons. Some to this day having heard the word of God preached, go away and laugh at him that preached it, and ſo the Miniſter is but as a ſong to them; and I know not which is the greater ſin, or ſhews the prophaner Spirit, to deride the word of God preached, or to deride a godly man afflicted; for as the will of God is heard and derided in the one, ſo 'tis ſeen and derided in the other. The will of God as to holineſs, or what we ought to do, is ſeen in man as he is godly, and the will of God as to providence, or what himſelf hath done, is ſeen in man as he is afflicted, and therefore to deride a godly afflicted man, is to deride the will of God all over, or quite through. Which will yet further appear in the next obſervation.

Thirdly, In that Job chargeth them with this as a proof of their unmanly baſeneſs.

Obſerve, 'Tis not only Impiety but Inhumanity to rejoyce at the afflictions of others.

Though the Jews, when Titus and his Roman Army beſieged Jeruſalem, had mightily provoked him by their obſtinate oppoſition and refuſal of Articles, for a fair ſurrender of the place; yet when he ſaw the extremities to which they were reduced, and the inexpreſſible ſufferings of all ſorts of people, he could not but expreſs ſorrow, and ſhed tears at the ſight of ſo much death and blood ſhed in the midſt of his conquered enemies. Not only grace but good nature (as we ſay) or common Ingenuity teacheth us to pity thoſe that are ſick, and to mourn with thoſe that mourn: Mere Heathen Moraliſts teach us to rejoyce in the joy of others, and to be afflicted in their ſorrows. Is it not abominable to ſee Chriſtians act the Counter-part, either ſorrowing at the joys, or rejoycing at the ſorrows of their Brethren! Among all the mixt affections, that's of the worſt compoſition, which is made up of joy and hatred, when moved with hatred we are gladded with another mans calamity; this the proper affection of Devils, or wicked Spirits. As they are moſt like the Devil, who do miſchief to pleaſe themſelves as well as to hurt others; ſo they are next in likeneſs to him who pleaſe themſelves in ſeeing miſchief or hurt befall others. If the Devil have any Joy, it is in the miſery that man ſuffers; this is a vice rare among Heathens, and it ſhould be the abhorrence of Chriſtians.

Ἐπιχαιρεκακία eſt affectus ex odio & gaudio mixtus, cum odio impulſi lætamur vel gaudemus in aliorum calamitatibus. Eſtq; affectus proprius diabolorum. Magir. phyſ.

Yea I am their by-word.] Or, I am to them for a word. This expreſſion was opened (Chap. 16. verſ. 17.) therefore I ſhall but briefly touch it here. Job's being a by-word, notes two things.

In communi, quaſi proverbiis utebantur Jobi infortunia.

First,

inducentes eum in exemplum culpa & miſeria. Aquin.

Firſt, Frequency of ſpeech about him, or that he was much in their diſcourſe; a thing or perſon much and often ſpoken of, is a by-word; as if he had ſaid, nothing was ſo commonly talked of, as my calamity, and my ſelf: I am the common theam.

Nihil tam vulgare ac tritum quã Jobi calamitas; præbeo illis garriendi argumentum. Bez.

Secondly, As it notes frequency of ſpeaking, ſo contemptuous ſpeaking, or ſpeaking of another in ſcorn, both meet here; I am their by-word: They often talk of me, and they talk of me deſpitefully, ſcornfully; their words are reproaches, and their ſpeakings of me deſpiſings.

Hence Obſerve, The great falls of men, eſpecially the falls of great men, are much ſpoken of, but little conſidered by the common ſort of men.

They are much ſpoken of, yea they are contemptuouſly ſpoken of; I might add, they are lightly ſpoken of, or they are ſpoken of without due conſideration. David ſaith (Pſal. 69. 11.) I made ſackcloath my garment, and I became a proverb, or a by-word to them; that is, they talked much of me. Again (verſe 26.) They perſecute him whom thou haſt ſmitten, and they talk to the grief of thoſe whom thou haſt wounded: It is an eaſie matter to talk much of, but a hard thing to make a right uſe of the ſufferings of others. Few improve their brethrens ſufferings, either to the glory of God, or to the good of their own Souls. As there is a voice in the Rod which ſmites our ſelves, ſo in that with which we ſee our brethren ſmitten; and therefore were we wiſe, when we ſpeak of the ſufferings of others, we ſhould ſpeak of them, not to deſpiſe them, but to inſtruct and admoniſh our ſelves by them. All the examples of the judgments of God upon his people in former times that are written, were written for our inſtruction and admonition (1 Cor. 10. 11.) not to make a common diſcourſe or Table talk of them, but for our learning; ſo the preſent diſpenſations of God are for our inſtruction too. How ſad is it to hear moſt men reporting ſad providences, while they do it, either to pleaſe themſelves, or reproach thoſe who are fallen under them. Juſt as we may conceive Jobs enemies diſcourſing of him and his ſufferings in their meetings; Friends, Neighbours, have you not heard what is befallen Job? Or have you not heard how Job is fallen? He lately was as a Star, yea as the Sun ſhining bright in the Firmament of the State; what think ye friends, neighbours, of the ſudden ruine and downfal of this man? How ſtrangely is he caſt down? He that had ſuch an abundance, is ſtript of all; he that had ſuch great power and authority, no man regards him: He that had ſo many Servants to attend him, is now forced to ſcrape his own ſores; is not this an argument (friends) that ſurely he was proud of what he had gotten, or that he got it by injuſtice and oppreſſion? Yea, is not this an argument that he regarded not God, though he ſeemed zealous to worſhip him? See how God hath met with him: See how God hath met with that Tyrant, with that Oppreſſor, with that Uſurper, with that meer fancy or ſhadow of piety; ſee how God hath turned him down to the duſt. Such (poſſibly) was the diſcourſe of wicked men about Job, not how they might glorifie God, or benefit themſelves by the fall of ſo eminent a perſon: And is not the diſcourſe of many of the ſame ſtrein and tendency? Do not they diſcant thus upon the ſeverer diſpenſations of God towards ſome of his precious Servants?

Thus far of the firſt way, in which Jobs deriders vented themſelves againſt him. Now from abuſe by words, the Text proceeds to their diſdainful thoughts, and from thence to their diſdainful acts: Which were twofold; Firſt, They fled from him; Secondly, They ſpat in his face.

Verſ. 10. They abhor me.

The word imports averſation, proceeding from abomination or loathing (Iſa. 1. 13.) Bring no more oblations to me; Incenſe is an abomination to me, ſaid the Lord to the hypocritical Jews; there is nothing more abhorrent to God then falſe worſhip, and falſe-hearted worſhippers; ſuch an abhorrence was Job, though a worſhipper in truth, to his deriders. It was a great affliction to Job to be jeer'd in their ſongs, and to be made their Table-talk, or high-way talk; but to be abhorr'd and deteſted as a monſter of men, as a man unworthy to live among men, this was far more afflictive then the former; yet thus they dealt with upright Job, they abhorr'd him.

Here it may be enquired, upon what account they did abhor him?

There is an abhorrence of man; firſt, in regard of his ſinfulneſs, this only renders man an abhorrence in the ſight of God. Secondly, in regard of his miſerableneſs. The worſt of Jobs enemies could not eſpy any real ſin-ſpots upon him, though poſſibly they fancied ſuch as had they been true would have made him abominable; but that which was both real and viſible, his poor forlorn condition, might ſtir up in their proud hearts an abhorrence of him. Again, we abhor things or perſons under a threefold notion: Firſt, as infectious; thus we abhor thoſe that have the Plague, the Leproſie, or any other contagious diſeaſe; Secondly, we abhor thoſe things which ſome call unlucky, as if the meeting or ſight of them did foreſpeak ſome evil ready to fall upon us. Thirdly, we abhor that which is monſtrous, deformed, or miſhapen; 'tis not improbable, that thoſe baſe men might abhor Job under the firſt and laſt, if not under all theſe three conſiderations; for his diſeaſes and ſores were very offenſive, if not infectious, and they had rendred him very unpleaſing, doubtleſs, and deformed to the eye, as if he had been ſome miſhapen Image of a man, rather then a living man: For theſe reaſons they, who in Chapter twenty ninth honoured him, as if he had been more then a man, now abhorr'd him as if he were not only below, or leſs then a man, but ſome hateful or hurtful Beaſt.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Nothing is more uncertain then honour among men.

The ſame perſon continuing alſo the ſame for his ſpirituals and morals, may be admired to day, and abhorr'd to morrow.

Secondly, Obſerve, Moſt men fancy to themſelves horrid and monſtrous notions of thoſe that are under terrible and ſore Judgments.

What kind of man is this (thought they) with whom God deals thus? Many form and ſhape their thoughts of the man ſuffering, according to the idæa or pattern of thoſe things which he ſuffers, as hath been ſhewed from other paſſages of this Book.

Thirdly, Note, Many are abhorr'd among men, who are highly honoured and loved by God.

God doth not abhor but love the righteous whom he ſmites, though men do; they lie in his boſome, and are in his very heart, while under his afflicting hand. The wicked bleſs the Covetous, whom the Lord abhors (Pſal. 10. 2.) and the Lord kiſſeth the righteous, whom wicked men abhor; and then moſt, when they abhor them moſt. See how croſs the Judgment of men is to the Judgment of God; they bleſs the Covetous, they think them to be very bleſſed men, though God abhor them, and they abhor thoſe whom God bleſſeth; that is, whom God delights in and rejoyceth over. Chriſt tells us (Luke 16. 15.) That which is highly eſteemed among men is an abomination in the ſight of God. And whether we reſpect things or perſons, that which is abominated by men, is often highly eſteemed by God. Jobs friends abhorr'd him, but the Lord loved him. They abhor me

And flee far from me.] This follows neceſſarily upon the former; where there is an alienation of affection, there enſues eſtrangement in converſation. Formerly all made addreſſes to Jobs Court, and were glad if they could but come nigh him, or get into the preſence Chamber; but now they flee from him, yea they not only flee from him, but flee far from him, as if they thought they could never go far enough from him. And why all this? He was now ſick and ſore, poor and deſtitute, his worldly comforts were fled from him, and therefore theſe men fled from him too.

Hence Note, When riches and honours depart, carnal friends and flatterers will depart alſo: Or, When worldly things leave us, the men of the World will leave us.

Solomon ſaith (Pro. 23. 5.) Riches make themſelves wings, and flee away as an Eagle toward Heaven. And we often ſee when Riches are upon the wing, pretending friends will make themſelves wings, and flee away alſo. Few friends will abide by the poor and miſerable; the poor is hated of his own neighbour (Prov. 14.20.) And again (Prov. 19. 4.) Wealth maketh many friends; but the poor is ſeparated from his Neighbour; that is, his Neighbour ſeperates from him, or as this Text ſpeaks, flyes far from him. Poverty is indeed a line of ſeparation, but it often proves a wall of ſeparation; and as all rich men are far from poverty, ſo many of them are far from the poor, though they dwell at next door. When our Lord Jeſus Chriſt was under an Arreſt by the Officers of the high Prieſt, all forſook him and fled, even his own Diſciples run for it. They are rare friends, of whom it may be ſaid, as Chriſt ſpake once to his Diſciples (Luke 22. 28.) Ye are they who have continued with me in my temptation. As temptation tryeth us, ſo it tryeth our friends: Temptation tryeth our faith, patience, and ſincerity; and it tryeth their love, compaſſion, and charity. A friend (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 17. 17.) loveth at all times; that is, a friend ought to love at all times, that's the true genious of a friend; and a true friend will be ever thus ingenious. But ſuch a friend is not to be had under every hedge. There are enow that will continue with their friends in their proſperity, greatneſs and glory, but will they continue with them in their temptations, when nothing but Clouds and darkneſs are about them? How happy are they who are under the ſtrength and influences of that promiſe (Heb. 13. 5.) I will never leave thee, nor forſake thee. When thy riches are gone, honours gone, friends gone, when all theſe, and all elſe flee far from thee, yet ſaith God, I will not be gone, I will never leave thee. Friends may flee from thee when riches are fled, but I will never flee from thee when riches are fled: I will never leave thee, nor forſake thee, I will not do it in thy loweſt, in thy worſt condition. Thrice happy and ever bleſſed are they that have an intereſt in God as their friend, who is neareſt to us when ſorrows are at hand, and worldly comforters ſtand afar off. They (ſaith Job) flee far from him.

And ſpare not to ſpit in my face.

The Hebrew is, And with-held not ſpittle from my face. When Job ſaith, They ſpare not to ſpit in my face, their not ſparing this part of their misbehaviour imports two things.

Firſt, That they were very frequent in doing it, or did it very much.

Secondly, That the thing was done in the height of contempt. A man may be contemn'd beyond all reaſon, though ſpitting in his face be ſpared, or abated him, but theſe miſcreants would not ſo much as ſpare or abate that.

Further for the clearing of this paſſage, take two or three opinions, what ſhould be meant by ſpitting in his face; 'tis very ſtrange (almoſt incredible) that they ſhould arrive at that height of lewdneſs and impudence to ſpit in his face; the words then may be conſidered three wayes.

Firſt, In a proper ſence, or ſtrictly; ſo moſt of the Latines interpret them: And it may not be thought impoſſible that wicked men, Satans inſtruments, ſhould do ſuch a thing, when we conſider how far Job was given up to the power of Satan, nothing was excepted but his life. And we know that Jeſus Chriſt himſelf endured ſpitting upon his face litterally; as both the Propheſie ſpake of him (Iſa. 50. 6.) he with-held not his face from ſhame and ſpitting; as alſo the Hiſtory reports (Mat. 26. 67. & 27. 30.) They ſpit in his face.

Secondly, Others expound it thus; they did ſpit contemptuouſly before him, or in his ſight: So that phraſe (in his face) is rendred (Deut. 4. 37.) Becauſe he (that is, the Lord) loved thy fathers, therefore he choſe their ſeed after them, and brought them forth in his ſight, or, in his face. To ſpit in the ſight of great perſons, or before their face, is a great Incivility, and (upon the matter) to ſpit in their face; and therefore the Maſters of manners and Courtſhip ſay, that in addreſſing unto great perſons, no man ſhould dare ſo much as to ſpit in their preſence, or when they are before them, but turn aſide upon ſuch neceſſities of nature. Some ſtick much upon this Interpretation; as if Job had thus expreſſed himſelf; they who had more manners heretofore, and knew what belonged to my ſtate (being a Magiſtrate) now quite forget both themſelves and me, they have now laid down or forgotten all reſpect and civility.

Quaſi Job querebatur quod non averſa facie ſputa & ſalivas coram eo eijcerent, quod cum eſſet in proſperis facere non auſi eſſent, ſed omni reverentia vultum ſimul cum corpore divertiſſent. Bold.

Cyrus exercuit principes ſuos ut neq; ſpuere neq; mucum emittere apparerent. Zenoph. In ſua pedia de cyto. lib. 8.

Thirdly, We may Interpret the words metaphorically; neither for a direct ſpitting in his face, nor in his preſence, but for any kind of diſgrace and diſreſpect put upon him, eſpecially by rude and uncomely language. In which ſence Job alſo complained (Chap. 16. 10.) They have ſmitten me upon the cheek reproachfully; that is, they have ſmitten me with reproaches. By a Metaphor a man is ſmitten upon the cheek or face, when he is reproached with opprobrious words, and likewiſe his face is ſpit upon, when reproached. So that when Job ſaith, They ſpit in my face; It is as if he had more plainly expreſſed himſelf thus; What need I ſtand to reckon up particular abuſes, they did not ſpare to do me the greateſt indignity, and to pour the greateſt contempt imaginable upon me, even as if they did ſpit in my very face. Ill words are like the ſpittle or foam of an angry mouth; and when any ſhall give a man ill language openly, or (as we ſay) to his face, it may be ſaid they ſpit in his face. We read (Deut. 25. 9.) in the caſe of a man that would not take his deceaſed brothers wife; Then ſhall his brothers wife come unto him in the preſence of the Elders, and ſhall looſe his ſhooe from off his foot, and ſpit in his face. There is much debate among Interpreters about this action, and moſt conclude, that ſhe did not directly ſpit in the mans face, but caſt his refuſal of her as a great diſhonour upon him. The words following may be expounded to the ſame ſence; And it ſhall be ſaid, ſo ſhall it be done unto that man that will not build up his brothers houſe: That is, let it be a blot and a reproach to him, let him be deteſted. We uſually ſpit at the ſight or mention of thoſe things which we nauſeate and deteſt. Again (Num. 12. 14.) when Moſes ſaith concerning Miriam; If her father had ſpit in her face: The Chaldee Paraphraſe hath it, If her father had grievouſly chid or reproved her, ſhould ſhe not be aſhamed ſeven dayes? The rebukes of Parents are a kind of ſpitting in their Childrens faces. We have ſuch a proverbial ſpeech among us, when we would deny a thing, charged upon us, with greateſt indignation, we ſay, if it can be proved that I have done ſo or ſo, I will give you leave to ſpit in my face; that is, to uſe me, or ſpeak of me with utmoſt diſgrace. So that here is the complement of all their evil manners, the filling up of all their contemptuous carriages towards Job; if there were any action or abuſe worſe then other, they did not forbear to do it, even to do as bad as to ſpit in his face.

Per ſputum intelliguntur injuriæ & contumeliæ coram & in facie jactatæ. Utrumq; enim fœdum oris excrementum eſt, ſive putre ſputum ſive turpe verbū. Fluxa verba quaſi defluentes ſalivas emittunt. Greg. Idem videtur ſenſiſſe Auguſtinus, hunc locum ſic exponens Malè me innoteſcere fecerunt.

רק ſputum, unde רקה conſpuendus. Mat. 5. 22.

Si pater increpando increpaſſet. Chald. Paraph.

Some are of opinion, that Job ſpake thus with ſpecial reference to Bildad and Zophar, two of his three friends, who indeed had given him very courſe language, and did only not ſpit in his face; but I cannot ſubſcribe to that conjecture, becauſe the character of the perſons complained of by Job for offering him this indignity, is utterly unſutable to the gravity and goodneſs of thoſe worthy men; and therefore let it remain upon that ruder crew of the ill-bred multitude, whoſe impudence and ignorance might ſufficiently prompt them to do and ſpeak againſt him as ill as is imaginable. They ſpare not to ſpit in my face.

Hoc propter Bildadum & Zopharum videtur dicere, aquibus atrociſſimè convitiis proſciſſus fuerat & tantum non conſputus. Merc.

Hence Note, Firſt, There is no action ſo vile and uncivil, which evil men will forbear when they have an opportunity.

They will not ſpare to ſpit in a mans face, in the proper, much leſs in the metaphorical ſence: They who have no credit of their own, care little whom they diſcredit, or how they diſcredit others. As Innocency and goodneſs, ſo honour and greatneſs, are no defence againſt an evil tounge; that will break and ſtrike through all. Job once great and honourable, ſtill good and innocent, found it ſo.

Hence Note, Secondly, There is no Indignity ſo baſe and ignominious, but a godly man may meet with it in and from the World.

The beſt of men may have the worſt reproaches caſt upon them; they may hear themſelves called fools, hypocrites, time-ſervers, what not? How often have ſuch Titles been ſpit in the faces of the deareſt and moſt precious Servants of God? Therefore Saints had need be inſtructed how to paſs through evil report, as well as good report. Do not think it ſtrange to be diſhonour'd. It was the Counſel which Cæſar gave his Souldiers at a Battel; Souldiers ſtrike at their faces. Thus many will not ſpare faces; they ſpit upon the hononr and reputations of the righteous.

The Lord threatens the drunken Chaldean (Hab. 2. 16.) That ſhameful ſpewing ſhall be upon his glory. But wicked men will ſpit and ſpew ſhame upon the glory of the moſt ſober and holy men.

VERS. 11, 12.

Becauſe he hath looſed my cord, and afflicted me; they have alſo let looſe the bridle before me.

Upon my right hand riſe the youth, they puſh away my feet, and they raiſe up againſt me the wayes of their deſtruction.

IN the former part of this Chapter, we have had a large deſcription of Jobs deſpiſers, or what ſort of men they were. A good man is rarely found at any ſuch work, and he never continues at it. Theſe mens work was as bad almoſt as is imaginable, and themſelves (as appears by Jobs report of them) were no better. Yet Job doth not ſtay in them, nor ſpend himſelf in bitter invectives againſt them, but having ſhewed what they were, he, as heretofore, gathers up his ſpirits, and turns from the creature unto God, riſing higher in his thoughts then any thing in thoſe poor deſpiſers, for the reaſon why he was deſpiſed; Job looked beyond the inſtrumental to the ſupream cauſe of his ſufferings, even unto God, who hath both the tongues and ſpirits of men in his hand; that is, at his command. And therefore he now begins to give us an account how and whence it came to paſs, that ſuch vile perſons, men viler then the Earth, trampled on him as the Earth, or as the mire in the ſtreets. And the account which he gives is laid down in the verſe following.

Verſ. 11. Becauſe he hath looſed my cord, and afflicted me, they have alſo let looſe the bridle upon me.

As if he had ſaid, Though I hear and ſee, to my ſorrow, what theſe miſcreants both ſay and do againſt me, yet I have ſearched and found, a greater wheel in this turn of my eſtate then they. Men have deſpiſed me, becauſe God hath afflicted me, yea God hath therefore afflicted me, that he might expoſe me to this tryal, the deſpight of men. Men have let looſe the bridle upon me, but God firſt looſed my cord; yea he therefore looſed my cord that men might take an advantage to let looſe the bridle upon me. So then,

In thoſe words Job aſſerts two things of God, as the reaſon, why that baſe generation inſulted over him.

Firſt, He hath looſed my cord; Secondly, He hath afflicted me, and therefore they have let looſe the bridle upon me; or we may put both reaſons into one; God hath afflicted me by letting looſe my cord, and therefore they have let looſe the bridle upon me.

Now becauſe God is not mentioned at all in the former part of the Chapter, ſome queſtion whether this act of looſing Jobs cord, is to be referred unto God, or unto man? Moſt Interpreters refer it to God, ſome to men; in ſpecial to thoſe men, his friends, who had held and maintain'd that unkind diſpute againſt him. According to this expoſition, the relative He is taken diſtributively; becauſe he, that is, every one of them, hath looſed my cord; they, that is, theſe rude wretches have let looſe the bridle upon me. But I rather incline to the former opinion, and ſo ſhall proſecute the Text, as the Antecedent to he, is God, becauſe he, that is, becauſe God hath looſed my cord, &c. And it is uſual in Scripture (we have had ſeveral paſſages of like obſervation in this book) to ſpeak of God without any expreſs mention, only by that relative he; becauſe when God is much concerned in a buſineſs, and hath been often ſo expreſſed, there's no need to name him alwayes expreſly as to every particular paſſage of it. And doubtleſs God was ſo much upon the heart of Job in this matter, that he often intends him where he doth not name him.

Interdum voces aliquæ referũtur non ad id quod expreſſum fuit ſcriptura aut voce, ſed ad id quod quis animo verſat aut ſenſu aliquo capit. Auguſt.

He hath looſed.] That is, opened, untwiſted, or untyed my cord, and ſo all is fallen looſe. We may expound this word in alluſion unto things bundl'd or tyed up; as when Corn is bound into a ſheaf, or, as when wood is bound together (as our word is) into a fagot; if once the cord or the band which holds theſe together be looſed, they preſently fall aſunder.

He hath looſed my cord.] But what is this cord? There are four Interpretations about it.

Firſt, Some interpret it of the natural band or cord of the body. The body hath its cords, ligaments, and bands; the nerves or ſinews faſten, tye, and hold the ſeveral members of the body together; taking this ſence of the word, Jobs meaning may be given out, as if he had ſaid, By my extream pains and ſickneſſes, God hath even ſhattered me in pieces, as if all my bones and ſinews were broken, and when theſe brutes ſee me in this torture and woful plight, they inſtead of pitying me deride me, they let looſe the bridle upon me. 'Tis true the tortures and preſſures upon Jobs body were exceeding great; he was even torn aſunder and unjointed, like a man that's rackt; and it is as true, that bodily weakneſs layes good men open to the contempt of wicked men. But I do not judge this proper to Jobs ſcope and purpoſe here.

Verbum hoc ſignificat aliquando corporis colgamenta, q. d. compagem totius corporis mei, ſolvit hoc canto dolore. Apud. Merc.

Secondly, Others, by his cord, underſtand the abilities, and powers of his mind, the ſtrength of his parts to direct, as alſo his courage to execute the duties of his place; theſe are as a cord whereby Magiſtrates faſten all men to them, in reſpect and reverence. So that of the Prophet is expounded (Iſa. 45. 1.) Thus ſaith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whoſe right hand I have holden (or ſtrengthned) to ſubdue Nations before him: And I will looſe the loynes of Kings to open before him the two-leaved gates, and the gates ſhall not be ſhut. The loynes of Kings are looſed, when their ſpirit and courage fail, when their wiſdome and underſtanding fail, ſo that they either know not what to do, or dare not attempt the doing of what they know. Now, when the loynes of a man are ſaid to be looſed, it notes that he is greatly diſtreſſed and pained. (Iſa. 21. 3.) Therefore are my loynes filled with pain, pangs have taken hold upon me, as the pangs of a woman that travaileth: I was bowed down at the hearing of it, I was diſmayed at the ſeeing of it. So (Dan. 5. 6.) Then the Kings countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, ſo that the joynts (girdles, bindings, or knots, as the Chaldee hath it) of his loynes were looſed, and his knees ſmote one againſt another. Thus Job is ſuppoſed to complain here, that God had looſed the cord of his ſtrength, both in reſpect of his body by ſore pains, and of his mind by dreadful terrors, which gave many occaſion to let themſelves looſe in reviling and reproaching him.

Thirdly, Say others, This cord was his outward proſperous eſtate, his riches, and worldly ſubſtance. Theſe indeed are a mans cord, they tye up and keep him and his family and friends together, yea they are a cord or band upon a mans enemies to keep them from hurting him: Riches are a great binder of others to us in a way of obſervance and reſpect. And therefore when a man looſeth a plentiful eſtate, when that is ſcatter'd from him, he (as we ſay) is broken, his cord is looſed, and all falls aſunder. I grant Jobs cord of worldly ſubſtance, was once great and ſtrong, and then ravel'd out and looſed, this might draw contempt upon him; yet I conceive this is not the matter here intended,

Fourthly, By the cord, that (Job complains) God had looſed, we are chiefly, if not only, to underſtand the authority and power, with which, as a Magiſtrate, he was inveſted. Authority or Magiſtratical power are a cord, yea they are like Solomons threefold cord, which cannot eaſily be broken; power over men is a great binder of men, both to reverence and obedience. Job had a full experience of this, as appeared in the former Chapter, and therefore no marvel if he was thus ſenſible of the want of it, and complains thus paſſionately, that God had taken off the hearts of the people from their former fear of and ſubjection to him, ſo that they who before did riſe up and even tremble at his preſence, now ſlighted him, and did not only withdraw their reſpects, but pour contempt upon him. Thus we may expound that of the heathen Princes and people (Pſ. 2. 3.) Let us break their bands; that is, let us caſt off all fear and regard of them. Mr. Broughton renders, He hath looſed his ſtring; which he thus gloſſes, the ſtring or rein of government, that holdeth baſe from ſtriving with mighty. By that alſo may be underſtood his bow-ſtring, of which he ſpake (Chap. 29. 20.) My bow (that is, my power and authority) was renewed in my hand; but now my bowſtring is looſed or ſlackned in my hand.

theſe words, as the learned Hebircians obſerve. The reading is, He hath looſed my cord, the writing is, He hath looſed his cord; that is either the Lord hath looſed his cord, whereby he formerly held the people in awe and obedience to me; or, he, that is every one of them hath looſed and ſhook off that cord or that ſubjection which my authority and greatneſs did heretofore put upon them. But whether we read my cord, or his cord, the general ſence of the words is the ſame. For if Job ſaith, My cord, he means that Authority and Power which he derived from God; as if he ſaith, His cord, he means the ſame Authority and Power which God had put upon him, or into his hand for the government and protection of that people. He hath looſed my cord or ſtring,

And afflicted me.] We may take this clauſe either as diſtinctly from the precedent words, and ſo it contains a brief of all thoſe other troubles wherewith God hath viſited him; as if he had ſaid, Over and beſides the rage and reproach of man which I lie under, the Lord himſelf hath laid a very hard and heavy hand upon me by thoſe immediate ſtroaks of my affliction. Or we take it as wrapt up in the former expreſſion, implying that his great affliction was the looſing of his cord, or the withdrawing of that reſpect which had been given him.

The word which we tranſlate to afflict, properly ſignifies to humble and to lay low; ſelf-humiliation is or ought to be the effect and fruit of affliction. They that are afflicted ſhould be humbled, and that greatly under the hand of God. But if we do not actively humble and lay our ſelves low, when we are afflicted, yet every affliction is in its own nature a paſſive humiliation, or laying of us low. And to be ſure ungodly men will afflict us and lay us low by their contempt and ſlighting of us, when God afflicts us; as it followeth in the Text, becauſe he hath afflicted me,

They have alſo let looſe the bridle upon me.

Effrænes in me feruntur. Tygur.

Theſe words contain the conſequent, yea the effect, reſpecting men, of the Lords afflicting hand upon his faithful ſervant Job. Thoſe men did not pity or pray for him, much leſs did they honour and ſubmit to him, but quite caſt off the yoke and brake the bonds, They have let looſe the bridle upon me. They, that is, that baſe crew of whom he had ſpoken before, have let looſe the bridle; God hath looſed my cord, and they have let looſe the bridle, or caſt the bridle as it were out of their mouth. What was this bridle? We may underſtand it either of the bridle of their tongues, or of the bridle of his Authority. And when once this latter was looſned, they quickly let looſe the former.

Firſt, thus, They have let looſe the bridle of their tongues before me; there was once a bridle upon their tongues, when for the Majeſty of Jobs perſon, and the ready obſervance which was given him, no man durſt ſpeak in his preſence, but even Princes ſtood mute (Chap. 29.9.) When any ſpeak without due regard of the perſon to, or before whom they ſpeak, then the bridle of their tongue is looſed. Reverential fear is a ſtrong bridle, it keeps the tongue in order, or from running out diſorderly, and makes us take heed what we ſay, and to whom. A looſe and unruly tongue, ſhews a looſer and more unruly ſpirit. David was a man after Gods own heart, and he would have a tongue after Gods own heart too; therefore as he reſolved to bridle his tongue (Pſal. 39.1.) I ſaid I will take heed to my wayes, that I ſin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me; So he begged of God to watch it (Pſal. 141.3.) Set a watch (O Lord) before my mouth, keep the door of my lips; He was afraid leaſt his mouth ſhould open, and his lips unlock without licence. He was convinc'd how much his mouth needed a watch, and his lips a bridle. A Lock upon the Houſe door keeps it faſt, and a Bridle in the Horſes mouth holds him in. There was never any Door had ſo much need of a Lock, nor Horſe of a Bridle, as the mouth and lips of man have. And no ſooner had God let looſe Jobs cord of Authority, his binder to obedience, which formerly over-aw'd that lawleſs generation, but preſently they let looſe the bridle, and cared not what they ſpake of him, or to him; they were not afraid to revile him, and they durſt do it openly, They let looſe the bridle,

Before me.] As if he had ſaid, they did not go into a corner, or behind my back to do it; they did it to my face. Some will revile men of Authority, and blaſpheme dignities, when their cord is in ſtrength; but then they do it cloſely, or in private, there they take liberty to let looſe the bridle of their tongues upon the beſt of men. But this Rabble was not only undutiful, but impudent, they ſpake evil of him before him. The Preacher (Eccl. 10.20.) gives a ſtrict caution, Curſe not the King, no, not in thy thought, and curſe not the rich in thy bed-chamber. The thoughts of man are ſilent, inaudable words. Our thoughts lodge in our bed-chamber, in the heart, which is the moſt retired and darkſome Room in man, yet there he ought not to ſpeak evil of Princes; and beſides the ſinfulneſs of ſuch thought-curſes, there is danger in them. He that takes liberty to curſe his betters, eſpecially Princes in his thoughts, will hardly be able to reſtrain himſelf from curſing them with his tongue. That which is much in our thoughts, is quickly out in words; the tongue can hardly hold that which the heart delights to hold; and therefore Jobs enemies having their hearts ſo full of contempt againſt him, could not contain themſelves, but muſt let looſe the bridle of their tongues before him.

But what made them thus bold with their unbridled tongues? Surely they had caſt off another bridle before they did caſt off this; and that directs me to the other interpretation of theſe words, They have looſed the bridle before me; that is,

Non poſſunt à me amplius frænari, ſive authoritate, ſive eloquentia & argumentis. Coc.

Fertur equis auriga, nec audit currus habenas. Virg. 1. Georg.

Secondly, The bridle of his Magiſtracy; as if he had ſaid, Neither my power nor my preſence, neither my Authority nor my Reaſon have any weight with them, I were as good ſay nothing as ſpeak; they have thrown off the bridle, and are no more a ſociety, but a rout or unruly multitude of men. David admoniſheth ungoverned men (Pſal. 32.19.) Be ye not as the Horſe or as the Mule, which have no underſtanding; whoſe mouth muſt be held in with bit and bridle, leſt they come near unto thee. Moſt men are like the Horſe and Mule, were not a bit and bridle put into their mouthes, they would never bridle themſelves, there would be no living near them; and many are apt to take any occaſion to let looſe the bridle, and put the bit out of their mouthes, which is put into them: Evil men throw off ſubjection both to God and man. O how few would go right, or do right, were it not that they find themſelves under the command or check of a Bridle. We read indeed of a bridle uſed to another end (Iſa. 30.28.) And there ſhall be a bridle in the jaws of the people, cauſing them to err. The power of the Aſſyrian and Babylonian Monarchs, was this bridle in the jaws of the Nations, who being an erring power, uſed their power to make others err in Idolatrous ways; yet there, I conceive, the meaning of the Prophet is, that the Aſſyrian power cauſed the people to err, or wander like Captives from their own Country. There is a captivating bridle, and there is a governing bridle; there is a bridle cauſing to err, and there is a bridle which keeps to order. Some Princes uſe their power for the good, others for the hurt of the people; yet the people hurt themſelves worſt when they throw off the powers. They have let looſe the bridle.

Now, for as much as under theſe Metaphors of a cord, and of a bridle, Authority and obedience to Authority, are ſhadowed and held forth to us.

Firſt, Note, Reverence is the band of obedience from man to man.

Take away reverence, and all ſorts and degrees of men are hudled into a confuſed heap. The Apoſtle (1 Pet. 2.17.) joines reverence to God with reverence to Magiſtrates, Fear God, honour the King. Take away honour, and preſently we looſe ſubjection. As reverential fear keeps man in his due obedience towards God; ſo honour maintains obedience towards man. If once men caſt off the fear of God, they ſoon let looſe the bridle before him, and ſlight both him and his word. Abraham concluded (Gen. 20.11.) I thought, ſurely the fear of God is not in this place, and they will ſlay me for my wives ſake; as if he had ſaid, there is no bridle, no tie upon them, therefore they will do any thing that comes next, any thing that they have a mind and power to do. And if the fear of man be not in any place, what will men forbear to do! if there be not a reverential awe upon Children towards their Parents, if there be not a reverential awe upon Servants towards their Maſters, if there be not a reverential awe upon Subjects towards the Magiſtrate, what wickedneſs, what violence may we not expect and quickly ſee! No ſooner is that cord looſed, but the bridle is let looſe too.

Job reports not only matter of fact, or what they did, but matter of iniquity, or that they did very ill. It is the ſin of the people, when they deſpiſe and trample upon the Authority of their Princes, and throw off the reins of Government. The Apoſtle Paul gives that ſtrict charge, Let every Soul be ſubject to the higher powers (Rom. 13. 1.) And ſo every Soul ought to be.

Firſt, That the ordinance of God may be acknowledged and ſubmitted to. This and that ſort, form or model of Magiſtracy, is indeed a humane creation, or an ordinance of man, (1 Pet. 2. 13.) But that there ſhould be Magiſtrates, and they honoured by the people, is an ordinance of God, or a divine appointment. As therefore it is a high contempt to caſt off thoſe ordinances of divine worſhip wherein we immediately honour God; ſo to caſt off thoſe ordinances of humane order wherein we ought to honour man. The reſpect which we give to the powers of this world, is not a matter of complement but Conſcience, nor are we under a liberty, but a neceſſity to give it.

Secondly, Every Soul muſt be ſubject to the higher powers, that there may be a ſubmiſſion to the ſpecial or preſent diſpenſation or providence of God, as well as to his ſtanding ordinance: God changeth power from veſſel to veſſel as himſelf pleaſeth, and in what veſſel ſoever, he puts it, we muſt ſubmit to it. As ſome refuſe to ſerve the God who made them, but make themſelves a god and then ſerve him; ſo ſome will not ſubmit to the Magiſtrate which God hath made them, but muſt have one of their own making or chuſing before they will ſubmit to him. Whereas indeed as none are at a liberty whether they will ſubmit to Government or no, ſo no private perſons are at a liberty, what Governours they will ſubmit to; and therefore the Apoſtle determines all particular or private perſons in that point (Rom. 13. 1.) The powers that be (let them be who they will) are ordained of God. And ſo the Pſalmiſt long before; Promotion cometh not from the Eaſt, or from the Weſt, nor from the South, but God is the Judge, he putteth down one and ſetteth up another, (Pſal. 75. 5,6,7.) Now, to own the will of God in his particular deſignment of a Governour, is our duty as much as to own his will in appointing government. Nebuchadnezzar was condemned to a beſtial life, till he ſhould learn this leſſon and make this acknowledgment (Dan. 4.32.) They ſhall drive thee from men, and thy dwelling ſhall be with the Beaſts of the field; they ſhall make thee to eat graſs as Oxen, and ſeven times ſhall paſs over thee, until thou know that the moſt High ruleth in the Kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomſoever he will. And therefore when we ſee God by ſignal providences taking a Kingdom from one perſon or family, who are we that we ſhould contradict or riſe up againſt his Donation? We muſt not ſay, if power were in ſuch a hand we would reverence it, if in ſuch a way we would ſubmit to it; for in whatſoever hand God puts it, duty binds us to obey it; if he (as Elihu ſpeaks at the 34. Chapter of this book, verſ. 24.) ſhall break in pieces mighty men without number (or as we put in the Margin, without ſearching out, that is, without any legal proceſs, or courſe appearing openly to man: If I ſay, God ſhall thus break in pieces mighty men) and ſet others in their ſtead, who are we, that we ſhould ſet our ſelves againſt him?

Thirdly, Every Soul muſt be ſubject to the higher powers, that we may honour the impreſſions of God upon the higher powers; there is a ſtamp or impreſs of the power, wiſdom, juſtice, and ſoveraignty of God upon Magiſtrates, yea God puts his own name upon them; I (ſaith the Lord, Pſal. 82.6.) have ſaid, ye are Gods; now as all the appearances of God are to be reſpected, ſo eſpecially the great and illuſtrious appearances of God, ſuch as are upon Princes; and therefore Job complains of this as their ſin as well as his own affliction, that becauſe his cord was looſed, they let looſe the bridle before him.

Fourthly, The benefits that we receive by government, call for reverence to Government; as God hath ſet Magiſtrates above others, ſo he hath ſet them up for others, that is, for a common intereſt; no man ſhould live to himſelf, much leſs ſhould any rule or govern to himſelf: Yea, he that would govern all to himſelf, doth not at all govern. Thus the Apoſtle argues for ſubjection (Rom. 13. 5.) Wherefore ye muſt needs be ſubject, why needs? Or what's the neceſſity? He tells us at the 6. verſe of the ſame Chapter, For this cauſe pay you tribute alſo, for they are Gods Miniſters, attending continually upon this very thing. But you will ſay, what is this thing, upon which Magiſtrates by vertue of their Office continually attend? We may read what it is, at the 4. verſe; For he is the Miniſter of God to thee for good; that is, for thy profit and protection, if (as he ſpeaks at the third verſe,) thou art ſuch a one as doeſt good. Indeed if thou do that which is evil (as it follows in the fourth verſe) be afraid: For he beareth not the Sword in vain, for he is the Miniſter of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doth evil. And though this execution of wrath (which is a moſt neceſſary part of the Magiſtrates Office) be not good to him that doth evil, yet (as poſſibly it may prove a good to him, ſo) certainly it is for good to all others, as it is a means to deterr ſome from doing evil, and the reſt from ſuffering evil. Therefore, as there are two things to be paid to Magiſtrates, Tribute and Honour, ſo both are payable upon this account, becauſe they are the Miniſters of God for good, and many benefits redound to mankind by them, and thoſe ſo great, that ſome have concluded, Tyranny better or more beneficial then Anarchy; 'tis not only an inconvenience, but a ruine to be without government. When every one doth what is good in his own eyes (Judg. 17.6.) then there is very little good done; yea much evil is done in the eyes both of God and righteous men. And it is obſervable, both when it was ſaid ſo, and upon what occaſion it is ſo often ſaid in that book of Judges; as to the firſt, the time when it was ſaid, every man did that which was right in his own eyes, was when there was no King in Iſrael; that is, no Judge nor ſupream Magiſtrate; in which latitude, not ſtrictly (as the word King is taken (Gen. 36. 31. Deut. 33. 5.) ſo) it muſt be taken in all the places where 'tis uſed in the Book of Judges; becauſe the people of Iſrael never had a King among them to that day, nor till the days of Saul; ſo that when he ſaith, In thoſe days there was no King in Iſrael, his meaning muſt be this, that in thoſe days they had no ſetled Judge among them, ſuch as Moſes, Joſhua, &c. were before, and Samuel was after thoſe days, to keep to order and obſervance of the Law, and to puniſh the non-obſervers of it. Thus we ſee when it was ſaid, that every man did what was right in his own eyes, it was when there was no Judge in the Land. Now, Secondly, if we take notice upon what occaſion that ſaying is ſo often repeated, that will ſhew us (as in a glaſs) the ſad complexion and black deformed face of thoſe times. The firſt occaſion upon which the Spirit of God breaks out into theſe words, we have at the 5. verſe of this 17. Chapter; And the man Micah had an Houſe of Gods, and made an Ephod and Teraphim, and conſecrated one of his Sons, who became his Prieſt. Thus in the ſtate of Anarchy, when no man had no other guide to lead him, but his own blind and corrupt nature, which runs headlong to all enormities, this man ſet up his deteſtable Idolatry; and ſo thoſe words, Every man did what was right in his own eyes, are brought to ſhew, that Micahs worſhip was ſtark naught, and that, if there had been in thoſe days a Judge in Iſrael, he would or ought to have reſtrained him from that groſs ſuperſtition and impiety, in which he then went on without check or controul. Again, we find theſe words (Chap. 18. v. 1.) and there they are prefixed as a reaſon why the Danites were forced to provide an inheritance for themſelves, whereas, while that people had a Judge among them, the Tribes were ordered to aſſiſt one another in deſtroying the Canaanites, and getting the poſſeſſion of that inheritance which was deſigned them by lot upon the firſt diviſion of the Land, as we read (Numb. 32. 21. Judg. 1. 3.) but now being deſtitute of a ſupream Magiſtrate, they lookt only to themſelves, and would not give one another this brotherly aſſiſtance. Thirdly, we find thoſe words again (Chap. 19. 1.) And there they intimate, that the reaſon, why the Levites wife committed whoredom, dom, and the men of Gibeah ſuch abominable leudneſs (as the following hiſtory ſets forth at large) was becauſe there was no Magiſtrate to direct them in their duty, nor to correct their departures from it; and when the ſacred Hiſtorian, had declared that bloody War, and the great calamities which came upon that people as the fruit and conſequent of that wickedneſs in Gibeah, he ſhuts up the book with the recital of the ſame words (Chap. 21. 25.) In thoſe days there was no King in Iſrael, every man did that which was right in his own eyes. As if he had ſaid, I can refer all theſe miſchiefs and confuſions, to no other head but this, the want of a head to govern Iſrael. And to conclude this point, the Prophet deſcribes the like woful condition of a people, when the ſtay and ſtaff, or (as Job ſpeaks here) the cord and bridle of government is broken (Iſa. 3. 5.) And the people ſhall be oppreſſed, every one by another, and every one by his neighbour; the Child ſhall behave himſelf proudly againſt the ancient, and the baſe againſt the honourable. Here you ſee plainly, what comes on't when the cord is looſed, and the bridle thrown up, then the Child behaves himſelf proudly againſt the Ancient, and the baſe againſt the honourable; They are in a very forlorn condition, who have Children for their Princes, and Babes to rule over them, as the ſame Prophet ſpeaks at the 4. verſe of that Chapter; that is, whoſe Princes and Rulers are like Babes or Children in either of theſe two reſpects; firſt, as having no more underſtanding then Children; ſecondly, as having no more power then Children; that is, having very little of either: Yet 'tis more eligible to have a Prince who is but a Child, and a Ruler like a Babe, then to be quite bereft of Princes and Rulers. For then the Child will behave himſelf proudly againſt the Ancient, and the people will ſoon be oppreſſed every one by his Neighbour. Which is one of the ſevereſt curſes that God can threaten a people with, in reſpect of outward things; they who are not governed by Laws, ſhall be oppreſſed by one anothers luſts, and whereas they complained of oppreſſion by thoſe that were in power, they ſhall find themſelves oppreſſed ten times more by thoſe that have no power (except force) but ſtand in a level with themſelves.

Thirdly, Whereas Job aſcribes the looſing of his cord to God;

> Obſerve, It is of God that Magiſtrates retain or loſe the reverence that is due unto them from the people.

Quamdiu favet alicui deus, occulta quadam vi homines in officio cõtinet. Merl.

God looſeth their cord in diſpleaſure, and he knits and holds it faſt (as long as he pleaſeth) in mercy. The favour of God is the tye of all true affection and reſpect between man and man. He hath the love and the hatred, the good will and the ill-will of men at his diſpoſe; he commands fear, and it removes at his command. He can cauſe the terror of his people to fall upon fierce and ſtrong Nations, ſo that they ſhall not riſe up againſt them. His terror reſtrains their wrath and rage as with a bridle. When Jacob and his ſmall Companies marched through the Enemies Country, after they had provoked them greatly by the ſlaughter of the Shechemites, whom Simeon and Levi ſlew for defiling their ſiſter Dinah, it is ſaid (Gen. 35. 5.) The terror of God was upon the Cities that were round about them, and they did not purſue after the Sons of Jacob. Thus God promiſed his people (Deut. 2. 25.) This day will I begin to put the dread of thee, and the fear of thee upon the Nations, that are under the whole Heaven, who ſhall hear report of thee, and ſhall tremble and be in anguiſh becauſe of thee. See what an influence God hath upon the Spirits of men; he can put the fear and dread of his people upon all the people under the whole Heavens, he can make thoſe who are more and greater, to dread the fewer and the leſs. This was performed alſo to David (1 Chron. 14. 17.) The fame of David went out into all lands, and the Lord brought the fear of him upon all Nations. Now the Lord who is able to cauſe the fear of his people, or the fear of a perſon highly honoured by him to take hold of Nations, which are not under their power; ſurely he is able to make the fear and reverence that is due to a Magiſtrate, to take hold of all the people that are under him. And if God once looſed his cord, they fear him no more, they will ſoon either contemn him, or riſe up and rebel againſt him. There is a ſecret power of God which ſtrengthens or weakens the cord of duty to Magiſtracy. Some Magiſtrates live in much outward pomp and ſplendour, who yet have not the hearts of the people; and others who are but mean in appearance, are yet much loved and highly eſteemed, this is a plain demonſtration that the thing is of God. We have two great inſtances of this, one in Solomon, another in Rehoboam; Solomon was a mighty King in his time, and his reſpect among the people was very great, all Nations did him honour, his Subjects honoured him much more; yet when Solomon provoked God by marrying ſtrange Wives, and building Idol-Temples, God looſed the cord of his authority, and the people looſed the bridle before him. The Lord ſtirred up ſeveral adverſaries unto Solomon from abroad (1 Kings 11. 14, 23.) and at the 26. verſe, Jeroboam who was not only his Subject, but his Servant, even he lift up his hand againſt the King. Solomon was not only a powerful King, but a King of peace, yet War brake in upon him, not only from abroad by ſtrangers, but from him who lived in the bowels of his own dominion. The ſpring of all this trouble was meritoriouſly from his own ſin, and efficiently from the juſt diſpleaſure of God, both which are expreſſed in two verſes (1 Kings 11. 9, 10.) And the Lord was angry with Solomon, becauſe his heart was turned from the Lord God of Iſrael, who had appeared unto him twice. When the gracious appearances of God are either forgotten or ill requited, we muſt look for angry appearances. If Princes turn from God after he appears to them in love, he will ſuffer men to turn from and appear againſt them in diſloyalty. This doom Solomon heard in the next words; Wherefore the Lord ſaid unto Solomon, foraſmuch as this is done of thee, and thou haſt not kept my covenant and my Statutes which I commanded thee; I will ſurely rend the kingdom from thee, and will give it unto thy ſervant. Thus Solomons cord was looſed, and his Servant looſed the bridle before him.

As for his Son and Succeſſour Rehoboam, God looſed his cord while he, following the counſel of the young men, reſolved to ſtraiten theirs; attempting to make them Slaves, he loſt them as Subjects, and they threw up the bridle profeſſedly and daringly before his face (1 Kings 12. 16.) So when all Iſrael ſaw that the King hearkned not unto them, the people anſwered the King, ſaying, What portion have we in David? Neither have we Inheritance in the Son of Jeſſe: To your tents, O Iſrael: Now ſee to thine own Houſe, David: ſo Iſrael departed unto their Tents. If ever any people, ſurely theſe looſed the bridle before their Princes face. And all this was of God, in judgment, for the great ſins wherewith Solomon had provoked him.

There is a Spirit of pride and diſobedience in man ready to throw off the bridle of Chriſts government, who is ſet as King by the mighty hand of God, upon the holy hill of Sion (Pſal. 2. 1, 2.) Why do the Heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? The Kings of the Earth ſet themſelves, and the Rulers take counſel together, againſt the Lord, and againſt his anointed, ſaying, Let us break their bands aſunder and caſt away their cords from us. Thus the unruly ſons of men, both Princes and People would quite lay aſide Chriſt, and break all the bands and cords by which he reſtrains and governs them. How much more when God looſeth the cord of Earthly Princes, will their people let looſe the bridle, and break all bands? Nothing ſhall hold them. It is not, Firſt, the power and ſoveraignty, nor ſecondly, , the wiſdom and policy of Princes, nor thirdly, their riches, nor fourthly, their friends and alliances that can keep up the peoples reverence and reſpect to them, if once God withdraw from them. Some Princes have hoped and projected to hold their Subjects under by power, and policy, by Armies at home and confederacies abroad, yet could not do it; all theſe cords have been broken (as Sampſon brake the withs and ropes with which the Philiſtines bound him) as a thread of tow is broken when it toucheth (or ſmelleth) the fire. How is it imaginable that ſo many Hundred-Thouſands of men ſhould ſubmit themſelves to the power of one, or of a few men, unleſs God were in it? Therefore, to ſhut up this point, I ſhall only add theſe two words of counſel to Magiſtrates.

First, Be thankful when your cord is not looſed, nor the bridle let looſe before you, acknowledge God in it; as David confeſſed that it was God who avenged him, and ſubdued the people (the enemy-people) under him (Pſal. 18. 47.) ſo he ſaith as much of his native Subjects (Pſal. 144. 2.) He ſubdueth my people under me.

Secondly, As you are adviſed (Pſal. 2. 10, 11, 12.) Be wiſe O ye Kings, be inſtructed ye Judges of the Earth: Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoyce with trembling: Kiſs the S n leſt he be angry, and ye periſh from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little: Bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in him. Fear God, that you may be feared in the hearts of your people, ſerve him, that they may ſerve you; and kiſs the Son leſt he be angry, that is, ſubmit to Jeſus Chriſt who is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, whoſe, the Kingdom is, and who is the governour among the Nations. Give him, firſt, the kiſs of love, and ſecondly, the kiſs of divine homage, as you deſire and expect your Subjects ſhould give you the kiſs of loyalty and of a civil homage. If the wrath of Chriſt be kindled againſt Princes, who knows how ſoon or how much the wrath of men may be kindled againſt them alſo; if God let looſe the cord, they will let looſe the bridle, before the faces of the greateſt potentates in the World.

Fourthly, Obſerve, more Generally, When once God hath withdrawn from a man in any kind, he lies open to all manner of affronts, troubles, and injuries from the Creature.

Quia deus mihi contrarius eſt, ideo omnia mihi contraria ſunt. Brent.

If God be againſt us, all things will be againſt us, whole ſwarms and Armies of ſorrows and miſchiefs will ruſh in upon us like unbridled Horſes. No evil could touch Job, while God maintain'd a hedg about him, but as ſoon as God (for his tryal) had broken a gap in that, all evil brake in upon him; how much more will evil break in upon them, whoſe hedge God breaks (that is, withdraws his protection) in anger? The Apoſtle gives believers an excellent ground of comfort, If God be for us, who can be againſt us? (Rom. 8. 31.) And ſurely, If God be againſt us, who can be for us? If God be againſt us, all things will be againſt us, even thoſe things will prove againſt us in the iſſue which we are moſt confident of, that they will be for us. The Lord tells Eli by a Meſſenger of his own, a man of God (1 Sam. 2. 30.) Them that honour me, I will honour; that is, I will honour them my ſelf, and cauſe others to honour them; (God gives honour to the Creature by the Creature) But he that deſpiſeth me ſhall be lightly eſteemed; that is, I will eſteem him lightly my ſelf, and cauſe others to eſteem him lightly too. If God eſteem a man lightly, he ſhall not continue long in any mans eſtimation. What good ſoever we hold, we hold it by holding in with God. Let us take heed of provoking him to looſe our cord, for then every bridle will be let looſe before us. He hath looſed my cord,

And afflicted me.] I have ſpoken often of affliction, and ſhall not add any thing about it here, but in connection with the words which go before and follow.

Hence Note, Firſt, To loſe reſpect and reverence among men, eſpecially for a Magiſtrate to loſe it, is a great affliction.

'Tis an affliction to Parents and Maſters to loſe their reverence and reſpect among their Children and Servants; and 'tis ſo to a Magiſtrate when he loſeth due reſpect among his Subjects. Honour thy father, and thy mother (whether natural or civil) is the firſt commandement with promiſe; as they ſin much who refuſe to give this honour, and ſo loſe the benefit of the promiſe; ſo they ſuffer much who are refuſed this honour, and loſe the priviledge of their relation.

Again, Conſider the affliction in reference to the iſſue He hath afflicted me, and they have let looſe the bridle before me.

Hence Note, They that are afflicted are uſually deſpiſed.

A good man is too apt to abate his value of thoſe whom he ſees afflicted; but wicked men (ſuch as Job here deſcribes) cannot do otherwiſe, they are ready to reproach and vilifie the afflicted. Such judge the worth of men only by what they are worth; nor know they for what to honour them, but for their outward honour, their goodly garb and greatneſs in the World; the purple and fine linnen, the gay cloaths; and the gold ring ſet perſons higher in their eſtimate, then all the graces of the Spirit; and where the former are not ſeen, the latter are not at all eſteemed. Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, becauſe afflicted and humbled (though he had received the Spirit above meaſure, and was the faireſt of ten Thouſand, yet) was deſpiſed and rejected of men (Iſa. 53. 1, 2, 3.) And 'tis a popular errour, that if a man be afflicted, he is deſpiſed and rejected even of God too.

Laſtly, Whereas Job riſeth up to the conſideration of God under this diſgrace which he found among men, He hath looſed my cord.

Note, A godly man looks beyond man to God in all the evils and wrongs that he receives from men.

When Job ſaw his deriders looſing the bridle, he concluded preſently that God had looſed his cord; as in all the benefits and comforts received from men, a godly man looks beyond man, and ſaith, ſurely God hath put my caſe into this mans heart, and therefore, he hath ſhewed me kindneſs, and been a comfort to me. Thus ſpake Paul, God that comforteth thoſe that are caſt down, comforted us by the coming of Titus (2 Cor. 7. 6.) He did not ſay we were comforted by the coming of Titus, but God hath comforted us by the coming of Titus. It is God who comforteth us by ſuch a man, and 'tis God who afflicteth us by ſuch a man. It ſhews a holy frame when we ſtay not in Creatures, but are carried to God as the Author both of our comforts and croſſes. When Shimei curſed David, his Servants ſtirred him up to revenge: No, ſaith he, What have I to do with you ye Sons of Zeruiah? ſo let him curſe, becauſe the Lord hath ſaid unto him, curſe David. But where or how did the Lord ſay that to Shimei? Had Shimei any rule in the word or warrant from God to ſay ſo? Surely no; the Law of God expreſly forbad him to ſay ſo (Exod. 22. 28.) Thou ſhalt not revile the Gods, nor curſe the Ruler of thy people. The Lord ſaid ſo, only in his providence, which gave Shimei an opportunity to ſay ſo, for the tryal of David, as alſo a colour to think David was ſuch a man as he had ſaid. Thus the Lord bid Shimei curſe David; and David ſubmitted ſo fully to this diſpenſation of God in giving him correction by Shimei's curſing tongue, that he adds, Who ſhall then ſay, wherefore haſt thou done ſo? (2 Sam. 16. 10.) As if he had ſaid in Job's language, God hath looſed my cord, and this man looſeth the bridle of his tongue upon me, and therefore who ſhall ſay, Why haſt thou done ſo? Not but that Shimei ſinned in that he did ſo, yea and deſerved to dye for it, as afterwards he did by the command of Solomon, and David's advice given him upon his death-bed. But at that preſent he would have nothing either done or ſaid to him, leſt he ſhould ſeem (though he was deeply ſenſible of what Shimei had done) impatient under Gods hand, leaving him to the ſway of his own malice in doing it.

Before I paſs from this Text, I ſhall only mention the tranſlation of the Septuagint and vulgar Latin, who render it thus; For he hath opened his Quiver againſt me, and afflicted me, and put a bridle into my mouth. As if (according to the ſence of this verſion) Job had ſaid; God hath ſhot his arrows thick upon me, and made me, as it were, his But or mark to be continually aimed at; or as if I were ſome fierce and unruly Horſe, he hath put a bridle into my mouth to curb and keep me quiet. But this is rather an addition to, then a tranſlation of the Scripture. And though God did open his Quiver upon Job, and put a bridle into his mouth, yet that truth is quite beſides, not only the letter but the ſcope of this place.

Pharetram enim ſuam aperuit & afflixit me, & frænum poſuit in os meum. Vulg. ἀνοίξας φαρέτραν. &c. Sept.

Verſe 12. Upon my right hand riſe the youth, they puſh away my feet, and they raiſe up againſt me the wayes of their deſtruction.

In this verſe, and the three that follow, Job deſcribes more particularly how he was uſed; God having looſed his cord, and men having let looſe the bridle before him.

Firſt, At my right hand riſe up the youth. Why, ſaith he, dom, and the men of Gibeah ſuch abominable leudneſs (as the following hiſtory ſets forth at large) was becauſe there was no Magiſtrate to direct them in their duty, nor to correct their departures from it; and when the ſacred Hiſtorian, had declared that bloody War, and the great calamities which came upon that people as the fruit and conſequent of that wickedneſs in Gibeah, he ſhuts up the book with the recital of the ſame words (Chap. 21.25.) In thoſe days there was no King in Iſrael, every man did that which was right in his own eyes. As if he had ſaid, I can refer all theſe miſchiefs and confuſions, to no other head but this, the want of a head to govern Iſrael. And to conclude this point, the Prophet deſcribes the like woful condition of a people, when the ſtay and ſtaff, or (as Job ſpeaks here) the cord and bridle of government is broken (Iſa. 3. 5.) And the people ſhall be oppreſſed, every one by another, and every one by his neighbour; the Child ſhall behave himſelf proudly againſt the ancient, and the baſe againſt the honourable. Here you ſee plainly, what comes on't when the cord is looſed, and the bridle thrown up, then the Child behaves himſelf proudly againſt the Ancient, and the baſe againſt the honourable; They are in a very forlorn condition, who have Children for their Princes, and Babes to rule over them, as the ſame Prophet ſpeaks at the 4. verſe of that Chapter; that is, whoſe Princes and Rulers are like Babes or Children in either of theſe two reſpects; firſt, as having no more underſtanding then Children; ſecondly, as having no more power then Children; that is, having very little of either: Yet 'tis more eligible to have a Prince who is but a Child, and a Ruler like a Babe, then to be quite bereft of Princes and Rulers. For then the Child will behave himſelf proudly againſt the Ancient, and the people will ſoon be oppreſſed every one by his Neighbour. Which is one of the ſevereſt curſes that God can threaten a people with, in reſpect of outward things; they who are not governed by Laws, ſhall be oppreſſed by one anothers luſts, and whereas they complained of oppreſſion by thoſe that were in power, they ſhall find themſelves oppreſſed ten times more by thoſe that have no power (except force) but ſtand in a level with themſelves.

Thirdly, Whereas Job aſcribes the looſing of his cord to God;

Obſerve, It is of God that Magiſtrates retain or loſe the reverence that is due unto them from the people.

God looſeth their cord in diſpleaſure, and he knits and holds it faſt (as long as he pleaſeth) in mercy. The favour of God is the tye of all true affection and reſpect between man and man. He hath the love and the hatred, the good will and the ill-will of men at his diſpoſe; he commands fear, and it removes at his command. He can cauſe the terror of his people to fall upon fierce and ſtrong Nations, ſo that they ſhall not riſe up againſt them. His terror reſtrains their wrath and rage as with a bridle. When Jacob and his ſmall Companies marched through the Enemies Country, after they had provoked them greatly by the ſlaughter of the Shechemites, whom Simeon and Levi ſlew for defiling their ſiſter Dinah, it is ſaid (Gen. 35. 5.) The terror of God was upon the Cities that were round about them, and they did not purſue after the Sons of Jacob. Thus God promiſed his people (Deut. 2. 25.) This day will I begin to put the dread of thee, and the fear of thee upon the Nations, that are under the whole Heaven, who ſhall hear report of thee, and ſhall tremble and be in anguiſh becauſe of thee. See what an influence God hath upon the Spirits of men; he can put the fear and dread of his people upon all the people under the whole Heavens, he can make thoſe who are more and greater, to dread the fewer and the leſs. This was performed alſo to David (1 Chron. 14 17.) The fame of David went out into all lands, and the Lord brought the fear of him upon all Nations. Now the Lord who is able to cauſe the fear of his people, or the fear of a perſon highly honoured by him to take hold of Nations, which are not under their power; ſurely he is able to make the fear and reverence that is due to a Magiſtrate, to take hold of all the people that are under him. And if God once looſed his cord, they fear him no more, they will ſoon either contemn him, or riſe up and rebel againſt him. There is a ſecret power of God which ſtrengthens or weakens the cord of duty to Magiſtracy. Some Magiſtrates live in much outward pomp and ſplendour, who yet have not the hearts of the people; and others who are but mean in appearance, are yet much loved and highly eſteemed, this is a plain demonſtration that the thing is of God. We have two great inſtances of this, one in Solomon, another in Rehoboam; Solomon was a mighty King in his time, and his reſpect among the people was very great, all Nations did him honour, his Subjects honoured him much more; yet when Solomon provoked God by marrying ſtrange Wives, and building Idol-Temples, God looſed the cord of his authority, and the people looſed the bridle before him. The Lord ſtirred up ſeveral adverſaries unto Solomon from abroad (1 Kings 11. 14, 23.) and at the 26. verſe, Jeroboam who was not only his Subject, but his Servant, even he lift up his hand againſt the King. Solomon was not only a powerful King, but a King of peace, yet War brake in upon him, not only from abroad by ſtrangers, but from him who lived in the bowels of his own dominion. The ſpring of all this trouble was meritoriouſly from his own ſin, and efficiently from the juſt diſpleaſure of God, both which are expreſſed in two verſes (1 Kings 11. 9, 10.) And the Lord was angry with Solomon, becauſe his heart was turned from the Lord God of Iſrael, who had appeared unto him twice. When the gracious appearances of God are either forgotten or ill requited, we muſt look for angry appearances. If Princes turn from God after he appears to them in love, he will ſuffer men to turn from and appear againſt them in diſloyalty. This doom Solomon heard in the next words; Wherefore the Lord ſaid unto Solomon, foraſmuch as this is done of thee, and thou haſt not kept my covenant and my Statutes which I commanded thee; I will ſurely rend the kingdom from thee, and will give it unto thy ſervant. Thus Solomons cord was looſed, and his Servant looſed the bridle before him.

As for his Son and Succeſſour Rehoboam, God looſed his cord while he, following the counſel of the young men, reſolved to ſtraiten theirs; attempting to make them Slaves, he loſt them as Subjects, and they threw up the bridle profeſſedly and daringly before his face (1 Kings 12. 16.) So when all Iſrael ſaw that the King hearkned not unto them, the people anſwered the King, ſaying, What portion have we in David? Neither have we Inheritance in the Son of Jeſſe: To your tents, O Iſrael: Now ſee to thine own Houſe, David: ſo Iſrael departed unto their Tents. If ever any people, ſurely theſe looſed the bridle before their Princes face. And all this was of God, in judgment, for the great ſins wherewith Solomon had provoked him.

There is a Spirit of pride and diſobedience in man ready to throw off the bridle of Chriſts government, who is ſet as King by the mighty hand of God, upon the holy hill of Sion (Pſal. 2. 1, 2.) Why do the Heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? The Kings of the Earth ſet themſelves, and the Rulers take counſel together, againſt the Lord, and againſt his anointed, ſaying, Let us break their bands aſunder and caſt away their cords from us. Thus the unruly ſons of men, both Princes and People would quite lay aſide Chriſt, and break all the bands and cords by which he reſtrains and governs them. How much more when God looſeth the cord of Earthly Princes, will their people let looſe the bridle, and break all bands? Nothing ſhall hold them. It is not, Firſt, the power and ſoveraignty, nor ſecondly, , the wiſdom and policy of Princes, nor thirdly, their riches, nor fourthly, their friends and alliances that can keep up the peoples reverence and reſpect to them, if once God withdraw from them. Some Princes have hoped and projected to hold their Subjects under by power, and policy, by Armies at home and confederacies abroad, yet could not do it; all theſe cords have been broken (as Sampſon brake the withs and ropes with which the Philiſtines bound him) as a thread of tow is broken when it toucheth (or ſmelleth) the fire. How is it imaginable that ſo many Hundred-Thouſands of men ſhould ſubmit themſelves to the power of one, or of a few men, unleſs God were in it? Therefore, to ſhut up this point, I ſhall only add theſe two words of counſel to Magiſtrates.

First, Be thankful when your cord is not looſed, nor the the bridle let looſe before you, acknowledge God in it; as David confeſſed that it was God who avenged him, and ſubdued the people (the enemy-people) under him (Pſal. 18. 47.) ſo he ſaith as much of his native Subjects (Pſal. 144. 2.) He ſubdueth my people under me.

Secondly, As you are adviſed (Pſal. 2. 10, 11, 12.) Be wiſe O ye Kings, be inſtructed ye Judges of the Earth: Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoyce with trembling: Kiſs the Son leſt he be angry, and ye periſh from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little: Bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in him. Fear God, that you may be feared in the hearts of your people, ſerve him, that they may ſerve you; and kiſs the Son leſt he be angry, that is, ſubmit to Jeſus Chriſt who is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, whoſe, the Kingdom is, and who is the governour among the Nations. Give him, firſt, the kiſs of love, and ſecondly, the kiſs of divine homage, as you deſire and expect your Subjects ſhould give you the kiſs of loyalty and of a civil homage. If the wrath of Chriſt be kindled againſt Princes, who knows how ſoon or how much the wrath of men may be kindled againſt them alſo; if God let looſe the cord, they will let looſe the bridle, before the faces of the greateſt potentates in the World.

Fourthly, Obſerve, more Generally, When once God hath withdrawn from a man in any kind, he lies open to all manner of affronts, troubles, and injuries from the Creature.

Quia deus mihi contrarius eſt, ideo omnia mihi contraria ſunt. Brent.

If God be againſt us, all things will be againſt us, whole ſwarms and Armies of ſorrows and miſchiefs will ruſh in upon us like unbridled Horſes. No evil could touch Job, while God maintain'd a hedg about him, but as ſoon as God (for his tryal) had broken a gap in that, all evil brake in upon him; how much more will evil break in upon them, whoſe hedge God breaks (that is, withdraws his protection) in anger? The Apoſtle gives believers an excellent ground of comfort, If God be for us, who can be againſt us? (Rom. 8. 31.) And ſurely, If God be againſt us, who can be for us? If God be againſt us, all things will be againſt us, even thoſe things will prove againſt us in the iſſue which we are moſt confident of, that they will be for us. The Lord tells Eli by a Meſſenger of his own, a man of God (1 Sam. 2. 30.) Them that honour me, I will honour; that is, I will honour them my ſelf, and cauſe others to honour them; (God gives honour to the Creature by the Creature) But he that deſpiſeth me ſhall be lightly eſteemed; that is, I will eſteem him lightly my ſelf, and cauſe others to eſteem him lightly too. If God eſteem a man lightly, he ſhall not continue long in any mans eſtimation. What good ſoever we hold, we hold it by holding in with God. Let us take heed of provoking him to looſe our cord, for then every bridle will be let looſe before us. He hath looſed my cord,

And afflicted me.] I have ſpoken often of affliction, and ſhall not add any thing about it here, but in connection with the words which go before and follow.

Hence Note, Firſt, To loſe reſpect and reverence among men, eſpecially for a Magiſtrate to loſe it, is a great affliction.

'Tis an affliction to Parents and Maſters to loſe their reverence and reſpect among their Children and Servants; and 'tis ſo to a Magiſtrate when he loſeth due reſpect among his Subjects. Honour thy father, and thy mother (whether natural or civil) is the firſt commandement with promiſe; as they ſin much who refuſe to give this honour, and ſo loſe the benefit of the promiſe; ſo they ſuffer much who are refuſed this honour, and loſe the priviledge of their relation.

Again, Conſider the affliction in reference to the iſſue He hath afflicted me, and they have let looſe the bridle before me.

Hence Note, They that are afflicted are uſually deſpiſed.

A good man is too apt to abate his value of thoſe whom he ſees afflicted; but wicked men (ſuch as Job here deſcribes) cannot do otherwiſe, they are ready to reproach and vilifie the afflicted. Such judge the worth of men only by what they are worth; nor know they for what to honour them, but for their outward honour, their goodly garb and greatneſs in the World; the purple and fine linnen, the gay cloaths; and the gold ring ſet perſons higher in their eſtimate, then all the graces of the Spirit; and where the former are not ſeen, the latter are not at all eſteemed. Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, becauſe afflicted and humbled (though he had received the Spirit above meaſure, and was the faireſt of ten Thouſand, yet) was deſpiſed and rejected of men (Iſa. 53. 1, 2, 3.) And 'tis a popular errour, that if a man be afflicted, he is deſpiſed and rejected even of God too.

Laſtly, Whereas Job riſeth up to the conſideration of God under this diſgrace which he found among men, He hath looſed my cord.

Note, A godly man looks beyond man to God in all the evils and wrongs that he receives from men.

When Job ſaw his deriders looſing the bridle, he concluded preſently that God had looſed his cord; as in all the benefits and comforts received from men, a godly man looks beyond man, and ſaith, ſurely God hath put my caſe into this mans heart, and therefore, he hath ſhewed me kindneſs, and been a comfort to me. Thus ſpake Paul, God that comforteth thoſe that are caſt down, comforted us by the coming of Titus (2 Cor. 7. 6.) He did not ſay we were comforted by the coming of Titus, but God hath comforted us by the coming of Titus. It is God who comforteth us by ſuch a man, and 'tis God who afflicteth us by ſuch a man. It ſhews a holy frame when we ſtay not in Creatures, but are carried to God as the Author both of our comforts and croſſes. When Shimei curſed David, his Servants ſtirred him up to revenge: No, ſaith he, What have I to do with you ye Sons of Zeruiah? ſo let him curſe, becauſe the Lord hath ſaid unto him, curſe David. But where or how did the Lord ſay that to Shimei? Had Shimei any rule in the word or warrant from God to ſay ſo? Surely no; the Law of God expreſly forbad him to ſay ſo (Exod. 22. 28.) Thou ſhalt not revile the Gods, nor curſe the Ruler of thy people. The Lord ſaid ſo, only in his providence, which gave Shimei an opportunity to ſay ſo, for the tryal of David, as alſo a colour to think David was ſuch a man as he had ſaid. Thus the Lord bid Shimei curſe David; and David ſubmitted ſo fully to this diſpenſation of God in giving him correction by Shimei's curſing tongue, that he adds, Who ſhall then ſay, wherefore haſt thou done ſo? (2 Sam. 16. 10.) As if he had ſaid in Job's language, God hath looſed my cord, and this man looſeth the bridle of his tongue upon me, and therefore who ſhall ſay, Why haſt thou done ſo? Not but that Shimei ſinned in that he did ſo, yea and deſerved to dye for it, as afterwards he did by the command of Solomon, and David's advice given him upon his death-bed. But at that preſent he would have nothing either done or ſaid to him, leſt he ſhould ſeem (though he was deeply ſenſible of what Shimei had done) impatient under Gods hand, leaving him to the ſway of his own malice in doing it.

Before I paſs from this Text, I ſhall only mention the tranſlation of the Septuagint and vulgar Latin, who render it thus; For he hath opened his Quiver againſt me, and afflicted me, and put a bridle into my mouth. As if (according to the ſence of this verſion) Job had ſaid; God hath ſhot his arrows thick upon me, and made me, as it were, his But or mark to be continually aimed at; or as if I were ſome fierce and unruly Horſe, he hath put a bridle into my mouth to curb and keep me quiet. But this is rather an addition to, then a tranſlation of the Scripture. And though God did open his Quiver upon Job, and put a bridle into his mouth, yet that truth is quite beſides, not only the letter but the ſcope of this place.

Pharetram enim ſuam aperuit & afflixit me, & frænum poſuit in os meum. Vulg. ἀνοίξας φαρέτραν. &c. Sept.

Verſe 12. Upon my right hand riſe the youth, they puſh away my feet, and they raiſe up againſt me the wayes of their deſtruction.

In this verſe, and the three that follow, Job deſcribes more particularly how he was uſed; God having looſed his cord, and men having let looſe the bridle before him.

Firſt, At my right hand riſe up the youth. Why, ſaith he, at my right hand? There may be a threefold ſignification of this riſing at the right hand.

Firſt, The right hand ſignifies ſuperiority of place; to be on the right hand of a man, is to be on his upper hand. When Bathſheba Solomons mother came into his preſence, he called for a Chair and ſet her at his right hand (1 Kings 2. 19.) And at the great day of Judgment, when all mankind ſhall ſtand before God, the Sheep are ſaid to ſtand at his right hand, and the Goats at his left (Matth. 25. 33.) So that (according to this ſence of the word) when the youth roſe up at Job's right hand, it is as much as to ſay, they took the upper hand of him, or they took the wall of him, as if they had been his betters. To ſee a youth take the wall or upper hand of an old man, eſpecially of a man in Authority, how uncivil, how unſeemly is it! How great an affront is it!

Ipſo locutionis uſu pro dextro habere dicimus, quod pao magnopenſamus; pro ſiniſtro vero id quod deſpicimus. Greg. 2. Moral. ca. 20.

Secondly, The right hand ſignifies ſtrength; They riſe up at my right hand, or (as others render) againſt my right hand, that is, where I have my ſtrength and power; they oppoſe me, even in that little that is left. Thus to riſe at the right hand, is to riſe as an enemy to invade. And hence one of the curſes pronounced in that Prophetical Pſalm (109. 6.) againſt Judas is, Let Satan ſtand at his right hand. We read of Satan in the ſame poſture (Zach. 3. 1.) And he ſhewed me Joſhua the high Prieſt ſtanding before the Angel of the Lord, and Satan ſtanding at his right hand to reſiſt him. At his right hand, that is, his weapon hand as well as his working hand. Satan was at hand as an accuſer, and he was at the right hand as an oppoſer.

Satan ſtabat à dextris; nempe eum locum occupans, qui non ſolù accuſatoris erat ſed etiam ejus, qui de accuſato certiſſimam victoriam præſumebat relaturam. Bold.

Thirdly, To riſe at the right hand, may be taken only to note the nearneſs of thoſe perſons to Job, in place, when they did abuſe him; they did it at his very elbow (as we ſay) or (as the Text ſaith) at his right hand. So the Scripture ſpeaks (Pſal. 110. 5.) The Lord at thy right hand (that is, the Lord who is very near thee, or preſent with thee) ſhall ſtrike through Kings in the day of his wrath. (Pſal. 121. 5.) The Lord is thy keeper: The Lord is thy ſhade upon thy right hand; that is, the Lord will be very nigh in a time of trouble to do thee good and keep thee from evil. When Job ſaith, At my right hand riſe up the youth. We may underſtand it in any of theſe ſences: They took the place of me; even youths behaved themſelves inſolently, as if they had been my mates or peers, yea my Maſters and Superiours, and not only ſo, but they oppoſed me as enemies, and came up cloſe to affront me. Thus at my right hand roſe up the youth.

There is a twofold riſing up; firſt, a riſing up in reſpect and reverence, and ſo it well becomes youth, yea the aged when their betters are in preſence, to riſe up. (Job 29. 8.) The young men ſaw me and hid themſelves: And the aged aroſe and ſtood up.

Secondly, There is a riſing up in contempt and rebellion, and that is commonly called a riſing. To riſe notes a ſuddain unexpected aſſault or attempt; ſuch was this doubtleſs upon Job; he once little expected ſuch uſage from youths, who was an awe upon the Aged.

Verbum ſurgendi inſultum denotat aliquando et hoſtilem impetum, quo hoſtis ex improviſo è latebris erumpitur. Bold.

Upon my right hand riſe the youth.

The noun is in the ſingular number, yet joyned with a verb of the plural, to note that every one of, or all the youth did it; the word ſignifies alſo a bloſſom, becauſe youth is the bloſſoming time of mans life; and ſo among the Hebrews the young Sons of the Prieſts were called, The bloſſoms of the Prieſts; and hence Mr. Broughton tranſlates, ſpringals; and another, wanton youths; and a third, little boys; laſtly, others make it a compound, of two nouns, the one ſignifying a flower, and the other a thiſtle; by which they would underſtand light vain men, who are like the flower of a thiſtle, or like thiſtle-down. We render clearly, Upon my right hand riſe the youth.

They puſh away my feet.

Thus he deſcribes the carriage of thoſe ruder youths; they riſe up, what to do? Was it for reverence? No, They puſh away my feet; we may conſider theſe words, either literally, and properly, and ſo we can hardly conceive, that the youths came directly (as we ſay) to trip up his heels, or to caſt him down; that were too groſs an interpretation. But as before ſpitting in his face, was expounded, not formally, but for the greateſt contempt: So here the puſhing away of his feet, implyes extream incivility, or any kind of ill behaviour of the younger ſort towards him, there's no need to take it properly.

And raiſe up againſt me the ways of their deſtruction.

Theſe are military words, alluding to the beſieging of a Caſtle, or City; the word ſignifies a way raiſed up, or a mount artificially caſt up and formed, upon which a battery is made againſt any ſtrong hold. In this ſence the word is uſed in that expoſtulatory chiding meſſage, which the Lord ſent to Pharaoh by his ſervant Moſes (Exod. 9. 17.) As yet exalteſt thou thy ſelf againſt my people, that thou wilt not let them go to ſerve me? That is, doſt thou raiſe up or put obſtructions in the way of my people to hinder them from goiug out of Egypt? And Job uſeth a like form of ſpeaking (Chap. 19. 12.) in alluſion to a ſiege, ſhewing how hardly he was dealt with. His troops come together, and raiſe up their way againſt me, and incamp round about my Tabernacle.

They raiſe up againſt me the ways or works of their deſtruction. That is, they deal as if they intended to deſtroy me, ſo it is rendred by a learned Tranſlater, They raiſe up againſt me deſtroying ways. Mr. Broughton renders thus; They caſt upon me the Cauſes of their woe; that is, they ſay all their miſeries were brought upon them by my means, and ſo they take their fill of revenge upon me. The general ſence of the verſe is as if he had ſaid; They tryed their utmoſt to afflict and vex me; which he expreſſeth under theſe metaphorical terms, of puſhing away his feet, and raiſing up againſt him the ways of their deſtruction.

From the conſideration of the perſons here ſpoken of by Job, the youth, even little ones, or Children did not forbear to do this (he complained at the 19. Chapter, in the ſame ſtrein (verſ. 18.) Yea young Children deſpiſed me, I aroſe and they ſpake againſt me.

Note, They that are ſo young that they are good for little, yet are ready enough to do much evil.

Youth who ſhould riſe up in reverence, are apt to riſe up in rebellion (2 Kings 2. 23.) we read of little Children that came out to mock the Prophet, they had no mind, poſſibly, no underſtanding to hearken to or reverence inſtruction from the Prophet, yet they could deride him. (Pſal. 58. 3.) The wicked are eſtranged from the womb, they go aſtray as ſoon as they be born, ſpeaking lies. How early do men ſin! How late do they repent! As ſoon as they are born they go aſtray, but if left to themſelves they will not return till they die, they will never return. Children can neither go nor ſpeak as ſoon as born, but as ſoon as born they can go aſtray and ſpeak lies; that is, their firſt ſpeaking is lying, and their firſt going is ſtraying; yea when they cannot go naturally, they can go aſtray morally or metaphorically; the firſt ſtep they are able to to take, is a ſtep out of the way. Auſtin ſaid of little Children, in reference to the univerſal bondage of mankind by nature; They cannot go, yet they are fetter'd; they are as much in the chains of ſin as in their ſwadling cloaths. Nature needs no School nor Tutor to learn evil and do amiſs. As ill weeds grow apace, ſo they need no culture, no care to make them grow, they grow alone; it was noted before that the word in the Original for a Child, ſignifieth a Bloſſom; They that are but bloſſoms themſelves, bear and bring forth much ſinful fruit.

Nondum ambulant ſed jam ſunt compediti. Auguſt.

Secondly, Note, As diſreſpect is grievous from any, ſo moſt from thoſe that ſhould be moſt reſpectful.

Youth, if any, ſhould reverence grave men. A young man takes it ill to be ill uſed by an aged man, what is it then for an aged man, to be abuſed by youths or Children!

Laſtly, Obſerve, Evil men are very apt to inſult over and oppreſs thoſe that are under the preſſure of outward evils.

This hath been elſe-where noted, and therefore, it may ſuffice to mention it here. The Proverb is, When the Oak is down, every one comes and gathers Wood. When a good man is upon the ground, every wretch takes pleaſure to trample upon him. But remember, an afflicted perſon is a ſacred thing, and ſhould not therefore be touched with prophane and filthy hands, take heed of touching thoſe with ſcorn, whom God hath touched with ſorrow. It is not ſo eaſie as it is ſinful to vex thoſe whom God hath wounded. Man never ſins with a higher hand againſt man, then in perſecuting thoſe who are laid low; And ſtill the lower the perſon is, the higher is the ſin of his perſecuters. As God is exalted moſt in his mercy by remembring us for good in our low eſtate, ſo the malice of man is in its greateſt exaltation, when he adds to their evils who are in a low eſtate. They were the vileſt men on earth, yea viler then the earth, who roſe up againſt Job in his low eſtate.

Miſer eſt res ſacra. In miſero facile peccatum, ſed magno malo

To conclude this verſe; It may be enquired, and that not unneceſſarily, nor unprofitably; What opportunity this vile people could have to offer ſuch affronts to Job, or to put him to ſo much ſuffering in this time of his ſufferings?

I anſwer; Firſt, Some think that Job doth in all this only prophecy of the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the Church, in and from the World.

Secondly, Others conceive that Job ſpake all this, only to ſhew that he was brought into ſuch a calamitous condition, by the hand of God, as might very well have expoſed or laid him open to all theſe fore-mentioned abuſes from the hands and tongues of men.

But though Job's ſufferings, as here expreſſed, may very well typifie thoſe of Chriſt and the Church, and were ſuch as might put him upon the fear of ſuch reproaches and abuſes, though he had never felt them; yet I doubt not but Job ſpeaks hiſtorically in this place, not prophetically, and what he indeed experienced in that caſe, as done to him, not meerly what in that caſe he might have expected to be done. For though in that brief narrative of the loſs of his eſtate and Children, as alſo of his bodily ſores, which is made in the two firſt Chapters of this Book, before his friends addreſs to and conference with him, there be no mention of theſe rude ſpeakings and actings of the vulgar againſt him; yet there might be time enough for all theſe afflictions to fall upon him, either before the diſpute began, or in the intervals of it (for we cannot conceive it done at once) or in both. And while we allay (as hath been done) ſome of the harſher expreſſions, with a mildneſs of interpretation, we need not fear to ſay, that Job who was to be tryed (as a pattern or exemplar of patience) to the utmoſt, endured all theſe tryals.

VERS. 13, 14.

They marr my path, they ſet forward my Calamity, they have no helper.

They came upon me as a wide breaking in of waters: In the deſolation they rolled themſelves upon me.

JOB ſtill proſecutes the ſame point and ſubject, not only the uncivil, but the cruel carriage of thoſe vile wretches towards him.

Verſ. 13. They marr my path.

The word is only uſed in this place all the Bible over: A path is marr'd when 'tis broken and made unfit to walk or go in; when a path becomes impaſſable, then 'tis marr'd.

They marr my path.] What path? The Word ſignifies a ſtreight path; ſtreight I mean, as ſtreight is oppoſed to broad, not as ſtreight is oppoſed to crooked, though both may be taken in here. Job, holy and upright Job, did not walk in the broad path, nor did he walk in crooked paths. They marr my path.

נתס rupit, diſrupit, deſtruxit. Hoc loco tantum habetur.

What then was his path? There is a three-fold underſtanding of this,

Firſt, Some conceive he means the path or way by which he hoped to eſcape and get out of theſe troubles. As if he had ſaid, They have obſtructed and ſtopt up all the wayes of my deliverance as much as in them lyeth. Some ſtick much upon this Expoſition: I cannot get out of my trouble, out of this ſore affliction, becauſe theſe men have cut off all ſuccours, and ſhut up all out-gates from this ſad condition; They are as a barr in my way, hindring the attainment of what I ſo much deſire and look for. A City that is beſieged by Enemies lying round about it, and encamping againſt it, may yet for a while have ſome way, ſome means left for relief to enter; but if the watchful Enemy once ſtop up all avenues, and ſhut them in perfectly, their caſe is deſperate. Thus Job ſpeaks (according to this Expoſition) as a man beſieged, when he ſaith, They marr my path; As if he had ſaid, I am ſorely diſtreſſed, all imaginable wayes either of deliverance from my troubles, or of comfort in them, are hidden from me; I am entangled with ſo many evils, that I cannot extricate my ſelf. And this is more grievous to me then all my ſufferings, that I have no remedy for my ſufferings.

Impedimento mihi ſunt, quo minus aſſequar quod cupio. Vatabl.

There is a truth in this ſence; yet I conceive Job is not upon it here, and we know, that, (as to appearances) he had given up all thoughts of his reſtoring to a preſent worldly proſperity long before, and ſeemed to expect no end of the troubles of his life, but by the ending of his life. Therefore ſurely he is not now complaining, that the path to his former enjoyments was ſpoil'd, and made not only difficult but impaſſable; nor that the Door of ſuch hopes was ſhut and lockt againſt him. And indeed Job was ſo far from feeding, or nouriſhing the hopes of a return to ſuch a condition, as his friends had often promiſed him in caſe of his repentance, that the utmoſt of his deſires was but for a little breathing before he yielded up his breath (Chap. 10. 20, 21.) Are not my dayes few? Ceaſe then and let me alone that I may take comfort a little, before I go whence I ſhall not return, even to the land of darkneſs and ſhadow of death. Therefore

Secondly, His path, and the marring of it, is rather to be underſtood of that holy Courſe of life which he had both taken and run in obedience to and purſuance of the commandments of God. The whole proceſs and progreſs of his works and undertakings, in a faithful diſcharge of all incumbent duties both towards God and towards man, was the path which his Enemies marr'd; yea his purpoſe and intendment for the time to come, as well as his practice for the time paſt, was the path which they marr'd. As if he had ſaid, My enemies oppoſe me in all that good which I have done or would do. They marr that moral and ſpiritual, that honeſt and righteous path which I have trodden, and intend ſtill to tread.

Semitam dicit vitæ rationem, quam hi plane deſtruxerunt et conturbarunt. Druſ. Omnes proceſſus operum meorum. Aquin. Quicquid vellem, quicquid pararem, diſſiparunt. Pined.

But it may be queſtion'd how did they marr it?

I anſwer; Firſt, By ſpeaking evil of the good which he had done; they caſt dirt upon his wayes, the dirt of odious and ſpiteful calumniations. His was a clean path, a holy and a juſt path, as he had often proteſted in his former Apologies, and will more in the next Chapter, yet his Friends judged that he had walked in very foul wayes. So that, when he complains, They marr my path. It is as if he had ſaid; They ſay I have been an Oppreſſor and injurious among men, that I have been a hypocrite, and a pretender only to zeal for God; thus they marr'd his path. We have heard Job often troubled and grieved, that; even thoſe grave men his Friends ſhould not only be ſuſpicious of, but uſe ſuch undue liberty of ſpeech in aſperſing his former wayes; and of that he complains here, as the work of thoſe vile perſons who derided him. Theſe men who never ſet foot in a good way themſelves, judged ill of all Job's wayes. They walked in bad wayes, and they concluded his were no better, yea worſe then theirs. They marr my path.

Hence Note; To ſpeak evil of the good wayes of others, is to marr and deſtroy their wayes.

Slander is therefore a great ſin, becauſe it ſpoils or defaceth a mans way, rendring it ſuch as it is not, and polluting what it is. That which is a way of light, ſlander makes a way of darkneſs; That which is a way of peace and love, ſlander makes a way of ſtrife and wrath; That which is a way of righteouſneſs, ſlander makes a way of Injuſtice and oppreſſion; That which is a way of charity and pity to the poor, ſlander and reproach make a way of hard-heartedneſs and cruelty. As Paul ſaid to Elymas the ſorcerer (Acts 13. 10.) O full of all ſubtlety and all malice, wilt thou not ceaſe to pervert the right wayes of the Lord? So we may ſay to many ſubtle and malicious ſlanderers, will ye not ceaſe to pervert the right wayes of men?

Secondly, Theſe words may reſpect the time to come; And ſo his meaning is, as they ſpeak evil of the good which I have done, and report me otherwiſe then I have been; either through ignorance not knowing, or through malice not willing to know what I have done or been; So they hinder me in the good which I would do; I would do good and better, I would advance and proceed in paths of righteouſneſs and holineſs, but theſe do what they can to hinder me; They marr my path.

Hence Note; They who are evil are ready to hinder others in doing good.

They who care not to do good themſelves, deſire not that others ſhould do it; Like thoſe Lawyers whom Chriſt reproves and denounceth a Woe againſt (Luke 11.52.) They take away the key of knowledge, they enter not in themſelves, and them that are entring in they hinder. Not to have a will to enter and walk in a good way our ſelves is ſinful enough, but to ſtop or diſcourage thoſe that would, is much more ſinful; The former may proceed only from ſloth or a want of love to the wayes of God, but the latter muſt needs proceed from ſpight to and hatred of the wayes of God, or of thoſe who walk in them. They ſhall be loweſt in Hell, who hinder others from Heaven. They marr my path.

They ſet forward my Calamity.

In the former words Job deſcribed the perverſeneſs of his Enemies, either by their reproaching him for, or oppoſing him in the wayes of equity and piety; here he deſcribes them might and main (as we ſay) helping on his miſery.

מהותי Eſt autem הוה ſive הוה contritio, calamitas, pernicies; qui ſonus eſt in voce Jehova. Druſ.

Augent meam calamitatem & promovent. velut cadentem impellunt. Merc.

Job's Calamity came faſt enough upon him, and ſtuck cloſe enough to him, yet theſe mens charity was to ſet it forward, or to put it on faſter, as if they were afraid he would never be miſerable enough, nor ſoon enough. The word which we render Calamity, ſignifies any evil accident or trouble befalling us in this World. We render it miſchief, (Ezek. 7. 26.) Miſchief ſhall come upon miſchief, &c. Theſe vile perſons helped on his miſchief, or that which was moſt miſchievous unto him: Though his caſe was exceeding ſad, and the chain of his affliction exceeding heavy, though his ſores and ſorrows preſt him continually, yet as if all theſe were too little and too light, yea as if all theſe evils were too ſlow paced, and did not come thick and quick enough upon him, they did their beſt to haſten and make them worſe; He was falling, and they thruſt him down, he was down, and they trampled upon him. All this and more, we may conceive Job intending, while he not only ſaith but complaineth, They ſet forward my Calamity.

Hence note the evil diſpoſition of theſe men, or the diſpoſition of evil men.

Baſe and wicked men make it their buſineſs to add ſorrow to the ſorrowful, and trouble to thoſe that are troubled.

To thruſt a man forward when he is going down; to puſh him on when he is falling, argues a very wicked ſpirit. Charity (ſhall I ſay) nay, common humanity commands to help the diſtreſſed out of their calamities; what ſhall we call it then, which ſets forward the calamity of thoſe who are in diſtreſs! How angry was the Lord in that caſe (Zeph. 1. 15.) I am very ſore diſpleaſed (ſaith he) with the Heathen that are at eaſe; (men may have much outward eaſe under the ſecret diſpleaſure of God) I am diſpleaſed and ſore diſpleaſed, why? For I was but a little diſpleaſed (with my People, with Jeruſalem) and they helped forward the affliction. As Saul under-acted his Commiſſion againſt Amaleck, ſo the Babylonians over-acted their Commiſſions againſt Jeruſalem: God did juſtly in ſending them, but they did cruelly and acted their own malice, not the deſign of God; they laid on load. Such is the cruel diſpoſition of ungodly men toward the people of God; if ever they find God correcting them with cords, they will do their utmoſt to ſcourge them with Scorpions: And when God layes his little finger upon them, if they can, they will lay their loyns, their whole weight upon them, they help forward the affliction.

How contrary is the ſpirit of carnal men to the mind of God; if God give them Commiſſion to go forth, and deſtroy utterly, to heighten the calamity of his enemies to the utmoſt, they will be ſparing, they think God is too ſevere, and they'le take upon them to be more merciful. God ſent Saul forth, and gave him his Commiſſion, (1 Sam. 15. 3.) Now go ſlay Amaleck, and utterly deſtroy all that they have, and ſpare them not, but ſlay both man and woman, Infant and Suckling, Ox and Sheep, Camel and Aſs; He indeed deſtroy'd many of them, but thought it too much cruelty to ſpare none; He ſpared Agag for pity, and he ſpared the fat cattel, as he pretended, for pity, that he might offer them in ſacrifice to the Lord. He would needs be more merciful then God; this is the wiſdom of man. So Ahab, as wicked a King as lived, he would take upon him to be merciful, when God had no mind he ſhould (1 Kings 20. 42.) he had Benhadad in his power, a wicked Prince, and he was glad of an opportunity to let him go, and called him Brother. But how did God take it at his hands? (ver. 42.) Thus ſaith the Lord, becauſe thou haſt let go out of thy hand, a man whom I have appointed to utter deſtruction; therefore thy life ſhall go for his life, and thy people for his people. Benhadad was appointed by God to utter deſtruction, yet Ahab was favourable to him, and let him go free. But when the Lord ſmites his own people ſparingly, (there is a ſparing mercy in ſmiting.) The wicked ſmite without mercy, and will not ſpare. When God intends not their deſtruction but correction, the men of the World are unſatisfied with any thing that is leſs then their utter deſtruction (Iſa. 47. 6.) I was wroth with my people, I have polluted mine Inheritance, and given them into thine hand: (This the Lord acknowledgeth he had done) thou didſt ſhew them no mercy. As if the Lord had ſaid, I was angry, indeed, with mine Inheritance and put them into thy power, but thou (thou haſt exceeded thy orders in the execution of them,) thou haſt ſhewed no mercy; and upon the Ancient thou didſt lay the yoak, and not only a yoak, but a heavy yoak, yea thou didſt very heavily lay the yoak, even upon the Ancient. The Edomites and Philiſtines are under the ſame rebuke (Ezek. 25. 12. 15.) Thus ſaith the Lord God, becauſe Edom hath dealt againſt the houſe of Judah by taking vengeance, and hath greatly offended and revenged himſelf upon them. Again (ver. 15.) Thus ſaith the Lord God, becauſe the Philiſtines have dealt by revenge, and taken vengeance with a deſpiteful heart to deſtroy it for the old hatred. Therefore behold I will ſtretch out my hand upon the Philiſtines. Both theſe bloody Nations over-acted the diſpleaſure of God againſt his people, and acting their own private ſpirit ſet forward their calamity. We read (2 Chron. 28. 9.) that God being angry with Judah, the Iſraelites came and deſtroyed their brethren with a rage that reacheth unto heaven, that is, with the extreameſt rage imaginable. They who ſaid, Let us build us a City, and a Tower, whoſe top may reach to Heaven (Gen. 11. 4.) were ſurely reſolved to build as high as they could; and doubtleſs, they were as outragious as they could, in deſtroying their Brethren, who deſtroyed them with a rage that reached unto heaven, or with a rage, the cry whereof came up to God in Heaven, as the cry of Abel's blood did (Gen. 4.) as alſo the cry of Sodom's filthineſs (Gen. 18.) The Lord was gracious to Paul (Phil. 2. 27.) in reference to his dear friend Epaphroditus, who was very ſick, ſick unto death, but ſaith he, the Lord hath had mercy on him, and not on him only, but on me alſo; Why? Leſt I ſhould have ſorrow upon ſorrow. Paul had ſome ſorrow upon him at that time, and therefore the Lord would not take away his friend, leſt he ſhould ſet forward his ſorrow, and cauſe the wound to bleed afreſh. But theſe wretches put ſorrow upon ſorrow; where the Lord ſends ſorrow, they heap on ſorrow; If they have the handling of the matter, they will be ſure to make the ſorrowful know ſorrow. There are two ſpecial grounds of this; Firſt, As the nature of man is cruel and unnatural, ſo the very mercies of the wicked are cruel; no marvail then if they urge Calamities, where the Lord lays any Calamity. Secondly, The Lord and they have different ends; the ends which God hath are to purge or humble and try his people, that they may come forth Gold. And therefore he moderates their Calamity to theſe bleſſed ends. But the ends of wicked men, are either to revenge themſelves, and eaſe their ſpleen, or to enrich themſelves, and fill their purſes. They deſign the raiſing of themſelves on the ruines of thoſe whom God is afflicting, and therefore they do it to the utmoſt line of their power and opportunity. This ſtir'd the afflicted Jews to awaken the vengeance of God upon their inſatiable Enemies, (Pſal. 137.7.) Remember, O Lord, the Children of Edom, in the day of Jeruſalem, who ſaid (in the day of Jeruſalem's Calamity) raſe it, raſe it even to the Foundations thereof. Well might David make that election (2 Sam. 24. 14.) Let me fall now into the hand of the Lord (for his mercies are great) and let not me fall into the hand of man. As if he had ſaid, Seeing there is no avoiding it, but I and my people muſt ſuffer, I deſire we may ſuffer by the immediate hand of God, who in judgment remembers mercy ; Whereas men will be altogether unmerciful ; If God give me up into their hands, there will be no ho with them, therefore let the deſtroying Angel ſlay with the Sword of peſtilence, rather then men with the ſword of War. They will be ſure to help forward mine affliction, and the affliction of my people. If God did not ſet bounds to the wrath of man towards man, it would at once overflow all the bounds of reaſon and moderation.

There is another reading of this part of the verſe, which I ſhall a little touch upon before I paſs from it. For the word ſignifies, not only, as we render, to ſet forward, but to profit, or advantage, and we commonly ſay of a man that profits or thrives in his calling, he goes forward; and of a man that doth not thrive in his calling or buſineſs, he goes backward in the World. Taking the word in this notion, it holds out more of the wickedneſs and ill frame of theſe mens ſpirits ; for as (according to the former reading) they added to his Calamity ; So (according to this) they took his Calamity as an addition or advantage to themſelves. Thus Mr. Broughton, They hold my heavineſs a profit ; Or, They profit themſelves by my heavineſs ; I am hewed down, and they gather my chips and broken boughs to make themſelves a fire, or to build themſelves houſes with ; they grow rich by my loſs, and riſe by my downfall, they are greater by my leſſening ; at leaſt (according to Mr. Broughtons tranſlation,) if they did not actually profit themſelves by his Calamity, yet they held his Calamity to be their profit ; that is, it was to them as if they had got profit by it, they thought their own neſts were better feathered, by the plucking off his feathers. Theſe barbarous people (whom (it is like) he might have provoked in the time of his Power and Magiſtracy) looked upon his loſſes as their gettings, upon his ſickneſs as their health, upon his ruine and undoing as their making, they were as well pleaſed with his emptyings, as if themſelves had been filled by it.

Ad contritionem meã proſunt ; in fonte eſt הועיל quod prodeſſe ſignificat. Druſ.

Lætati ſunt ad contritionem meã perinde ac ſi nacti eſſent magnã utilitatem. Pagn.

> Hence take this Note ; Wicked men are apt to rejoyce, as if they had gained or gotten much, when they ſee the godly in trouble, or ſuffer loſs.

Some are pleaſed more then with their own getting thouſands of Gold and Silver, to ſee others beggar'd and ſtript of all. I grant there is a profit to be had by the afflictions and heavineſs of others ; could we manage them aright, we might make a great Improvement of every croſs, of every rod that we ſee upon our brethren. Such providences of God to them ſhould provoke us, Firſt, To conſider and ſearch our wayes ; Secondly, To remember the ſlipperineſs of our condition ; Thirdly, To prepare for evil times. (Eccl. 7. 2.) It is better to go to the houſe of mourning, then to the houſe of mirth ; for this is the end of all men, and the living will lay it to heart, that is, the living ought to lay it to heart, and they who are indeed alive, ſpiritually alive, will lay it to heart, and grow more ſpiritual in their lives by it. The living will get by the death of others ; a godly man counts the ſaddeſt diſpenſations of God upon his Neighbour (in this ſenſe) his profit, and actually profits by them. This is a good, a bleſſed way of profiting, by other mens harms ; it is well for us if we can thus hold the heavineſs of others a profit ; but the ſpirit of theſe wretches was of another ſtrain, they lookt upon the Calamity of Job as a gain or advantage to them, it was the Joy and rejoycing of their hearts, to ſee him in heavineſs. Lay both theſe interpretations together, and they yield us this third Obſervation.

> Either to ſet forward and add to the affliction of others, or to be pleaſed with their affliction, as a matter of advantage to our ſelves, is the ſign of, or argues a heart deſperately wicked.

Nothing is more oppoſite to the rules of common humanity then this, how oppoſite then is it to the rules of Goſpel-Charity ! This overthrows at once the whole law of love, which teacheth us, Firſt, That it is our duty to commiſerate and pity thoſe who are afflicted, and not only ſo, but Secondly, To comfort, relieve, and ſupport them in their affliction, and Thirdly, To help, deliver, and free them from their affliction, yea, Fourthly, To count their loſs our loſs, their affliction our affliction, and their ſorrows our ſorrows. Now for a man to ſet forward the affliction of others, and to hold their heavineſs a profit, this is a mighty aggravation as of the act of that mans ſin, ſo of the ſinfulneſs of that man ; even as to help others forward in ſin, or to be pleaſed with others when they ſin, is an evidence of a heart deſperately naught. There is ſuch a generation in the World, who help ſin forward, and are well pleaſed to ſee others ſin. Which was one of the blackeſt Characters, if not the blackeſt Character that was given of the Gentiles in their dark condition of ignorance and unbelief (Rom. 1. 32.) Who knowing the Judgment of God, that they who commit ſuch things are worthy of death, not only do the ſame, but have pleaſure in them that do them. The very top (as it were) of all the wickedneſs which they had done was this, that they had pleaſure in ſuch as did wickedly ; and ſo were not only actors, but ſetters on in ſin, and promoters of the Devils cauſe, and work in the World. Now, I ſay, as to ſet a man forward in ſin, and to be pleaſed with him when he is forwardeſt at it, argues a vile debauched hardned heart : So to ſet forward a mans affliction, and to be pleaſed when he is in trouble, this is ſuch another argument of ſuch a heart. We cannot put two worſer brands upon any man, then to ſay, He is one that ſets forward the ſins of others, and is pleaſed when they ſin, or that he ſets forward the ſorrows of others, and is pleaſed with their ſorrows ; Eſpecially when any man ſhall do this (as theſe men did it) of his own meer motion, and in his own ſtrength, without the counſel or aſſiſtance of any other. Thus it is no ſooner ſaid here, They ſet forward my Calamity, but to heighten it, Job preſently adds ;

Et non fuit qui ferret auxilium. Vulg.

They have no helper.

Some read theſe words as implying Job's deſolate condition, or helpleſs againſt thoſe who ſet forward his calamity. There is no helper to them, that is, againſt them, I am oppreſſed, and even ſwallow'd up, but where is he that undertakes for me ? As if he had ſaid, I am alone, I have none to appear for me, none to patronize me, none to take my part, or ſpeak a good word for me ; I have none to aſſiſt me in the leaſt ; They ſet forward my Calamity, but I have no helper. The vulgar tranſlation is expreſs to this ſenſe ; And there was none to bring me any help. It was thus indeed with Job, he poor man was deſtitute of help and friends in that time of his greateſt need, and it is a too much experienced truth, that men in Calamity are uſually deſerted of friends and helpers. This cauſed David to cry out (Pſal. 12. 1, 2.) Help Lord, for the godly man ceaſeth, for the faithful fail from among the Children of men, They ſpeak vanity every one to his neighbour, with flattering lips, and with a double tongue do they ſpeak ; As if he had ſaid, They either flatly deny me help, or promiſe it flatteringly ; They ſay, they will help, and they only ſay it, therefore help Lord, for I am helpleſs. Lover and friend haſt thou put far from me, O be thou neer unto me !

But this tranſlation gives ſo great a ſtrein to the Original Text, and is ſo little favoured by it, that I ſhall not ſtay upon it.

The clear literal reading is, There is no helper to them, or they ſet forward my Calamity, No man bringing them any help.

They have no helper.] Theſe words fall under three diſtinct Expoſitions.

First, As carrying (which was even now intimated) an argument of the extream boldneſs and impudence of theſe perſons, that though none did offer them any help, aſſiſtance, or countenance, yet they would go on. As none offered to joyn with them in this attempt upon Job, ſo they did not look, much leſs wait for any, but ruſht on confidently without their ſeconds. They had no helper.

Quamvis ſoli ſint & careant adjutoribus, adeo tamen audaces & præſidentes ſunt, ut ſoli maligno ſtudio in me omnibus modis irruant. Jun.

Non opus habent adjutore ad me conficiendum, jam enim de me actum eſt, nec ex eorū manibus poſſum effugere. Merc. Ramb. Soli ſufficiunt ad me vexandum non egent aliorum opera. Druſ.

Secondly, Theſe words are a clear argument of Job's extream weakneſs. They who ſet forward his Calamity, or ſet themſelves againſt him, though they were but mean and alone, without any auxiliaries or abetters, yet they eaſily enough wrong'd and worſted him. As if Job had ſaid, I am no match for them; for alas, I am a man quite ſpent, and drawn down to the lees, I have neither ſtrength of body, nor ſtrength of eſtate; nor ſtrength of counſel about me; All my Intereſts and powers, as to this World, are broken and gone, ſo that even a Company of baſe men that appear upon their own ſcore, and account, are too ſtrong for me. I am not able to help my ſelf, no not againſt thoſe who have no helper; Nor can I make my party good againſt thoſe who have none to take their part. Even they who are ſo vile and unworthy, that none will own or aſſiſt them, afflict me, and I cannot reſiſt them. How weak was this mighty man grown, who could not bear up againſt mean men, who had none to ſtrengthen them! Job's oppoſers had not much power, but Job himſelf had none.

He that is weak himſelf, is eaſily oppreſt by others, though themſelves are but weak.

Thirdly, We may underſtand theſe words rather of a moral, then of any natural or civil helper; And ſo, They have no helper, is, they have no perſwader, they have none to put them on, none to ſtir them up, none to provoke them to do me this miſchief, yet they do it. As if he had ſaid, They are ſo active of themſelves, that they need none to act, or encourage them in their way. 'Tis but ſeldom that men will adventure upon any thing of moment, till ſome or other joyn with them, and (as it were) ſet their wheels a going, or oyl their wheels by counſel and encouragement; but theſe mens wheels ran faſt enough without oyling. And as they had no bridle of ingenuity to ſtop them, ſo they needed no ſpur of oratory to quicken them. They have no helper.

Hence Note; The nature of man is forward enough to evil, he needs no helper, no perſwader.

When we are called to do good, we need much help both from God and man; we need many Encouragements, both by promiſes and perſwaſions, our hearts hang back, and our ſpirits recoyl from every ſpiritual duty. Even the Elect are in ſome degree unto every good work reprobate; that is, they find not ſuch a readineſs as becomes them. Natural corruption is their dayly clog and pull-back; ſo that, as the Apoſtle ſpake and felt in his own caſe (Rom. 7. 18.) when they would do good, evil is preſent with them; and when to will is preſent, how to perform that which is good they find not. A good man wants help, he wants ſtrength to do good, but when a wicked man would do miſchief, he wants no helper; the way to Hell is downhill all the way, much ado we have to ſtay the wheels, and keep our ſelves from running head-long. Man is ſo prone to ſin, that he needs no teacher. The Apoſtle indeed ſaith (1 Theſ. 4. 9.) As touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you, for ye your ſelves are taught of God to love one another. 'Tis true, Believers ſhould not need to be written or ſpoken to in this point; They who have faith in Chriſt, how can they be without love one to another? Yet believers have much need to be taught that leſſon; yea and all other holy leſſons, though they know them in the Scriptures of God, and are as to notion eſtabliſhed in the preſent truth. We are wiſe and free to evil, but to good we have no wiſdom, no freedom, but by grace, and that is mixed with ſo much bondage, that without freſh aſſiſtances we find not our ſelves free to it. A godly man never doth good without the help of God, and 'tis ſeldom that a wicked man doth evil without the help of the Devil, (he would alwayes make one there) though he can do it ſufficiently without him or any other helper.

There is yet another rendring of this clauſe given by Mr. Broughton, which may yield us ſome further inſtruction from them; They hold my heavineſs a profit (ſo he tranſlates the former words) though they be never the better; that is, though they have no benefit by it. Such was their malice, that they held his trouble their advantage, though it did not at all advantage them. The Original may bear this tranſlation, and it carries a notable deſcription of that ſpirit, of which the wicked are, or with which they are often moved. Their actions are naught, but their ſpirit or principle is far worſe. They ſet forward my Calamity (ſaith Job) or hold my heavineſs a profit, though they have no help by it, or though they be never the better.

We may underſtand this reading two wayes.

Firſt, In reference to their Judgment, or light, though they ſee and are convinc'd they can get nothing by it, yet they will do it.

Secondly, In reference to the event: Though by all their wicked dealings with me, they do not advantage themſelves in the iſſue, yet they proceed to deal wickedly with me. From the former underſtanding of the words,

Note, Some will do miſchief to others, though they ſee they ſhall get no benefit by it themſelves,

As a godly man will do good (where duty calls him) for goodneſs ſake, for duties ſake, though he gain no worldly advantage by it; ſo wicked men will do evil freely, even though they do not get ſo much as a pin of their ſleeve, or a paring of their nails by it, though they ſee clearly, that all they gain by it, they may (as we ſay) put in their eyes, and ſee never the worſe. David (Pſal. 120. 3.) gives a rebuke to ſuch a wicked generation as Job here ſpeaks of, What ſhall be given to thee, or done unto thee, thou falſe tongue? What doſt thou expect, thou falſe tongue, in pleading a bad cauſe? What fee or reward haſt thou for being an accuſer inſtead of an advocate? What ſhall it profit thee (as we put in the Margin) What ſhalt thou gain by thy deceitful tongue? Or (as our Margin hath it again) What ſhall the deceitful tongue give unto thee, that thou goeſt about ſlandring thy Brother, and tearing his good name? Hath thy deceitful tongue houſes or lands to give thee? Hath it any treaſures of Gold and Silver to beſtow upon thee? Surely as it ſelf is, ſo it gives only ſharp arrows of the mighty, and coals of Juniper, as the next verſe in that Pſalm intimates. Some tear the names of men in high places, and not a few the names of their brethren or equals (as the hypocrite is charged (Pſal. 50. 20.) Thou ſitteſt and ſpeakeſt againſt thy Brother, thou ſlandereſt thine own Mothers ſon: Thou ſitteſt at it, as if it were thy trade and occupation, thou doſt not make a tranſient work, or a by-buſineſs of it, thou ſitteſt cloſe at it.) But what do they get? The tongue indeed will ſpeak often in theſe cauſes gratis, or without a fee, but it never doth without danger and damage to the ſpeaker. As ſuch ſpeakers ſhoot arrows, like the arrows of the mighty, and as they ſcatter coals, like the coals of Juniper, ſo they uſually get an arrow in their own ſides, and not only burn their fingers, but heap coals of fire upon their own heads. Ungodly men will do miſchief to other men, purely for miſchiefs ſake, yet when once miſchief is done, it proves moſt miſchievous to the doers of it; And while they hold their brethrens heavineſs a profit, though they are never the better, they ſhall feel and find themſelves in a ſhort time much the worſe.

Secondly, As theſe words imply the event or fruitfulneſs of thoſe actings.

Obſerve, When a man hath caſt up his accounts, he ſhall be forced to confeſs, that he hath gained nothing by ſin, or by doing any thing that is evil, either in it ſelf or unto others.

The Apoſtles were ſlanderouſly reported, and ſome affirmed that they ſaid, Let us do evil that good may come of it, (Rom. 3. 8.) Now as it is an abomination to do the leaſt ſinful evil for the good of others (though the good we propoſe be the ſaving of their ſouls, yea, though we would propoſe to our ſelves a higher good in the doing of any ſinful evil, then the ſaving a whole World of ſouls, The Glory of God, yet (I ſay) to do it were an abomination, as the Apoſtles concluſion even againſt ſuch pretenders doth fully evince, when he ſaith, whoſe damnation is juſt.)

So it is both an high abomination, and the higheſt folly for any man to do evil that good may come to himſelf. I call this an high abomination, becauſe it is extreamly ſinful to ſeek our own good in an evil way; and I call it the higheſt folly, becauſe how earneſtly ſoever we ſeek our own good in an evil way, we ſhall never find it. For when ſin hath done us all the kindneſs and good turnes it can, we in the upſhot ſhall be never the better. But as we ſpeak proverbially of ſome men, What they get in the Hundred, they looſe in the Shire; ſo we may ſay of all who go ſinful wayes for gain, look what they get (if they get any thing) in temporals, they looſe in ſpirituals and eternals, and if ſo, what are they the better!

Job having thus far deſcribed the wicked actings of his oppoſers, proceeds to illuſtrate thoſe actings by a double ſimilitude.

Verſ. 14. They came upon me as a wide breaking in of waters: In the deſolation they rolled themſelves upon me.

They came upon me.] Though the word ſignifies to come in an ordinary way of motion, as a friend cometh to his friend upon buſineſs or viſitation; yet ſometimes it denotes a hoſtile Invaſion, or an Enemy-like charge; to come upon a man as a thief to aſſault him, or (as Solomon ſaith, (though he uſeth another word) Poverty and want ſhall come upon the ſluggard) like an armed man, (Prov. 24. 34.) or as he deſcribes the Calamity of the wicked (Prov. 1. 27.) Whoſe fear cometh as deſolation, and whoſe deſtruction cometh as a whirl-wind. In this ſence you are to underſtand it here, They come upon me, not in an ordinary walking pace or gate, but in a March, in a charge, as Enemies; they ſet, they ruſh, they run in upon me. The ſimilitude which follows neceſſitates this ſence of the word. They came upon me,

As a wide breaking in of waters.] As the breaking in, and as the wide breaking in, for Explication ſake we add of waters in our tranſlation: The Hebrew is; They came upon me as a wide breach. So Mr. Broughton, They came as into a broad breach; they aſſaulted me with violence. And becauſe the Hebrew text doth not determine the ſimilitude (as we do in our tranſlation, breaking in of waters) therefore there are ſome other apprehenſions concerning the alluſion. I ſhall inſtance in three.

Firſt, As an alluſion to an Army, who when they have built their batteries, and made a breach in the wall by the Cannon, then they come up to the ſtorm, they come up like a flood; That act of war is uſually called ſtorming; when a breach is made, the aſſailants ſtorm the City, or Fort. Thus the alluſion may hold here, they came upon me as an Army at a wide breach; they fell pell mell upon me.

Veniunt ſuper me magno impetu ut fluvius ſolet rupto aggere. Vatab. Tygur.

Secondly, The ſimilitude may refer to the Sea, or to the waters of ſome mighty River, when it hath broke the banks; for then the water comes powring in; or to ſome Land-flood, which over-runs the whole Countrey, and ſweeps all away before it. We read in Scripture of a ſweeping rain; Great waters make clean work. Thus ſaith Job, theſe men having broken the banks of modeſty and ſobriety, take their full ſcope to inſult over me as they pleaſe, how much ſoever it diſpleaſeth me; and I am no more able to withſtand them, then a man is able to withſtand the violence of a Sea, or of an inundation breaking in upon him.

Thirdly, The words may bear an alluſion to a field, vineyard, or a garden, in whoſe hedge, fence, or wall, when a breach is made, then either ſavage beaſts, or hungry diſorderly perſons come in and ſpoyl the Corn, the Vines, the fruits, then they make havock of all. We have at once a ſad and elegant deſcription of the Church under ſore oppreſſion, in metaphors of this ſtrain, (Pſal. 80. 12, 13.) Why haſt thou broken down our hedge (or hedges) ſo that all they that paſs by the way do pluck us. The Boar out of the wood doth waſt it, and the wild beaſts of the field devoure it. The hedge of the vineyard, the Church (of which the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 5. 5.) is, the Lords protection, and when that's removed, ſhe is ſoon not only invaded but ſpoiled; then every paſſenger almoſt will have a pluck at her, and profeſſed powerful Enemies. (ſuch as the Pſalmiſt intends by the Boar out of the wood, and the wild beaſts out of the field) will lay her waſt and devour her. We may conceive Job complaining that he was as a field or vineyard, whoſe hedge or fence being broken down, theſe rude men ruſht in at the gap (like beaſts) to eat him up.

Hence Note, Firſt in general, If the Lord once withdraw his protection, every evil invadeth us and prevaileth over us.

As an Army at the breach of a wall, or as the Sea at a breach of the banks, or as wild beaſts at the breach of the hedge, ſo evils come in upon us thick and threefold, when once God is departed from us. It is the Lords power that fenceth and keeps all ſafe. In the firſt Chapter of this Book we read Job had a hedge about him, and ſuch a hedge as the Devil could not break through, to touch a pin of his ſleeve, or to pluck a leaf from his tree; He was ſo fortified that he could not take hurt; but when the Lord had broken down his hedge, or made a gap in it, The beaſts of prey, Chaldeans and Sabeans quickly entred, and made an utter devaſtation. When our Lord Chriſt was exerciſed in fulfilling his miniſtry and mediatorſhip here on earth; the Jews were mad at it, they would have deſtroyed him at the enterance of his work, but they could not; they were bloodily minded, and bloodily reſolved againſt him, and ſometimes they attempted his deſtruction, but could not effect it; none of their plots took; Why? Chriſts time was not come, that is, the time that God would deliver him up into their hands: Till that time came, Chriſt was wall'd about, he was kept ſafe; but at laſt God broke the hedge, took away his protection, then the Son of man was betrayed into the hand of ſinners, and then Chriſt ſaid to his enemies, This is your hour, and the power of darkneſs, (Luke 22. 53.) that is, now you may do what you will with me, or you may have your will of me; This is your hour, the time wherein you are permitted to exerciſe your rage and utmoſt wrath againſt me; and now the Prince of darkneſs hath power by you his inſtruments to put me out of the World, who am the light of the World. Thus I lye open as a City without walls or gates, you may come and ſpoil me as you pleaſe; It is of God that our fence is maintained, and our wall not broken down, to let in dangers, and death it ſelf.

More diſtinctly obſerve from hence; They come upon me as the breaking in of waters, Wicked men act violently.

How violently doth an Army aſſault the breach? How violently do the waters ruſh in when the bank is overthrown? As grace makes men act violently, ſo doth corruption. Chriſt ſaith, (Matth. 11. 12.) The kingdom of Heaven ſuffers violence. Believers ruſh upon it with all their might; and the kingdome of Heaven comes to us with a kind of violence; it is a day of power, God brings his Army, and ſtormes our ſouls, and then we grow violent for God, and the things of God; we are graciouſly violent to ſerve and obey him, when he by a bleſſed violence hath broken our ſtony, our ſtubborn and diſobedient hearts; And till then the nature of man is ſinfully violent, or violent upon ſin, and comes, like a flood, enraged by the wind to do any thing that is evil.

Secondly, Note, Uſually wicked men are unanimous in doing evil.

When an Army comes to ſtorm, they fall on together; and when the waters come, they come in together at the breach. Thus Job's deſpiſers were united in their deſpightful carriages towards him, as if they had been but one man; they came like a flood. Good men ſhould joyn heart and hand, they ſhould come as one man to do good; And as it is their duty to do ſo, ſo it is moſt deſirable and delightfull to ſee them do ſo. (Pſal. 133. 1.) Behold how good and how pleaſant a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity; That is, when, as they cohabit or dwell together; ſo they act and joyn together in the ſame way and work. But do we come upon a good work, as an Army, or as a flood, all together? Our diviſions are ſad; Good men are divided greatly about the doing of that which is good. When and where ſhall we ſee any conſiderable number of good men like the Church (Acts: 2. 42.)

of one accord, or as having but one ſoul in many bodies. Moſt good men are contrary to many, as the wicked are contrary to them all; yea ſome are as contrary to themſelves at times, as if they had two ſouls, yea many ſouls in one body. The dividedneſs of men in a good matter, is as lamentable as their union and oneneſs in a bad one. They came upon me (ſaith Job) as a wide breaking in of waters; and as it follows,

In the deſolation they rolled themſelves upon me.

Mr. Broughton renders, In the broken place they tumble. The word ſignifies to ſound, to make a noiſe: And ſo 'tis elegantly applyed to deſtruction or deſolation, which are uſually effected with noiſe and tumult, deſtruction and deſolation are moſtly made by War; and the Prophet tells us (Iſa. 9. 5.) That, every Battel of the warriour is with a Confuſed noiſe, and garments rolled in blood. The Clattering of Armour, neighing of Horſes, the ſcreechings and groanings of wounded and dying men, ſeem to put all the Elements into a Cumbuſtion in a day of battel; ſuch is the force of this Word here uſed. As if Job had ſaid, In the Confuſed noiſe of my troubles they roll themſelves upon me.

Some tranſlate, not deſolation but darkneſs; As if he had ſaid, They come ſecretly upon me, as men that lye in ambuſh to ſurprize me; But theſe men were bold fac'd enough, and therefore rather as we, In the deſolation they rolled themſelves upon me.

Alii pro caligine ſumunt, ſed malo pro calamitate. Merc.

Thoſe words (upon me) we ſupply in a different character: The Hebrew is, in the deſolation they roll themſelves: The Original word which ſignifies to roll, is applyed to the rolling of a wheel, or to any thing turned and forced on with violence. Thus the Lord threatens Babylon (Jer. 51. 25.) Behold, I am againſt thee O deſtroying mountain, ſaith the Lord, which deſtroyeſt all the earth, and I will ſtretch out mine hand upon thee, and will roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain. Thou haſt preſumed thy ſelf faſt ſeated upon a rock, and eſtabliſhed there; Thou haſt preſumed thy ſelf as ſtrong as a mountain, ſo ſtrong, that thou haſt no more fear of being caſt down or deſtroyed, then a mountain. Thou haſt been ſuch a deſtroying mountain, that now thou think'ſt thy ſelf not to be deſtroyable, or too big to be deſtroyed, but I will roll thee down, as if thou wert a Chariot wheel, or a tennis ball, as any thing of eaſieſt motion, as ſome gloſs that place, I will throw thee wholly down, as a thing that tumbles from a high place. In a like expreſſion the Prophet Eſay threatens the Nations (Iſa. 17. 13.) God ſhall rebuke them, and they ſhall flee far off, and ſhall be chaſed as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like a rolling thing before the whirl-wind. Further, this word is uſed in a very ſpiritual ſence, to ſignifie the moſt proper and eſſentiall act of faith upon God. To roll our ſelves upon God, is the committing of our ſelves, and of our caſe to him, to put our affiance and truſt in him in all our needs, whether reſpecting temporals, or eternals. We render (Pſal. 22. 8.) He truſted on the Lord, and we put in the Margin, he rolled himſelf upon the Lord. So (Pſal. 37. 5.) Commit thy way unto the Lord; The Hebrew is, roll thy way upon the Lord, that is, caſt thy ſelf and thy way upon the Lord with aſſurance and confidence that he will do it for thee. It is good for us in any time of deſolation to roll our ſelves upon God believingly; but 'tis ſad when men roll themſelves, or lay their whole weight upon us (as theſe men did upon Job) in the day of our deſolation.

But when Job ſaith, They rolled themſelves upon me in the deſolation; what meanes he? Certainly they were far from truſting themſelves upon Job, he was in their opinion as a rotten ſtick, or a bruiſed reed, as a thing of nought, therefore that cannot be his ſence or intendment in this paſſage. But there is another Scripture ſignification of the word roll, which may reach the preſent caſe. We find it (Gen. 43. 18.) where when Joſeph upon the appearance of his brethren the ſecond time, gave order that they ſhould be brought in to dinner, they were afraid, their own guilt made them very ſuſpicious, and they ſaid in their hearts, Becauſe of the money that was returned in our ſacks at the firſt time are we brought in, that he may ſeek occaſion againſt us, and fall upon us, &c. The Hebrew word is that in the Text (as we ſay in the Margin) That he may roll himſelf upon us: As if they had ſaid, Joſeph the Governour hath call'd for us into the houſe, that under the colour of ſome offence, he may make us his ſlaves. The Seventy read that place clearly to this purpoſe; He hath called us in to charge us, or to accuſe us, to draw up an accuſation againſt us. So then, to roll our ſelves upon another man, is by way of accuſation, or Charge, to oppreſs and caſt him down. In which ſence (though negatively) the word is uſed (Joſh. 5. 9.) And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua, This day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you; Wherefore the name of the place is called Gilgal (or rolling) to this day. God rolled away the reproach of Egypt from Iſrael, by doing great things, and working wonders for them. Egypt heaped reproaches upon them, but God took them off; or they were once reproached in Egypt as ſlaves and captives, but now God made them not only free-men but Conquerors; But chiefly at that time (as the precedent words lead us to expound it) God took off the reproach of Egypt from his people Iſrael (as by receiving them into Covenant formerly, ſo) by renewing the ſign of his Covenant circumciſion (which had been intermitted all the time of their dwelling or journeying rather in the Wilderneſs) This which was the reproach of Egypt, that is, a reproach lying upon them and all Heathen Nations, that they were uncircumciſed, the Lord in that day rolled from Iſrael, by reſtoring that mark, which did ſo eminently diſtinguiſh them from the Egyptians. Now as there is a rolling away of reproach from us, ſo there is a rolling of reproach upon us. Thus they rolled themſelves upon Job, while they reviled and derided him in the deſolation. We may take Job's meaning yet more diſtinct in theſe brief propoſitions or aſſertions.

Συκοφαντῆσαι ἡμᾶς, ut calumniatur nos & imponat nobis. Sept.

Firſt, When he ſaith, They rolled themſelves upon him in the deſolation, he intimates, that, They gave up themſelves wholly to vex him, and to encreaſe his Calamity. They did not trouble him accidentally or ignorantly, but adviſedly and induſtriouſly in that deplorable condition.

Secondly, The words imply, that they did not touch and trouble him a little or lightly, as it were with a finger, but that they laid their whole weight upon him, as he doth the whole weight of his body upon another, that rolleth himſelf upon him.

Thirdly, When he ſaith, They rolled themſelves upon me in the deſolation, or under the deſolation, we may underſtand him thus; They take an advantage from my troubles to trouble me the more, and from the preſent preſſures that are upon me to oppreſs me utterly. They ſee I am in a deſolate condition, and cannot help my ſelf, and they make uſe of it as an opportunity to make me (if it might be) yet more deſolate.

Fourthly, Rolling is an action of delight, a man rolls himſelf upon his bed, or upon the green graſs for his pleaſure; ſo it may intimate, that Job's deriders (which ſpirit of theirs hath been obſerved from other paſſages) took content in his troubles, and rolled themſelves upon his deſolation, or deſolate condition, upon the duſt and aſhes in which he rolled, as upon a bed of ſpices, or of Roſes. There are but few good men who roll themſelves upon the deſolation of others with pity and compaſſion, but there are many wicked men who can do it with a kind of triumph and contentation. There are but few good men who can roll themſelves upon God, by believing and relying, in the time of their affliction; but there are many who can rudely roll themſelves upon the afflicted with rejoycing.

Fifthly, They rolled themſelves upon him in the deſolation, by the blackeſt ſlanders and ſevereſt cenſures. They ſought occaſions againſt, and laid heavy accuſations upon him; a ſlanderer or falſe accuſer rolls himſelf upon another mans good name, or credit, to pollute and ſtain it, nor will he give over his rolling, till he hath made it as black (if it may be) in the opinion of others, as it is in his own. That Job's name was rolled upon and ſuſpected, yea charged with fouleſt crimes (becauſe of his afflictions) as if he had been one of the vileſt pieces that ever was in the world, we have ſeen before, Is not thy wickedneſs great, and thine iniquities infinite? ſaid Eliphaz (Chap. 22. 5.) and there were others, beſides the rabble of whom he now ſpeaks, who ſpake little leſs or better of him.

Laſtly, Conſider the time when they did this, In the deſolation they rolled themſelves upon me.

When the Godly are down and under hatches, when they are loweſt in worldly appearances, then wicked men are apt to raiſe ſlanders, and to charge them higheſt.

Wicked men never love nor favour the godly, but they do not alwayes expreſs their hatred againſt them. They have malice enough in their hearts at all times to do it, but they have not alwayes an opportunity in their hand. Good men are ſometimes upon the higher ground, and 'tis hard rolling up hill; But if ever they fall below them, or are reduced to that which Job calls a deſolation, or a deſolate condition, then they will not ſpare. As a godly mans extremity is Gods opportunity, to help and relieve him, in the mount he will be ſeen; ſo a godly mans extremity is a wicked mans opportunity to vex and diſtreſs him, in the valley he will be ſeen. We read how Amaleck (that people of Gods curſe) rolled themſelves upon the deſolation of the children of Iſrael in their paſſage to Canaan, which provoked the Lord to leave a ſad memento againſt them (Deut. 25. 17, 18.) Remember what Amaleck did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt; How he met thee by the way, and ſmote the hindmoſt of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou waſt faint and weary, and he feared not God. We ſee here the kindneſs and charity of an Amalekite, when he ſeeth any that bear the name of God, feeble and faint and weary, he inſtead of meeting them with bread and water to comfort them, meets them with ſword and ſpear to kill them in their weakneſs. And thus Shimei rolled himſelf in the deſolation upon David; who fleeing upon the rebellion of Abſalon from Jeruſalem, came forth (2 Sam. 16. 5, 6.) What to do? Was it to aſſiſt him in that calamity? No, ſaith the Text, he came forth, and curſed ſtill as he came (every ſtep he took, he took up a curſe againſt David) and he caſt ſtones at him, and at all his ſervants; And thus ſaid Shimei when he curſed, come out, come out thou bloody man, thou man of Belial, the Lord hath returned upon thee all the blood of the houſe of Saul, &c. Thou art taken in thy miſchief, becauſe thou art a bloody man. With what double rage and malicious rhetorick did this wicked man vent his ſpleen upon his own Soveraign when he found him ſurprized with that ſore affliction. How high doth malice riſe, when Innocence is laid low! David might well ſay of this wretch, as Job in the Text, In the deſolation he rolled himſelf upon me. And there have not been a few who have had too much cauſe to ſay as much.

Ad meas miſerias devoluti ſunt. Vulg. i.e. Totaliter ad hoc intenderunt, ut me miſerum redderent.

All theſe hints of interpretation meet and center in one point. That Job's enemies, or ill-willers, ſet themſelves againſt him with all their might, and dedicated all their wit and ſtrength to ſerve Satans double deſign; Firſt, To make him as miſerable as they could in his ſufferings; and Secondly, To make all the world believe (if they could) that he had been unrighteous in his actings; Or at leaſt, they hoped to make him ſo miſerable, that he ſhould even be forced to let go his former righteouſneſs or integrity, and breaking out into blaſphemy, curſe God and dye. And that he was put hard to it to keep his ſoul from this worſt impatience, will further appear by what he ſaith of himſelf in the next verſe.

VERS. 15.

Terrours are turned upon me: They purſue my ſoul as the wind: And my welfare paſſeth away as a cloud.

IN this verſe and thoſe which follow to the nineteenth, incluſively, Job ſets forth, Firſt, the trouble that was upon his ſpirit; Secondly, the paines which were upon his body; Thirdly he gives the ſum of both.

The trouble upon his ſpirit is expreſſed under the notion of terrors, and the pouring out of his ſoul upon him, (ver. 15, 16.)

The pains of his body are deſcribed (ver 17, 18.) My bones are pierced in me in the night ſeaſon, and my ſinews take no reſt. By the great force of my diſeaſe is my garment changed.

The ſum or iſſue of both is ſet down (ver. 19.) He hath caſt me into the mire, and I am become like duſt and aſhes. As if he had ſaid, What with the terrors upon my ſoul, and the pains upon my body, I am brought to nothing, I am but duſt in my conſtitution, I am become but mire and dirt by my affliction.

Verſe 15. Terrors are turned upon me.

The Hebrew is, terrors is turned, that is, terror of every kind and of every degree is come and fallen upon me, or hath taken hold of me: All things ſeem to center in this one thing, My trouble, or to make me miſerable.

בלהות terrores conſternationes. In Hebræo, plurale nomen cum ſingulari verbo conſtruitur, & quidem cum diverſitate generis Scult. Anomalia numeri & generis. Piſc.

Terrors are the foreſt troubles of the ſoul in this temporal life, and they are moſt like thoſe eternal troubles which poſſeſs the ſoules of the damned in the next life. And as terrors diſcompoſe the mind, and put it out of all due frame and order; ſo the conſtruction of this text, wherein Job complains of them, is out of all grammatical frame and order. Here being as the learned Hebricians obſerve, a double anomolie, or breach of Grammar rules in it. The word terrors being of the plural number, is joyned in conſtruction with a verb of the ſingular number; there is alſo a like irregularity in the Genders of theſe two words. As if the Spirit of God would hint to us, by theſe irregular and diſturb'd expreſſions, how much diſturbance and irregularity, ſuch terrors work and impreſs upon the affections. Terrors are turned upon me.

There are ſeverall words in this Book tranſlated terrors; That here uſed, ſignifieth ſuch terrors as fill the mind with affrighting amazement and confuſed fears; ſuch terrors as even ſhake the ſeat of reaſon, and, only not, make a man beſides himſelf.

Theſe terrors Job ſhadows out by a double ſimilitude.

Firſt, By the ſimilitude of a violent ſtormy wind, driving all before it, They purſue my ſoul as the wind.

Secondly, Of a melting vaniſhing cloud, My welfare paſſeth away as a cloud: That is, My grievous terrors cauſe my welfare to paſs away as a cloud. Thus he aggravates his terrors by their ſtrong and ſtrange effects. But what were theſe terrors?

Firſt, Some expound the word perſonally; Terrors are turned upon me, that is, Terrible men turn upon me. As if his meaning were, Thoſe terrible ones, whoſe uncivil and inhumane carriage towards me I have deſcribed, thoſe terrible ones, who in my deſolation rolled themſelves upon me, are now turned upon me like wild beaſts to tear me in pieces. Indeed ſome men are ſo terrible, that they may be called terror it ſelf; ſo troubleſome, that they may be called trouble; ſo grievous to others, that we may ſay of them (as commonly we do in ſuch caſes) they are their grief. The Prophet Jeremy denounceth that dreadful threatning againſt Paſhur (Jer. 20. 3, 4.) The Lord hath not called thy name Paſhur, but Magor-miſſabib, that is, fear round about, for behold thus ſaith the Lord, I will make thee a terror to thy ſelf. And as the Lord can make every man a terror to himſelf, ſo he can make himſelf a terror to any man; And this the ſame Prophet moſt earneſtly deprecates (Chap. 17. 17.) Be not a terror unto me, thou art my hope in the day of evil. Yea the Apoſtle ſaith as much of Magiſtrates with reference to their duty in puniſhing offenders (Rom. 13. 3.) Rulers are not a terror to good works, but to evil: Rulers are (we ſee) not only terrible, but a terror, they are ſo to thoſe to whom God will be a terror much more, in the day when he deals with them. Magiſtrates or Rulers are, that is, by vertue of their place they ought to be a terror, or exceeding terrible to evil works, that is, to evil workers. Now, what God is, and the Magiſtrate ought to be to evil workers, that ungodly baſe ſpirited men are to good works, that is, to them whoſe works are good, A terror: And the better any good man is, the more terrible evil men will be unto him. But I ſhall not ſtay upon this Expoſition. For

Secondly, Doubtleſs the terrors here ſpoken of, were thoſe inward fears and troubles which aſſaulted Job's ſpirit while he was compaſſed without with outward troubles. As he was exerciſed with manifold afflictions, both as to his body, ſtate, ſo his ſoul, his mind did not eſcape untouched; Nay, he was deeply, moſt deeply wounded there. Terrors are turned upon me.

Hence Note, A godly man may not only be in trouble, but under terror.

As the troubles of the righteous are many, ſo they are manifold; they have many of the ſame kind, and they have them in ſeveral kinds. They may have not only a troubled ſtate but a troubled heart. There are heart-terrors of two ſorts ſpoken of in this Book. Firſt, Such as are the portion of the wicked. They have the terrors of an evil conſcience, which are ſent like Purſevants from God to attach them, and as tormentors to vex them. Of theſe Eliphaz is to be underſtood (Chap. 15. 20. 21. 24.) Whereas treating of the wicked mans condition, he ſaith thus 'tis with him; He travaileth with pain all his dayes (one dayes pain is a ſore burden) a dreadful ſound is in his ears (his phancy beats up a dreadful alarme againſt him continually) Trouble and anguiſh ſhall make him afraid, they ſhall prevail againſt him as a King ready to the battel. Of theſe terrors (proper to the wicked) read more (Chap. 20. 25. Chap. 27. 20.) Secondly, both in this Book and elſewhere in Scripture, we find terrors ſent upon good men. Job had ſad experience of them, (Chap. 6. 4.) The terrors of God do ſet themſelves in array againſt me. And ſo had Heman (Pſal. 88. 15.) While I ſuffer thy terrors I am diſtracted. Both the Godly and ungodly have terrors, yet of a different kind, and to a very different end. I ſhall not ſtay here, to enlarge about theſe terrors, having ſpoken of both ſorts of terror upon thoſe ſeveral places of this Book lately mentioned. Only conſider Job complaineth of theſe as the soreſt of his afflictions.

Hence Note, Inward terrors or troubles of mind, are more grievous then all outward troubles.

What the Chaldeans and Sabeans did in ſpoyling and preying upon his eſtate, yea what Satan did to his body in ſmiting him with boyls and botches, were but a ſport to theſe terrors with which he was ſmitten by the hand of God. When an arrow is ſhot into the ſoul, who is able to expreſs the pain of it? A wounded ſpirit who can bear! Bodily ſufferings and the deepeſt woundings of the fleſh, are but as the prick or ſcratch of a pin to the ſufferings of the ſoul. That's a woful Judgment which the Lord threatneth to bring upon his people in caſe of diſobedience (Levit. 26. 15, 16.) If ye ſhall deſpiſe my ſtatutes, if your ſoul abhor my Judgments, &c. I alſo will do this unto you, I will even appoint over you terror, conſumption, and the burning ague, that ſhall conſume the eyes, and cauſe ſorrow of heart. As if he had ſaid, If ye will not obey me as your King, I will make terror a King over you, terror ſhall prevail and rule over you, terror ſhall bring you into ſubjection, and hold your necks under its iron yoak, as a mighty King; I will not only appoint the ſword, famine, and peſtilence over you, which are outward viſible troubles, but I will appoint terror, which is inward trouble and vexation of mind over you. The Lord renewed this threat (Deut. 32. 25.) The ſword without, and terror within, ſhall deſtroy both the young man and the Virgin, the Suckling alſo with the man of grey haires. Terror within is the uſual effect of the ſword without. And though we may expound ſword without and terror within, by grievous troubles without dores and within dores, in the open field or high wayes, and in the houſe; yet ſword without, may alſo note judgment upon the body, and terror within, trouble and affrightment upon the mind or ſpirit. Many are ſlain by terrors within, who feel no ſtroak without. Thus the Prophet ſpeaks of the Jewiſh Nation (Iſa. 22. 2.) Thy ſlain men are not ſlain with the ſword nor dead in battel. How then were they ſlain? And of what dyed they? Some expound it thus; They were not ſlain with the ſword, but by the peſtilence, nor dyed they by battel, but by famine; yet others (to which I rather incline) conceive the Prophets meaning to be, that ſuch terror would take hold upon them at the report of the enemies reproach, that they ſhould be ſtruck dead, or dye with fear. Thus Rahab tells the ſpies (Joſhua 2. 9.) I know the Lord hath given you the land, and that your terror is fallen upon us, and that all the inhabitants of the land faint becauſe of you. Your terror is fallen upon us (ſaith ſhe) and that is worſe to us then your Army which is ready to fall upon us. We are as dead with fear of you, before ever your ſword hath toucht us. Hence the Prophet makes that earneſt deprecation toucht before (Jer. 17. 17.) Lord, be not thou a terror unto me. Jeremiah doth not deprecate the evil day it ſelf, he ſaith not, Lord, let not an evil day come upon me; But be not thou a terror to me in the evil day. I ſhall be able (through thy aſſiſtance) to bear and wreſtle with the evil day, but I am not able to wreſtle with or bear thy terror in the evil day. It is ſaid, (Iſa. 33. 10.) Thine eyes ſhall ſee the King in his beauty, they ſhall behold the land that is very far off. Thine heart ſhall meditate terror. Saints ſhall meditate terror with a kind of joy, as being above it, and delivered from it by their King. But to meditate terror with nothing but terror before our eyes, is terrible indeed. Hence that promiſe (Iſa. 54. 14.) In righteouſneſs ſhalt thou be eſtabliſhed: Thou ſhalt be far from oppreſſion, for thou ſhalt not fear; and from terror, for it ſhall not come near thee. Job's caſe was far from that promiſed mercy while he cryed out in the anguiſh of his ſoul.

Terrors are turned upon me.] There ſeems to be an alluſion in the word turned, to a wild beaſt, to a Lion, or a Bear, who ſeeing his prey turns upon it, and then follows it with all eagerneſs, as the next words intimate.

They purſue my ſoul as the wind.

See what work they made with him, They purſue his ſoul. The Word ſignifieth to follow very cloſely and earneſtly; As a perſecutor followeth a good man to take away his life, or as the Hound follows the Hare or Deer to catch his prey. The word is uſed in Scripture both in a good and in an evil ſence; (Pſal. 23. 6.) Surely goodneſs and mercy ſhall follow (or purſue,) me all the dayes of my life. 'Tis a full mercy to be followed or purſued with mercy, to have mercies even thruſt upon us. And as good purſues good men, ſo good men are ſaid to purſue that which is good, (Pſal. 34. 14.) Depart from evil and do good, ſeek peace and purſue it. 'Tis this word, we ſhould follow peace with all our might and heat; not as upon a cold ſent, but in the warmth and ſtrength of our ſpirits (Prov. 15. 9.) The way of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord: But he loveth him that followeth after (or purſueth) righteouſneſs. Righteouſneſs hath many oppoſers and perverters, but few purſuers. We can never run far enough from evil, nor faſt enough after that which is good. Yet the nature of man is far more ſlack to purſue good then evil, yea indeed the nature of man can hardly be reclaimed or held back from the fierceſt purſuit of evil. This word is uſed in caution by Solomon (Prov. 11. 19.) As righteouſneſs tendeth to life; So he that purſueth evil, purſueth it to his own death. Solomon doth not ſay, he that doth evil, but he that purſueth evil; That is, who doth it with a kind of force and violence, or he that hunteth and followeth this game earneſtly, ſhall dye for it, or only catch his death by it. Thus here terrors purſued Job's ſoul, they hunted him, and preſt hard upon him. Terrors (ſaith he) purſue

My ſoul.] The word by us tranſlated ſoul, falls under much variety of rendring; The Septuagint ſay, They purſue my hope; I ſee not upon what ground they raiſe this interpretation, unleſs we take it in a figure, hope, for that which his ſoul hoped for; and ſo the Vulgar, They purſue my deſire; that is, all that I had in this world worth the deſiring; and hence a third ſaith, They purſue my children; I ſee as little reaſon for that (though children are the moſt deſireable pieces of the world) ſeeing his children were dead and gone. A fourth ſort render it, They purſue my honour, my dignity. A fifth, They purſue my ingenuity; that is, as the ſame Author gloſſeth it, my glory, meaning that glory both of his ſtate and actions which he had deſcribed in the former Chapter. Mr. Broughton renders neer to this ſence; Each courſe my Nobility as the wind; As if he had ſaid, They have deprived me not only of my riches and wealth, of all means of exerciſing bounty, or ſhewing my ſelf honourable, but (as much as in them lyeth) they have deprived me of my credit, eſtimation and honour. In purſuance of which expoſition ſome tranſlate the latter part of the verſe (And my welfare paſſeth away as a cloud) thus, I as a Prince or Saviour paſs away. The Hebrew words ſignifying Welfare, Salvation, or Saviour, are all of one and the ſame root. Mr. Calvin inſiſts chiefly upon this meaning of the words as his tranſlation expreſſeth it, They purſued mine excellency as a wind. All theſe readings, They purſued my dignity, my nobility, my ingenuity, mine excellency, carry a fair complyance with Job's ſcope, and the general purpoſe of this Scripture. For whereas he had been exalted in dignity, and was a man of a very noble extraction; Notwithſtanding all this, theſe vile perſons before ſpoken of, did what they could with their black mouths and ſlanderous tongues, to obſcure and darken his name, to turn his glory into ſhame, and to lay his honour in the duſt, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh. Nor can it be doubted but Job after all the affronts and ignominious uſages which that unworthy ſort of men offered him, had reaſon enough to aſſert not only his integrity and honeſty, but his dignity and his honour, which they had ſo wretchedly torn and ſtained; or at leaſt to complain that thoſe impudent perſons who had caſt off all ſhame, ſhould thus falſely and barbarouſly attempt or invade his honour, and caſt ſhame upon him. Thus we may well accommodate thoſe various tranſlations to the Text; yet I conceive our own every way as ſutable to Job's intendment, and the purport of the whole Chapter; And therefore I ſhall return to the explication and improvment of that.

They purſue my ſoul.] That is, they purſue me to the uttermoſt; They are not contented with my body, or goods, or good name, they would have my ſoul alſo. That which we are ſaid to do or deſire with our ſoul, we do and we deſire it to the utmoſt; Praiſe the Lord, O my ſoul, ſaid David (Pſal. 103. 1.) With my ſoul have I deſired thee in the night, ſaith the Church (Iſa. 20. 9.) Now, as what we do and deſire with our ſoul, we both do and deſire it with greateſt earneſtneſs; ſo when we purſue or proſecute the ſoul of another, we purſue and proſecute him earneſtly. It is ſaid of the Adultereſs (Prov. 6. 26.) She will hunt for the precious life or ſoul. And the devil, that mighty hunter, is alwayes hunting for the ſoul; And do we not know that both the Devil and the Adultreſs hunt, as with all their might, ſo with unwearied diligence; Thus ſaith Job, they hunt or purſue my ſoul, The ſoul in Scripture is often put for the whole man, the perſon, and ſo tis here; Only to ſhew what mark Satan chiefly aimed at by all the inſtruments which he ſtir'd up and acted to afflict Job, it is here ſaid they purſued his ſoul. What cared the Devil for his Oxen, Camels and Aſſes, which he plundered by the Chaldeans and Sabeans? What cared he for his flocks of Sheep which he conſumed by fire? Or for his Children, whom he deſtroyed by a wind? Yea what cared Satan for his body, which he ſmote with ſores and loathſome diſeaſes? Yea what cared he for his honour, and good name, which he devoured by the foul mouths of thoſe abuſive miſcreants? All that he ſhot at through all theſe, was his ſoul, which he knew would be a morſel fit only for himſelf, if once he could but provoke him by all or any of theſe temptations to blaſpheme God and dye. They purſue my ſoul.

And why did the Devil by all his agents purſue Job's ſoul? That reading which our tranſlators put in the Margin of our Bibles, may give us a profitable account or reaſon of it; They purſue my principal one; The Text ſaith my ſoul, the Margin ſaith my principal one; we may joyn both in this following obſervation.

The ſoul of man is the principal part of man.

The ſoul is as a Princeſs in man; The ſoul rules and governs the body, and diſpoſeth all the natural motions of it, even as a Prince diſpoſeth of all civil motions and affairs in his Dominions. Man acts not, nor doth a finger ſtir without order from the ſoul, and therefore the ſoul moſt juſtly deſerves, and moſt properly bears the honour of this Noble Title, The Princeſs or principal one in man. As man is a Prince over all the inferior creatures, ſo the ſoul is a Princeſs in man. It will not be either unprofitable or impertinent a while to proſecute this notion of the ſoul. There are two or three other words uſed in the Hebrew of the old Teſtament, for the ſoul of man, but none of them have ſuch an Emphaſis or ſignificancy as this under diſcuſſion; A principal one. The ſoul may be ſtiled, The principal one, or chief part in man, with reſpect

Firſt, to its Original; For although God made the body of man as well as his ſoul, yet he hath declared himſelf more in Scripture, as to the making of the ſoul, then of the body; (Gen. 2. 7.) And the Lord God formed man of the duſt of the ground, and breathed into his noſtrils the breath of life: And man became a living ſoul. The body was formed out of pre-exiſting matter, but the ſoul was breathed immediately from God himſelf. And to ſhew how much the ſoul of man doth excel his body, man is not called a living body, but a living ſoul. Denomination is uſually given and taken from the more noble part. Yea the Original of the ſoul is ſo much from God beyond that of the body, that the Scripture ſpeaks often as if God had to do only with the Original of the ſoul, leaving the Original of the body to the earth for the material cauſe of it, and to the natural father, as the inſtrumental cauſe of it. The former is expreſs (Eccl. 12. 7.) where Solomon ſhewing what becomes of man, or how he is beſtowed after his diſſolution by death, ſtates it thus, Then ſhall the duſt (that is, the body) return to the earth as it was, and the ſpirit (that is, the ſoul) ſhall return to God who gave it. The latter is as expreſs (Heb. 12. 9.) Furthermore, we have had Fathers of our fleſh, which corrected us, and we gave them reverence, ſhall we not much rather be in ſubjection to the father of ſpirits, and live? The ſoul is not traduced from earthly parents, but produced by the power of God; It doth not reſult or ſpring from the craſis or temperament of the body, as the life or ſoul of a beaſt doth, but is the peculiar gift of God; God gave to beaſts breath and life, but he did not breath into them the breath of life; The life of beaſts was concreated with their bodies, whereas the body of man was firſt formed, and then by a ſecond act the ſoul was at once infuſed, and the body enlivened. God breathed into mans body the breath of life, and he became a living ſoul; yet his ſoul was not of God by way of emanation (as ſome have both erroneouſly and blaſphemouſly aſſerted) but of or from God by an act of creation. And as the excellency of the ſoul above the body doth appear by its Original, ſo

Miror ſi conſenſeris huic homini (Vincentio, nimirum Victori) quòd anima ex Deo ita ſit, ut ab ipſo emanarit. Auguſt. ad Petrum presbyt.

Secondly, By its Operations; 'Tis the ſoul which doth all the Noble work in man. The ſenſitive life which man hath in common with beaſts, ſerves him only to perform or put forth thoſe acts which are common to beaſts and men; as to hear, to ſee, to taſt, to ſmell, to feel, to move from place to place, to eat and drink; But 'tis the ſoul in man which underſtandeth, reaſoneth and diſcourſeth; 'Tis the ſoul which willeth, deſireth, and remembreth; And 'tis the ſoul which loveth, hateth, rejoyceth, ſorroweth. And though beaſts which have only a ſenſitive or bodily life, do ſome things like theſe, yet properly they can do none of theſe, nor can they do any of them at all in compariſon of man, whoſe ſole prerogative it is to be endowed with a reaſonable ſoul.

Thirdly, (which further exalts the ſoul, as Mans principal one, above his body,) when the body hath done growing in bigneſs and talneſs of ſtature; Then the ſoul often hath its greateſt growth in knowledge, wiſdom and underſtanding. When the body ſits ſtill and moves neither hand nor foot, the ſoul can be in its ſwifteſt motions, and travel in meditation to the ends of the earth, it can then aſcend the heights of Heaven, and go down to the depths of Hell. Again, when the body is weakned by ſickneſs and old age, yea brought to the duſt of death, then the ſoul can gather ſtrength, and renew its ſpiritual youth like the Eagle. Thus ſpake the Apoſtle (2 Cor. 4. 16.) Though our outward man periſh, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. And this the Apoſtle John (Ep. 3. 2.) doth more then intimate, when he ſaith to his well-beloved Gaius, I wiſh above all things (he meaneth worldly things) that thou mayeſt proſper and be in health (that is, that thou mayeſt proſper in thy health) as thy ſoul proſpereth. It ſhould ſeem, that good man and friendly hoſt of the Saints, Gaius, had but a weak conſumptive body, yet a very thriving and vigorous ſoul. And 'tis a general truth, that as we every where ſee (and have cauſe to bewail it) men of ſtrong, healthy, active bodies, yet having poor, weak, lame, ſickly ſouls; ſo we may ſometimes ſee (and have cauſe to rejoyce in it) men carrying about them feeble, decaying, dying bodies, yet healthy and lively ſouls. Once more, when the body is in extreameſt pains, when 'tis even tortur'd with the ſtone, gout, colick, and other acute diſeaſes, yea when 'tis tormented with the moſt exquiſite ſufferings which the wit of cruel Tyrants and perſecuters can invent, or their rage and malice inflict upon the body, by racking, burning, breaking the bones, opening the bowels, and pouring in boyling lead, yet then the ſouls repleniſht with comfort, and rejoyceth with joy unſpeakable and full of glory.

Thirdly, The ſoul is our principal one, if we conſider the immortality of it. The earthly tabernacle of mans body ſhakes and is ready to fall into the earth every day. Duſt thou art and unto duſt thou ſhalt return, was the ſentence of God upon the body of man as ſoon as he had ſinned. Death entred at the ſame door by which ſin did; And therefore it is appointed for men once to dye (Heb. 9. 27.) There's no avoiding the mortality of the body. But the ſoul is an immortal piece, and it is immortal not only by divine ordination, as the body of Adam was before the fall (who then had a poſſibility not to dye, though his body conſidered in its materials was in a poſſibility of dying.) But the ſoul is immortal, according to its natural conſtitutive properties, or the perfection of its nature; when God made the ſoul, he ſtampt immortality upon the very being and conſtitution of it. Thus Angels and the ſouls of men are immortal, becauſe free from elementary matter and all contrariety of qualities, which are the ſeed or root of corruption. The ſoul is not only ſpiritual, but a ſpirit, as the Angels are, and ſo is of an everlaſting make, and cannot be diſſolved.

But ſome may ſay, you put too much honour upon the ſoul, in aſcribing immortality to it: The Apoſtle ſaith (1 Tim. 6. 16.) God only hath immortality, &c. Why then do you ſay, the ſoul is immortal? Is not this to put a Crown of dignity upon the ſoul, which is the Lords peculiar?

I anſwer; God only is immortal, ſimply, abſolutely, primitively and independently; yet the ſoul hath alſo a dependent communicated immortality; or the ſoul is immortal by its conſtitution received and derived from God; He hath not put any ingredients of death into it. And were it not thus, the ſoul were not above the body, but (as to this) the bodies equal. Beſides, were not the ſoul immortal, to what purpoſe were all thoſe promiſes of eternal life, and threatnings of eternal death? Again, Chriſt proving the reſurrection of the body, (Matth. 22. 31, 32.) ſaith to the Jews, Have ye not read that which was ſpoken to you (while it was ſpoken to your Fathers) by God, ſaying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob; From which Chriſt maketh this inference in the cloſe of the verſe; God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. But were not Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob dead? Yes, their bodies were dead, but their ſouls lived, and thence he argues that their bodies alſo ſhould be raiſed again to life, and remarried to their living ſouls. The very queſtions, doubts and debates, which have been made about the ſouls immortality, are a proof that it is immortal; For as none can diſtinguiſh between rational and irrational, who have not a rational ſoul, ſo none can diſtinguiſh between mortal and immortal, who have not an immortal ſoul. 'Tis alſo ſome proof of it, that there is an affectation of a kind of immortality diſcernable in the worſt of men. What pillars, what monuments have they erected to perpetuate or immortalize their memories? Yea the Scripture ſaith (Pſal. 49. 11.) Their inward thought is, that their houſes ſhall continue for ever, and their dwelling places to all generations, they call their lands after their own names. Nothing leſs will ſerve their turns, then for ever, and to all Generations. The unſatisfiedneſs of the mind with temporal things, when looked upon as Temporal, and thoſe reachings of the ſoul, even in carnal men, after an eternity of enjoyment, ſhew plainly that the ſoul is eternal; I have ſome where read, That Epicurus, (whom Antiquity hath ſo far branded for placing the chief good of man in pleaſure (though ſome ſay he meant it not of ſenſual, but contemplative pleaſure) that all voluptuous perſons, or perſons given up to and drencht in ſenſual pleaſure take their denomination (whether rightly or no, is not my work to diſcuſs) from him, and are vulgarly called Epicures; 'tis reported, I ſay, that this Epicurus) gave a penſion for perpetuity, that his Birth-day might be remembred and ſolemniz'd perpetually. All theſe latter conſiderations, are evidences from nature, beſides the evidences of Scripture, That the ſoul is immortal. And

We call the ſoul immortal, not only as that which ſhall never have a total and final end, or be extinct for ever; But we call it immortal, as that which ſhall never have any pauſe of its exiſtence, as the body ſhall.

There is an opinion ſtart up or awakened among us about the ſouls ſleeping, that is, dying with the body; Theſe vain Opinioniſts make the ſoul nothing elſe but an effect iſſuing from the temperament of the body (which was toucht before) as the life of a beaſt is. But we ſay the ſoul is immortal, and ceaſeth not at all, it ſhall not as the body be reſtored by the reſurrection from the dead to an immortality, but ſhall remain for ever immortal. The Scripture calls us to believe the reſurrection of the body, we hear nothing there about a reſurrection of the ſoul. The truth is, the ſoul falls not with the body, and therefore hath no need to riſe with it. Though the tye be broken between the ſoul and the body, yet the ſoul retains its being. The Word of God and divine reaſon grounded thereupon, every where confutes this dream of the ſouls ſleep; or as ſome have more broadly called it of the ſouls mortality though a little veiled under the title of Mans Mortality, by man underſtanding the whole man, conſiſting of body and ſoul. Let me only ſay to ſuch, if the ſoul doth not exiſt or live while the body remaineth under the power of death, and is conſumed to duſt, why ſhould Paul ſay (Phil. 1. 23.) I am in a ſtrait between two, having a deſire to depart and to be with Chriſt, which is far better, if he had not believed that his ſoul ſhould live when departed? What advantage ſhould he get, or what gain by death as to his being with Chriſt, if his ſoul ſhould ceaſe to be, or be aſleep with his body when he was dead? Paul was ſurely more with Chriſt, and enjoyed more of Chriſt while he lived, then he could do after death, if his ſoul did not ſurvive his body, and go to heaven while his body went to the Earth, and was houſed in the grave. And again, why doth the ſame Apoſtle aſſert (2 Cor. 5. 6.) Whileſt we are at home in the body, we are abſent from the Lord; and (ver. 8.) We are confident, I ſay, and willing rather to be abſent from the body and to be preſent with the Lord; Why all this? If the ſoul go down to the duſt with the body, what preſence have we with the Lord, when we dye? Wherefore upon theſe and many other Scripture Authorities which might be alledged, we conclude, The ſoul is immortal, not (as theſe pretend and grant) becauſe it ſhall be raiſed to an immortal life with the body, but becauſe it abides and lives, when ſeparate and parted from the body. I ſhall only add this caution; They who begin to deny the immortality of the ſoul (in this ſenſe) are in a fair way to deny its immortality in any ſenſe. Atheiſm is a weed that hath grown apace in this age, Though I am much perſwaded 'tis now a withering.

Now, If the ſoul be our principal one, upon all theſe aforementioned accounts, ſurely we have cauſe to complain of many for dealing ſo ill with their ſouls. The Lord by his holy Prophet reproves thoſe who called Zion an out-caſt, ſaying, This is Zion, whom no man ſeeketh after. Have we not cauſe to reprove thoſe, who regard their ſouls as if they were no better then out-caſts, nor worth the ſeeking after? How many are there who value their ſouls as if they were of no value? Who ſell their principal one for a thing of nought? The Prophet complains of thoſe Oppreſſors who ſold the poor for a pair of ſhoos (Amos 2. 6.) do not many ſell their ſouls at as goodly a price as a pair of ſhoos? They who hazzard their ſouls for the higheſt earthly concernments, they who aim not at ſmall matters when they ſin, but (as the Eagle which ſtoops not at a fly) purſue the beſt game in the world to the wrong of their ſouls, neither know the worth of their ſouls, nor the worthleſneſs of the world. How fooliſh then are they who looſe their ſouls to catch and get flyes! Remember your ſoul is your principal one. And therefore they only are truly wiſe, who beſtow their principal care upon their principal one, their ſoul. We ſhould pay our greateſt tribute of labour for the ſafety of this principal one in our boſomes; yet we ſadly ſee (as Solomon ſaid, Eccl. 6. 7.) All the labour of a man is for his mouth, for what he ſhall eat and drink. Many hundreds of profeſſions have been invented, and their profeſſors are labouring all day for the body, but how few are at work for the enriching and ſaving of their own ſouls? How do men ſtudy the health of their bodies, the ſafety of their bodies, the ing of their bodies, while the health and ſafety, while the adorning and beautifying of their ſouls is little thought on, yea, while the ſoul ſits in the tattered beggarly rags of the old Adam, filthy and unclean. When Pambus ſaw an Harlot curiouſly dreſſing and trimming her ſelf with her comb and her glaſs, he broke out into tears, upon a double conſideration: Firſt, Becauſe ſhe took ſo much care to undo her ſoul: Secondly, becauſe he took too little care in providing for his own. What pleaſing objects are ſought out for the eye? what delightful muſick for the ear? what delicate diſhes for the palate? while the ſoul feeds only upon ſcraps, while thoſe things which eye hath not ſeen, which ear hath not heard, are not enquired after for the ſoul: And is this to eſteem the ſoul our principal one! Are not ſome men at more charge by the year about one member of the body, yea, about that which is but an excrement of the body, their hair, then they are at about their ſouls? And which is yet worſe, do not ſome even willingly let their ſouls ſtarve here and dye for ever to ſave charges? Is this to eſteem the ſoul our principal one? Some are ſo greedy after, and pride themſelves ſo much in bodily beauty, that they will paint for it, rather then not appear in it; and all the ſpiritual beauty which not a few deſire for their ſouls, is but to have them painted over with a little formal Profeſſion of Religion; whereas indeed the ſoul is never ſo ugly and unlovely in the eye of God, as when 'tis thus painted. The faireſt colours of hypocriſie are more abominable before God, then the fouleſt dirt of meer prophaneneſs. Generally men would have every thing good about them; they would have good air to breath in, good houſes to dwell in, good ſervants to attend them, good horſes to ride on; and while they would thus have all good about them, they (as one of the Ancients complained) are not at all ſolicitous to have that which is more then all, or their principal one, their ſoul, good within them. Men will not truſt their bodies in the hand of an unskilful Phyſician; nor will they venture their bodies at Sea with an unexperienced Pilot; yet ſome will truſt their ſouls with meer Empericks in Divinity, with men unskilful in the word of righteouſneſs, with Phyſicians of no value, with Pilots of no experience in the compaſs of ſoul matters and concernments. Laſtly, If a man have an eſtate in the world, he will ſettle and diſpoſe it the ſureſt way he can before he dyes; yea, ſome will diſpoſe of their bodies, and direct how and where to be buried before they dye; while in the mean-time their ſouls, which have made all theſe ſettlements and diſpoſures, remain undiſpoſed of, and at the greateſt uncertainties imaginable, what ſhall become of them, and whither they ſhall go when they dye. And is this to reckon or eſtimate the ſoul as our principal one? David prophecying of Chriſt, ſaith (Pſal. 22. 20.) Deliver my ſoul from the ſword; my darling from the power of the dog! His ſoul was his darling, or his only one (as we put in the Margin) As Job here calls it the principal one, ſo David, both there and Pſal. 35. 17. calls it his only one. Parents who have but one only Child, make that their darling; and ſometimes, though a Parent hath many Children, yet he ſets his love upon one as his darling, or only one. Every mans ſoul is or ought to be his darling, his choice one, his only one, for indeed he hath but one. And if a mans ſoul be loſt, the man is loſt; all is loſt in that one which is his principal one.

Quomodo fit ut inter bona tua omnia non vis eſſe malum niſi teipſum. Aug. Serm. 145. de Tempore.

Thus I have ventured a little diſcourſe ſomewhat beyond the rules of an Expoſition, to improve this uſeful notion of the ſoul, taking my hint from the Hebrew elegancy or propriety of the Original, obſerved by our Tranſlators, rendring the ſame word, ſoul, in the Text, and principal one in the Margin of our Bibles. Chriſt, ſpeaking of the Church, ſaith (Cant. 6. 9.) My dove, my undefiled is but one; ſhe is the only one of her mother; ſhe is the choice one of her that bare her. O get your ſouls waſhed from their defilement, and keep them undefiled, your ſoul is your choice, your choiceſt one, the ſoul is your only one. They purſue my ſoul (or my principal one.)

Ventorum celeritas in proverbio eſt; unde ocyor vento. Druſ.

As the wind.] That is, as the wind purſues the duſt or ſtubble. The wind may be ſaid to purſue under a threefold apprehenſion: Firſt, With much ſuddenneſs, The wind blows when and where it liſteth for all that man can do, or let him do what he liſt. Secondly, The wind purſues with great violence, it bears down all, or carries all before it. Thirdly, The wind comes ſwiftly; and therefore hath wings aſcribed to it. David ſaith (Pſal. 18. 10.) The Lord rode upon a Cherub and did flie, yea, he did fly upon the wings of the wind. That is, He came, as, with irreſiſtible power, nothing could withſtand him, or ſtand before him; ſo, with fulleſt ſpeed and celerity, nothing could eſcape him. So then, to purſue as the wind, is a proverbial ſpeech, importing ſuddenneſs, ſtrength, and ſwiftneſs in coming. Thus, Terrors purſued his ſoul as the wind: They came ſuddenly upon him before he was aware of them; they came forcibly upon him, he could not withſtand them, he was almoſt quite overthrown or overborn by them; they came ſwiftly upon him, his were winged flying terrors, he could not flee from them, nor eſcape them. They purſue my ſoul as the wind,

And my welfare paſſeth away as a Cloud.

The word which we render welfare, ſignifies ſalvation; ſo Mr. Broughton tranſlates here, My ſalvation is paſſed away as a Cloud. But ſhall we think that Job was deſperate, or that all his hopes of ſalvation were fled and gone? Nothing leſs. Salvation is twofold, either temporal or eternal; it concerns either the ſtate of the ſoul in grace and glory, or of the body in peace and proſperity. In the former ſence, Job was ſo far from thinking that his welfare or ſalvation was paſſed away, that he was aſſured it ſhould not; he was ſo far from deſponding or deſpairing in that point, that his faith was riſen up to a pleropory or full perſwaſion (Chap. 19. 25) I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms deſtroy this body, yet in my fleſh ſhall I ſee God, whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf, and mine eyes ſhall behold him, and not another, &c. And (Chap. 13. 15.) Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him, but I will maintain mine own wayes before him; he alſo ſhall be my ſalvation. Surely then, Job had not thrown up his hopes of eternal ſalvation. But as for his temporal ſalvation, or the welfare of his body and outward eſtate in this world, he had laid down the expectation of it; and he might well ſuppoſe that thoſe many ſad providences of God ſpake aloud to him, and with one voice, that he was a gone man as to the comforts and enjoyments of this preſent life.

Yet take ſpiritual ſalvation in a large ſence (as we render it) for the preſent welfare of his ſoul, or for thoſe comforts which uſually attend thoſe who are in a ſtate of ſalvation, and then he might ſay that his ſoul-ſalvation was paſſed away as a Cloud. Thus David's ſalvation was paſſed away, when he prayed (Pſal. 51. 12.) Reſtore unto me the joy of thy ſalvation.

Hence Note, There is no good in this life, but may either in part, or in whole, in kind, or at leaſt in degree, paſs away and be parted from us.

As there is no corporal good, as health and ſtrength, riches and honour, friends and relations, but may wholly and altogether paſs away (1 John 2. 17.) The world paſſeth away, and the luſts thereof; that is, all thoſe things of the world after which we luſt. So there is no ſpiritual good which may not paſs away in part, or as to the ſenſible degrees of our injoyment: We way loſe the ſight not only of things viſible (which is moſt grievous to a natural man) but of things inviſible (which is moſt grievous to the ſpiritual man.) Solomon ſpeaks of riches (Prov. 23. 5.) They certainly make themſelves wings, they flee away as an Eagle towards Heaven. They flee away as an Eagle which will not come to the lure, nor be called back again. There are many Birds of prey which ye may allure back to your hand; but riches flee towards Heaven as an Eagle which will not be lured back. Thus alſo the comforts of the ſoul often make themſelves wings and flee away; only this comfort remains, though not with us, yet for us, they will certainly return. They do not flee away as the Eagle towards Heaven; though we be in darkneſs, and ſee no light, we ſhall have light, and ſee no darkneſs; thoſe former conſolations which are paſſed away as a cloud, and leave us under a cloud, ſhall riſe again as the Sun ſhining in full ſtrength and brightneſs. My welfare paſſeth away

As a Cloud.] Before he ſaid, Terrors purſued me as the wind; here (ſaith he) My welfare paſſeth away as a cloud. This ſimilitude is of the ſame ſignification with the former. Clouds paſs ſwiftly, (Iſa. 60. 8.) Who are theſe that flie as a cloud? Said the Church, admiring the quick and free acceſs of the Gentiles to faith in Chriſt. And clouds when the Sun ariſeth and ſhineth clearly paſs away (as to ſight) totally, there's no appearance of them. When the Spirit of God by the Prophet Hoſea would ſet forth that total deſolation which was to fall upon Iſrael for their idolatry, we find it thus expreſſed (Hoſ. 13. 3.) Therefore they ſhall be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew it paſſeth away. To which we may add that of the ſame Prophet, (Hoſ. 6. 4.) O Ephraim what ſhall I do unto thee? O Judah what ſhall I do unto thee? For your goodneſs is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away. As our goodneſs in reference to God, ſo the goodneſs of God to us ſometimes paſſeth away like a cloud. And ſo ſome expound that Text, not of their goodneſs towards God, but of the goodneſs of God towards them. It is altogether impoſſible, that either the goodneſs of God in his nature, or the goodneſs of his actions ſhould paſs away; He is good for ever, and whatſoever he doth is good; He can no more ceaſe to be or to do good, then he can ceaſe to be God; yet the ſenſible goodneſs of God in temporal things often paſſeth away, and the ſweetneſs of his goodneſs in ſpirituals may ſometimes paſs away ſo far, that we can make out nothing of it to our ſelves, nor ſee the good of any promiſe that belongs to us. And then indeed, our welfare is paſſed away as a cloud.

Job having thus given us a deſcription of the terrors and troubles which fell upon his ſpirit, proceeds to ſhew their ſad effects both upon his inward and outward man.

VERS. 16, 17.

And now my ſoul is poured out upon me; The dayes of affliction have taken hold upon me.

My bones are pierced in the night ſeaſon: And my ſinews take no reſt.

IN the former verſe Job opened the troubles of his mind, terrors purſued or perſecuted his ſoul, his principal one: In this ſixteenth, as alſo in the ſeventeenth and eighteenth verſes, we have a deſcription of the pains and languiſhments of his body, together with their effects upon his ſpirit; and at the nineteenth verſe we have the reſult of all; in which as in a glaſs we may ſee in what plight and pickle Job was, or to what he was reduced by all theſe ſufferings, He hath caſt me into the mire, and I am become like duſt and aſhes.

Verſ. 16. And now my ſoul is poured out upon me.

And now;] That is, things being come to this paſs, or to this extreamity, the waters of trouble being ſwell'd and grown thus high, Now my ſoul is poured out upon me. At the fifteenth verſe he ſaid, Terrors purſued my ſoul as the wind; here he ſaith, My ſoul is poured out upon mee. This pouring out of his ſoul upon him, was not only a conſequent, but an effect of that terrible purſuit which was made after his ſoul.

In the Original, there are two different words uſed in theſe two places, both which we, in our tranſlation, render ſoul. Job uſed a very peculiar word in the former verſe, to expreſs his ſoul by, calling it in ſtrictneſs of reading, his chief or principal one; but in this verſe he uſeth a word of a more large and Common ſignification to the ſame purpoſe, which therefore in Scripture is rendred under various notions.

Firſt, ſometimes no more is intended by it then the breath of man; which is an effect of life; Mans breath (that is, his life) is in his noſtrils; He that hath breath in his noſtrils, lives, and to have our breath in our noſtrils, notes the frailty of our lives.

Secondly, The word imports not only breath, but life, which is the ſpring of breath. God ſaith (Job 2. 6.) Behold he is in thine hand, but ſpare his life, or breath, (we render it ſoul.) David praying for deliverance from his Enemy, uſeth this argument, (Pſal. 7. 2.) Leſt he tear my ſoul like a Lion, renting it in pieces, while there is none to deliver. It is not in the power of all the Lions or Tyrants, in the world to touch the ſoul of man; when they have kild the body, they have no more to do; but when he ſaith, leſt they tear my ſoul, the meaning is, leſt they take away my life; As if he had ſaid, They ſeek to deſtroy me, they thirſt after my blood, I ſee nothing elſe will quench their bloody thirſt, Therefore O Lord deliver me. So 'tis ſaid of Rachel in travail with child (Gen. 35. 18.) It came to paſs as her ſoul was departing, (for ſhe dyed;) That is, as her life was departing, or as ſhe was dying, that ſhe called his name Benoni.

Thirdly, The word notes any creature endued with a ſenſitive life. In which general ſence Moſes gives it (Gen. 1. 24.) And God ſaid, let the earth bring forth the living creature (or ſoul) after his kind, cattel and creeping thing, &c.

Fourthly, 'Tis put for the whole man, conſiſting of ſoul and body (Gen. 12. 5.) And Abraham took Sarah his wife, and Lot his Brothers ſon, and all the ſubſtance that they had gathered, and the ſouls that they had gotten in Charan, and they went forth, &c.

Fifthly, It ſometimes ſignifies a Carkaſs, or a dead body, a body from which the ſoul is departed (Levit. 19. 28.) Ye ſhall not make any cutting in your fleſh for the dead, or for a ſoul. We find the Word again in that ſence (Numb. 5. 2.) Command the Children of Iſrael that they put out of the Camp every Leper, and every one that hath an Iſſue, and whoſoever is defiled by the dead. So (Hag. 2. 13.) If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of theſe, &c. It may ſeem very ſtrange that the ſame word ſhould ſignifie life and a dead body, yet it doth, for this reaſon (ſay ſome) that we might remember that life and ſoul belong to the dead bodies of men, or that even a dead body ſhall be raiſed again by the power of God to life, and remarried (after that long ſeparation) to the ſoul in the morning of the reſurrection.

Animamq; ſepulchro condimus. Virg. Æneid. 4.

Sixthly, This word imports appetite, deſire, will, luſt, which are acts of the ſoul. (Pſal. 27. 12.) Deliver mee not over unto the will (or luſt) of mine enemies. The word is, Deliver me not over to the ſoul of mine enemies; that is, Deliver me not over to ſuch a ſoul as hath only will and luſt, without reaſon to direct either its reſolutions or actions by. Solomon applyeth it alſo to that inferiour faculty, ſenſual appetite, (Prov. 23. 2.) When thou ſitteſt to eat with a Ruler, conſider diligently what is before thee, and put a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to appetite, if thou be a man that haſt a ſoul; that is, a ſoul made up of or maſter'd by appetite. The Hebrew ſtrictly taken is thus rendred, If thou art a Maſter of the ſoul or appetite. And the Text would run well in that plain ſence, as if Solomon had ſaid, If thou art a Maſter of, or canſt rule and command, thy ſoul or appetite, then ſhew it by thy moderation in eating, or by checking thy appetite when thou ſitteſt at the Rulers table. But we render it, and ſo do moſt of the learned tranſlaters, as a phraſe ſignifying a man very apt to be maſter'd by his appetite, In which ſence the word is rendred again (Prov. 22. 24.) Make no friendſhip with an angry man; the Hebrew is with a Maſter of anger, we render it according to the ſcope and exigence of the place with an angry man, that is, with a man who is apt to be maſter'd and overcome with anger, or (as we commonly expreſs it) with a man who hath no command of his paſſions. Thus in the Scripture firſt alleged, the text neceſſitates that meaning of the phraſe, which our tranſlation holds out, if thou art a man given to ſoul or appetite; As if Solomon had ſaid, If thou haſt an appetite which thou canſt not well rule, thou hadſt need look well to it at all times, but then eſpecially when thou ſitteſt with the Ruler. Rulers have full Tables, and many when they are at them, inſtead of putting a knife to their throats by abſtinence, put a knife to their throats by their intemperance, and ſo while they fill their bellies, deſtroy their lives, and cut their own throats. When men are famiſht with want of food, we uſually ſay, their throats are cut without a knife; and ſo are theirs who over-feed themſelves. But to return to the point for which this paſſage in the Proverbs was inſtanc'd in; Namely, to ſhew that the Word by which Job expreſſeth his ſoul, ſignifieth among other things, meer will, luſt or appetite.

אם בעל נפש Si comas animæ. Mont. Si dominus animæ. Jun. Si præditus cupiditate ſis. Pagn.

When Job ſaith, My Soul is poured out upon me, we may take the word Soul two wayes, Firſt, For life (my Soul is poured out upon me) that is, I am ready to dye; I am waſted, I am ſpent, my Spirits are even gone, I am near expiring, my life is ready to be poured out as water upon the ground, which cannot be gathered up again.

Secondly, We may expound it by that which is the ſtrength of the Soul; Courage and Chearfulneſs under affliction; my Soul, that is, my Spirit, my ſtrength, yea my patience, are all near ſpent and gone, exhauſted and poured out; I have been ſo long worried and wearied with theſe afflictions, that I can hold out no longer. Thus the Lord made a gracious promiſe to his afflicted People, (Iſa. 57. 16.) I will not contend for ever, neither will I be alwayes wroth: For the Spirit ſhould fail before me, and the Souls which I have made; that is, the Souls which I have made will be even unmade, as to their joyes, comforts and courage; they will utterly fail, or as Job ſaith, be poured out.

תשתפך Effundit. Voluit ſub eleganti rei, quæ ad modum aquæ fluidæ ſe effundat ſimilitudine, hunc ſuum languorem & animæ deliquium exprimere. Bold.

My Soul is poured out.] There is an Elegancy in that Expreſſion (poured out) the word is applied to water, wine, or any liquid; and to pour out, in Scripture, notes abundance, or the giving forth of much in quantity or degree. The Lord ſaith in that great and glorious promiſe, (Joel 2. 28.) It ſhall come to paſs in the latter dayes that I will pour out of my Spirit upon all fleſh; that is, Believers in thoſe latter dayes ſhall have plenty of the Spirit; not dews and drops only, diſtilling upon them, but ſhowers and mighty rains, even floods of the Spirit, both in gifts and graces. So that promiſe is expreſſed by another Prophet, (Iſa. 44. 3.) I will pour water upon him that is thirſty, and floods upon the dry ground, (which is thus explain'd in the latter part of the ſame verſe) I will pour my Spirit upon thy ſeed, and my bleſſing upon thine Off-ſpring. So that when Job ſaith (my Soul is poured out) he would tell us that he was abundant in thoſe ſorrows and troubles of Spirit, his Soul was ſo much poured out, that there was ſcarce any thing, ſcarce a drop of his Soul left within. That's the difference between God's pouring out of himſelf, and his pouring out the creature, or the creatures pouring out it ſelf. When God pours out himſelf; that is, his gifts and bleſſings, he pours out abundantly, and though he pours out ſo much as fills the Creature, yet how much ſo ever he pours out, he doth not at all empty himſelf; man waſteth and emptieth his own ſtock by pouring out, but God doth not; man may pour out till nothing's left; for his is but the fulneſs of a Veſſel, how full ſoever he is: but God pours out as a fountain, and therefore is alwayes full. Job might well ſay, my Soul is poured out, his Soul was once a Veſſel or a Ciſtern full of ſtrength, life, livelineſs, joy and comfort, but his long ſufferings and afflictions had almoſt emptied and drawn him dry to the very bottom. His all, or all his, Soul and all was poured out; He had only ſo much Soul left him as would ſerve him to tell others, that he had ſcarce any Soul left; My Soul is poured out.

Nunc utiq; omnis ille vigor animi quaſi liquefactus diſtituit. Bez.

Yet further, this phraſe of pouring out, may bear a threefold conſideration.

First, The Greek Scholiaſt underſtands this effuſion or pouring out, of the irreſolution and unſetledneſs of Job's mind; what to do, or what courſe to take for his own relief in, or deliverance from his troubles. When a man knows not where to pitch, what to reſolve on, his Soul is (as it were) diſſolved and poured out. And when a man comes to a ſetledneſs of purpoſe in any point, the ſeveral powers of his Soul are (upon the matter) gathered up and knit together again.

Diſſolvitur i.e. ſuſpenſa hæret anima. Nicet.

Secondly, To pour out the Soul, is in Scripture language, to be much in prayer. As prayer is called in Scripture the lifting up of the Soul to God, (Pſal. 25. 1.) ſo the pouring out of the Soul before God. When that much grieved and gracious Woman Hannah was praying, Eli thought ſhe had been diſtemper'd with wine; How long wilt thou be drunken? Put away thy wine from thee. The good Woman anſwered, No my Lord, I am a Woman of a ſorrowful Spirit, I have drunken neither wine nor ſtrong drink, but have poured out my Soul before the Lord, (1 Sam. 1. 15.) that is, I have prayed, yea I have prayed much and earneſtly. Prayer is a pouring out of the Soul, eſpecially, earneſt, important, fervent prayer. So in the confeſſion of ſin, the Soul is poured out in ſorrows, and in ſupplication for ſupply of wants, the Soul is poured out in deſires, and in faith. Thus we are exhorted to pray at once in faith and fervency, (Pſal. 62. 8.) Truſt in him at all times, ye People pour out your hearts before him; that is, pray to him, and pray to him abundantly, pray to him earneſtly, let your Souls go forth in your ſupplications. When David was in great diſtreſs, he ſaith, (Pſal. 142. 2.) I poured out my complaint before him, I ſhewed before him my troubles; that is, I prayed unto him with all my Soul, or I prayed my very Soul unto him. (Lament. 2. 18, 19.) Their heart cryed unto the Lord, &c. Ariſe, Cry out in the night: In the beginning of the watches pour out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord: Lift up thy hands toward him. So then, prayer may be called a pouring out of the Soul or heart to God, and it is ſo, for two reaſons.

Firſt, Becauſe when Saints are in great trouble or ſtraits of any kind, then their hearts are enlarged, and they open their whole mind to God, they keep nothing back: They tell him of all their doubts, deſires, hopes, fears, ſins; they tell him of all their temptations, ſorrows, and afflictions: When all comes out, there is a pouring out of the heart.

Secondly, It is called a pouring out of the heart, not only becauſe of the abundance of matter uttered in prayer, but becauſe of the fervency and earneſtneſs of the Spirit in prayer; when prayer comes not forth droppingly, droopingly, ſleepily, dreamingly, or drouſily, but with a mighty force, with ſtrong affections, like a flood or torrent, when 'tis a working or in-wrought prayer, then the Soul is poured forth; then we may be ſaid not only to pray much, but to be much in prayer. It is an eaſie matter to pour out words in prayer, but it is a hard matter, yea without the Spirit an impoſſible matter to pour out the Soul, the heart before the Lord in prayer; yea there are many that pour out tears before God, and yet pour not out their hearts and Souls before God in prayer. In this ſenſe, doubtleſs, Job's Soul was poured out upon him. The Apoſtle James (Chap. 5. 13.) gives this direction; Is any man afflicted? Let him pray. Job was not only a man afflicted, but much and greatly afflicted, therefore, ſurely, he (being God) did not only pray, but he prayed much and greatly in his affliction.

Thirdly, This phraſe of pouring out the Soul, may import a nearneſs to death, or a giving up of the Ghoſt. A dying man poureth out his Soul; thus the Woman ſpake in her petition to David for the return of Abſalom, (2 Sam. 14. 14.) We muſt needs die, and be as water ſpilt upon the ground which cannot be gathered up again. The body is like an empty Veſſel when once the Soul is departed, or ſpilt like water upon the ground. So the word is uſed (Lam. 2. 12.) Where the Prophet deſcribing the extream Famine in Jeruſalem ſaith, The children and the ſucklings ſwoon in the ſtreets, they cry to their Mothers, where is Corn and Wine? (O what a ſad Condition were they in, when they ſaid, Where is Corn and Wine?) When they ſwooned as the wounded in the Streets of the City, when their Soul was poured out into their Mothers boſom. Poor Children cryed out, O where's bread? We at this day have bread enough, and to ſpare, (bleſſed be God) but it was not ſo with Jeruſalem in that day; O Mother where's wine? Where's bread cryed the poor Children? And then they ſwooned even as the wounded in the Streets, and were ready to pour out their Souls into their Mothers boſome; that is, they were ready to die and expire for want of bread. Thus alſo Job's Soul was poured out, he was ready to ſwoon and to die; ſo he tells us with much livelineſs and quickneſs both of ſpeech and ſpirit (Chap. 17. 1.) My breath is corrupt, my dayes are extinct, the graves are ready for me. All which expreſſions do but reach this interpretation of his complaint in the preſent Text, My Soul is poured out upon me.

Now though the two former Expoſitions of theſe words, as they import; Firſt, The unſetledneſs and unreſolvedneſs of Job's ſpirit what to do, or Secondly, His ſetledneſs and utmoſt reſolution to vent his Soul in prayer, that God would both ſhew him what to do, and help him to do it in that extremity, (though, I ſay, both theſe openings of the Text carry a fair reſpect to it) yet I conceive this laſt or third moſt proper and ſutable to it; And therefore

Hence Note, Man is a poor frail creature, a brittle creature, he quickly fails and faints under his burden.

If God do but touch him, and leave him under the hand of an affliction, preſently he feels his very Soul ready to be poured out upon him. The fleſh of man, that is, his Natural eſtate as man, is graſs, that is, like graſs; the graſs let alone will quickly wither, but uſually the graſs is cut or eaten down before it withers; many are cropt in their greenneſs, or in the height and flouriſh of outward proſperity, their Soul is poured out. Man at his beſt eſtate is altogether vanity. Which is both explained and urged further in the words following.

ימי. עני

The dayes of affliction (or, affliction dayes) have taken hold upon me.

Man hath his dayes of Conſolation, and his dayes of affliction, his dayes of peace, and his dayes of trouble, his good dayes, and his bad dayes, in this world. The Text may be rendred either The dayes of affliction (as we) or, as others, the dayes of humiliation, the dayes of preſſing down, the dayes of laying low, (all this the word ſignifies) theſe ſad and dark dayes have taken hold upon me.

To take hold, is properly the act of a living Creature, of man eſpecially, when he ſeizeth, apprehends, or attacheth any thing or perſon. And it notes not bare holding, but holding faſt and ſure; Mr. Broughton tranſlates, Affliction dayes have caught me; As if he had ſaid, I had hope to eſcape them, but they have been too nimble for me; they have caught me, as the Hound doth the Hare, or a Snare the Bird. The vulgar Tranſlation ſaith, The dayes of affliction have poſſeſt me: Holding notes Having and poſſeſſing; as in our Law-forms of Conveyance or Leaſe, To have and to hold, is to poſſeſs either for term of years, or for ever. Thus Job ſpeaks as if he had been wholly delivered into the hand of affliction, and were fully poſſeſſed by it; or as if he were under the dominion, rule, and power of affliction, as his Lord and Maſter. The Seventy render it ſhortly; The dayes of affliction have me; they have me in their power, I am bound under them: Our reading attains the ſame ſence; The dayes of affliction have taken hold upon me.

Me tanquam re ſua utuntur dies & tempora mortis. Bold.

Ἔχουσι δέ με ἡμέραι ὀδυνῶν. Sept.

Hence Note, Affliction hath its day.

The dayes of affliction are dayes appointed, dayes ſet out by God. As there are dayes wherein God will have us afflict our ſelves, (Eſai. 22. 13.) In that day the Lord called to mourning, and to faſting, and unto ſackcloth, and unto aſhes; that is, the providences of God to his people in that day had that voyce in them, and did (as it were) call aloud upon them, to mourn, to faſt, to repent in Sackcloth and aſhes. Faſting dayes, are ſelf-afflicting dayes, or as Moſes calls them (Levit. 16. 29.) Soul-afflicting dayes. Now (I ſay) as God appoints us dayes, wherein to afflict our ſelves; ſo God appoints dayes, wherein he will afflict us. All the dayes of our lives are meaſured or ſet out unto us, and they are of two ſorts; Firſt, Affliction dayes; Secondly, Conſolation dayes; as was ſhewed before. Sorrow and joy take up and divide all our dayes between them. The life of man is a kind of Checker-work, there's white and black, and more black then white, that's our preſent ſtate. Jacob ſaid of the dayes of his life, They were few, and they were evil, (Gen. 47. 9.) As his dayes were not many conſidered in themſelves and few compared with ſome of his anceſtors, ſo they were evil with reſpect to his manifold afflictions; and he gave the denomination of his few dayes by evil, becauſe the moſt or major part of his dayes were in that ſence evil. And uſually the troubles of our life are moſt, they are more and greater then our Comforts, they out-number and out-weigh them as to outwards. The Saints indeed have inward Joy in their outward ſorrows and tribulations, but their tribulations and ſorrows appear more, or are more viſible then their joyes.

Secondly, In that he calls them dayes of affliction,

Obſerve, Afflictions may continue long, or a great while, not only for a day, but for dayes.

Though that be a truth (Pſal. 30. 5.) Sorrow endures for a night, but joy cometh in the morning; The Lord often makes ſuch ſuddain changes, yet we are not to underſtand it ſtrictly, as if this were the meaning, that they who have ſorrow in the evening, ſhall at the next break of day have joy, or, that as ſoon as the day returns, their comforts ſhall return too. But the meaning is this, after ſorrow they ſhall have joy, as ſure as the morning follows the night. A righteous mans troubles, tryals and ſorrows may abide many Natural dayes and nights with him: He may find (as Job did, Chap. 7. 3.) himſelf made to poſſeſs Moneths of vanity, and not only a night of wearineſs, but (as he there ſpeaks) wearisome nights appointed to him. The ſcope and meaning of that Text in the Pſalm is only this; the righteous ſhall have a ſucceſſion of joy after ſorrow, their ſorrow ſhall not be perpetual, nor abide for ever. As the rod of the wicked ſhall not (Pſal. 125. 3.) ſo God will not let his rod reſt upon the lot of the righteous. Though their night of ſorrow continue many dayes and weeks, yea Months and Years, yet they ſhall have a morning of joy. Solomon ſaith of the mere worldly man, (Eccl. 5. 17.) All his dayes he eateth in darkneſs, and he hath much ſorrow and wrath with his ſickneſs. And as through his vexatious cares in getting and keeping the things of the world, he deprives himſelf of all comfort in the uſe of them all the dayes of his life, ſo when he dieth, he goes to the generation of his fathers, they (that is, both he and they) ſhall never ſee light, (Pſal. 49. 19.) Thus in this life a wicked mans night of trouble runs through all his dayes, for all his dayes he eateth in darkneſs, through the darkneſs of his own Spirit and practice; and the life to come, (through the righteous judgement of God) will be to him as one everlaſting night, for he ſhall never ſee (that is, enjoy) light. But here's the comfort of the righteous, that if their affliction dayes are many, yet they are but dayes of affliction, they ſhall not feel an eternity of affliction. Saints have affliction dayes, The wicked have an Eternity of affliction; no affliction ſhall enter into the eternity of Saints, the whole eternity of the wicked ſhall be affliction. When once Believers have done with dayes, they have done with ſorrows; all tears ſhall be wiped not only off from, but out of their eyes: The very ſpring of tears ſhall be dryed up for ever, and they delivered not only from actual ſorrow, but from the poſſibility of it. 'Tis but while our lives are meaſured by dayes, that the dayes of the godly are darkned with clouds or nights of trouble.

Thirdly, In that Job ſpeaks of affliction dayes taking hold of him;

Note, Affliction will come in its time, in its ſeaſon or day.

When the day appointed comes, affliction will come. Affliction dayes will as certainly come, as our Birth-day came, or as our death day is coming, and there is one and the ſame reaſon of all, even becauſe they are all appointed. All the changes of our dayes, our dayes of joy, and our dayes of ſorrow, our feaſt dayes, and our faſt dayes; the dayes wherein we eat the fat and drink the ſweet; and the dayes wherein we drink tears, and feed upon aſhes, are under an unchangeable appointment: There's no avoiding them, they will come, they will take hold of us, and poſſeſs us. David ſaith of the wicked man, (Pſal. 37. 13.) The Lord ſhall laugh at him; Why? For he ſeeth that his day is coming: The wicked man pleaſeth himſelf in his proſperous condition, then he laughs and rejoyceth; and then the Lord laughs at him. None have ſuch cauſe to mourn as they, at whom God laughs. God laughs at the wicked man; and why? Becauſe he ſees a day of blackneſs, a day of Clouds and darkneſs, a day of gloomineſs and thick darkneſs (as the Prophet Joel ſpeaks) that is, a day of great trouble coming juſtly upon him: The Lord ſees that a black day is coming upon the wicked man, which will turn all his plots againſt the righteous (in the hoped ſucceſs of which he rejoyced) upon his own head. Now as ſome ungodly men have ſpecially appointed black dayes coming upon them in this World for ruine and deſtruction; ſo the godly have dayes of affliction appointed them for trial and correction: Nor doth the beſt of Saints know how ſoon ſuch a day may come upon him: Now it is a day of health with a godly man, but a day of ſickneſs may quickly come upon him; now it is a day of riches, but a day of poverty may quickly come upon him; now it is a day of credit or honour in the World, but a day of diſgrace and reproach from the World may be coming, and quickly come upon him. It is ſaid (Pſal. 37. 18.) The Lord knoweth the dayes of the upright; that is, he knows what kind of dayes or times they ſhall live in and paſs thorough. He knows not only what natural, but what providential dayes ſhall go over their heads, what changes they ſhall be in, or meet with while they are paſſing through this World. Look what troubles the Lord knows will come upon any day, they will come at their day as ſure as the day cometh.

Fourthly, Job doth only ſay that dayes of affliction came upon him, but they took hold upon him.

Hence Note, When affliction comes, it takes hold, it takes faſt hold, and will not let us go till God gives leave.

Affliction doth not only ſtick but ſtrike and take hold by order from God; it cannot touch us without commiſſion, and when commiſſion'd it will take hold, faſt hold of us and will not let us go. It is ſaid concerning the Heatheniſh Idolatrous Princes and People of thoſe Lands which the Children of Iſarel were to poſſeſs; The People ſhall hear, and be afraid: Sorrows ſhall take hold of the Inhabitants of Paleſtina, (Exod. 15. 14.) The report of what God had done againſt the Egyptians, made thoſe remoter Nations tremble, and ſorrow took them Priſoners long before they were ſlain by the Sword. And what the Scripture ſpeaks in that place of the wicked and uncircumciſed Nations; The ſame David ſaith of himſelf, (Pſal. 116. 3.) The ſorrows of death compaſſed me about: And the pains of Hell gat hold upon me. The Original word is, found me, as we put in the Margin; they found him, as an Officer or Sergeant finds a perſon that he is ſent out to attach or arreſt; who no ſooner finds him, but he takes hold of him, or (as we ſay) takes him into cuſtody. And when Warrants are ſent out to take a man, who keeps out of the way, the return is, Non eſt inventus, the man is not found, he cannot be met with or taken hold of. David's pains quickly found him, and having found him they gat hold of him; ſuch finding is ſo certainly and ſuddainly followed with taking hold, and holding what is taken, that one word in the Hebrew ſerves to expreſs both acts. When God ſends out troubles and afflictions as Officers to attach any man, they will find him, and finding him, they will take hold of him. The dayes of affliction will take hold, there's no ſtriving, no ſtrugling with them, no getting out of their hands. Theſe divine Purſevants will neither be perſwaded nor bribed to let you go, till God ſpeak the word, till God ſay deliver him, releaſe him: Till God ſend his warrant to have the Priſon-door opened, and the poor Soul ſet free from affliction, he hath no relief, no help for it.

Affliction having thus taken hold of Job, he tells us in the next Verſe, how hardly it uſed him.

Verſ. 17. My bones are pierced in the night ſeaſon: And my ſinews take no reſt.

עצם
Os oſſis à robore, ſignificat etiam rei cujuſquā ſubſtantiam, eſſentiam, rem ipſam.

Theſe words are a deſcription of Job's bodily ſickneſs according to the letter of the Text) ſuch is the malignity of ſome violent Diſeaſes, that they not only corrode the fleſh, but enter into the very bones; my bones are pierced. The word properly ſignifies ſtrength, and becauſe bones are the ſtrongeſt part of a man, (bones are to the body, as Timber, Rafters, Poſts and Pillars to the Houſe, the ſtrength of it) therefore our bones and our ſtrength are ſignificantly expreſſed by the ſame word. Job ſpeaks of his bones, to ſhew that the ſtrength of his body was invaded and ſhaken, and by his bones, he intends his whole body in the beſt ſtrength of it; which (ſome conceive) he called his bones for this reaſon alſo, becauſe his body was ſo waſted and conſumed, that he had nothing left but bones, or he was nothing, but, as it were, a Skeleton or pack of bones. He could ſcarce ſay, his fleſh was pierced, he having little or none to pierce. Job uſeth the ſame Elegancy in ſetting forth or aggravating the extremity of his ſufferings (Chap. 7. 15.) My Soul chuſeth death rather then life; ſo we Tranſlate; but the Hebrew is, rather then my bones; As if he had ſaid, I had rather dye then live in a body waſted to the skin and bones; It is more then eligible with me to lay my bones down in the Grave, then to bear them up and down upon the earth. I live with a company of bare bones, and it were better for me to dye then to live in the fleſh and have none, or to live with conſuming pining dying fleſh. Thus here, My bones are pierced, my pains and ſorrows have worn me to the bones.

Yet further and more particularly when Job ſaith, My bones are pierced within me in the night ſeaſon. There are four things in the words of this complaint, which exceedly highten his ſorrows, and might well give him cauſe to ſay, that dayes of affliction had taken hold upon him.

Dolor graviſſimus eſt qui oſſa penetrare dicitur, quia oſſa interiora ſunt & ita dura ut nullo morbo ceſſura videantur. Sanct.

Firſt, In that he had not only pain in his fleſh, but in his very bones. When in Scripture, the bones are ſpoken of as being in pain, it notes very great dolour and pain; for as the bones lye within the fleſh, and are hard to come at, or to be reached by pain, ſo they are very hard and may ſeem impregnable againſt all pain: When, therefore pain pierceth the bones, it muſt needs be a very ſharp and powerful pain Hence that grievous cry, (Pſal. 31. 10.) Hear O Lord, have mercy upon me; for my life is ſpent with grief, and my years with ſighing: My ſtrength faileth becauſe of mine iniquity, and my bones are conſumed; that is, my ſorrow is no comon ſorrow, 'tis great and deep, it pierceth my bones. Thus King Hezekiah deſcribes his extream ſickneſs, (Iſa. 38. 13.) I reckoned till morning, that as a Lion ſo will he break all my bones; not that he thought God would indeed cruſh his bones, but thereby he would ſet out the violence of his ſickneſs, which he made full account would make an end of him before the morning were over or at an end, even as when a fierce hunger-bitten Lion tears the fleſh and cracks the bones of a poor Sheep or Lamb. And thus Elihu deſcribes his ſick man, (Chap. 33. 19.) He is chaſtened with pain upon his Bed, and the multitude of his bones with ſtrong pain; That is, his whole body, or all his bones are chaſtned, and he is pained in every joynt and part of his body. The breaking of the bones, and trouble upon the bones, import not only the soreſt ſufferings of the Body, but of the Soul alſo. When David would tell us how exceedingly he was grieved for his ſin, he prayes, (Pſal. 51. 8.) Make me to hear joy and gladneſs, that the bones which thou haſt broken may rejoyce. When we break the Commandments of God by ſinning, 'tis no marvail (and when 'tis with godly ſorrow to repentance, 'tis a mercy) if God break our bones with ſorrow for our ſins, that is, if he bring us to the deepeſt ſence of his diſpleaſure; and of our own folly for our ſins; even as if he had broken our bones upon the Wheel, or diſ-joynted them with a Rack. Heart-breakings are more painful then bone-breakings, and are therefore expreſſed by breaking the bones, becauſe that to ſenſe is moſt painful. David prayes again in he ſame Rhetorical ſtrain (Pſal. 6. 2.) O Lord heal me, for my bones are vexed. It was the healing of his Soul which he prayed for, and the trouble which he had for wounding it, he calls the vexing of his bones, (Pſal. 102. 3.) My dayes are conſumed like ſmoke, and my bones are burnt up as an hearth. So in that Prophecy of Chriſt's ſorrows, (Pſal. 22. 14.) All my bones were out of joint. (Pſal. 32. 3.) While I kept ſilence my bones waxed old, &c. What do all theſe Texts ſpeak, but the ſorrow of a Soul pained under the apprehenſions of divine wrath for ſin, either our own, or of others, as the caſe of Chriſt was.

So on the contrary, when God is ſaid to make the bones fat, it notes much mercy, or mercy all over. The Prophet puts this among the promiſes to them that keep a faſt indeed (Iſa. 58. 11.) The Lord ſhall guide thee continually, and ſatisfie thy Soul in drought, and make fat thy bones; As if he had ſaid, Fear not leanneſs or waſting of thy body with faſting, for God will make fat thy bones, that is, he will comfort thee, and fill thee with joy both of Soul and body. And when the Lord would expreſs his greateſt care over any one of his People; 'tis ſaid, He keepeth all his bones, not one of them is broken, (Pſal. 34. 20.) When all our bones praiſe God (as David ſaid his ſhould, Pſal. 35. 10.) and ſay, Lord who is like unto thee! O how well is it with us? And when all our bones mourn before God, who can tell how ill 'tis with us? And hence thoſe things which have the greateſt efficacy in afflicting and refreſhing, or do moſt exquiſitely affect the ſenſe, whether with pain or pleaſure, are compared to Oyl which pierceth the bones. There's the Oyl of gladneſs, (Pſal. 45. 7.) and there's the Oyl of ſorrow, (Pſal. 109. 18.) As he clotheth himſelf with curſing, ſo let it come upon him; let it come into his bowels like water, and like Oyl into his bones: The curſe ſoaks into the bones like Oyl, not to ſupple and ſtrengthen them as Oyl doth, but to vex and torment them, as a curſe doth. The curſe enters the bones like Oyl, ſecretly and powerfully, but it works like it ſelf ſorrowfully and painfully.

Secondly, To aggravate his affliction, Job doth not ſay this or that bone of mine was pierced, but my bones are pierced, that is, all my bones. If a man have an ach in one of his bones, if he have but one broken bone, or but one bone out of joint, he will find pain enough: But when all his bones are broken, he is nothing but pain. Job laments that all his bones were pierced, as if they had been but one bone. The Original is more clear to this ſence, which may be thus rendered, Every one of my bones are ſhaken; a Verb plural being joyned with a Noun ſingular, is diſtributive to every one in particular. Job's fleſh was ſo ſmitten with ſoars, that his whole body looked like one continued ſoar; and his bones were ſo univerſally pierced, as if indeed he had but one bone to be pierced. He had not the bone of a little Toe or Finger free.

Thirdly, Job doth not ſay, all his bones were pained, but they were all pierced; ſome read it, broken: The Seventy render, My bones are burnt; as if he had ſaid, I feel a fire in my bones, which ſucks and dries up the moiſture and marrow of them. The piercing of the bones muſt needs be a moſt grievous pain; for though the bone it ſelf hath no ſenſe, yet the Membranes and Muſcles that are next the bones, are of a more exquiſite ſenſe, then the fleſh in any part or member of the body. Therefore to pierce the bones, cannot but cauſe the greateſt bodily pain ſufferable or imaginable. When the Apoſtle would ſet forth the ſad and ſore troubles both of Body and Soul, which they who will be rich draw upon themſelves, he ſaith (1 Tim. 6. 10.) They have pierced themſelves through with many ſorrows.

נקר i.e. קנב Ut ab Hebræis exponitur, perforavit, effodit. Merc.

Fourthly, When Job ſaith, My bones are pierced in the night ſeaſon.

There's another aggravation of his pain and grief. Theſe words, in the night ſeaſon, ſhew more then the long continuance of his pain, even the unceſſantneſs of his pain. As if he had ſaid, The night which uſually gives refreſhing to man, was ſo far from affording me any, that then I was moſt reſtleſs. It hightens our affliction, when it comes or ſtayes upon us in that ſeaſon which is appointed for repoſe. Some can ſleep away much of their pain and ſorrow, but Job had ſorrow in the night, in ſtead of ſleep. Sleep is the beſt Medicine for wearineſs, it conquers our cares, and gives at leaſt ſome truce from the aſſaults of ſorrow. The labour and travel of the day wears out, ſpends and waſtes our ſtrength, but in the night we reſt, and recruit or repair our ſtrength again. Now if the night be ſpent in torturing pains, how doth our ſtrength ſpend? To what a condition is ſuch a poor Soul brought, whoſe very bones take no reſt in the night ſeaſon! Here's a fourth aggravation of Job's affliction; Firſt, It was in his bones; Secondly, in all his bones; Thirdly, it pierced his bones; and Fourthly, It was upon him in the night ſeaſon; when others went to reſt, he took none; his pains ſtayed upon him day and night. Thus the lamenting Prophet labours to keep the ſorrows of the Captive Jews awake, (Lam. 2. 18, 19.) Let tears run down like a River day and night, give thy ſelf no reſt, let not the apple of thine eye ceaſe, ariſe cry out in the night, in the beginning of the Watches pour out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord.

Further, Whereas we ſeem to underſtand that his pain was it, which pierced his bones, ſome read it thus, He hath pierced my bones, that is, the Lord hath commanded theſe dayes of affliction, or the affliction of theſe dayes to pierce my bones, even in the night ſeaſon.

Again, Others thus; The night pierceth my bones; the letter of the Original is cleareſt for this reading: As if he ſaid, I feell more pain in the night then in the day: the day day paineth my fleſh, but the night pierceth my bones. (Mr. Broughton Tranſlates,) The night pierceth my bones from me; we ſay, in me, The Hebrew is, From above me; as aſcribing all his pains to God, who had afflicted him from Heaven, or from on high.

And my ſinews take no reſt.

Some read my Nerves, others, my Veins, many my Pulſes take no reſt: The Hebrew is, They lie not down, or ſleep not. The Pulſe ſignifies the Nature of the Diſeaſe; Phyſicians learn much of the ſtate of the whole body by the pulſe. Now, ſaith Job, my Pulſe, my ſinews take no reſt. When the Pulſe beats high, and quick, as if it were in a rage, then certainly the patient is in a very great Diſtemper. Now, the Pulſe uſeth to move more temperately in the night, when the heat is drawn into the inward parts, yet Job (it ſeems) by reaſon of his great inflammation, and the acuteneſs of his Diſeaſe, found his Pulſe as quick in the night as in the day, and the pulſe being ſo reſtleſs, he could take no reſt.

Qui me comedunt non dormiund. Vul.

Nec quieſcunt vermes digredientes a me. Tygur.

There is yet another reading, which I ſhall touch a little, and ſo ſhut up the Expoſition of this Verſe. For whereas we ſay, my ſinews, that ſaith, They that eat me take no reſt: Which is explained two wayes.

Firſt, For the Worms or Lice which bred in his putrified fleſh, which we may ſuppoſe as troubleſom as the malice of the Devil could make them: As if he had ſaid, The Vermine which are generated in my wounds and ſoars, take no reſt, nor will they ſuffer me to take any; they lie alwayes biting, and working, and gnawing, as if they would eat me up. How then can I take reſt?

Secondly, Others, by theſe Eaters, underſtand his illwillers and detractors. They eat up a man, who ſlander and ſpeak evil of him; theſe eat up a man's credit, or good name. And theſe (ſaith Job according to this Expoſition) give me no reſt; I am continually followed by men, whoſe tongues are ſet on fire, whoſe malice is reſtleſs; no wonder then if my reputation be ſmoakt and ſmother'd, ſcorcht and almoſt conſumed to aſhes, among thoſe who know or believe no more nor better of me, then theſe men report, who are alwayes reporting evil of me. They that thus eat me, who would eat up and devour my honour and innocency at a morſel, are hungry ſtill, and will not give over eating; They that eat me take no reſt. This is an undeniable truth, Detractors eat, yea ſwallow up the reputation of the innocent: But I ſhall not ſtay upon theſe readings, which are but far fetcht and forein conjectures.

I cloſe and conclude with our own Tranſlation, which plainly holds forth, that Job was now come to the utmoſt ſtretch and extremity of affliction, His bones were pierced within him in the night ſeaſon, and his ſinews took no reſt. He had a continual Feaver, a burning heat feeding upon the vitals of his body, while his Soul was poured out upon him.

Hence Note, The beſt of men are ſubject to the worſt extremities, both of Soul and Body.

Job was not only afflicted, but extreamly afflicted, not only was his body ſmitten but his Soul, and not his Soul only but his body. He hath his load both upon fleſh and Spirit, both without and within; or as the Apoſtle expreſſeth it in his own caſe, (2 Cor. 7. 5.) without were fightings, within were ſnares. At the fifteenth Verſe, we read of terrours purſuing his Soul; and at the ſixteenth (he ſaith) his Soul was poured out upon him, affliction dayes took hold of him; in the ſeventeenth Verſe, His bones were pierced in the night ſeaſon, and his ſinews took no reſt. What could be added (and doubtleſs if Satan had known of any thing, he would have added it) to make him yet more miſerable! There was but one thing more (and that Satan could not add) the wrath of God mingled with his ſufferings, which might have added to his miſery, and yet he had a ſhare, as to preſent apprehenſions, of that alſo. Now, when pains of body, and terrours of ſoul meet together, then 'tis full ſea with affliction; then 'tis an affliction day indeed. Though the body be extreamly afflicted and pained, yet if the Soul be free; if there be no darts of darkneſs ſticking there, a man may bear up with it, and abide it; as Solomon tells us, (Pro. 18.4.) The ſpirit of a man will ſuſtain his Infirmities; that is, the ſickneſſes and weakneſſes, the pains and troubles which fall upon his outward man. Though a man have many ſores and ſorrows upon his fleſh, yet he may be born up by the ſtrength of his ſpirit under them all. For though I like not at all thoſe vain opinions of ſome Ancient Philoſophers, who held and pretended to maintain, That the pains of the body were nothing to the Soul, or that the Soul was not at all afflicted with or concern'd in them; yet this is a noble ſolid truth, that the Soul being ſerene and free, will, to admiration, ſupport the body, with a patient and inſuperable reſolution, under the greateſt bodyly pains and preſſures. And if a man having his ſpirit wounded, hath yet his body and worldly eſtate untoucht, this is ſome kind of eaſe or relief to him, though (I confeſs) a very ſmall one; but when the mind is troubled, and the body diſeaſed, when at once the Spirit of a man is wounded, and all outward comforts ſcatter'd, who can tell the ſadneſs of that mans condition! yet as all theſe evils poſſibly may, ſo they often actually have met and center'd in the ſame man, and he worthily reckoned among the beſt of men.

Let them therefore conſider the goodneſs of God, who though they have affliction-days of many kinds, yet have not affliction days of both or of all kinds: As few have ever attained Jobs graces, ſo few have ever felt Jobs tryalls, either as to kind and number, or as to degree and meaſure at the ſame time. It may be your bodys are ſickly and pained, but are you made a heap of bones? are your bones pierced? are your ſinews reſtleſs? or if your affliction pierceth to the bones, yet are your ſpirits wounded? is the peace of your Souls broken? if you have quietneſs there, and all be well within, you are within a little of well. 'Tis ſparing mercy when our afflicton days leave ſomewhat whole and untoucht, but 'tis great mercy when in affliction days our beſt part, our Soul is left whole and untoucht; 'Tis ſparing mercy when all ſorts of ſorrowful evils come not at once, or all together, eſpecially when (though we have many, yet) we are altogether freed from the evils of inward terror, and of a troubled conſcience, which are worſt of all.

By the great force of my diſeaſe, is my garment changed: it bindeth me about as the collar of my coat.

He hath caſt me into the mire, and I am become like duſt and aſhes.

I cry unto thee, and thou doeſt not hear me: I ſtand up, and thou regardeſt me not.

IN the former verſe Job ſhewed both the extremity and unceſſantneſs of his ſickneſs? His bones were pierced in the night ſeaſon, and his ſinews took no reſt. In this 18. and in the 19. Verſe, he further proſecutes the ſame ſad argument, adding that in the 20. which made it yet more ſad, the remedileſneſs of it. I cry unto thee, and thou doeſt not hear me: I ſtand up, and thou regardeſt me not. I am left forlorn to ſink or ſwim, it boots me not to call for help, for I find none, I am neither heard nor helped.

Verſ. 18. By the great force of my diſeaſe, is my garment changed: it bindeth me about as the collar of my Coat.

Thoſe words my diſeaſe, are not expreſt in the Hebrew, and therefore the text hath a twofold rendring by way of ſupply.

Firſt, Some referring it unto God, read the Text thus; By the greatneſs of the force or power (that is, of God in afflicting me) is my garment changed; And 'tis a truth, that although God afflicteth his own people in meaſure, and doth not ſuffer his whole diſpleaſure to ariſe againſt them, yet he puts forth force and power in the afflicting of his own people, as well as in deſtroying of the wicked, or his utter enemies.

Ob magnitudinem virium ſc. Dei, quas nimirum exerit in me flagellando. Piſc.

But ſecondly, we and ſeveral others, (referring this effect to his diſeaſe, which alſo was from God, as Job acknowledged, and ſo both readings meet in one ſence) render, by the great force of my diſeaſe, is my garment changed. Diſeaſes are our weakneſſes, and they weaken us, yet they are of great force or power; and therefore force may well be aſcribed to them. Some diſeaſes appear but little, and work ſlowly, or lingringly; other diſeaſes riſe high, work fiercely, and appear in power, they have a power in them, an irreſiſtible power, they come, like an armed man, and then (as Job ſpeaks) by their great force, they make great changes. The force of a diſeaſe bears down, yea beats down the force of the body, and caſteth it firſt on the bed, and then into the grave; No man is able to ſtand before the force of diſeaſes. Mighty Gyants, even the mightieſt ſons of Anak have been overthrown by them, ſuch is their force; They who have been too ſtrong for all men, may quickly meet with their match, and feel a diſeaſe too ſtrong for them. By the great force of my diſeaſe (ſaith Job,)

Robur dicit vim morbi, morbus autem erat ulcus peſſimum, cujus ſanies veſtem ejus inquinabat. Druſ.

Is my garment changed,] As the diſeaſe had an effect upon his body; ſo his body had an effect upon his garment. But is it not ſtrange that Job under a deadly diſeaſe ſhould complain about his garment? As if a man that hath received a ſtab with a dagger, or is thruſt through the body with a ſword, ſhould think rather of the hole that is made in his coat, then of the wound which is made in his fleſh: yet thus Job ſpeaks, By the great force of my diſeaſe, is my garment changed; He doth not ſay my body is weakned and changed, or I am brought to deaths door, but, my garment, is changed; yet while he ſpeaks of his garment, he means more then his garment, when he ſaith, My garment is changed, he intends the change of his whole body which wore that garment; only to ſhew how great a change it wrought upon his body, he tells us of a change upon his very garment. As if he had ſaid, The ſores that are upon my body run continually, and have changed not only my garment of fleſh, but the garment which covers my fleſh. O conſider in what a pickle I am, who have ſo vehement a diſeaſe broken out upon my body, that you may ſee it in my garment. Judge, I pray, what a change my poor body hath ſuffered by the change of my Garment. And his garment might be changed in a double reſpect:

Firſt, In reſpect of the colour of it, his garment was (as it were) new died in the gore and filth that iſſued from his ulcerous Sores; it was once a pure and fair garment, but then polluted, and (as ſome give the illuſtration) his garment had put on another garment. His garment was covered over with that loathſome purulent matter, which was digeſted in and flowed out of thoſe biles and botches with which Satan (having obtained leave from God) ſmote him from the ſole of his foot unto his crown, (Chap. 2. 7.)

Ipſa veſtis mea aliam veſtem induit, dum ſc. repletur ſanie ex ulceribus defluente. Piſc.

Secondly, We may take theſe words not as implying a change upon his garment, but his change of garments. In which ſence the word is uſed (1 Kings 22. 30) where, the King of Iſrael ſaid unto Jehoſhaphat, I will diſguiſe my ſelf and enter into the Battel; that is, I will change my habit, or put off that royal apparel which I uſually wear as a King, and put on ſuch as ſhall not ſignifie who or what I am. A diſguiſe is moſt uſually made by change of garments; though we often change our garments, and not to diſguiſe our ſelves. Now, when Job ſaith, By the great force of my diſeaſe, is my garment changed; his meaning may be this; My diſeaſe is ſo offenſive both to my ſelf and others, that I am forced to ſhift or change my garments often. Change of Garments is a refreſhing to the body, but to be neceſſitated to change our garments, that we may keep our ſelves ſweet and clean is a ſign of a noyſomely diſeaſed and putrified body. Surely in this ſence Job had cauſe enough to ſay, By the great force of my diſeaſe, is my garment changed. Hence take two Cautions.

Verbum התחפש eſt mutare habitum. Merc.

Firſt, Boaſt not of your bodily ſtrength or force. There is no ſtanding before the face of a diſeaſe. As the men of Samaria ſaid concerning Jehu (2 Kings 10. 4.) Behold two kings ſtood not before him, how then can we ſtand? Thus any man may ſay concerning any ſtrong ſickneſs or diſeaſe, behold no King, no man of might was ever able to ſtand before it, how then can I? Let not the ſtrong man boaſt of his ſtrength; for as bodyly ſtrength is a thing of ſo low a form, that it is not worth the boaſting in, how long ſo ever it continueth in its beſt perfection, ſo it is a thing of no long continuance: Though a mans height be as the Cedars of Lebanon, and his ſtrength as the Oaks of Baſhan, yet the force of a diſeaſe will pull him down, or root him up: And as it may do ſo to any ſtrong man, ſo uſually it doth ſo to thoſe ſooneſt who truſt in or boaſt of their ſtrength.

Secondly, Boaſt not of your garments; Be not proud of your apparel, God can ſend you a ſore that ſhall change the colour and ſtain the beauty of them; let them who change their garments often in wantonneſs and delicacy, or for vain oſtentation; remember, and tremble while they remember, that God can make them change their garments for the very ſtench, and noyſomneſs of them; He can give priſon-garments, inſtead of pride-garments; and ſick-bed-garments, inſtead of feaſting-garments. As he graciouſly gives the garments of praiſe for the ſpirit of heavineſs to the meek and humble, (Iſa. 61. 3.) ſo he righteouſly gives the garment of heavineſs to thoſe who have a ſpirit of pride, or a proud ſpirit. Take heed you abuſe not your goodly coſtly cloathing and garments, as a flag of vanity, leſt you provoke the Lord to cloath you with raggs or filthy garments. When Joſhua the High-Prieſt was cloathed with filthy garments, and ſtood before the Angel (that is, Chriſt in the viſion, Zech. 3. 3.) we read in the fourth Verſe, how He (that is, Chriſt the Angel) anſwered and ſpake unto thoſe that ſtood before him, ſaying, Take away the filthy garments from him. And unto him he ſaid, I have cauſed thine iniquity to paſs from thee, and I will cloath thee with change of raiment. As Chriſt in rich mercy takes away the filthy garments of his people, both of ſin and miſery or affliction, (ſuch were thoſe with which Joſhua was cloathed) and gives them change of raiment, that is, pardon through his blood and righteouſneſs, as alſo outward peace and proſperity. So Chriſt in much wrath takes away the pompous garments, the purple and fine linnen, with which the wicked either men or women are cloathed, (themſelves being cloathed with wickedneſs) and gives them filthy garments; or as another Prophet ſpeaks, (Iſa. 3. 24.) It comes to paſs that in ſtead of ſweet ſmell, there is a ſtench, and in ſtead of a girdle a rent, and in ſtead of well ſet hair baldneſs, and in ſtead of a ſtomacher a girding with ſackcloth, and burning in ſtead of beauty.

The vulgar Tranſlation ſaith (as in the former Verſe) Through the multitude of them is my garment conſumed; That is, The multitude of lice or vermin that breed in my garment, is ſo great that my garment is changed, or conſumed, and even eaten up by them. As Jobs ſickneſs poſſibly brought this change of his garment upon him; ſo the ſin of many hath certainly done it; They who through pride would not ſuffer the leaſt ſpot or duſt upon their garments, have had their garments, yea and their skin too eaten up with lice. Thoſe diſeaſes are indeed full of force, which breed and bring forth theſe uncouth forces, whole Armies and ſwarms of lice and vermin (of which we have many examples in the Hiſtories of Gods ſevereſt Judgments upon the cruel perſecuters of his people, and ſuch was that upon Herod for his pride, Acts 12. 23. Thoſe diſeaſes (I ſay) are full of force, which bring forth ſuch forces) to eat up the fleſh and change the Garment. By the great force of my diſeaſe, is my garment changed.

In multitudine eorum conſumitur veſtimentum meum. Vulg. Tanta eſt vermium multitudo ut non ſolum carnem comedunt, ſed veſtimenta corrodunt. Aquin.

It bindeth me about as the collar of my coat.

Some read here alſo, he bindeth, &c. that is, God bindeth me about with ſores, (making me but one ſore) even as the collar of my coat bindeth my coat. We tranſlate well, It; that is, the diſeaſe, or the ſickneſs binds me about, as the collar of my coat; it girts and holds me, as a cloſe and over-cloſe collar doth the neck. Job alludes in this expreſſion to the frequent well known faſhion of the garments of thoſe times and places wherein he lived; which had no ſeam (ſuch was Chriſts coat, Joh. 19. 23.) but were one whole piece woven from the top throughout, only they had a collar, through which the head was put, and ſo hung looſe about the body. As the collar binds the upper part of the coat or garment; ſo it binds the neck of him that wears it. Thus Jobs diſeaſe bound him about, as the collar of his coat; he was ſtraitly bound by it. Mr. Broughton tranſlates, as the edge of my coat girds me; but whether the one or the other word be uſed, the ſence is the ſame; his diſeaſe ſtuck cloſe to him, and girded him in as the upper-edge, (which muſt needs be the collar) or his coat.

Tunicis inconſutilibus veteres Iſraelitæ utebantur undiq; clauſis præterquam infra & ſupra; erat autem supernè os anguſtum per quod induebantur tunicæ. Merc.

Hence note. We can neither bear bodily diſeaſes and diſtempers with eaſe, nor caſt them off eaſily.

How many are bound about with or made priſoners to a diſeaſe; ſickneſs holds us faſt, we cannot get our necks out of that collar when we will. Then

Firſt, Be thankful for health continued; health is a great bleſſing, the Prince of temporal bleſſings, though we little prize it, or give the Lord glory by ſerving him with it. They who feel pain, and are under the arreſt of ſickneſs, would give much and even ſpend (as that woman in the Goſpel did) all that they have upon Phyſicians and medicines, to get eaſe and cure; whereas they who are well and ſtrong do ſeldom (and then for the moſt part but formally) give thanks for it, or go to the expence of a due praiſe to God for it.

Secondly, Becauſe (the body being ſubject to ſo many diſeaſes and ſickneſſes) the outward man (though inſenſibly) decayeth day by day, we ſhould look after an increaſe of the inner man day by day; that as our bodies decline towards the grave, ſo our Souls may incline and grow up towards Heaven. And that when we lay down theſe earthly tabernacles in the duſt, we may do it in a fullneſs of hope to receive them again from the duſt, freed and exonerated from all thoſe ſickneſſes and diſeaſes; which now bind us about, like the collar of our coat, and (as Job proceeds in the report of his ſad condition) make us like duſt, before we go to the duſt.

Verſe 19. He hath caſt me into the mire, and I am become like duſt and aſhes.

This Verſe is the utmoſt line of mortality on this ſide death and the grave; when a living man ſticks in the mire, and looks like duſt and aſhes, we can hardly tell whether we ſhould reckon him among the living or the dead; yet to this exigence was Job reduc'd.

He hath caſt me into the mire.] The word which we tranſlate, to caſt, ſignifieth alſo to teach, and therefore ſome render the Text, He (that is, God) hath taught me in the mire. There is no ſtate (in this life) ſo bad wherein God cannot teach us to be better. He often makes the dunghil or mire our School, and there he inſtructs us. That's a very ſpiritual ſence. When God ſends his into the dirty and miery places of affliction, he ſends them to learn ſome leſſon or other which they would not underſtand in the fair paſtures of their proſperity. Are they ſick? he teacheth them in the mire of ſickneſs, to look after ſoul-health. Are they in the mire of poverty? he teacheth them in their poverty to look after the true riches. They are happy who learn how to cleanſe themſelves though in the mire, who get inſtruction by correction.

But rather the word (as we give it) ſignifieth, to caſt down, and to caſt down with ſtrength; ſo that though the other be a more ſpiritual ſence, yet this is a more proper and commodious ſenſe in this place. He hath caſt me into the mire. What mire? 'Tis uſual in Scripture to ſignifie any ſtate of great adverſity by mire. David acknowledged the goodneſs of God in his deliverance from trouble under this Notion (Pſal. 40. 2.) He brought me alſo out of an horrible pit, out of the miery clay. And under the ſame metaphor he bewails his trouble (Pſal. 69. 2.) I ſink in deep mire where there is no ſtanding: And (Ver. 14.) He prayeth, Deliver me out of the mire, and let me not ſink. Such was the mire into which Job was caſt. And this aggravated Jobs affliction, God did not only caſt mire upon him, but caſt him into the mire; and again, God did not meerly let him fall into the mire of trouble and ſickneſs, but he caſt him into it. This caſting notes, firſt, a violent act, we caſt or throw a thing out of our hands with force: Secondly, an act of diſpleaſure, when we caſt a thing upon the ground, much more when we caſt it into the dirt and mire, we do it with a kind of indignation; what we caſt from us any how is offenſive to us, much more doth that offend us, which we caſt into the mire. Yea to be caſt into the mire notes two things further.

Firſt, Pollution all over; when mire is caſt upon us, it defiles us, but to be caſt into the mire, is a total defilement.

contumelioſum & grave eſt in lutum projicere. Merc.

Secondly, Utmoſt ſhame, it is a diſgraceful thing to be caſt into the dirt, and tumbled into the mire. Job was in both notions caſt into the mire, he was afflicted all over, and he was revil'd both in and with his afflictions. He was double-dirted, He was dirted with poverty, and dirted with reproach; and 'tis rare that any good man who is caſt into the former dirt, that of poverty, can keep himſelf out of the latter, the dirt of reproach, we are ſure Job could not. And therefore when we hear him crying out, He hath caſt me into the mire, His meaning is, I am caſt into great and deep affliction; my worldly goods are gone, and ſo is my good name, my health is gone, and ſo is my honour, my outward proſperity is gone, and ſo is my inward peace; once I was upon a mountain, but now I am in the mire, I was wont to ſit upon the throne, but now I ſit in the duſt, or upon a dunghil; He hath caſt me into the mire.

Hence take notice; Firſt, How conſtant Job was in acknowledging God as the Author of all his ſufferings; He hath caſt me, &c.

This truth hath been touched heretofore, and therefore I only name it. We ought to own God in our throwing down as well as in our lifting up, as well caſting us into the mire, as ſetting us with Princes.

Secondly, Note; God ſometimes declareth indignation againſt his ſervants in afflicting them.

He caſteth his Jewels into the mire, as if they were but mire. Thoſe Cities who had rejected the preaching and miracles of Chriſt, who had caſt away the tenders of grace and mercy in the Goſpel, as a worthleſs, uſeleſs thing, are only threatned to be caſt to deſtruction, (Matth. 11.23.) And thou Capernaum which are exalted unto heaven, ſhalt be brought (thruſt or caſt) down to hell; thou ſhalt not only fall down to hell by thy own weight, or according to thy own natural tendency, (for indeed hell is the center of all wicked men) but thou ſhalt be brought or preſſed down with violence and fierce wrathful indignation. We have a like deſcription of the ruin of Babylon, (Revel. 18.21.) And a mighty Angel took up a ſtone like a great mill-ſtone, and caſt it into the Sea (This action of the Angel was emblematical, and himſelf had order to expound it) ſaying, thus with violence ſhall that great City Babylon be thrown down, and ſhall be found no more at all. As with violence Babylon ſhall be thrown down, ſo with violence doth the Lord ſometimes throw down many of the ſons of Sion. He throws down his Iſraelites as he threw down the Egyptians, of whom 'tis ſaid (Exod. 15.4.) Pharaohs Charets and his hoſt hath he caſt into the Sea; God threw them as a man throws a ſtone out of his hand into the Sea. And thus Ethan ſpeaks of the great change which God made in the ſtate of the Kingdom of Iſrael by Jeroboam, to whom ten tribes of twelve revolted, (Pſal. 89. 39.) Thou haſt made void the Covenant of thy ſervant: thou haſt profaned his crown by caſting it to the ground. Thoſe words, by caſting it, are not expreſt in the Original, but thoſe words, to the ground plainly imply as much, thou haſt profaned his Crown to the ground. Crowns have a kind of ſacredneſs in them, (eſpecially the Crown of Iſrael had) They are made and appointed to ſit upon the heads of Princes, and therefore, they are in a ſort prophaned when caſt upon the ground. God made ſuch a breach in the Kingdom of David in the time of Rehoboam, his Grand-child, as might well be called a caſting of his Crown to the ground, as if it had been a prophane thing, and as his Crown ſo his throne was caſt down, (Ver. 44.) Thou haſt made his glory to ceaſe: and caſt his throne down to the ground. Thus God dealt with the family of David, a man after his own heart, when the heart of his family began to depart from God, and joyn with Idols. And thus God deals with many of his Saints, he viſibly throws them, and violently throws them into the mire, and defaceth all their earthly glory.

Thirdly, Note; There is no ſuffering condition ſo low and ſordid, but God ſometimes caſts his choiceſt ſervants into it.

He caſts them not only into affliction, but into the dirt of affliction. The Church of God may lye among the pots, as that ſuppoſition of the Pſalmiſt intimates, (Pſal. 68. 13.) Though ye have lien among the pots, yet ſhall ye be as the wings of a Dove covered with Silver, and her feathers with yellow Gold. Indeed the Church of God hath more then once lien among the pots, and lookt like a very ſcullion in the chimny corner among the aſhes. Jeremiah was a faithful and a precious Prophet, yet God ſuffered him to be caſt, or caſt him into the mire literally, (Jer. 38. 6.) They took Jeremiah and caſt him into the dungeon of Malchiah the ſon of Hammelech that was in the Court of the Priſon: and they let down Jeremiah with cords: and in the dungeon there was no water, but mire: ſo Jeremiah ſunk in the mire. As Jeremiah ſtuck in the literal mire, ſo have ſome other precious Saints; but as for the mire in a figure (of which this Text and poynt ſpeak) who can tell how many of them have been caſt into it? God lets his people ſink into any mire but the mire of ſin; of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks (2 Pet. 2. 2.) And while God keeps us out of that mire, we may well bear it, whatſoever mire he caſts us into. Sin is the worſt mire, much worſe then mire. The wicked caſt themſelves into the mire of ſin like ſwine, they love to do it, and God in judgment leaves them there for ever; and he often caſts (though he never leaves any Saint) the beſt of Saints into the worſt mire of afflictions. A Job may have cauſe to ſay, He hath caſt me into the mire,

And I am become like duſt and aſhes.

That is, ſuch is my preſent condition: I who was beautiful as the light, and ſhining as the Sun, am now become like duſt and aſhes, that is, I am brought as low and made as vile to the eye of man as vile can be; I may be compared to duſt and aſhes. 'Tis ſaid (Pſal. 49.20.) Man that is in honour and underſtandeth not, is like the beaſts that periſh; That is, he may be compared to the beaſts that periſh. The Apoſtle ſpeaks alſo in that form, (Rom. 9.29.) Except the Lord of Sabbath had left us a ſeed, we had been as Sodom, and been made like unto Gomorrha; That is, our condition and theirs compared together had been much alike; ſo here, I am become like duſt and aſhes; That is, I am ſuch for a man as duſt or aſhes are unto men, a thing of lighteſt eſtimation. When Abraham would teſtifie before the Lord how little he was in his own opinion, he thus expreſſeth himſelf, (Gen. 18.27.) Behold now I have taken upon me to ſpeak unto the Lord which am but duſt and aſhes. And when 'tis ſaid of God (Pſal. 103.14.) He remembreth that we are duſt; the meaning is, he remembreth how poor and frail our original is. And therefore when Job ſaith, I am become like duſt and aſhes, his ſence of himſelf was this, I am reduced to the meaneſt eſtate that is incident to man; I was once duſt, and ſo I ſeem to be now, I can be but aſhes, and ſuch I am already in appearance. I am become (and in what likeneſs can I be more uncomely?) like duſt and aſhes.

Hence Obſerve; Firſt, Great afflictions and troubles ſhew us what we are, and even make us what we were, and ſhall be.

We are but duſt and aſhes at beſt, yet it doth not appear to us that we are ſo when we are at our beſt, but when extream afflictions and ſickneſſes bring us to the borders of death, and we are ready to drop into the grave, then we begin to think that we are what we are, duſt and aſhes; man will ſcarce be perſwaded that he is duſt, until he is ready to go to the duſt. As the Apoſtle ſaith in another caſe, (1 Joh. 3.2.) Beloved, now are we the ſons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we ſhall be. But we know, that when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him; for we ſhall ſee him as he is. The ſons of God do not yet know what their own ſonſhip is, as to all the priviledges and excellencies of it, nor ſhall they fully know it until they come to Heaven, which is our full enjoyment of thoſe excellencies and priviledges. Now as Saints know little of their future happineſs till they enjoy it; ſo we know little of our preſent frailty till we feel it; we are now duſt and aſhes, yet it doth ſcarce appear to us that we are ſo, till ſome great changes are upon us, till ſome ſickneſs take hold of us, and then we begin to bethink our ſelves how frail we are, or to think that we are but duſt and aſhes, David could ſay, (Pſal. 39. 5.) Behold, thou haſt made my dayes as an hand-breadth, and mine age is as nothing thing before thee: verily every man at his beſt eſtate is altogether vanity, Selah. Man is vanity, that's a truth, (and the truth of Jobs Text,) yea every man in his beſt eſtate, in his glory, beauty, and ſtrength, in his riches, dignity and power, when he is aſcended to and ſeated upon the higheſt throne of honour attainable in this world, is even then but vanity, duſt and aſhes; but he is not convinced of this, until he is taught it by afflictions and humbling providences. 'Tis ſeldom that a man in his beſt eſtate, ſeeth the worſt of his eſtate; that he is altogether vanity, duſt and aſhes. Man was firſt formed out of the duſt, by the creating hand of God, and the afflicting hand of God turns him (as it were) back again into the duſt, yea into duſt. When man is at his worſt iſſue, he is no worſe then he was in his original, duſt. That which ſickneſs did to Job, death will ſhortly do and more to us all, we ſhall become duſt and aſhes. Sickneſs makes us like duſt and aſhes, but death makes us duſt and aſhes; death is not far from diſeaſes, nor a grave from a ſick-bed. The Papiſts have a day according to their blind devotion (and it hath been known among us) which they call the day of aſhes, or Aſh-wedneſday. 'Tis ſuperſtition to keep a day of aſhes, or an Aſh-wedneſday, but 'tis a good piece of ſound religion every day to remember that we are but duſt and aſhes; 'Tis our wiſdom to conſider that willingly in our ſtrength and health, which a little ſickneſs and weakneſs will bring us to, whether we will or no. The beſt of Saints are, in their own opinion but duſt and aſhes, when 'tis beſt with them in the world, eſpecially then, when they draw near to and converſe with God; and the greateſt of men might ſee themſelves duſt and aſhes, would they but a while lay down the thoughts of their worldly greatneſs, and in their thoughts converſe with death. I am become like duſt and aſhes.

Job was in his own apprehenſion as if he had indeed been reſolved into his firſt principle duſt, even the duſt of death; yet Job was renewed and reſtored, as the event proved afterwards, comparing that even with his then preſent ſtate and opinion of himſelf.

Note; We can never be brought ſo low by any affliction or diſeaſe, but God can bring us up again.

Who can be lower then duſt and aſhes; there's little probability, and therefore ſcarce any hope of a reſtauration when once we are brought thus low; yet though Job was thus low brought, he was reſtored; though he gave himſelf up for a dead man, and judged his bones as ſcattered upon the graves mouth; yet God raiſed him up again. Hannah in her ſong was full of ſuch a faith, (1 Sam. 2. 8.) He raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghil, to ſet them among Princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory: for the pillars of the earth are the Lords, and he hath ſet the world upon them; as it is thus in regard of our civil ſtate, God raiſeth us, when we are in the duſt, and upon the dunghil, ſo in regard of our natural, when man is duſt and aſhes, ready to be ſhovel'd into the grave, God raiſeth him up. The Lord killeth and maketh alive; he enlivens thoſe who are numbred among the dead. The ſtate of the Jews in captivity was like a ſtate of death, therefore the Prophet (Ezek. 37.) is brought into a valley where he had a viſion of dry bones, and it was asked him, Can theſe dry bones live? Lord thou knoweſt, (ſaid he.) Though that people were in their captivity as dry bones, God raiſed them up again; Thus ſaith the Lord God unto theſe bones, behold I will cauſe breath to enter into you, and ye ſhall live: and I will lay ſinews upon you, and will bring up fleſh upon you, and cover you with skin, &c. So I propheſied as I was commanded, and as I propheſied there was a noiſe, and behold a ſhaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone; and when I beheld, lo the ſinews and the fleſh came upon them, and the skin covered them above, &c. So I propheſied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived and ſtood up upon their feet an exceeding great Army. How eaſily can God command a reſurrection from affliction, who can command it from the grave! And therefore he by a reſurrection from the grave, repreſented to Ezekiel, the reſurrection of his people Iſrael from their affliction. Both or all things are alike eaſie to him, to whom nothing is hard. The natural, civil, and ſpiritual death, are in the hand of the living, the ever-living God.

Here we have ſeen Jobs afflictions, which look't like death; in the next verſe Job ſpeaks of an affliction more grievous then death, and that was, God ſeemed to turn a deaf ear upon him.

Verſ. 20. I cry unto thee, and thou doſt not hear me: I ſtand up, and thou regardeſt me not.

I cry;] That is, I pray, and I pray earneſtly, I even ſhout in prayer; I pray with utmoſt intention, fervency, yea vehemency of Spirit; to cry is more then barely to pray; every godly man prayeth, who doth but humbly, ſincerely and feelingly manifeſt his deſires unto God in faith through Jeſus Chriſt. But he that cryes doth more then manifeſt his deſires, he deſires and would not be delayed, will not be denied. The importance of this word, hath been opened before (Chap. 16. 18. Chap. 27. 9.) and therefore I ſhall not further inſiſt upon it here. When Job was become like duſt and aſhes, when he was caſt into the mire, what then? (ſaith he) I cry unto thee.

Hence obſerve; There is no ſtate ſo low, but a godly man may have a freedom with God in prayer.

Though a poor Soul be in the mire, though he be but duſt and aſhes, yet he hath acceſs to the throne of Grace. Jonah cried unto God out of the belly of hell, (Chap. 2. 2.) That is, (as 'tis ſaid, Ver. 1.) out of the fiſhes belly, which was to Jonah as a hell or grave, (Sheol is indifferent to both) for there Jonah lay not only buryed as the dead are in a grave, but tormented and troubled in ſpirit, as the damned are in hell. And certainly could we ſuppoſe a godly man thrown really into hell, he would pray there; let his condition be what it will, he will pray; prayer is the language and breath of the new creature, and therefore let him be what and where he can be, he will be praying; the new creature muſt work out its ſelf in the manifeſtation of holy deſires and prayers.

Secondly, Conſidering Job in this his low condition praying,

Note; It is our duty to pray moſt, and uſually we pray beſt, when 'tis worſt with us; when we are nigh the mire and duſt, prayer is not only moſt ſeaſonable, but moſt pure.

Yea God expects prayer moſt when we are moſt afflicted, and therefore ſaith the Scripture, Is any man afflicted? let him pray. Are you in the mire? then pray. Are you in duſt and aſhes? that's not only a time, but The time of prayer.

Thirdly, Job in that condition did not only pray, but cry.

Hence obſerve; Affliction provokes a Soul to pray to the utmoſt, to pray not only in ſincerity, but with fervency, not only to pray with faith, but with a holy paſſion, or paſſionately.

When we cry, our paſſions come forth, at our eyes, at our hands, at our mouths; we cry in weeping, and cry out in ſpeaking. It is ſaid of that afflicted woman (Matth. 15. 22.) Behold a woman of Canaan came out of the ſame coaſts, and cried unto him, ſaying, have mercy on me, O Lord, thou ſon of David, my daughter is grievouſly vexed with a devil. She came crying with a full mouth, as if ſhe would aſſault Chriſt by prayer; it is a cuſtom at the onſet of a battel, for Armies to fall on and charge with a ſhout, with a cry; and 'tis noted that ſome Armies have prevailed more with their cryes then with their ſwords, more with their tongues and voyces, then with their hands and blows. Thus the cry, the ſhout, which the Soul makes in prayer, doth more ſometimes with God, then the matter of prayer; And therefore this was a great temptation to Job, and he ſpeaks of it, as of a ſtrange and unuſual thing with God, not to give audience, when the Soul is in ſuch an exigence. I cry unto thee, And thou doeſt not hear, &c.

Hence note; When prayer is ſent out with a cry to God in affliction, it is a wonder if it be not preſently heard.

As I ſhewed before that Jonah (Chap. 2. 2.) prayed in the belly of Hell, ſo if we look upon that Scripture again, we ſhall find, that he praying with a cry was quickly anſwered and prevailed mightily with God; I cryed by reaſon of my affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me, out of the belly of Hell cryed I; and thou heardeſt my voice; that the Lord heard him, is as often repeated as that he cryed unto the Lord; as if the Spirit of God would teach us, that crying prayer ſhall not miſs a hearing. So David concludes and reckons upon it, (Pſal. 55. 17.) Evening and Morning, and at Noon, will I pray and cry aloud, and he ſhall hear my voice. Mark, he doth not ſay barely, I will pray, Evening, Morning, and Noon, thrice a day, that is, very often every day, but he adds, and cry aloud, and what will this loud cry obtain? A hearing without doubt, ſo he aſſures himſelf; He ſhall hear me. David ſpeaks as if ſuch prayer did lay a command or put a force upon God himſelf; He ſhall hear me; not that God hears any prayer whether he will or no (as men ſometimes do that upon importunity which they have no mind to) but he hath no will, no mind not to hear ſuch prayers, the prayers of thoſe who cry aloud to him. As affliction puts the Soul upon crying, (want cannot bluſh, pinching neceſſity knows not the Laws of modeſty, we commonly ſay, Neceſſity hath no Law, it cryes, and ſhouts, and wreſtles, and tugs, it will take no denial, nor will it take notice that we are denied, but almoſt quite forgetting good manners, or uſing no more then will do us good, it will thruſt even upon God himſelf, and cry out to him too. Now as affliction puts us upon crying to God) ſo crying puts God upon doing for us. (Luke 18. 7.) Shall not God avenge his elect that cry unto him night and day! Shall he not! Chriſt ſpeaks of it as of a thing which God cannot but do in honour, as well as truth in faithfulneſs. Shall not God! Sounds thus high, God certainly will, and ſo 'tis expounded (Ver. 8.) I tell you that he will avenge them ſpeedily. That of the Apoſtle (Rom. 8. 32.) carries the ſame commanding ſence with it; He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things elſe? What good thing, that is good for us, can God ſtick at to give us, who did not ſtick at that good, that beſt gift his own Son! So when God hath given a Believer not only the grace and Spirit of prayer, but a gracious fervency and importunity of Spirit in prayer, ſo that he cryeth night and day to him, how ſhall he not give him that which he prayeth for. Winged prayers have uſually winged anſwers, they are anſwered ſpeedily; though prayer, as prayer put up ſincerely in the Name of Chriſt with faith ſhall not be unanſwered, yet the vehemency and ardency of our Spirits in prayer prevails moſt for a ſuddain anſwer. Such a prayer like an Arrow drawn to the head with a ſtrong arm, flyes ſwiftly and effectually. The Apoſtle James gives us this aſſurance (Chap. 5. 16.) Confeſs your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed: The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. In-wrought prayer, or prayer that hath a Spirit in it. carrieth all before it: The word is applyed to thoſe that are poſſeſt with an evil Spirit; and we read in the Goſpel how violently ſuch men are acted (Mark. 5. 3, 4.) Surely that prayer which is acted by the holy Spirit, nothing can bind or hold from prevailing. (Pſal. 34. 5.) They looked unto him and were lightned: And their faces were not aſhamed. This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him and ſaved him out of all his trouble. The Lord heard him when he cried; and when did he cry? When he was poor, or diſtreſſed; ordinary prayer would not ſerve his turn then; and then he had more then an ordinary hearing. But though Job (poor man!) cried in his affliction, yet (which even amazed him) he was not heard, I cry unto thee, but thou doeſt not hear me. We are not to underſtand it as if God did not hear at all, or not take in the ſence of what he prayed: As God hears whoſoever ſpeaks, and whatſoever is ſpoken all the World over, ſo he heareth our loweſt whiſpers as much as our loudeſt cryes; yea he hears the language of our hearts; what we think is as evident and audible to God, as what we ſpeak; therefore when Job ſaith, Thou doeſt not hear; His meaning is, thou doeſt not anſwer, nor give me in the mercy, the relief, for which I cry unto thee. Thus Job cried to God and was not heard, and ſo have many others

But ſome may ſay, how can we reconcile this to the tenderneſs and mercifulneſs of God, whoſe very nature is goodneſs, and who is moſt free and ready to do good? Again, how can we reconcile this to thoſe many promiſes of God in Scripture concerning the hearing of prayer? Hath he not ſaid, Call upon me, and I will deliver; ſeek and you ſhall find, ask and it ſhall be given, knock and it ſhall be opened unto you? How are theſe promiſes true, if we (as Job here) cry unto God, and he doth not hear us?

I anſwer, The Lord makes good his word of promiſe, and acts according to his own Nature, which is infinitely good, yet this doth not always appear ſo to us; the prayer of faith is alwayes heard and anſwered, but the anſwer and goodneſs of God to us in it, is not alwayes reported and diſcovered to us. God certainly hears what we ſpeak, but we many times do not hear what he ſpeaks, though he ſpeak peace to us. God alwayes hears the prayer of faith and anſwers it, but we do not always hear what the anſwer is. It is ſaid expreſly (1 John 5. 14. 15.) And this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us. And if we know that he hear us whatſoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we deſired of him. Tis a Holy Scriptural confidence that God will hear us when we pray, and therefore every Believer may confident that he is heard. God makes ſome defers, though, properly, he makes no delayes, much leſs gives any flat denials to the prayer of faith. There is a wide difference between the deferring of an anſwer and the delaying of it, much more between that and the denial of it; that is a delay of help when help comes not in due time and ſeaſon, or when it comes too late. God never faileth to give help in the moſt needful ſeaſon, though he often defers to give it at our ſeaſon. In the Mount he will be ſeen, (Gen. 22. 14.) Thus God alwayes heareth the cry of his People, yet Job ſaid true, when he complained, I cryed unto thee, and thou doeſt not hear me.

Hence Note, Firſt, Not to be heard in a day of trouble and affliction, is more troubleſome to a gracious heart then all his afflictions.

When Job had ſaid, He hath caſt me into the mire, and I am become like duſt and aſhes, then he adds in the laſt place as the complement of all his ſufferings, I cry unto thee, and thou heareſt me not; as if this were worſe then all the reſt, worſe then his ſoars, worſe then the mire, duſt and aſhes. When any poor Soul, like the poor Woman ſpoken of (Matth. 15. 22.) ſhall cry to Chriſt, Thou Son of David have mercy on me; and he (as the Evangeliſt ſaith, Verſ. 23. in that Womans caſe) anſwer him not a word; how doth this ſtrike him to the very heart, and under what a temptation is ſuch a poor Soul, think you? Yea, how many temptations fall upon his Spirit, think you, in ſuch a caſe? Is he not ready to ſay in his heart; Is that true which I have ſo often heard, that God is the God hearing prayer? Is that true which is told us in his word for a truth, that he is rich unto all that call upon him? How can this be, when after ſo many cryes and calls, he anſwers me not a word? He hath ſaid that we ſhall not ſeek him in vain, and yet I can get nothing from him when I ſeek him. In ſuch a ſtreſs Nature will quickly reſolve, ſeeing he will not be found of me nor anſwer me, I will not ſeek to nor call upon him any more, come what will come, I will come no more at him, who is liberal of his promiſes, but fails in his performances. This is a ſore temptation, ſuch a temptation as a formaliſt cannot bear up againſt. Only the Soul of a ſound Believer, hopes for an anſwer when he hears none; and will not forſake, nor turn away from prayer, though he ſee no return of it, yea though God ſeems to turn away his prayer. Though to appearance God ſhould ſhrink from his promiſe, yet he will not ſhrink from his duty; indeed God ſhrinks not at all from his promiſe, Heaven and Earth ſhall paſs away, but not a tittle of his word ſhall paſs.

I grant there are many prayers that God heareth not at all, (Prov. 1. 28.) Then ſhall they call upon me, but I will not anſwer, they ſhall ſeek me early, but ſhall not find me. And we know (as the blind man ſaid, John 9. 31.) that God heareth not ſinners, but if any man be a worſhipper of God, and doth his will, him he heareth. If I regard iniquity in my heart, (ſaid David, Pſal. 66. 18.) the Lord will not hear me. While a Saint acts like a wicked man, he ſhall be dealt with accordingly; how ſhall God hear their requeſts, who do not hearken to his commands! God will not hear a Saints prayer, unleſs he live like a Saint, and he will not fail to hear him, as David found in that Pſalm. (Verſ. 19, 20.) But verily God hath heard me; he hath attended to the voice of my prayer; bleſſed be God, who hath not turned away my prayer, nor his mercy from me. Godly men are ever anſwered in effect, though not alwayes in kind. And wicked men are rarely anſwered in kind, but never in effect. Whatſoever they ask, they ask that they may conſume it upon their luſts, and therefore they ask and receive not, (James 4. 3.) And if a godly man ask (as poſſibly he may) for ſomewhat to lay out and conſume upon his luſt, he alſo ſhall ask and not receive. A godly man (in temptation) may pray as a wicked man doth, and then God will no more hear him he then doth a wicked man. And he often defers to hear the prayer of a godly man when he prayeth in the moſt holy and Spiritual manner, and he doth ſo for many reaſons, I ſhall name only two. Firſt, To exerciſe his graces, his faith and patience. Secondly, To draw out more of the Spirit of prayer from him, or that he may pray more. God doth not ſtop anſwering prayer, to the intent that Saints ſhould ſtop praying, but to the end they ſhould renew prayer. I cry unto thee, and thou heareſt me not. He was ſtill crying, though God as to his apprehenſion was not hearing.

Job thought he was not heard, becauſe he had not preſent deliverance; and in that ſenſe indeed he was not heard; and thus many of the Saints may pray and not be heard; that is, they may pray and not have preſent deliverance.

But how may we know that we are heard at any time, eſpecially then when we have not preſent deliverance?

I anſwer it in four things,

Firſt, By the quietneſs of our Spirits; 'Tis a ſign prayer is anſwered when we are ſatisfied, though the thing be not given in which we prayed for. Hannah having poured out her Soul before the Lord, went her way and did eat, and her countenance was no more ſad, (1 Sam. 1. 18.) The Text ſaith nothing of the anſwer of her prayer at that time. But the peace and ſatisfaction which ſhe had in her own Spirit about it, was an argument that the thing was granted, as indeed it was.

Secondly, Though we receive not the mercy preſently, yet if we receive freſh ſtrength to bear the want of it, that's an anſwer; ſo Paul was anſwered, God did not remove the meſſenger of Satan from him, but he ſaid; My grace is ſufficient for thee, and my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs, though I remove not the evil, yet my power ſhall ſupport thee under it.

Thirdly, We are anſwered; when though the evil be not removed, yet we have faith and patience to wait and tarry the Lords leiſure for the removal of it. When patience hath a perfect work (either in expecting or ſuffering) we are perfect and entire, wanting nothing, though we have not what we want, Jam. 1. 4.

Laſtly, He is anſwered in prayer that is more Heavenly, or more in Heaven after prayer. He that is edified in his holy faith, hath certainly prayed in the Holy Ghoſt, (Jude Ver. 20.) and ſure enough, every ſuch prayer is heard.

> Secondly, Note, Godly men are alwayes heard of God, yet they often think they are not heard. I cry unto thee, but thou doſt not hear me.

It was ſo with Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, (Pſal. 22. 2.) He cryed, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me! Why art thou ſo far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring? O my God I cry in the day time, but thou heareſt not; and in the night ſeaſon, and am not ſilent. 'Tis a ground of much comfort to remember, that as Chriſt bore other kind of afflictions for us, ſo that affliction alſo, not to be heard, when he prayed; even Chriſt was not heard as to ſenſe and preſent apprehenſion as he was man; Chriſt indured not only ſorrow and death for us, but a denial of deliverance from death, and of ſenſible comforts under the ſorrows of death, and that ſhould bear us up, that as Chriſt endured and overcame other temptations in our ſtead, ſo this alſo that his father turned a deaf ear to him, when he cryed.

Chriſtus hanc carnis noſtræ deſperationem, qua exiſtimamus nos, in malis non exaudiri, in ſuo humero ut & alios humanos morbos tranſtulit, ut eam vinceret, & ut nos in eo vinceremus. Brent.

Further, it ſeems Job uſed to be heard, elſe he had not taken notice of his not being heard; I cry unto thee, and thou doeſt not hear me.

> Hence Note, A godly man hath this priviledge, to be heard in prayer.

As we ſay of the Favourite of a great Prince, ſo we may of him, He hath the ear of the King, the ear of God.

> Again Note, It is very grievous to thoſe that have had the ear of God not to have it, or for them that uſe to be heard not to be heard.

A man that hath had the ear of great Prince, if he ſhould be ſhut out from him, it would cut him to the heart, if not kill him; for a ſtranger that never had any thing to do with him, to be denied Audience, 'tis no great matter. The loſs of any priviledge afflicts more then never to have had it.

I ſtand up, and thou regardeſt me not.

To ſtand up is a poſture of the body, which ſignifies in Scripture;

Firſt, Only the preſence of a man where he is; (Math. 16. 28.) Verily I ſay unto you, there be ſome ſtanding (that is preſent) here, which ſhall not taſt of death, till they ſee the Son of man coming in his Kingdom. Thus (John 1. 26.) John anſwered them, ſaying, I Baptize with water, but there ſtandeth one among you whom ye know not. And again, (John 18. 18.) Peter ſtood with them (he was among them at the fire) and warmed himſelf.

Secondly, To ſtand notes the upright poſture of a man, as oppoſed to ſtooping, kneeling and lying, (Kings 8. 22.) And Solomon ſtood (he did not kneel in his prayer, which is the moſt uſual praying poſture, but ſtood) before the Altar of the Lord in the preſence of the Congregation of Iſrael, and ſpread his hands toward Heaven.

Thirdly, Standing ſignifies the readineſs of a man to act or ſpeak. He that hath a mind to ſpeak ſtands up, (Luke 19. 8.) And Zacheus ſtood, and ſaid unto the Lord, Behold the half of my goods I give to the poor. When Joſhua the High Prieſt was ſtanding before the Lord (ready to pray for the people) Satan was ſtanding at his right hand (ſhewing his readineſs) to reſiſt him, Zech. 3. 1.

Fourthly, To ſtand up, notes conſtancy and perſeverance, (Phil. 4. 1.) Therefore my Brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, ſo ſtand faſt in the Lord my dearly beloved, (Coloſſ. 4. 12.) Epaphras who is one of you, a ſervant of Chriſt, ſaluteth you, alwayes labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may ſtand (that is, continue) perfect, and compleat in all the will of God (1 Theſ. 3. 8.) For now we live, if ye ſtand faſt in the Lord. The word which we render ſtand faſt in two of theſe Text, is only ſtand in the Greek; he that doth not ſtand faſt, can hardly be ſaid to ſtand; and he that ſtandeth faſt in the Lord, perſevereth or is conſtant in the faith and profeſſion of the Lord.

When Job ſaith, I ſtand up, what doth this geſture intimate? Surely his conſtancy and perſeverance in prayer, ſtanding is ſo much a prayer-geſture, that it is ſometimes put for prayer, (Jere. 15. 1.) Though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me; That is, prayed and made interceſſion before me for this People; yet my mind could not be towards them. But as ſtanding notes prayer, ſo more then bare prayer, even much inſtancy and continuance in prayer, as alſo waiting for an anſwer to prayer. Thus we are to take it here; and ſo ſome Tranſlate the Text, I hold on or perſevere, but thou regardeſt not, or thou regardeſt me not, though I am ſtill urging and importuning thee by prayer.

In clamore intentio eſt orantis, in ſtando perſeverantia & indeclinabilis fiducia. Philip. Perſeverantem minime curas. Tygur.

Hence Note, True Believers will not only pray earneſtly, but perſeveringly; not only cry, but ſtand before God, and abide by it.

Suppoſe they get nothing at preſent, yet they will not be put off, nor diſcouraged, but ſtand to it; fervency in prayer is good, but perſeverance is better.

Further, When Job ſaith, I ſtand up, we may conſider him in the poſture of a ſervant, ready to receive commiſſion or command from his Maſter, whither to go, and what to do. As if Job had ſaid, When I have prayed for mercy at the hand of God, I ſtand up to expect his orders for direction in matter of duty. It is an excellent frame of Spirit, when we have cryed to God to do for us, then to ſtand waiting what God would have us do. Some will pray to receive favours from him, who yet are unwilling to receive commands from him. They cry out for relief, but they care not to obey; or they would have God do their will, but they have no will to do his. I ſtand up.

And thou regardeſt me not.] Thou ſeeſt me not, or takeſt no notice of me, if a man when we come before him, will not ſo much as look upon us, what can be a greater diſreſpect? As the Lord heard the cry of the Children of Iſrael by reaſon of their Task-Maſters, ſo he ſaith, I have ſurely ſeen the affliction of my People, which are in Egypt, (Exod. 3.7, 9.) That is, I have fully conſidered their oppreſſions, and have a due regard unto their perſons. David begs ſuch a look of God, (Pſal. 25. 18.) Look upon mine affliction, and my pain, and forgive all my ſins. Hagar perceived and was very ſenſible that ſhe had it, (Gen. 16. 13, 14.) And ſhe called the Name of the Lord that ſpake unto her, Thou God ſeeſt me: For ſhe ſaid, have I alſo here looked after him that ſeeth me: Wherefore the Well was called Beer-lahai-roi, behold it is between Kadeſh, and Bered. It will be our perfect happineſs in the next life to have a ſight of God, and it is a high priviledge in this life to be ſeen of God. God (I grant) ſeeth all men, and to be ſeen only ſo as all men are ſeen cannot be a priviledge to any man. But when Hagar put ſuch a remark both upon God who ſaw her, and upon the place where he ſaw her, purely in reference to his ſeeing of her, doubtleſs ſhe intended more then common ſeeing, or ſuch a ſight as God beſtows upon, and indeed (becauſe he is all eye-all, ſight) is common to all men. So that when Hagar ſaid, Thou God ſeeſt me, her meaning is, God did that for her which Job complains he did not for him; He regarded her. This ſight of God, or ſuch a look from him, is a high, a ſignal favour. The ſight of God is operative and influential upon man. As the Lords not ſeeing or not taking notice of wicked men, is their undoing, and he ſends them to Hell, and utter damnation, with this killing word, Depart from me, I know you not; ſo when God takes notice of his, 'tis as the doing of all for them, and when he gives them any intimation of his regard to them, 'tis life and peace to them, yea 'tis Heaven and Salvation to them. Conſider then how ſad it was with Job, who ſaith to God, Thou regardeſt me not, that is, I have no preſent teſtimony of any favour from thee, or acceptance with thee.

But may ſome ſay, is it not very ſinful for any godly man to ſay thus to God, I cry unto thee, and thou doeſt not hear me, I ſtand up and thou regardeſt me not? Is not this to charge God fooliſhly, yea to charge him falſly? Whom doth God regard, if he regard not the godly? And whoſe cry will he hear, if he hear not theirs?

I anſwer, Theſe are not the words, nor is this the ſpeech of one that accuſeth God as unfaithful to his word of promiſe, but they are the words of one, that (ſomewhat over-boldly indeed) expoſtulates with God for putting off, or deferring the performance of his word or promiſe. Saints often expoſtulate or reaſon their caſe with God, why he doth not hear their prayers, nor give them a token for good that he regards their perſons, but they never accuſe God, nor ſay directly, we pray and God doth not at all regard. To ſay ſo were to charge God fooliſhly and falſly.

To conclude, Some read this laſt clauſe without a negation, I ſtand up and thou regardeſt or markeſt me; and in the Hebrew there is none, as the different letter in which the Negative particle, not, is Printed in our Bibles, doth plainly inform the Reader. So that we aſſume the Negative out of the former part; the Original is only thus, I cry unto thee, and thou doeſt not hear me, I ſtand up, and thou regardeſt, or markeſt me. Thus Mr. Broughton gives his Tranſlation affirmative, But thou doeſt mark me; How? To help me; No, but (as the ſame Author gloſſeth his Tranſlation) to bring upon me all kinds of puniſhment, or to eſpy all advantages how to afflict me more, as if thou wert not only pleaſed to afflict me, but pleaſed with my affliction. As if Job here intended the marking of an enemy, to preſs heavier and heavier upon his oppoſite, till he totally vanquiſhed him, or get his will of him. Our Negative Tranſlation ſuits beſt with the former words; and this Affirmative Tranſlation complies beſt with the words which follow; Thou art cruel to me.

Conſideras me, non ut opituleris, ſed ut gravius punias quaſi voluptatem capiens ex mea Miſeria. Dreſ.

VERS. 21, 22, 23, 24.

Thou art become cruel to me: With thy ſtrong hand thou oppoſeſt thy ſelf againſt me.
Thou liftest me up to the wind: Thou causeſt me to ride upon it, and diſſolveſt my ſubſtance:
For I know that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the Houſe appointed for all living.
Howbeit, he will not ſtretch out his hand to the Grave, though they cry in his deſtruction.

IN the former Verſe Job complained, that he prayed and was not heard: That he waited upon God and was not regarded; but now he complains higher, or ſhews the height of that complaint.

Verſ. 21. Thou art become cruel to me: With thy ſtrong hand thou oppoſeſt thy ſelf againſt me.

Thou art become] The Hebrew is, Thou art turned, or changed: There is no change nor turning, not ſo much as a ſhadow of it in God, yet as to us he often appears changed and turned. So we underſtand the Prophet ſpeaking of God's dealing with the People of Iſrael, (Iſa. 63. 10.) They rebelled, and vexed his holy Spirit, therefore he was turned to be their enemy; that is, he who had beſtowed upon them the higheſt marks of honour and friendſhip, did then declare himſelf in the poſture of an enemy. The unkind returns which they made for the tokens of his love conſtrained him (as it were) to take up Arms, and turn their enemy, or (as it follows there) to fight againſt them.

So then, this turning may be conſidered with a twofold reſpect.

Firſt, With reſpect to the Nature of God; thus God turneth not; he ever is what he was, and he ever will be what he is.

Secondly, With reſpect to the actings of God; thus in his actions or workings he changes from what he was, and becomes what he hath not been. In this ſence we are to underſtand Job here, when he ſpeaks this extream hard word of God, Thou art become cruel; As if he had ſaid, Lord, the copy of thy carriage and countenance towards me is changed: Thou O God, who heretofore haſt been tender of me, and even dandledſt me on thy knees, as a darling, now dealeſt harſhly with me, frowneſt upon me, and ſeemeſt even to daſh me againſt the ſtones: Thou art become cruel to me.

Factus es mihi ſævus qui clemens eſſe ſoleas; & talem te quondam in me exhibueris, nunc longe alium exhibes. Mer.

To be cruel, is to ſhew no mercy, or not to be toucht with pity and compaſſion when we ſee others in miſery. Cruelty declares it ſelf two wayes.

Firſt, In laying a heavy hand of trouble and affliction upon others, as thoſe Egyptian Task-Maſters did upon the children of Iſrael, till they made them groan under their burden.

Secondly, In not helping or in not ſhewing bowels to thoſe whom we ſee troubled and afflicted, though we our ſelves have not laid ſo much as a little finger upon them. Not only are they cruel who put others to more grievous ſufferings then they ought, but they alſo are cruel, who are incompaſſionate towards others in their ſufferings. Whatſoever is excluſive of mercy may be reſolved into cruelty; and therefore we find to be cruel and not to ſhew mercy joyned together as ſynonymous expreſſions intending the ſame thing. (Jer. 6. 23.) They ſhall lay hold on Bow and Spear: They are cruel, and have no mercy. Mercy and cruelty are remoteſt oppoſites; And they are moſt cruel, or have nothing but cruelty in them, who have no mercy. As this is the deſcription of the Babylonians, who deſtroyed Jeruſalem, ſo we have a like deſcription of the deſtroyers of Babylon, (Jer. 50.42.) Babylon ſhall be as cruelly handled as ever that handled Sion. (Prov. 12. 10.) A righteous (or good) man is merciful, but the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel; that is, inſtead of ſhewing mercy they are cruel, or that which looks moſt like mercy in them, is, in effect, but cruelty.

Job ſeemeth to charge God with cruelty in both theſe reſpects. Firſt, becauſe he laid ſuch heavy afflictions upon him, or preſſed him ſo ſore. Secondly, Becauſe being in that condition, ſo afflicted, ſo preſſed, he ſhewed him no pity, no compaſſion, but appeared as hard as a Rock to him, as not at all moved either with his calamity, or with his crys; I ſtand up, but thou regardeſt me not; Thou art become cruel to me.

With thy ſtrong hand thou oppoſeſt thy ſelf againſt me.

The Text is; With the ſtrength of thy hand; the hand of God hath all ſtrength in it, or is all ſtrength; and the hand of God ſignifieth ſtrength, where his ſtrength is not expreſſed. When the Prophet ſaith, (Iſa. 59. 1.) The hand of the Lord is not ſhortned; his meaning is, The ſtrength of the Lord is not abated; but where we have the ſtrength and the hand of God put together, or as we Tranſlate, The ſtrong hand of God, there the ſtrongeſt ſtrength is intended. The ſtrength of God's hand, or this ſtrong hand, is his omnipotency. His ſtrength is ſuch that he can do all things which are acts of ſtrength. The Scripture ſaith, he cannot lye, (Tit. 1.2.) He cannot deny himſelf, (2 Tim. 2. 13.) becauſe theſe are acts of weakneſs, yea of ſinfulneſs, not of ſtrength and power. Again, the hand of God is ſo ſtrong that he can do whatſoever he will, though he will not do whatſoever he can. His power hath no limit but his own pleaſure, (Pſal. 115. 3.) Our God is in the Heavens, he hath done whatſoever he pleaſed; how ſtrong is his hand, which never failed, nor can fail in doing what himſelf is willing ſhould be done!

With thy ſtrong hand thou oppoſeſt thy ſelf againſt me.

And it is but thus, that God oppoſeth his worſt and moſt inveterate enemies, (Pſal. 89. 10.) Thou haſt broken Rahab, (that is, Egypt) in pieces as one that is ſlain, thou haſt ſcattered thine enemies with thy ſtrong arm: We put in the Margin, With thine arm of ſtrength. In the twenty third Chapter of this Book, Verſe 6. Job makes his Appeal to God, and deſireth Audience of him, ſupported with his confidence, that God who is ſo full of bowels would not oppoſe him with his ſtrong hand! Will he plead againſt me with his great power? That is, he will not plead againſt me with his great power. Yet here we ſee what his thoughts were of God, With thy ſtrong hand thou oppoſeſt thy ſelf againſt me. Thou doſt not only plead againſt me, but thou oppoſeſt thy ſelf againſt me, not only doſt thou ſpeak words againſt me, but thou acteſt againſt me, and that ſtrongly.

In Hebræo eſt unicum verbum חשטמני a שטם cui affine eſt שטן quod eſt adverſari. Piſ. Ἐνάντιος ἀντικείμενος. Pro robore manus tuæ inteſtinum odium exerces adverſum me. Jun. Te mihi Oſorem oſtendis ita graviter affligens, ac ſi meo diſſes. Merc.

Thou oppoſeſt thy ſelf againſt me.] The word here uſed is very near in ſound, and as near in ſenſe to that word Satan, which ſignifies an adverſary; and is one of the Devils names: He is juſtly called Satan, becauſe he is a profeſt enemy to man, an implacable enemy. He is contrary to us, he ſets himſelf quite croſs to us, and loves to lye croſs in every buſineſs which tends to our good, and the glory of God. The word is ſometimes rendred to hate, becauſe oppoſition uſually riſeth from and is the effect of hatred, (Pſal. 109.4.) For my love they are my adverſaries; or, for my love they hate me. And thus ſome Tranſlate here, With thy hand ſhould ſtrong doeſt excerciſe inward hatred againſt me.

Thus we ſee how this good man's Spirit was tranſported; and it may be very much queſtion'd how it could conſiſt with the grace of Job, or with his reaſon, to call God cruel, and to ſay, that he oppoſed or hated him.

I anſwer; Firſt, Job ſpake this, not to accuſe God either of unrighteouſneſs, or of changeableneſs, but he was carried out in extravagant language, by the extremity of his miſery and pain; he conceived himſelf in ſuch a condition as worſe could not be, and to ſenſe God appeared ſo ſevere to him, as if he had been cruel to him, and oppoſed him with hatred.

Secondly, I anſwer; though Job ſpake thus as being over-born by his preſent ſufferings, yet he cannot altogether be acquitted of impatience and paſſionateneſs. And he had failed thus more then once before (*Chap.*16.13.Chap. 19.8, 9, 10.) in all which Texts he ſpared not to complain that God had declared himſelf as an enemy, or had carryed himſelf like an enemy towards him. We are not to reckon theſe paſſages among his graces, but his failings, nor do they ſhew, what he ought to have done, but what he did and ought not; or they inform us, what apprehenſions a good man may have of God, not what the affections of God are towards good men. Thou art cruel to me, &c.

Hence Obſerve, Though God be a full Sea of mercy in his own Nature, and hath nothing but mercy in his thoughts and purpoſes towards his own People; yet his outward actings do often appear exceeding ſevere and cruel.

As it is ſaid of the enemies of the People of God; They may do any thing againſt them but prevail. So God doth every thing againſt his People like one that is cruel, only he is not cruel. It is ſaid of Jacob (Gen. 31.2.) that he beheld the countenance of Laban, and behold it was not toward him as before, or (as we put in the Margin) as yeſterday, and the day before. Now as it is often with man towards man, ſo 'tis ſometimes with God towards man, he changeth his face, and if we behold his countenance, it is not toward us, as before. But as for his heart, that changeth not, 'tis toward his people to day as it was yeſterday, and it will be toward them to morrow, yea even for ever as it is to day; yet the People of God find ſuch turns of providence as put them to queſtion, whether the very heart of God be not turned from them. Doth not the Pſalmiſt complain (Pſal. 77. 7.) as if God had laid him aſide in his thoughts? Was he not upon thoſe deſponding Queries, Will the Lord caſt off for ever? And will he be favourable no more? Is his mercy clean gone for ever? Doth his promiſe fail for evermore? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? Hath he in anger ſhut up his tender mercies? He found the preſent dealings of God grievous and rigorous toward him, and he was for a while doubtful whether ever it would be otherwiſe. I ſay, he was ſo only a while, becauſe in the next words, (Verſ. 10.) he corrected himſelf and ſaw he was miſtaken: And I ſaid, this is my infirmity, &c. And no wonder, if the people of God ſometimes apprehend his dealings with them to be cruel, ſeeing we find himſelf ſometimes ſaying they are ſo; (Jer. 30. 14.) All thy lovers have forgotten thee, they ſeek thee not, for I have wounded thee with the Sword of an enemy, with the chaſtiſement of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquities, becauſe thy ſins are increaſt. He doth not ſay, I have ſent enemies to wound thee, and a cruel one to chaſten thee; but I have wounded thee as an enemy, and chaſtened thee like a cruel one. Hezekiah that good King doubted God would deal cruelly with him, even when he was upon his Sick-Bed, (Iſa. 38. 13.) I reckon'd till morning, that as a Lion, ſo will he break all my bones. Hezekiah had dreadful apprehenſions of God, he feared that before the morning came upon him, God would come upon him like a fierce hungry Lion, and cruſh his bones. David ſaith, (Pſal. 25. 10.) All the wayes of God are mercy and truth to them that fear him, and that keep his Covenant: If all his wayes, then his hardeſt wayes to ſuch are mercy and truth; So they are in the iſſue and event, they are ſo in the purpoſe and intendment of God, he will work them to it at laſt: but they are not alwayes ſo in appearance, and unto the preſent ſenſe of thoſe that fear him, and that keep his Covenant; they often find his wayes towards them like the wayes of a cruel one. We read thoſe words, For his mercy (that is, the mercy of God) endureth for ever, repeated as many times as there are verſes in the hundred thirty ſix Pſalm. That Pſalm begins, O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever. O give thanks to the God of gods, for his mercy endureth for ever: And it concludes as it began, O give thanks to the God of Heaven, for his mercy endureth for ever: That is, God doth never ceaſe to be merciful, no, not when he acteth with greateſt ſeverity: And though in that Pſalm no ſad acts of God towards his Iſrael be inſtanc'd in, yet the truth is univerſal, That the ſaddeſt actings of God, in the ſufferings of his Iſrael, put no interruption to his mercy; His mercy endures for ever. The Lord beareth a tenderneſs of affection to them in their ſmarteſt afflictions; even then he is tender beyond the tenderneſs of a Mother to her ſucking Child (Iſa. 49. 16.) Can a Mother forget her ſucking Child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the Son of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. I have graven thee upon the palms of mine hand, thy walls are continually before me: As if he had ſaid, I can no more forget thee then a man can forget that which is alwayes in his eye, or the memorial whereof he daily carrieth in his hand. And if we look a verſe or two before the Text alledged, we ſhall find a ſhining evidence of the truth I am now upon: At the thirteenth verſe the Lord invites all to rejoyce, Sing O Heavens, and be joyful O Earth, and break forth into ſinging O Mountains, for God hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted. This was good news; but it was not believed when told, at leaſt not expected before it was told: For in the next words the Prophet aſſures us, what dark miſgiving thoughts Zion had of God, and what hard concluſions ſhe had made againſt her ſelf (ver. 14.) But Zion ſaid, The Lord hath forſaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me. Thus ſaid Zion; but (ſaith the Lord) Zion, thou art miſtaken; for, Can a Woman forget her ſucking Child? &c. No more, not ſo much, nor at all can I forget thee; that is, not have a favourable remembrance of thee. The greateſt ſtorms of Divine anger againſt Zion, do not extinguiſh the flames of Divine love to Zion. There may be changes in the works of God, but he is in one mind, or his mind is alwayes the ſame to his, and that is a mind to do them good by all he doth to them.

Sit licet in natos facies auſtera parentum; Æqua tamen ſemper mens eſt & amica voluntas.

Secondly, Obſerve, The ſenſe of pain and preſent ſmart, may make the beſt of Saints ſpeak uncomely, and beſides their duty.

It was not only too much for Job to ſay of God, but more then a damned ſoul can truly ſay of God, Thou art become cruel to me: He that never exceeds juſtice is never cruel. We have heard many of the Saints under greateſt ſufferings, ſo far from ſaying God is cruel, that they have confeſſed, God is good, God is merciful, God is kind; this loſs is of God, this ſtroke is of God, this pain is of God, this wound is of God, and yet God is merciful, yet God is gracious, yet God is good: If Job, who in this extremity makes report of God as cruel, and cryes out, O cruel! how cruel! If he (I ſay) when the fit was over had been asked his opinion of God, what he thought of God, and what the thoughts of God were towards him; ſurely he would have ſaid, God is gracious, God is good and kind to me: He would have called him Redeemer (as Chap. 19. 25.) and not Deſtroyer. There he could ſay, I know that my Redeemer liveth, even when he was ready to dye under his hand (and Chap. 13. 16.) He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation: Theſe were his thoughts when he conſidered the matter; but when he was carried out in paſſion through the violence of pain, how intemperately did he ſpeak? We cannot alwayes judge of a mans eſtate by his actions, or by his ſpeeches. While the heart is right, words may go wrong.

Thirdly, Comparing this verſe with the former, where he ſaid, I cry, and thou heareſt not; and here preſently adds, Thou art cruel to me.

Obſerve, It is a great temptation not to be heard in prayer for the removing of affliction, or not to be eaſed and relieved when we pray; but it is a greater temptation to be more afflicted when we pray.

We are hard put to it, if we find not an Income of mercy when we cry to God; but if we find an inundation of ſeverity, O how ſtrong is that temptation! It puts a good man hard to it, if when he cryes to God, his troubles do not decreaſe, how much more when his troubles increaſe? or when he gets nothing by prayer but blows, as if prayer did only put God in mind to lay more load upon him. If when a poor ſoul asketh bread, he hath nothing but ſtones thrown at his head; if when he asketh fiſh, God doth (as it were) ſting him with ſcorpions: This is an unſpeakable temptation. We know prayer is the afflicted ſouls firſt and laſt; that is, his beſt refuge; indeed all his refuge; and when a man doth not find any relief in his laſt refuge, how ſadly muſt this ſit upon his ſpirit? Thus it was with Job, not only was he neglected, not heard, not regarded when he cryed, but God preſt affliction more and more upon him when he cryed. The appearances of God in angry diſpenſations, when we are praying, ſeeking, begging, knocking, wreſtling for mercy, are very burdenſome to the beſt of men, and cut the ſoul exceedingly. Miſgivings of mind that God is againſt us, are our greateſt miſeries, in a time of miſery.

Laſtly, Conſider again how this good man ſpake, Thou art cruel to me, with thy ſtrong hand thou oppoſeſt me. Job is ſet up for a mirror of patience, and we have heard of the patience of Job, yet here we may ſee the impatience of Job.

Hence Note, They who have ſtrongeſt grace, have not their graces alwayes in the ſame ſtrength. Their beſt graces are ſometimes worſted and get a foil.

That particular grace which is their Crown, is not alwayes Crowned or Conquering: The Crown of Job's graces was his Patience; that's the grace for which he is cryed up in Scripture, yet he did not alwayes ſhew forth patience, nor act the patient man. Abraham was ſtrong in faith, yet he was not alwayes in the ſame ſtrength of faith; we find his fear too hard for his faith in the caſe of his wife, therefore he called her ſiſter, and durſt not truſt God in owning his relation; Abraham's faith had ebbings and declinings. He that hath much humility, may ſometimes act proudly: And he that hath much ſelf-denial, may ſometimes act ſelf-ſeekingly. A ſtate of grace is ſure, but the workings of grace are variable; The nature of it is unchangable, but the degrees of it ſuffer many changes. 'Tis the happineſs of Saints that the grace which they have in Chriſt their head, knows no decay, as alſo that the grace which is in themſelves ſhall recover from its decayes, and triumph after all its foils. Job's grace did ſo at laſt, though he yet proceeds in ſuch a language of complaint as further diſcovers the weakneſs of it.

Verſ. 22. Thou lifteſt me up to the wind: Thou cauſeſt me to ride upon it: Thou diſſolveſt my ſubſtance.

The general ſence of this verſe is as the former, a bewailing of his affliction in the moſt ſignificant metaphors and higheſt ſtreins of ſorrow.

Thou lifteſt me up to the wind] Mr. Broughton tranſlates Thou takeſt me up unto a wind, and cauſeſt me to ride upon it: Here we may behold Job upon his Chariot, not a triumphing but a mourning Chariot; He rode upon the wind, and he tells who ſet him there; Thou (O God) cauſeſt me to ride upon it. But what was this wind to which Job was lifted up, and upon which he rode?

Firſt by this wind, we may moſt fitly underſtand his fierce and ſtrong afflictions; As if he had ſaid, Thou (O God) haſt given my affliction full force and ſcope againſt me: Thou ſetteſt me before the wind, and lifteſt me up with it; I am alwayes weatherbeaten, never under the lee-ſhore. When the ſtorm is up we may avoid it much and get to ſhelter; but he that is lifted up to the wind is expoſed to its full force and courſe. As the wind raiſeth and carries away ſtubble or chaff, or duſt, ſo moſt probably Job conceived himſelf lifted up and carried away, he ſcarce knew whither, or into what condition by ſtrong afflictions, and temptations.

Ut ſtipulam vortex qui dicitur typhon. Jun.

Secondly, Thou lifteſt me up to the wind, is conceived by others as an expreſſion of his former felicity; As if he had ſaid, Thou didſt lift me up once to the height of outward proſperity, and madeſt me ride aloft as upon the wings of the wind, but now thou diſſolveſt my ſubſtance, or breakeſt me like a bubble. I was once in the skies, but now I am in the duſt.

And ſome put an aggravation upon this expoſition, as if Job had ſuſpected, that God did lift him up on high, with a purpoſe to caſt him down. But that is too bold an impoſition upon the holy Man, unleſs we underſtand it moderately; That God lifted him up on purpoſe to caſt him down, that in his caſting down he might have advantage both to try *Job*s grace, and to glorifie his own power and goodneſs in raiſing him up again to a greater height then he had been at. For as God ſaith of Pharaoh (Exod. 9. 16.) In very deed for this cauſe have I raiſed thee up, for to ſhew in thee my power, and that my name may be declared in all the earth. Now (I ſay) as God raiſed Pharaoh, and hath doubtleſs in the courſe of his providence raiſed many other wicked men very high, with a deſign to manifeſt his power and his juſtice in caſting them down and deſtroying them; ſo he hath raiſed up many godly men, with a purpoſe to glorifie his power and his goodneſs, both in their caſting down and reſtoring. And in this ſence we may as ſafely ſay, that God lifted him up to the wind on purpoſe to caſt him down, as we may truly ſay, that God did caſt him down after he had lifted him up to the wind of worldly honour, and cauſed him for many years to ride peaceably upon it.

But I ſhall a little further exemplifie this notion of riding; which frequently in Scripture notes great felicity, with outward pomp and dignity. Solomon ſaith (Eccleſ. 10. 7.) I ſaw Servants riding on horſeback, and Princes walking as Servants upon the earth; That is, I ſaw mean men raiſed to great glory, they rid, while Princes (or ſuch as once were Princes) went on foot, that is, were reduced to a low condition. And as riding ſignifies an honourable ſtate, ſo eſpecially riding upon the Clouds, upon the winds, upon the Heavens, ſuch riding is an argument of higheſt dignity; And 'tis often reported of God himſelf, to ſet forth his excellency and glory. (Pſal. 18. 20.) He rode upon a Cherub, and did fly, he did fly upon the wings of the winds. Thus (Pſal. 33. 34. 68. 32.) Sing unto God ye kingdoms of the earth: O ſing praiſes to the Lord, Selah. To him that rideth on the Heaven of Heavens which were of old. Lo, he doth ſend out his voice, and that a mighty voice. Aſcribe ye ſtrength unto God, his excellency is over Iſrael, and his ſtrength is in the Clouds. So Moſes in his Song, (Deut. 33. 26.) There is none like unto the God of Jeſurun, who rideth upon the Heaven in thy help, and in his excellency on the sky. And when the Lord would ſet forth the greateſt advancement of his people, he expreſſeth it by riding, and by riding on the high places, (Deut. 32. 13. Iſa. 58. 14.) Then ſhalt thou delight thy ſelf in the Lord, and he ſhall cauſe thee to ride upon the high places of the Earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy Father. In both places, this promiſe of riding upon the high places of the earth, is an aſſurance given of the moſt full poſſeſſion of and dominion over the greateſt things of the earth.

So that according to this ſecond Interpretation, to ride upon the wind, denotes Job's former highneſs and proſperous ſtate, in which he was mounted triumphantly, and gallantly, upon the Chariot of worldly Greatneſs. The deſcription which he gives of his honour in the former Chapter, complyes well with this notion; whereas now, he found that true (Pſal 102. 10.) Becauſe of thine Indignation, and thy wrath, thou haſt lifted me up, and caſt me down. Naturaliſts report that the Eagle takes the ſhell-fiſh, and lifting it up a great height, lets it fall upon a Rock to break it. Thus ſaith Job, Thou haſt lifted up to the wind, and letteſt me fall to cruſh me, as the next words imply, Thou diſſolveſt my ſubſtance. This is a truth; proſperity is a riding, and a riding, as it were, upon the wings of the wind, and it may well be called ſo, becauſe of the incertainty and many changes of it: But I do not conceive that Interpretation proper to this place, and therefore I rather adhere to the former.

Aben-Ezra.

One of the Rabbins hath a conceit by himſelf, I may call it a dream; That Job did but tell his dream, while he ſpake thus. As if through the diſtemper of his ſickneſs, he in his ſleep, had phancied himſelf carried away with the wind into the air, and riding on the Clouds: But I leave that as a brain-ſick imagination; rather then a ſerious expoſition of the Text.

Yet further, theſe words, Thou lifteſt me up to the wind, and cauſeſt me to ride upon it, Compar'd with thoſe that follow, Thou diſſolveſt my ſubſtance, ſeem to be a compariſon drawn from Clouds and Vapours, which are exhaled and lifted up high in the air by the Sun, but are quickly diſſolved and blown away by the wind. Thus Job repreſents his own condition; He was as a Vapour lifted up a while, but ſoon ſcattered and blown away.

Hence Note; God uſeth much liberty in dealing with his Servants.

Our God (ſaith the Prophet, Pſal. 115. 3.) is in the Heavens, and hath done whatſoever he pleaſed. He walks by no rule but his own pleaſure, and though that be in it ſelf the beſt, the ſureſt, and moſt unerring rule, yet, as to us, it puts it ſelf forth, and appears, full of changes and alterations. This day the Lord is pleaſed to give us matter of rejoycing, and the next day of ſorrow; One day he is pleaſed to fill us, and another day to empty us. He ſends a wind ſometimes to raiſe us up, and anon a wind to caſt us down, he toſſeth and tumbleth us to and fro, even as a ſtubble, and as a dry leaf: And who may ſay to him, what doeſt thou? Do not think that this is a dream, as the Rabbin interprets it; or a Poetical fiction, when we hear of men lifted up to and riding on the winds, and then falling down to the diſſolving of their ſubſtance. The Lords wayes with men are above our reach, and therefore he fetcheth compariſons to expreſs them, from the winds, and from the Clouds, of whoſe various motions and interchanges, we can give little account with all our skill. Thou lifteſt me up to the wind, thou cauſeſt me to ride upon it.

And diſſolveſt my ſubſtance.

The word ſignifies to melt, as metal is melted in the fire; and by a Metaphor 'tis applyed to the fayling of courage, which is a melting of the mind. (1 Sam. 14. 16.) And the watchmen of Saul in Gibeah of Benjamin looked, and behold the multitude melted away, and they went on beating down one another; that is, their courage failed them, or their hearts fainted. The Prophet ſaith, (Iſa. 64. 7.) We are conſumed in our Iniquities, or (it is this word) we are melted away in our Iniquities, our ſtrength fails, our comforts fail, our ſpirits fail, every thing fails. This word is uſed alſo (to anſwer the alluſion before mentioned) to note the melting of Clouds when they are diſſolved into rain, or drop away in ſhowers. Thus ſaith Job, that of mine which was moſt ſubſtantial is diſſolved and dropt away like a Cloud. It is ſaid (Pſal. 46. 7.) He (that is God) uttered his voice, and the earth melted. And again, (Amos 9. 5.) The Lord of hoſts is he that toucheth the Land, and it ſhall melt; That is, both perſons and things ſhall conſume away. Thus every mans particular death is called a diſſolution, (2 Cor. 5. 1.) And the end of the World (which is a kind of general death) is called the diſſolution of it, (2 Pet. 3. 11.) Seeing all theſe things (that is, the Heavens and the Earth with all their ſubſtance) ſhall be diſſolved, what manner of perſons ought we to be, &c. All worldly ſubſtances ſhall one day be diſſolved; And Job in his day of trouble could ſay to God, Thou diſſolveſt

My ſubſtance.] The word is of a various and comprehenſive ſignification. Some tranſlate it, Wiſdom: Thou diſſolveſt my Wiſdom, as importing his affliction was ſo great that his very underſtanding was at a ſtand, or that he was doted, as we ſay, and rendred unable to make uſe of his reaſon, as if his meaning were, thou bringeſt me to my wits end. The Pſalmiſt (Pſal. 107. 27.) deſcribing the dreadful dangers and wonderful deliverances of Mariners, or Sea-men, ſaith, They reel to and fro, and ſtagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits end: We put in the Margin, All their Wiſdom is ſwallowed up; As the men themſelves, Ship and all, are ready to be ſwallowed up, ſo their wits are many times ſwallowed up with fear and amazement, before the Ship is ſwallowed up by the Waves of the Sea. Thus Job is conceived to ſay, that his wiſdom was ſwallowed up, he knew not what to do, nor how to carry himſelf: He ſeemed now brought to a far worſe condition then he was in (Chap. 6. 13.) when he ſaid, Is not my help in me? And is Wiſdom driven quite from me? Do you think I have no reaſon nor underſtanding about me? But here (according to this reading) his Wiſdom was driven quite from him, Thou haſt diſſolved, or melted down all my Wiſdom: I am not able to make uſe of it; or (as others read it) Thou haſt diſſolved, or ſeparated me from wiſdom: The meaning of both is but one, I know not what to reſolve or do in this caſe.

Nihil mihi rationis aut certi præſcripti remanet quo me geram, ſed plane inops mentis ſum, nec animo nec corpore ſubſiſtam. Merc.

Diſſolvit me ratio ſeu ordinatio tua.

Secondly, the words are tranſlated thus; Thy wiſdom, or thy appointment hath diſſolved me. According to this reading we may conceive Job ſpeaking thus; In all this hurry of things, when I am carried up and down, I know not how, nor whither, and am as one altogether confuſed; yet thou, O God, acteſt towards me in wiſdom, thy wiſdom hath diſſolved me; or thou haſt diſſolved me wiſely. True, Lord, I am altogether at uncertainties, as one toſſed with the wind, but it is by a law from thee, by thy rule or ſtatute that it is ſo. I am unſetled, but it is ſetled in Heaven that I ſhould be ſo; I am in a very fleeting condition, as a thing hurried or moved by the wind, but thou haſt eſtabliſhed it by an immoveable decree that I ſhould be thus; A Divine appointment hath diſſolved me; that's a good ſence.

Irriſiſti legē & decretum meum. i. e. meam vivendi rationem non probaſti, impietatis damnaſti, & ſupplicio affeciſti. Vatabl.

Thirdly, Thus; Thou haſt diſſolved my decree, purpoſe or appointment; that is, Thou haſt broken my courſe of life, and put me beſide my intended method; thou haſt declared thy ſelf unſatisfied with my way, and hadſt not approved what I propoſed to do, and ſo upon the matter, haſt gratified mine enemies, who have hard thoughts of me, and cenſure me as an evil doer; I had decreed in my ſelf what to do, and how to mannage all my truſts and concernments; But thou haſt ſeen it good to reſcind, or nullifie what I decreed, and take me off by theſe continued troubles, from all my intendments. Thou diſſolveſt my decree.

Effecis ut diffluam ſubſtantia. Jun.

Fourthly, According to our reading; Thou diſſolveſt my ſubſtance: Is plainly this; Thou makeſt my bodily ſtrength to melt away, as alſo the ſtrength of my eſtate. A mans worldly goods and poſſeſſions are commonly called his ſubſtance: Thou haſt melted away my friends, my Children, my Servants, my Cattel, my Power, my Honour, my all; I have nothing left of this World that can be called ſubſtance. My body, which is left, is but the skeleton of a body, and my life which yet remains, is but the ſhadow of a life; Thou diſſolveſt my ſubſtance.

Hence Note; There is nothing ſo durable, or laſting among all the good things of this life, but God can melt and diſſolve it quickly.

Though a mans ſubſtance be ſo compact, and well ſetled that it ſeems unmovable, or not to be ſhaken, yet how ſoon doth it move, under the afflicting hand of God? That which is as hard as Adamant, melts like wax before the fire. What the Prophet ſpake in reference to the Mountains or powers of the Earth, which troubled the peace, or hindered the comforts of Sion, (Iſa. 64. 1.) O that thou wouldeſt rent the Heavens, that thou wouldeſt come down; As if he had ſaid, Lord, take to heart the wrongs and indignities which thine enemies have put upon thy people, as alſo the blaſphemies which they have belched out boldly againſt thy Majeſty; Lord do not hold thy hand any longer, but come down like a ſtorm of lightning and thunder, filled with a holy fury and juſt indignation, as if thou didſt rent the very Heavens for haſt to be among us. O that now thou wouldeſt thus ſhew thy ſelf here on earth, and not alwayes confine thy dreadful power to Heaven. But what would be the effect of ſuch an appearance? The next words tell us, That the Mountains might flow down at thy preſence. Theſe Mountains are not to be underſtood properly, but metaphorically, for the great things, or great men of the World, thoſe things and powers which are moſt compact and conſolidated by the beſt skill and policy of man into a Mountain, or into many (in mans Judgment) impregnable Mountains, flow down like piles of ſnow at the preſence of God. Moſt Mountains are of a hard maſſie, ſome of a rocky ſubſtance, yet theſe flow down like a ſtream at the angry preſence of God. It is uſual to ſee waters flowing down from Mountains; But, to ſee a Mountain flow down like water, to ſee Rocks melt and diſſolve like wax is miraculous. Yet ſaith the Prophet, the very Mountains ſhall flow down at thy preſence, that is, thou diſſolveſt the ſtrength of the Mountains, of the great men of the World, and they become like a liquid ſtream, or (ſo the Prophet himſelf explains it, ver. 2) As when the melting fire burneth, the fire cauſeth the waters to boyl, to make thy name known to thine adverſaries, that the nations may tremble at thy preſence. If the Lord can make Mountains melt like wax or ſnow before the Sun or fire, ſurely thoſe things which are moſt ſubſtantial ſhall vaniſh as a ſhadow, as a nothing at the word of his power.

There are but few things ſo ſubſtantial that they will abide, and cannot be diſſolved: Spiritual things, the favour of God, his grace to us, his grace in us, our intereſt in Chriſt; theſe can never be diſſolved. Though the Mountains be removed, (ſaith God) yet I will never diſſolve the Covenant of my peace, that ſhall ſtand for ever; every thing ſhall be diſſolved, but not that. (Prov. 8. 21.) Solomon ſaith, The Lord will make his people to inherit ſubſtance, that is, they ſhall have that which is worthy of the name of ſubſtance; there is a ſubſtantiality in their common mercies, much more in their peculiar and diſtinguiſhing mercies. Worldly men do not inherit ſubſtance, the beſt of their ſubſtance is like a ſhadow; but God giveth his people ſubſtance. And hence the old Saints took joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods, knowing in themſelves that they had in Heaven, a better and an enduring ſubſtance, (Heb. 10. 34.) a ſubſtance that would abide wind and weather, fire, and water, the greateſt tryals, and remain undiſſolved, yea untoucht. But whether the Lord deal out judgments to the wicked, or chaſtiſements to his children, he ſoon diſſolveth all their worldly ſubſtance; whatſoever the world accounts moſt ſubſtantial, cannot ſtand before his decree of diſſolution.

Iſa. 54. 10.

Verſ. 23. For I know that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the houſe appointed for all living.

For I know:] That is, I am fully perſwaded of this thing, Job had a knowledg of faith, not only that Chriſt lived (Chap 19. 25.) I know that my Redeemer liveth) but that himſelf ſhould dye. So the Apoſtle (2 Cor. 5. 1.) I know that when the earthly Tabernacle of this houſe ſhall be diſſolved, &c. Paul ſpeaks of that knowledge of faith, which is aſſurance, and as he knew or was aſſured that when the Earthly houſe of his bodily Tabernacle ſhould be diſſolved, he had a building of God, an houſe not made with hands, Eternal in the Heavens; So he knew or was aſſured that the Earthly Tabernacle of his body ſhou'd be diſſolved. And when Job ſaith, I know that thou wilt bring me to death, this notes not only that which is very ſure and certain in it ſelf, but that which he himſelf was aſſured of, and that with a kind of Joy and delight; he ſpake of it as of a thing that he took pleaſure in, as if he had ſaid, 'Tis my comfort to remember, that thou wilt bring me to death.

That thou wilt bring me to death.] The Hebrew is, That thou wilt make me return; But he had not been dead before, how then could he return to death? To avoid this ſeeming difficulty, ſome expound thoſe words, Thou wilt make me to return, thou wilt make me come or go to death; For ſo in Scripture to return is as much as to come; but there is a great Elegancy in it, if we take it according to the Hebrew, thou wilt make me to return, and underſtand it thus; Thou wilt reduce me back again unto the Earth. For though Job when he ſhould dye could not in congruity of ſpeech be ſaid to return to death, or the grave, becauſe he had neither been dead nor buried, yet when he ſhould dye, he might be ſaid (not only congruouſly but very ſignificantly) to return to the earth, or to the duſt, becauſe he was once (in the firſt Adam) there and taken thence before.

Redire ponitur pro venire vel ire. Ruth 1. 11.

Hence Note; Death brings us back to what we once were; and ſhews us what we are.

So the ſentence was given (Gen. 3. 17.) Duſt thou art, and to duſt thou ſhalt return. (Eccleſ. 12. 7.) The duſt ſhall return to the earth as it was, and the ſpirit ſhall return to God that gave it; Mans body is duſt materially while he lives, and when he dyes his body goes to its own, the duſt, and becomes duſt formally. (Pſal. 90. 3.) Thou turneſt man to deſtruction; that is, to death, Death is the deſtruction of all men as to their bodily compoſition and outward enjoyments, in which ſence 'tis alſo ſaid, (Iſa. 57. 1.) that the righteous periſh when they dy; Thus Moſes ſaith of God, Thou turneſt man to deſtruction, and ſayeſt, return ye Children of men. God having turned man to death, preſently ſaith retnrn ye Children of men, that is, go back into what you were, return to the duſt. Some expound that place by an Irony, thou turneſt man to deſtruction, or thou ſayeſt to man dye, and then return; quit thy ſelf from death as well as thou canſt; come back if thou canſt; but I rather take it in the former ſence, implying that by death man is converted into his own principles. Some render Job's Text ſo; Death will reſtore me (that is) to what I once was: If we conſider the dominion of death over man, in reference to the ſtate of Innocency, ſo it is a tyranny, for death takes poſſeſſion of that which was not its own. Man was at firſt ſet up in a poſſibility not to dye; but if we conſider man as fallen, and as under that Law which God gave; Duſt thou art, and to duſt thou ſhalt return. Thus death doth its duty, and brings us (by the appointment of God) back again to what we once were, that is to duſt.

Mors reſtituet me. Tigur.

I know that thou wilt bring me to death. There are two opinions about the reaſon of theſe words.

Firſt, As if Job ſpake meerly to move God compaſſionately to conſider his frailty, that ſo he might deal more favourably with him; I know I ſhall dye ſhortly, Lord, let it pleaſe thee that I may enjoy a little eaſe while I live. Good men have often put God in mind of their frailty, that they might the more move him to pity. The Pſalmiſt ſeems to expoſtulate with God upon this point, (Pſal. 89. 46, 47.) How long Lord, wilt thou hide thy ſelf, for ever? Shall thy wrath burn like fire? Remember how ſhort my time is: Wherefore haſt thou made all men in vain? As if he had ſaid, The longeſt time that any man hath or can expect to live, is but ſhort, therefore Lord do not ſhorten that which is ſo ſhort. Surely man lives to little purpoſe (even in vain) if he live leſs then that little time which is commonly cut out and appointed for his life. And as that holy man, urged God with the remembrance of mans ſhort life, that he might prevail with him not to ſhorten it, ſo David aſſures us that the remembrance of it moveth him to compaſſionate us in it, (Pſal. 103. 13, 14.) Like as a Father pitieth his children, ſo the Lord pitieth them that fear him; For he knoweth our frame, he remembreth that we are duſt. To this effect Job is ſuppoſed praying, Lord, remember I am but duſt, I know I ſhall dye ere long: O ſpare me a little, let me have fair quarter that ſmall while, while I am in this world.

But, Secondly, I rather conceive the reaſon to be, becauſe he did even deſpair of recovery, he ſaw himſelf ſo beſet with Infirmities, ſo wounded and weakned by his ſickneſſes and ſores, that he looked upon himſelf, not only as a man ſubject to death; but as a dead man. I know thou wilt bring me to death, I ſee that's thy purpoſe by the way in which thou handleſt me: He doth not ſpeak thus as to the general ſtate of mankind; for every man may ſay to God, I know thou wilt bring me to death; But having the ſymptoms of death upon him, he had the ſentence of death in him, and even ſaw hmſelf upon the borders of the grave; As if he had ſaid, There's no eſcaping death for a man that is in ſuch a plight, or brought ſo low as I am at this time.

> Hence Note; Firſt, When we are under great ſickneſs and weakneſs of body, it is very proper for us to look upon our ſelves as bronght to the very gate and valley of the ſhadow of death, and dropping in to the grave. When we are very ſick, 'tis good to have a perſwaſion that we ſhall dye.

It is our duty to think we muſt dye ere long, and may dye quickly when we are in health, and ſtrength, when we feel not the leſt ach in our bones, nor diſtemper in our bodies, (The flower and beſt perfections of nature are no ſuperſedeas, no ſtop to preſent death) but when a man is nothing but ſores, and ſickneſſes, but pains and paroxyſms, what hath he elſe to think of, or what elſe ſhould he think of, but his diſſolution and his grave? When a man feels the impreſſions of death upon him, and ſees viſions of death upon him, what ſhould he either meditate or ſpeak of but of dying, or of his preparations for death? What ſhould he do but labour to ſet all even both God-ward and world-ward, to ſee that all is right between God to whom he is going, and his own ſoul; as alſo between himſelf and the world, which he is leaving, or from which he is going? We ſhould not put the evil day far from us in a good day, but when the evil day hath over-taken us, then to be talking of life, and hopes of recovering, is not only unſutable and incongruous, but very unſafe and dangerous. Some are hardly perſwaded they ſhall dye, though the tokens of death appear upon them: And ſome viſiters of the ſick, when they ſee the picture of death in the ſick mans face, will yet feed him with hopes of life; It is good to comfort our friends in ſickneſs with the thoughts of eternal life, but to flatter them with hopes of this life may prove deadly. How ſhall they ever dye with comfort, who are troubled to hear death ſpoken of! We find Job in that condition talking freely of his grave, I know (ſaith he) that thou wilt bring me to death: I look upon this as a ſickneſs unto death; and that now I am upon my death bed.

Secondly, Comparing this with the event;

> Obſerve, A godly man may be much miſtaken about the purpoſes of God to him in outward things, and eſpecially about the date of his own life.

I know (ſaith Job) that thou wilt bring me to death: But Job was miſtaken. Though Saints cannot be miſtaken in their aſſurances about ſpiritual and eternal things, yet they may be deceived in their aſſurances about temporal things. We may think our ſelves ſure of outward mercies, and miſs them, we may have an aſſurance that death will be the concluſion of our preſent afflictions, and yet miſ-reckon our ſelves, as Job did, who had a very flouriſhing time of life for many years after he gave himſelf for dead. A man may have the ſentence of death in himſelf, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, (2 Cor 1. 9.) when God (as to that time) hath given out no ſuch ſentence. And therefore we ought not to conclude peremptorily in this point; for though the premiſes of Gods dealings with us, ſeem to tell us that death muſt be our ſudden concluſion; yet the time is a ſecret, and faith in the infinite power and goodneſs of God may give us ſome hope of reſtoring when 'tis worſt with us, we not having received any revelation from God forbidding ſuch a hope. 'Tis wiſdom to be alwayes ready for death, but 'tis more then comes to our ſhare peremptorily to determine the period of our lives. As many come ſhort of their reckonings about life, ſo the reckonings of ſome are too ſhort. We ought every day to number our dayes ſpiritually, but no man can number either his own or any other mans dayes arithmetically, not becauſe they are more then a man can (for a Child may) know how to number them, but becauſe the number of them (whether few or many, much leſs how many or how few) is not known to any man.

Further, Job ſeems to be thus concluſive about the concluſion of this life, (I know that thou wilt bring me to death) with a kind of ſweet content.

> Thirdly, Hence Note, A godly man can ſpeak very familiarly and comfortably of his death.

Though Job ſpake complainingly of his ſufferings and pains, yet when he ſpake of his death, he ſpake rejoycingly, as one refreſhed with good news. I know that thou wilt bring me to death, that's the thing I expect, and that pleaſeth me. O welcome death! Welcome grave; A godly man can pleaſe himſelf with theſe thoughts, not only as death is an end of all his ſorrows, but as 'tis the beginning of his endleſs joyes.

Laſtly, When he ſaith, I know that thou wilt bring me to death;

> Obſerve, Death is at the diſpoſe and command of God.

He doth not ſay, my diſeaſe or ſickneſs will bring me to death, but, thou wilt bring me to death; or thou wilt bring me to death by the hand of theſe ſickneſſes. It is good for us to ſee our death as well as our life in the hand of God: Death cannot come of it ſelf till 'tis ſent, or till it is commanded and commiſſion'd; unleſs God bring us to the grave, all the ſickneſſes in the world cannot do it; unleſs God ſay, dye, all the powers in the world cannot kill. I know that thou wilt bring me to death;

בית מועד Domus conventus unde tentorium conventus; vel Domus ſtatuit. i. e. ſtatuta & aſſignata omni viventi. Druſ.

And to the houſe appointed for all living.] The words are a deſcription of the grave; Job calls it a houſe, and a houſe appointed, and a houſe appointed for all living. And though he ſaith not by whom this houſe was appointed for ſo great an entertainment, yet doubtleſs he means God himſelf was the appointer; he built this lightſome world as a houſe for man to live in, and he hath appointed the dark grave as a houſe for all living; that is, he hath appointed the living when they dye, to reſt and take up their lodging in that houſe. Thus as men build houſes for themſelves to live in, ſo God hath appointed a houſe for all living men when they dye.

In the Levitical Law, we read of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, or the Tabernacle of appointment, becauſe thither all the people of Iſrael were appointed to come, and there to congregate upon ſeveral occaſions of ſolemn worſhip. Here we have the houſe of appointment, or the houſe of the Congregation, that is, the houſe where all men muſt congregate, and meet together. And when Job calls it a houſe appointed, it hath a double reference; Firſt, to place; Secondly, to time. The grave is the place appointed of God where the living ſhall be laid; and it is appointed of God when they ſhall be laid there. It is a houſe appointed

For all living.] That's a great houſe ſure which hath room enough for the reception of all living. Uſually every living man hath a houſe by himſelf; but here is a houſe for all living. While the living are in the world, they take up a great deal of room, but death puts us neer together, and crouds the men who took up the greateſt breadth above ground, into a narrow compaſs under ground, the grave; That's the houſe for all living.

Some extend all living, to all things that live; Thus the beaſts of the earth, and fowls of the air, may be numbred among the living; but Job is ſpeaking of men only; and ſo the all living, are all men living; Adam called his Wives name Eve, becauſe ſhe was the Mother of all living, (Gen. 3.20) As Eve was the Mother, ſo the grave is the houſe of all living. The grave is ſpoken of, as if it were but one houſe; all that have lived are gone to it, and all the living are going to it; it is the general Rendevouz, or meeting-place, of mankind; all who live in this world, when they dye and go out of the world, go to the grave; that's their laſt reſort.

Hence Note, Firſt, All that live muſt die, and all that die are bound for the grave; that's their next ſtage.

Mankind is as under an appointment for death, ſo for the grave; we no ſooner begin to live then we begin to die, and (as 'tis proverbially ſaid) we ſup death in our firſt ſpoonful of broath; I am ſure we did in the firſt or neer the firſt morſel that ever was eaten. When ſin came into the world (and that came by eating) death came in with it; we may juſtly take up a complaint againſt, or a lamentation over ſin. We may cry out, O ſin, ſin, ſin, Thou haſt (meritoriouſly) made all the funerals that ever were in the world. We had never known what it means to depart out of this life, if we by ſin had not firſt departed from the living God. What havock hath ſin made in the world? What heaps upon heaps hath it laid? It was once ſaid of the goodly buildings in Rome, The ſins of Germany, (meaning the mony got by the Popes factors for ſin-pardons granted the Germans) have built theſe. And when we ſee thoſe goodly buildings the bodies of men ruin'd and caſt to the ground, yea into the ground, we may ſafely ſay, the ſins of men have unbuilt or pul'd down their bodies. Death is the wages of ſin, (Rom. 6. 23.) And Maſter ſin payeth all his ſervants, with this black and bad Money, death.

Vivendi principium, moriendi initium eſt, & ut dicitur in primo pulmento mortem devoramus. Brent.

The Pſalmiſt puts this into a negative Queſtion, (Pſal. 89. 48.) What man is he that liveth and ſhall not ſee death? Shall he deliver his ſoul from the hand of the grave? Selah. His meaning is, no man can avoid the ſight of death, or eſcape the grave. And therefore the Holy Ghoſt doth not leave this aſſertion bare, but cloſeth it with that word of Mark, that emphatical ſignal word, Selah, to ſeal and aſſure the truth of it, or to command our utmoſt attention to it, This is a Selah of meditation, and it layeth a kind of arreſt upon our ſpirits, not to paſs from the Text, till we have ſeriouſly and feelingly conſidered theſe words, What man is he that liveth, and ſhall not ſee death? And leſt any man ſhould preſume he might not, the Pſalmiſt expreſſeth man not by that common word Adam, which tells him that his original is from the Earth, and ſo naturally weak and very brittle ware; nor doth he expreſs man by that word Enos, which implyeth his accidental or rather, providential infirmities, ſickneſſes and ſorrows; but he calls him Geber, which repreſents man in his beſt ſtate of ſtrength, riches, honour and worldly greatneſs; as if he had ſaid, What rich, what great, what mighty man is there that liveth, and ſhall not ſee death?

David indeed ſpeaks of ſome, (Pſal. 49. 7, 8, 9, 10.) That truſt in their wealth, and boaſt themſelves in the multitude of their riches; Rich men can do great things, but here is a thing they cannot do; none of them can by any means redeem his Brother, nor give to God a ranſome for him. From what cannot a rich man redeem his Brother? It is true of ſpiritual redemption, yea that is furtheſt out of the rich mans reach, money will not do it. (1 Pet. 1. 18.) We are not redeemed with corruptible things, ſuch as Silver, and Gold, but with the precious blood of the Son of God; but the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of a lower redemption, to which all the riches of man cannot reach, none of them can by any means redeem his Brother, or give to God a ranſome for him; the redemption of their ſoul (that is, of their perſon from the grave) is precious, and it ceaſeth for ever. And that he ſpeaks of their redemption from the grave, is more clearly expreſſed at the eleventh verſe, that he ſhould ſtill live for ever, and not ſee corruption. Jeſus Chriſt did not ſo redeem us that we ſhould live for ever, and not ſee corruption; It was the priviledge of Jeſus Chriſt the redeemer not to ſee corruption; but Jeſus Chriſt, hath not redeemed us that we ſhall not ſee corruption; he hath redeemed us that we ſhall live for ever in heaven, but he hath not redeemed us from corruption, that we ſhould live for ever on earth, or not ſee corruption in the grave; for (as it is ſaid at the tenth verſe of the Pſalm) We ſee that wiſe men dy, likewiſe the Fool, and the brutiſh perſon periſh, and leave their wealth to others; As if he had ſaid, Neither the one nor the other ſort of men, could make this uſe or improvement of their wealth, to deliver themſelves from going to the grave; for if they could, they would have laid all out upon that purchaſe; but they could not do it, therefore they leave their wealth to others. Doubtleſs they would have given out all they were worth, to redeem themſelves from the grave; what would not rich men give to do this, they would leave nothing to Children or Executors, could they but bribe off death with all their riches. There is no title can be given to man which ſets him further from death, then to call him God, and this high title God himſelf (not a flatterer) hath cloathed ſome men with, (Pſal. 82. 6, 7.) I ſaid ye are gods, (but with the ſame breath he adds) ye ſhall dye like men.

And as riches and honour cannot ſhelter from death, ſo neither can knowledge nor wiſdom; Solomon who was the richeſt treaſury of wiſdom (of a meer man) that ever lived, did not only dye himſelf, but ſaid (Eccl. 2. 16.) How dyeth the wiſe man and the Fool? Yea, which is more then that (unleſs Solomon as elſewhere, ſo there by his wiſe man meant a holy man) we may add, How dieth the godly man as the wicked? How dyeth the juſt man as the unjuſt? For though there be the utmoſt unlikeneſs between the godly and the wicked, both in the manner of their life, and in the conſequents of their death, yet in this they are both alike, they both die; Holineſs it ſelf, as man is conſtituted in this world, cannot ſhelter from death.

As the reign of ſin (which was toucht before) brings in the reign of death; ſo whereſoever ſin hath but a being, death will have a footing. And therefore though juſt or godly men live not in ſin, yea are dead to ſin, yet becauſe ſin lives in them, they alſo muſt dye. Yea hence it came to paſs that Jeſus Chriſt dyed, even becauſe, though he had no ſin in him, yet our ſins were laid upon him; as if ſin where it was only imputed or charged, brought death, as in the caſe of Chriſt himſelf, then how much more where it is inherent and acted, as it is in the beſt of Godly men. This is a common truth, and generally acknowledg'd, that all muſt dy, but 'tis not common for men to live in, much leſs to live up to the knowledge of this truth, that they muſt dye.

But ſome may ſay, this is not a general truth; that all muſt dye, nor is this an indiſpenſible appointment, that the grave is the houſe appointed for all living; Some have lived and not dyed, and ſome ſhall live and not die, nor ever go to the grave.

Firſt, There are ſome, that have lived who never dyed, but have gone to God by a leap over the grave, or have eſcaped the grave in their way to Glory (Gen. 5. 24.) And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him; this is a difficult Scripture, but the Apoſtle (Heb. 11. 5.) gives a full and an unerring Comment upon it, By faith Enoch was tranſlated, that he ſhould not ſee death, and he was not found, becauſe God had tranſlated him; for before his tranſlation he had this teſtimony, that he pleaſed God. Enoch was tranſlated, he did not ſee death; there's one that never went to the houſe of the grave. As God had tranſlated him before out of a ſinful into a holy ſtate, ſo Enoch was ſuch a proficient in grace, that God tranſlated him from grace to glory, without ſo much as looking into the grave. How then is the grave the houſe appointed for all living? And do we not read that Eliah made the ſame eſcape? Was not he taken up to Heaven in a fiery Chariot? (2 Kings 2.23.) there's another who went not to that houſe: How then was it appointed for all living? And as I have inſtanced in two that have lived, and went not to the grave, ſo the Scripture ſpeaks of many who ſhall live hereafter, and never go to the grave, Behold (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 15. 51.) I ſhew you a myſtery, we ſhall not all ſleep (that is, we ſhall not all die, that, by ſleep he means death, the whole diſcourſe of that Chapter makes it evident) what then ſhall become of us? That's anſwer'd in the next word, But we ſhall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the laſt trumpet, for the trumpet ſhall ſound, and the dead ſhall be raiſed incorruptible, and we ſhall be changed. And again (1 Theſ. 4. 17.) Then we which are alive, and remain, ſhall be caught up together with them in the Clouds, to meet the Lord in the Air, and ſo ſhall we ever be with the Lord. When Chriſt cometh to Judgment, the living Saints on earth ſhall not die, nor deſcend into the grave, but ſhall preſently aſcend or be caught up into the Clouds. Therefore the grave is not the houſe of all living.

Exceptio firmat regulam.

I anſwer, Firſt, Thoſe few exceptions do not at all infirm the truth of the general rule, but rather confirm it; this is the rule, that all muſt die, becauſe none eſcape, but upon ſome ſpecial exception. And though none of the Saints on earth who ſhall be found alive at the general reſurrection of the dead ſhall die, yet they ſhall have ſomewhat which is equivalent to death, they ſhall be changed, and death, at the fourteenth Chapter of this Book (ver. 14.) is called a change. This change is the putting off our mortality, that change will be the putting on of immortality: The one is a change by being uncloathed, the other is a change by being cloathed upon, as the Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth them (2 Cor. 5,4.) And becauſe the day of the reſurrection, when all living Believers ſhall be changed and not die, is a ſecret reſerved in the boſom of God, we who live can have no aſſurance of any change but of that by death, and therefore we have reaſon to believe, that God will bring us to death, or to the houſe appointed for all living.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, We die by appointment, the time is appointed when we muſt die, and a place is appointed for us when we are dead.

Death is natural, but we die by a Law; we die by appointment. Some ſay of Malefactors who are put to death for crimes committed againſt the Law, They are ſlain by the Law; And we may ſay of every man, He is ſlain by a Law (Heb. 9. 27.) It is appointed for men once to die, and the grave is the houſe appointed for all living. The living are appointed for that houſe, and that houſe for them; death came in by mans act, but death proceeds by an act of God; man let death in by breaking a Commandment; and now death aſſaults and breaks in upon man by a Commandment. God threatened man with death in caſe of ſin; and he hath appointed men to die, becauſe they have ſinned.

And ſeeing the grave is the houſe appointed for all living, then by way of Corollary.

Firſt, We ſhould prepare for our going to that houſe: That houſe is quickly made ready for us, let us make ready for that houſe. Do it, Firſt, By ſetting your houſes in order (2 Kings 20. 1.) Secondly, By ſetting your hearts in order; How miſerable are they, who when they are ſo sick that they cannot live, are yet ſo unprepared that they dare not die. Whatſoever goodly or beautiful houſes we have now, we muſt ſhortly have a little dark cold underground houſe, called the Grave; be not ſtrangers in your thoughts to that houſe, to which, we who ſhould be ſtrangers and are but pilgrims in this world, are travelling every day. And how ſtately, how proud, how high ſoever men have been in this world, they muſt ſtoop to and enter into that low-built, dark, and ſilent houſe; It is the houſe appointed for all living.

Secondly, Seeing it is ſo, when God calls us to take up our lodging there, let us quietly and chearfully obey his call. The Appointments of God muſt be obeyed. Chriſt was obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs (Phil. 2.8.) And he with a holy anger at any natural (though unſinful) reluctance, ſaid, The cup which my Father hath given me, ſhall I not drink? (John 18. 11.) And what cup was that? It was the cup of death, a bitter cup, about which he made that earneſt prayer (Mat. 26. 39.) O my Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſs from me; yet that was not a more earneſt, then it was an humble and ſubmitting prayer, therefore he adds (ver. 42.) O my Father, if this cup may not paſs from me, except I drink it, thy will be done. We may pray againſt death, but then we muſt pray as Chriſt did, laying our prayer at the foot of God. That which makes our lives ſweet as well as holy, is, that we live having our wills drawn forth in continued acts of obedience to the will of God: and that which makes death, the bitter cup of death ſweet to us, and us holy in dying, is, that we die in obedience to the will and appointment of God. The Apoſtle moves all men to a ſteddineſs (not a ſenſeleſneſs) of ſpirit under affliction upon this ground (1 Theſ. 3. 3.) That no man be moved by theſe afflictions, for you your ſelves know, that we are appointed thereunto. I may alſo caution all men, againſt all unquiet motions at the approach of death, for we know that we are appointed thereunto. We know, That, firſt, the kind; Secondly, The time of our death are appointed. Let this be an argument to keep off undue trouble of ſpirit when we are ſummon'd to the grave.

This alſo ſhould prevail with us to make a quiet ſurrender of our deareſt relations when God calls for them. Death meddles not with thy friend without commiſſion: There is no ſtriving with the Decrees of Heaven; if we do, we ſin and increaſe our ſorrow by it. To be without natural affection, is to be below a Heathen; to be over-born by natural affection, is to be below a Chriſtian. The divine appointment teacheth us moderation.

Thirdly, This alſo flows from the ſame General truth;

God takes notice what becomes of us when we are dead, as well as when we are alive.

God hath appointed a houſe for us when we dye; and his providence watcheth over us there; he hath appointed us our houſes here in this world, and he hath appointed us our houſe when we go out of the world: His care followeth us to the grave. We do not die by hap, or at a venture, nor are we buried by hap, or at a venture; our houſe is appointed, and that's matter of comfort; God knows where to fetch every mans bones, where to have every mans duſt, he knows the houſes, the dwellings of the dead diſtinctly; and though many thouſands be thruſt and throng'd into one houſe, into one grave, yet God knoweth how to diſtinguiſh every mans duſt, and will in the day of the reſurrection give him his own again. Job's faith was raiſed to this pitch of confidence (Chap. 19. 26, 27.) Though after my skin worms deſtroy this body, yet in my fleſh ſhall I ſee God, whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf, and mine eyes ſhall behold, and not another, (or not a ſtranger) though my reins be conſumed within me, or in my boſom. There Job ſpake his aſſurance of a perſonal reſurrection, as here of his perſonal death. I know thou wilt bring me to death, and to the houſe appointed for all living. But how then? Or what thoughts had Job further of his condition, when houſed in the grave? He tells us that in the next verſe.

Verſe 24. Howbeit, he will not ſtretch out his hand to the grave, though they cry in his deſtruction.

This verſe hath many textual difficulties ariſing both from the doubtful conſtruction of the words together, and their ſignification taken aſunder. So that 'tis ſomewhat uncertain which to conclude or pitch upon, as alſo whether the whole ſenſe of the verſe ſhould be connected, with that which precedes, or with that which followeth after; yet that which ariſeth either way, or from any of the readgiven, as it is a uſeful truth, ſo it is that which may well comply with Job's ſcope and preſent purpoſe:

Howbeit, he will not ſtretch out his hand to the Grave: As if he had ſaid, Though I know God will bring me to the Grave, or houſe appointed for all living, yet (or nevertheleſs) I know and am very confident, he will not ſtretch out his hand to the Grave.

But what means he, by ſtretching out the hand to the Grave?

I anſwer; As the hand of man notes the power of man, ſo doth the hand of God his power; and to ſtretch out the hand, may have a twofold ſignificancy, both according to Scripture language, and common uſage.

Firſt, To ſtretch out the hand, ſignifies to help, ſuccour, and deliver. We ordinarily deſire a man to lend us his hand, when we deſire his help, and when we have a mind to help another, we uſe to put forth or ſtretch out our hand to him. When Peter began to ſink, and cried, ſaying, Lord ſave me, immediately Jeſus ſtretched forth his hand, and caught him (Matth. 14. 31.) The Apoſtles (Acts 4. 30.) pray, That the Lord by ſtretching forth his hand to heal, and by doing wonders by the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, would confirm them with boldneſs in preaching the Goſpel. To ſtretch out the hand to God, is an imploring of ſuccour and ſalvation from him (Pſal. 88. 9. and 143. 6.) And when the Lord would ſhew how ready he is to ſave and ſuccour us, he ſaith, All the day long I have ſtretched out my hands unto a diſobedient and gain-ſaying people (Rom. 10. 21.)

Secondly, To ſtretch forth the hand, is to put forth power to hurt and ſmite. Thus in the Book of Exodus (Chap. 3. 20.) the Lord threatens, I will ſtretch out my hand, and ſmite Egypt with all my wonders. And ſtill when Moſes brought thoſe wonderful plagues upon Egypt, he is ſaid to ſtretch out his hand upon it. In this tenour the Prophets often expreſs the dreadful diſpenſations of God, in the firſt appearances of them, as alſo in their continuance (Iſa. 9. 12, 13.) Notwithſtanding all this, his anger is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill? For what? To afflict, yea, to deſtroy and cut off his own people. Thus man puts forth or layeth his hand upon man, as it ſeems Joſeph's Brethren were reſolved till Reuben took them off (Gen. 37. 22.) Lay no hand upon him, tis the word in this Text, ſtretch not out thy hand upon him; that is, do him no violence. (Exod. 24. 11.) And upon the Nobles of the Children of Iſrael, he layed or ſtretched not his hand; that is, God did not lay his wrathful hand upon them to deſtroy them, but they did eat and drink; that is, their health and ſtrength was graciouſly continued, or they felt no harm, notwithſtanding that viſion of God; of which Jacob took ſpecial notice (Exod. 32. 30.) I have ſeen God face to face (that is, I have had a clear apparition of God, though in humane ſhape wreſtling with me) and my life is preſerved.

Thus we ſee, That to ſtretch out the hand, is taken in Scripture both in a good and in an evil ſenſe, or that God doth ſometimes ſtretch out his hand to help and deliver, as alſo to hurt and deſtroy. In which of theſe two ſenſes Job ſaith here, that God will not ſtretch out his hand to the grave, ſhall be reſolved in the further explication of the Text.

Tue word which we render Grave, ſignifieth an heap, becauſe Graves are covered with a riſing earth, or are headed with ſtone. The Latine word notes ſwelling, becauſe the Grave ſwells upward as a heap of any thing doth. To be made a heap notes utter deſolation (Jer. 26. 18. Mich. 1. 6. Chap. 3. 17. as alſo Pſal. 79. 1.) where the holy Prophet breaks out into this paſſionate complaint, O God, the Heathen are come into thine inheritance, thy holy Temple have they defiled; they have laid Jeruſalem on heaps; which ſome underſtand thus, they have made Jeruſalem to be nothing but Graves. Such multitudes were cruelly ſlain and murdered, that Jeruſalem was (as it were) but one grave. It is ſaid of the Children of Iſrael (Numb. 21. 11.) where ſeveral of their journeys and pitchings are reported in their paſſage to Canaan, They journeyed from Oboth, and pitched at Jie Abarim, in the Wilderneſs which is before Moab, toward the Sun riſing; we put in the Margin, Heaps of Abarim. The word Abarim, ſignifies Paſſengers, or Strangers, or as ſome conceive and read it, the Hebrews: As if that word did not denote (as moſt expound it) the mountainous places of Moab in general, but ſome ſpecial place in the Country of Moab, ſo called from the many Graves of the Hebrews buried there in ancient times. It being ſuppoſed that Heber the Patriarch and root of the Hebrews was the firſt Prince or Chief of that Region after the Flood. So that from theſe ancient graves or heaps the place took its denomination. But I note that only by the way, there being no need to ſtay upon the proof of ſo plain a matter, That Graves or Tombs may well be called heaps, and both be expreſſed by one word. He will ſtretch out his hand to the grave,

Though they cry in his deſtruction.

That is, Though they who are ready to die and be carried to the grave make complaint, and ſupplication, when he is deſtroying them. In the ſame ſenſe that dying is called periſhing, 'tis called alſo deſtruction; death is the deſtruction of the outward man, or of the fleſh; death layes this high, ſtrong, and beautiful building of the body of man, or the bodies of thoſe men which are higheſt, ſtrongeſt, and moſt beautiful, low and level with the ground, yea, below the level or ſurface of the ground. Now that which not only defaceth, but pulls down ſo goodly a fabrick, and breaks in ſunder all our worldly relations and correſpondencies may juſtly bear this inglorious title, Deſtruction. And ſo theſe words of the Text, Though they cry in his deſtruction, carry this meaning; Though they cry when he, that is, God, is bringing them to deſtruction or death.

But though we have attained the meaning of the ſingle terms of this verſe; yet how to put them together, or what interpretation to give of them as put together, is not ſo eaſily attained; nor hath it a little divided the Judgments and apprehenſions of learned men, what to conclude upon. I intend not to ſtay in a diſcuſſion of all that hath been offered, but among the various interpretations given of this verſe, there are only two which I ſhall a little inſiſt upon.

Firſt, That Job here ſets forth the reſolvedneſs of God to bring him to the grave, and ſo doth but purſue what he ſpake in the former verſe, I know he will bring me to death, and to the houſe appointed for all living; I know alſo that he will not ſtretch out his hand to the grave, though they cry in his deſtruction; that is, though there be never ſo great a cry, never ſo many prayers or interceſſions made for me by my friends, when God is deſtroying me as to my fleſh, or taking away this life from me: God will not ſtretch out his hand to help or ſuccour me, to relieve or reſcue me out of the hand of the grave, let men mourn and take on in my behalf as much as they will. Thus the words ſeem to carry a ſenſe like thoſe of the Lord in the Prophet (Jer. 15. 1.) Then ſaid the Lord unto me, though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me (that is, praying and crying that I would ſpare this people) yet my mind could not be toward this people; caſt them out of my ſight, and let them go forth, ſuch as are for death to death, &c. As if the Lord had ſpoken in the language of Job, Though they who have had greateſt favours from me, and have greateſt power with me, ſhould interpoſe and mediate even with ſtrongeſt cries, and moſt melting entreaties, that I would ſtretch out my hand to Death, to the Sword, to the Famine, to the Captivity, to deliver this people from thoſe evils, when I am about to bring them upon them, yet I would not. And thus here, He will not ſtretch out his hand to the Grave, though they cry in his deſtruction.

Hence Note, God can do the greateſt and hardeſt things with eaſe.

What is more eaſie then for a man to ſtretch or to put out his hand; if God would but ſtretch out his hand to the grave, he could help up thoſe who are ready to ſink into it, yea, thoſe who are in it. A word from God gave all things their being, and the very intimation of an act from God, (the ſtretching out of the hand is no more) reſtoreth any man to his well being. We may take the Obſervation in both ſences of ſtretching out the hand ; God can do the greateſt things for our help, or for our hurt, by putting out his hand. All the plagues of Egypt, were wrought by the ſtretching out of Gods hand ; and all the deliverances that God wrought for his people, were wrought by ſtretching out his hand. A ſtretched out hand, implies both the ſtrength of God to deliver, and how eaſie a thing it is for God to work our deliverance. Thus the Lord ſpake (Pſal. 81. 13, 14.) O that my people had hearkned unto me : And Iſrael had walked in my wayes : I ſhould ſoon have ſubdued their enemies, and turned my hand againſt their Adverſaries. How ſoon can God both ſubdue Enemies and ſave his people, who can do both with the turning of his hand. That God will have any thing done, is ſufficient for the doing of it. And if his will be not for the doing of a thing, it cannot be done by any power. He will not ſtretch out his hand to the grave (ſaith Job ;) therefore, when he brings me thither, I muſt lie by it, I muſt abide there.

Secondly, From the ſenſe of the whole verſe already given.

> Note, There is no recovery out of the grave, as to this world, when once we die.

No hand can fetch us thence but the hand of God, and he will not yet ſtretch out his hand to the grave. 'Tis a fundamental Article of faith, that God will ſtretch out his hand to the grave in the day of the reſurrection; he will bring all the dead out of their houſes in due time ; all men ſhall ſtand up before him, though none of the wicked ſhall be able to ſtand in Judgment. But that time is not yet come, and till it come the ſentence of death is irreverſible, upon all fleſh. What though God hath already ſtretched out his hand to the grave, for the raiſing of ſome perſons from the dead by a miraculous power ? Yet as thoſe few that have eſcaped death, make no breach upon the general truth, that all muſt die. So it doth not at all infringe this general truth, that God doth not ſtretch forth his hand to the grave, becauſe ſome have been raiſed and recovered out of it. Job knew there would be a returning at the reſurrection; he made a noble confeſſion of this faith at the nineteenth Chapter of this Book. And he was as much aſſured that in caſe he then died, God would not ſtretch out his hand to the grave, to fetch him from thence, either to a natural life, to eat, drink, and ſleep ; or to a civil life, to buy, and ſell, and rule as he had done ; no nor to ſuch a ſpiritual life of ſerving and praiſing him in this world, as he had lived to that day. This was the reaſon why David did ſo earneſtly deprecate death (Pſal. 6. 4, 5.) Return, O Lord, deliver my ſoul, (that is, me from death) O ſave me (from the grave he meant) for thy mercies ſake ; for in death there is no remembrance of thee : In the grave who ſhall give thee thanks ? And again, (Pſal. 30. 9.) What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit ? Shall the duſt praiſe thee ? Shall it declare thy truth ! And as theſe Scriptures ſhew that the dead do not praiſe God , ſo thoſe bemoaning queſtions of diſtreſſed, almoſt diſtracted Heman, ſhew that God will not by any preſent ſtretching out of his hand miraculouſly raiſe the dead to praiſe him, (Pſal. 88. 10.) Wilt thou ſhew wonders to the dead ? Shall the dead ariſe and praiſe thee ? Selah. His meaning is, they that are once dead, ſhall not be raiſed to praiſe God again here, but ſhall be detained Priſoners under the power of death till the general reſurrection. So that, as the dead cannot praiſe God, ſo they ſhall not be raiſed to praiſe God in a mortal ſtate. The living, the living, they ſhall praiſe him, as Hezekiah ſaid in his ſong of praiſe, having eſcaped the grave (Iſa. 38. 18.) For the grave, (that is they who are gone to the grave) cannot praiſe thee ; death (that is, the dead) cannot celebrate thee. They that go down to the pit cannot hope for thy truth ; that is, for the fulfilling of any of thoſe promiſes which thou haſt made to thy people concerning the bleſſings of this life, whether perſonal or publick ; and hence he infers, the living, the living, he ſhall praiſe thee (that is, it is his duty to praiſe thee, and he hath yet an opportunity to praiſe thee) as I do this day, (and purpoſe to tranſmit it to poſterity, that thy praiſes may laſt in this World, as long as the world laſts) the Father to the Children ſhall make known thy truth. As if he had ſaid, Had I died of this ſickneſs , and gone to my grave , I had not performed this duty of praiſing thee , as I do this day, nor could I have left the memorial of this mercy for thy praiſe to after-ages. He will not ſtretch out his hand to the grave, though they cry in his deſtruction.

> Thirdly, Hence Note, There's uſually a great cry when God either takes, or is about to take men out of the world by death.

There is a cry of ſupplication when he is about to do it, and a cry of lamentation when it is done, eſpecially when it is done in an unuſual manner. As in that laſt plague upon Egypt, the ſlaying of all their firſt-born in one night, by an immediate ſtroak from God, (Exod. 12. 30.) And Pharaoh roſe up in the night, he and all his ſervants, and all the Egyptians, and there was a great cry in Egypt ; for there was not an houſe where there was not one dead. And when bloody Herod had murdered the Infants, then (Matth. 2. 17, 18.) was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremy, the Prophet, ſaying, In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her Children, and would not be comforted becauſe they are not ; that is, becauſe they are dead, and died thus, and are not any more for this world. 'Tis no eaſie matter to part with thoſe we love, eſpecially when they are a part of our ſelves, as children are and other neer relations may be ſaid to be. Our fear of loſing friends, will provoke us to cry in praying, and our ſorrow for their loſs will cauſe us to cry in lamenting. Job ſpeaks of this cry as of what was uſually heard in ſuch ſad caſes ; Though they cry in his deſtruction,

> Note, Fourthly, As no crying can prevail with God, to fetch thoſe from the grave, who are once dead ; ſo prayer cannot prevail to preſerve any alive when the appointed time of death is once come.

The Apoſtle James aſſerts (Chap. 5. 15.) The prayer of faith, ſhall ſave the ſick ; but prayer doth not raiſe the dead. Some have had a faith of miracles for healing the ſick, but that (I conceive) is not the faith which the Apoſtle intends when he ſaith, the prayer of faith, ſhall ſave the ſick : Ordinary faith in truth and ſtrength may do that. David ſpake as if he had been redeemed not from ſickneſs, but from death, (Pſal. 30. 2, 3.) O Lord, thou haſt brought forth my ſoul from the grave. But was David's ſoul in the grave ? His body had not then been in the grave, and therefore ſurely his ſoul was not ; and if his body had been in the grave, yet his ſoul could not. The ſoul is a ſpiritual ſubſtance and immortal ; the ſoul dieth not, therefore it is not buried ; How then ſaith David, Thou haſt brought forth my ſoul from the grave ? I anſwer : The ſoul is there put for the man or for the perſon. But it ſeems then, David was in the grave, and God ſtretcht out his hand to fetch him thence ? I anſwer, by the grave in the Pſalm we are to underſtand, great dangers, deadly dangers. And ſo, David's meaning is only this, O Lord, thou haſt brought me forth from thoſe evils, and troubles , which I feared would certainly bring me to my grave ; I have eſcaped the grave very narrowly, I was in my own thought, and in the thoughts of others a dead man , but thou haſt redeemed me from the ſnares and fears of death. The Apoſtle hath a like expreſſion (2 Cor. 1. 9, 10.) We had the ſentence of death in our ſelves, that we ſhould not truſt in our ſelves, but in God who raiſeth the dead. Who hath delivered us from ſo great a death, and doth deliver, in whom alſo we truſt, that he will yet deliver. This great death was a deadly danger , from which the Apoſtles were delivered ; and in that ſenſe, God often ſtretcheth out his hand to the grave , or to death ; he delivers thoſe who are ready to periſh, or who look on themſelves as free among the dead : But for thoſe that are dead properly, we have no warrant to believe that God will ſtretch out his hand to their grave, though they cry in his deſtruction. It is not matter of duty, but of preſumption , to ſeek God by prayer for the return of the dead to life.

So much of theſe words in their firſt ſcope, as if Job would here ſet forth, the ſetled purpoſe of God concerning his death, as if he had ſaid, I know I ſhall go to the grave, and there is no fetching me back from thence, he will not ſtretch out his hand hand to the grave, though they cry in his deſtruction, when he hath deſtroyed them.

Secondly, The ſcope of this verſe may be thus conceived, as if Job had ſpoken theſe words to comfort himſelf in that ſuppoſition, that he ſhould preſently die; I know he will bring me to death, to the place appointed for all living; howbeit, he will not ſtretch forth his hand to the grave: That is, I know he will not afflict me after I am dead, or when I am in the grave; though he ſtretch forth his hand upon me now while I am alive in my own houſe, yet he will not trouble me in that other houſe, my grave; there I ſhall have an end of, and be delivered from all my ſorrows, and ſufferings. Thus men greatly pained and afflicted uſe to comfort themſelves, when they have no comfort to expect in this life, that death will be a concluſion and a cure of all their pains and afflictions. It is uſually ſaid, that when old age is a mans diſeaſe, there is no cure, no medicine for it but death; and it is as true of ſome troubles and griefs which we may meet with before we are old, there is no remedy left for us but death, or death will be our certain remedy, for then they muſt leave us. And then the meaning of that latter clauſe of the verſe,

Sane precatio non porrigit manum (quamvis) in contractione illius (ſit) clamor. i. e. tam certe non proderunt preces ad Deum, quamvis ſoleant homines tempore calamitatis clamare ad Deum. Vatabl. Poſſunt iſta verba hominis vehementèr dolentis atque ſui cruciatus medicinam & ſolatium quaerentis non ex alio, quā ex ipſa morte. Pined. Hoc ipſum me non nihil ſolatur, quod quantumvis fruſtra clament calamitoſi dum conteruntur: tamen Dei manus cadaver ſemel ſepultum & omnis ſenſus expers amplius non attinget. Bez.

Though they cry in his deſtruction, may be thus underſtood; Though other men or I my ſelf cry and complain under his hand, while he is bringing death upon me or them, yet being once dead, nor they nor I ſhall complain any more.. Some read the words with an Interrogation, He will not ſtretch out his hand to the grave; Is there any cry in his deſtruction? That is, do men cry any more when once God hath ſent them to the grave? There's no crying there; therefore no ſenſe of any ſuffering there; if harm or pain were felt in death or in deſtruction, men would cry there; But is there any cry in his deſtruction? or when he hath deſtroyed men? Surely there is none: Who ever heard a dead man cry? This argues, that God ſtretcheth not forth his hand to the grave, or that when men die they are paſt all ſorrow. This, I conceive, to be the pain ſcope of the words.

Hence Obſerve, Death puts an end to all our troubles; God will not ſtretch forth his hand to the grave.

When we are once paſt this life, we are paſt the line of affliction; when we are out of this world, we are got beyond the confines of ſorrow; God will not ſtretch forth his hand to the grave; there we are in ſanctuary, or under covert. As there is no counſel nor work, nor device in the grave (Eccleſ. 9. 10.) ſo no trouble nor affliction there. That which is propheſied as a fruit of the wonderful reſtoring of the Church in the latter dayes (Rev. 7. 17. Chap. 21. 4.) God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there ſhall be no more death, neither ſorrow, nor crying, neither ſhall there be any more pain, for the former things are paſſed away. Now, I ſay, as it ſhall be in that day of the Churches bleſſed reſtitution, all tears ſhall be wiped away from the eyes of all the godly; ſo when any one goeth to the grave, all tears are then wiped away from his eyes; there is no more pain, no more ſorrow, no more crying there; as Job ſhewed at large in the third Chapter, ver. 17, 18, 19. There the weary be at reſt; the Servant is free from his Maſter. As death is the cure of all diſeaſes, ſo of all our ſorrows; Death is our redemption from affliction, and the reſurrection will be our redemption from death; and therefore the reſurrection is called the day of redemption, that is, of our bodies; then we ſhall be recovered from the captivity of the grave, as now the grave is a redemption from our captivity under affliction and ſorrow.

Afflictis ſepulchrum redemptio eſt,

But it may be objected, Is there an end of ſorrow when we go to the grave?

I anſwer; There is in reference to the godly, or true Believers; there's an end alſo of bodily ſufferings to the wicked, they know no more thoſe kind of ſufferings which they felt in the world, when once they are houſed in the grave; yet then they are under the worſt of ſufferings; for though God will not ſtretch forth his hand to the grave, to afflict their bodies, yet he will ſtretch forth his hand to hell to afflict their ſouls. Chriſt giveth that warning (Luke 12. 5.) Fear not them, who when they have killed the body, have no more that they can do (men have done their worſt when they have kill'd the body) but (ſaith Chriſt) I will forewarn you, whom you ſhall fear, fear him, which after he hath killed the body, hath power to caſt you into hell; yea, I ſay, fear him. It is a miſerable comfort that many carnal men take to themſelves in their preſent ſorrows and ſufferings; O (ſay they) we ſhall die ſhortly, and then we ſhall be out of our pains: Alas! when wicked men die, though they get out of one kind of pain, and miſery, yet they fall into thoſe miſeries which are a thouſand times worſe; they go out of the ſcorching Sun into the conſuming fire; all the miſery they indure on this ſide the grave, is but as the exceſſive heat of the Sun to the hotteſt fire, in compariſon of what they ſhall indure. They who die in their ſins ſhall find death the beginning of infinitely worſe ſorrows, then thoſe to which it puts an end. Though there be no tears, no ſorrows in the grave, to which the body goes, yet in hell (which is the grave of wicked mens ſouls as ſoon as they dye, and will be the everlaſting grave both of their ſouls and bodies, when they riſe again; in hell, I ſay) there is weeping, and wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth for evermore. Therefore let no unbeliever or prophane perſon pleaſe himſelf with this, that his ſufferings will be over in the grave; for the wrath of God will burn againſt ſuch for ever; and that which is ſaid by the Prophet will be fulfilled upon them, yet the anger of God is not turned away, but his hand will be ſtretched out ſtill. As this is often verified in the renewing, and reviving of temporal Judgments upon the impenitent in this life; ſo much more in pouring eternal vengeance upon them in the life which is to come. The very blind Heathens had a notion, that though death gave eaſe to good men, yet it increaſed the torment of evil men; they had ſome glimmerings of this, though no faith about it. What elſe means that Fable or Fiction of theirs, concerning the puniſhment to which Titius was adjudged? That while his bowels were eaten out by a Vultur, his bowels were renewed as faſt as the Vultur eat them, that ſo his torment might be everlaſting. The ſame reaſon is aſſigned by heatheniſh antiquity, why they feigned the heart of Prometheus growing as faſt as the Eagle fed upon it, that ſo the Eagle might never want food, nor Prometheus pain. This is moſt true in the ſenſe here intended, the hand of the Lord will be ſtretcht out for ever, to rend the bowels of the wicked, yet their bowels ſhall for ever grow, and their pain for ever renew. As wicked men, could they have lived alwayes here, would have ſinned alwayes; ſo where they ſhall alwayes live, they ſhall alwayes ſuffer. And their ſufferings ſhall not only be continued beyond this life, but increaſed. The little finger of the Lord will be heavier upon them, after they are out of the world, then his whole loins were in this world; here they are whipped with Cords, but there they ſhall with Scorpions. As for the Godly, they may take theſe three Corollaries from this general truth, with reſpect to their condition after death.

Ne unquam deſit Aquila pabulum aut Prometheo dolor.

Firſt Death is good to thoſe that are good; death carries them beyond the reach of affliction, and freeth them from all the evils of this life. (2 Cor. 5. 4.) We groan earneſtly being burdened: Believers would fain be rid of their burdens, they groan for another ſtate, in which they ſhall be unburdened. As all groan naturally when they die, ſo Believers groan ſpiritually for death; it is that which they would have, not for it ſelf, but that their burdens may be removed, and they have a full enjoyment of God. They are glad to be delivered from the burdens of fear, of care, of ſorrow, of pain, but moſt of all to be delivered from the burden of their corruptions, and temptations. Sin is the greateſt burden of all, and that which adds weight to all our other burdens. And there is not only a negative, but an affirmative or poſitive good in death to thoſe that are good, as it frees them from all thoſe things that are evil, ſo it is a means to let them into and lead them unto the full poſſeſſion and enjoyment of their chiefeſt good, The preſence of God, in whoſe preſence there is (not only no ſorrow, but) fulneſs of joy, and at whoſe right hand there are (not only no pains, but) pleaſures for evermore! Though while Believers live, they are in deaths often; yet once dying, they ſhall alwayes live.

Secondly, This comfort is in it; if death, and the grave free Believers from all their ſufferings, then the ſufferings of Believers (like the pleaſures of ſin) are but for a ſeaſon. This life is but ſhort, therefore the ſufferings of this life cannot be long. We ſpeak ſadly ſometimes, O our ſorrows, and our ſufferings are long-viſag'd, they look as if they would alwayes laſt. A little trouble is much to us, and if it continue long, we reckon it a kind of eternity; we quickly think the ſorrows and troubles of this life, ſo long and ſo broad, that they cannot be meaſured, yet our life is ſo narrow and ſhort, that we can hardly find any thing ſhort and narrow enough to meaſure it by. Our life at broadeſt is but as a hand breadth, and at longeſt 'tis but a ſpan-long. Certainly our ſorrows cannot be very broad, nor our afflictions very long, ſeeing our lives are ſo ſhort and narrow. Therefore the Apoſtle calls all our afflictions, even thoſe that are heavieſt, light afflictions, which are but for a moment; our afflictions can be but for a moment, becauſe our lives are but for a moment: So that if the afflictions of a Godly man be as long as his life, (and longer they cannot be) yet they are but ſhort and momentany. For the time of his life compared with all time is very ſhort, even a poor pittance and parcel of time, but the time of this life compared with eternity is but a moment, yea the times of all men that ever lived or ſhall live till time ſhall be no more, being laid or ſummed up together, and their total ſum compared with eternity, are but an indiviſible point or moment of time.

Thirdly, Let not true Believers fear the grave, for there they ſhall bury all their fears, nor let them mourn immoderately when their godly friends go to the grave, for then they ſhall neither weep nor mourn any more; why ſhould any be over-burthened with ſorrow for them, who are diſburden'd of all their ſorrows? Eſpecially why ſhould any mourn for them as men without hope, who are paſt not only all cauſe but all fear or poſſibility of mourning. 'Tis very uncomely to have any unquietneſs upon our ſpirits for their death, who being dead are at reſt.

There is yet a third ſcope of theſe words according to Mr. Broughton's tranſlation, which joyns them with the verſe following; as if they did not hold out Job's aſſurance of freedom from affliction, when he ſhould die, (as they have been already opened) but his compaſſion to thoſe who were in affliction while they and he lived: His tranſlation runs thus; And prayed I not when plague was ſent, when hurt came to any, thereupon cryed I not? This reading is very remote from ours; and it may ſeem ſtrange that the Original text ſhould bear it, or give it any countenance. But the ground and reaſon of this difference in the tranſlation ariſeth from the Hebrew word, which we render, to the grave, as if it conſiſted of two words; but Mr. Broughton, and ſome others, take thoſe two for own word, which ſignifieth to pray, to requeſt or deſire; hence he tranſlates, prayed not I when plague was ſent? That is, when God ſtretched forth his hand to plague or ſmite them; prayed not I when hurt and deſtruction came upon them? I did. Thus alſo the learned Junius reads the Text, Was there not requeſt made when he ſent forth his hand? Was there not a cry for theſe things, in his oppreſſion? Which he explains thus; Did not I in the behalf of other calamitous men, beſeech God in a pious pitiful manner, when he was chaſtning them? This reading and the Expoſition given upon it, fall in clearly with the next or twenty-fifth verſe, where Job puts the queſtion, Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? &c. Therefore I ſhall not ſtay to make out or improve this interpretation any further from this verſe, but remit it to that which follows.

VERS. 25, 26, 27.

Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? Was not my ſoul grieved for the poor?

When I looked for good, then evil came unto me: And when I waited for light, there came darkneſs.

My bowels boiled, and reſted not: The dayes of affliction prevented me.

IN theſe words, and thoſe that follow to the end of the Chapter, Job doth two things principally.

Firſt, He ſheweth, how he had formerly carried himſelf, or what heart he had towards them who were in the depths of miſery, himſelf being then in the height of proſperity, this he affirms by way of queſtion in the twenty-fifth verſe, Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? &c. Surely I did.

Secondly, He tells us how himſelf had been diſappointed and fruſtrated either in his expectation of like compaſſions from men, in the day of his perſonal troubles, or in his expectation of good from God, or in both. And this he doth in the twenty-ſixth and twenty-ſeventh verſes; When I looked for good, then evil came unto me, &c. And I found none to comfort me in the midſt of all my evils; My bowels boiled, and reſted not, &c. Once Job had no troubles, but thoſe of other men, and when he had troubles ſtore of his own, he received no help from other men.

Verſ 25. Did not I weep for him that was in trouble?

In this verſe Job ſets forth the ſympathizing frame of his ſpirit with the ſorrows of others in the midſt of his own joyes and outward enjoyments. When he (Good man) ſaw any caſt down with or wrapt up in affliction, how was it with him? He made himſelf a partaker of their affliction, or a partner in it, and ſhared in their troubles with them.

Did not I weep?] The words in the letter of the Hebrew carry in them the nature of an Oath, and include a ſecret imprecation upon himſelf: As if he had ſaid, If I did not weep for him that was in trouble, let God require it; let me ſuffer any evil, if I did not grieve in a true ſence of the evils which others ſuffered; Or thus, God knoweth, or God is my witneſs, If I have not mourned when I ſaw any man in miſery. And here we may take notice once for all, that from this verſe to the end of the next Chapter, Job uſeth this manner of ſpeech eighteen times, joyning imprecations all along with his aſſertions, to clear his own innocency, and free himſelf from thoſe blames and crimes which his ſuſpicious and cenſorious friends had fixed upon him.

In Hebræo eſt reticentia quædam, quaſi cum Juramento imprecatorio Pined. Quidlibet mali contingat, mihi ſi non flevi calamitoſis. Tigur.

We tranſlate the words barely as an affirming queſtion; Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? That is, I did weep for him that was in trouble; no man can upon good ground deny, or diſprove what I profeſs in this matter.

Did not I weep, &c.] Weeping is the effect of ſorrowing; or weeping is the language of ſorrow, 'tis dropping at the eye or flowing out in tears; and tears are as ſo many real words, whereby we expreſs our grief; Tears (as it hath been ſaid) have ſometime the weight of words; they are the trueſt Rhetorick of a troubled ſoul, and have a prevailing winning ſuada or perſwaſiveneſs in them beyond the loudeſt and quainteſt Oratory, both with God and man. They ſay moſt, who ſay nothing but tears. Job's was no dry ſorrow, his compaſſionate bowels melted and diſſolved into floods of tears, when he ſaw others ready to be ſwallowed up in the floods of ſorrow, Did not I weep? &c.

Interdum lacrymæ pondera vocis habent.

Weeping is of two ſorts in Scripture.

Firſt, For ſin, hence the tears of repentance; and in this ſenſe, from the word here uſed, that place, where the Iſraelites are deſcribed in a ſolemn work of repentance, had its name, (Judg. 2. 1, 4, 5.) An Angel of the Lord came up from Gilgal, to Bochim, and ſaid, I made you to go up out of Egypt, &c. And it came to paſs when the Angel of the Lord, ſpake theſe words unto all the Children of Iſrael, that the people lift up their voice and wept, and they called the name of the place Bochim (that is, weepers,) and they ſacrifiſed there unto the Lord. This was a publick weeping, and one of the moſt ſolemn exerciſes of repenting ſorrow, that we meet with in the whole Book of God. That people being under a ſore rebuke for their diſobedience, and that by an Angel of God, or God the Angel, called in Scripture, the Angel of the Covenant Chriſt Jeſus, as might be cleared by many arguments from the Text, if that were my buſineſs here, (being I ſay, under this rebuke, they) mourned and wept ſo much before the Lord, that the place was called Bochim or Weepers. We read of the Valley of Baca, (Pſal. 84. 6.) which word Baca in the Hebrew, is there rendred by ſome Mulberry-trees, which are moſt apt to grow in dry ſandy places, and ſo that text is tranſlated by the learned Hebricians, who paſſing through the valley of Mulberry-trees make it a well; that is (ſay ſome) though it was a dry place, yet they being in their paſſage to the place of Gods worſhip were not diſcouraged with the heat and drought of it, but counted it as a well of refreſhing waters. This is a very pious and ſpiritual ſenſe of thoſe words in the Pſalm; yet the Septuagint render, As they paſs through the valley of weeping; as it that were a known place where there had been much weeping, or where they uſed to weep in a holy manner before the Lord. And one of the Ancients expounds it particularly of that valley called Bochim, before ſpoken of in the ſecond Chapter of the Book of the Judges. Yea, ſome Criticks tell us, That the Mulberry-tree hath its name in the Hebrew from weeping; becauſe that fruit being full of Juice, drops as the eye doth tears. But I need n t ſtay upon ſuch difficult Scriptures to find out weepers for ſin. It was *David*s ſin, rather then his ſickneſs, or the remembrance of his ſin in his ſickneſs, which cauſed him to make his bed to ſwim all the night, and (by day) to water his couch with tears. Strange Hyperboles of holy ſorrow (Pſal. 6. 6.) And the Evangeliſt reports of Peter, that he no ſooner remembred his ſin in denying his Maſter, but he preſently went out and wept bitterly (Luke 22. 62.) Now as there is a weeping for ſin, ſo

Secondly, There is weeping under ſufferings: And theſe ſufferings are of two ſorts.

Firſt, Our own ſufferings; when the Lord layeth heavy afflictions upon us, we ought not to be as ſtocks and ſtones unſenſible of his hand, but to mourn and weep under his chaſtiſements. If we do not, we deſpiſe his chaſtenings, againſt which the Apoſtle by Scripture Authority cautions all the Sons of God (Heb. 12. 5.)

Secondly, There is a weeping for the ſufferings of others, which is properly called the weeping of Compaſſion: Tears often diſtil from the ſenſe of thoſe evils which are upon our friends and brethren. Thus ſaith Job, Did not I weep? His was not a weeping either for his ſin, or for his ſufferings, he was in great proſperity in that time to which this act refers, but he wept for the ſufferings of others, as is expreſs in the Text, Did not I weep

For him that was in miſery?] The Hebrew is, For him that was in a hard day: So Mr. Broughton tranſlates, Did not I weep for the hard of dayes? That is, for him that was in a hard day: We ſay of troubleſome times, they are hard times; many live in hard and troubleſome dayes, or have a hard time of it, while the times are fair and ſerene to others. The word is uſed two wayes: Firſt, In an active ſenſe, and ſo it notes men who are ſo hard, that is, have ſo hardned themſelves, that there is no dealing with them, nor perſwading of them (Ezek. 2. 4.) They are impudent Children, and ſtiff hearted, I do ſend thee unto them, and thou ſhalt ſay unto them, thus ſaith the Lord, &c. The Hebrew is, Children hard of face; that is, ſuch whoſe faces (as we ſay) are ſteeled, or who are brazen-faced. 'Tis ſaid in the third Chapter of the ſame Book at the ſeventh verſe, But the houſe of Iſrael will not hearken unto thee, for they will not hearken unto me, for all the houſe of Iſrael are impudent and hard-hearted; we put in the Margin, Stiff of forehead, and hard of heart; that is, ſuch as have hardened their hearts againſt my fear, againſt my counſel and commands. Secondly, The word is uſed in a paſſive ſignification; when any paſs through difficulties, we ſay, they are hard put to it, or have a hard day of it. Thus (Gen. 35. 16.) Jacob and his retinue journeyed from Bethel, and there was but a little way to come to Ephrath; and Rachel travailed, and ſhe had hard Labour: Rachel being on her Journey fell in travail, and (as we ſay) ſhe had a hard bargain of it; it was a hard day with her, for ſhe dyed. That good Woman Hannah being much provoked prayed much, but Eli thought her to be drunken, no, ſaith ſhe, My Lord, I am a woman of a ſorrowful ſpirit (1 Sam. 1. 15.) the word is that in the Text, I am a woman of a hard ſpirit; that is, I am under a great deal of hardſhip, and trouble, hard things are put upon me, and I have eaſed my ſoul (which is the beſt eaſe of ſouls) by prayer. Thus the confuſed and troubleſome ſtate of the wicked is expreſſed (Iſai. 8. 21.) And they ſhall paſs through it hardly beſtead, and hungry, and it ſhall come to paſs, that when they ſhall be hungry, they ſhall fret themſelves, and curſe their King, and their God, and look upward. The hard things which they ſuffered raiſed hard thoughts and hard words, both of their chief among men, and of their God; they curſed their King, who, as they ſuppoſed, brought them into thoſe ſtraits; and they ſpake no better of their God, who did not deliver them out of their ſtraits, or when they were hard beſtead and hungry. As theſe men curſed him who brought them into, or would not deliver them out of a hard day, ſo Job wept when he ſaw any in it. Did not I weep for him that was in a hard day? That is, in a hard or troubleſome condition.

Si non flevi ei, cui durus dies, i e. cui dura & gravis conditio. δυσήμερος. Cdc. Per durum diem illum ſpecialitèr intelligit cui gravis aliqua & acerbiſſima afflictio contigerat.

And was not my ſoul grieved for the poor?

In the former part of the verſe, Job ſpake of external ſorrow; Did not I weep? Weeping is ſorrow expreſſed; in this latter part of the verſe, Job ſpeaks of internal ſorrow, or ſorrow conceived, Was not my ſoul grieved? It is poſſible for a man to weep and have tears in his eyes, when he hath no ſorrow in his heart: Some weep for their ſins, who do not grieve for them; and ſome weep for the ſorrows and troubles of others, when their heart is not affected, much leſs afflicted with their troubles; but ſaith Job, Was not my ſoul grieved (within me) for the poor? Was I not inwardly and really grieved? Mine was not an hypocritical ſhew or ſhadow of ſorrow, but my ſorrow came from my heart; as my heart was grieved for my own tranſgreſſions, ſo for the afflictions of the poor. As the rejoycing of the ſoul is the greateſt rejoycing, My ſoul magnifieth the Lord, and my ſpirit rejoyceth in God my Saviour, ſaid the Virgin; that is, I greatly rejoyce; ſo the ſorrow of the ſoul is the greateſt ſorrow.

Was not my ſoul grieved?] There is an Elegancy in the word, and 'tis uſed only in this one place all the Scripture over; and I find a twofold rendring of it.

Firſt, Some with reference to water, Was not my ſoul like a pool, or a lake of water? I did not only ſhed tears from mine eyes without, but my ſoul within was as a ſpring of water: As if he had ſaid, My tears came from the fountain of my heart, or I was heartily ſorry for the poor.

Secondly, Others, though poſſibly with too much curioſity, yet not without probability, take up the metaphor from that other Element, Fire; an Hebrew word of near affinity to it, ſignifying to burn; and ſo this clauſe is rendred. Did not my ſoul burn for the poor? The former tranſlation ſeems to ſay, that he had ſprings of water in him: And this latter, that he had ſecret flames of fire burning in his breaſt while he beheld the troubles of the poor. 'Tis not unſutable to Scripture language, to ſay a man burns with ſorrow: The Apoſtle Paul ſo expreſſeth his affections to the Churches, and his grief for any trouble appearing among them (2 Cor. 11. 29.) Who is offended, and I burn not? With what did Paul burn? He burned with ſorrow, with grief. Mr. Broughton gives this tranſlation of Job's Text, Did not my ſoul burn for the poor? Implying that Job's bowels were even fired with compaſſion. As there is an ardency of love and deſire, ſo of grief and ſorrow for their ſufferings whom we love, and whoſe welfare we deſire. The Septuagint render it as we upon the matter, My ſoul ſighed or groaned ſeeing a man in ſtraits or neceſſities; Such are the poor.

Ἐστέναξα ἰδὼν ἄνδρα ἐν ἀνάγκαις. Sept.

The word poor hath been opened in other paſſages of this Book; only note there are two ſorts of poor; ſome are poor by pedigree; or in reference to their original condition, they were poor born, or beggars born, and never knew what it is to have riches, no nor a competency in the things of this life. We may call theſe naturally poor, as we may call others naturally rich, men born to great eſtates and inheritances. Of ſuch rich men we ſay proverbially, Their Fathers were born before them. Again, there are providential poor, or men made poor by ſome ſpecial croſs or afflicting diſpenſations: Thus many who were once rich, very rich, become poor; they looſe all by the unrighteous dealings of men, or by the righteous dealings of God, either as a puniſhment, or as a tryal. The great riches of ſome men is burnt or conſumed in an hour by fire, or wrackt and ſwallowed up in a moment by the waters. It is an affliction to be born poor; but it is a greater affliction for a man born, or made rich, to become poor. And this poor man is ſo much more the object of pity then the other; by how much to loſe much is more grievous to any man, then to have little. We may ſuppoſe Job was grieved for the poor of both ſorts, but eſpecially for the latter ſort of poor; Was not my ſoul grieved for the poor? Both branches of this verſe are, for matter, the ſame, or the difference between them is but this, that the one demonſtrates the reality of the other, or is a further Teſtimony of it. Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? Was not my ſoul grieved for the poor?

Hence Obſerve, It is a duty to compaſſionate others in their afflictions.

To weep for thoſe that are in hard dayes, to be grieved for thoſe that are pinch't and pin'd with poverty, is a duty to which we are called under a threefold Conſideration.

In humanum plane eſt humanis caſibus & calamitatibus non ingemiſcere. Dictum Mar. Anton.

Firſt, As men, being of the ſelf-ſame nature, mould and matter with them that are troubled or poor, even nature invites to ſympathize with thoſe that are of the ſame common nature. A Heathen ſaid, 'Tis inhumane not to grieve at humane calamities; a beaſt will make a diſcovery of ſomewhat like this towards other beaſts; how much more ſhould man towards man!

Secondly, We are to compaſſionate thoſe that are poor or in trouble, not only as being in the ſame general nature, but as therefore being our ſelves ſubject to the ſame ſpecial troubles wherewith others are troubled, and to the ſame ſorrows wherewith any other are made ſorrowful. The Apoſtle gives us this argument, (Heb. 13. 1, 2, 3.) Let brotherly love continue; be not forgetful to entertain ſtrangers; for thereby ſome have entertained Angels unawares. And at the third verſe, Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them, and them which ſuffer adverſity, as being your ſelves alſo in the body; that is, alive in the body, and ſo obnoxious to the like ſufferings. What hath fallen upon any man in the body, may fall upon another whileſt he is in the body; as all men have one common nature, ſo in that common nature they may quickly meet with the ſame common afflictions. As the Apoſtle comforts and encourageth the Corinthians to bear up againſt all thoſe troubles which had befallen them, or might befal them for the profeſſion of the Goſpel, and keeping the worſhip pure, becauſe no temptation (that is affliction) had taken them, but ſuch as is common to man (or a humane temptation) (1 Cor 10. 13.) So it ſhould move us to pity the afflicted becauſe no temptation hath taken them, but ſuch as is common to man; that is, ſuch as may take any man, and our ſelves may be taken with it as ſoon as any.

Thirdly, We ſhould compaſſionate the troubles of many, as being in the ſame faith with us; this conſideration reaches godly men only. One godly man ſhould compaſſionate another, as being a member of the ſame myſtical body. And upon this ground the Apoſtle calls the Church to this duty eminently, with reference to all the members of it, (Rom. 12. 15.) Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love, rejoycing in hope, (that is, of good to your ſelves) patience in tribulation (that is, under the evils which you ſuffer) Then follows (ver. 15.) Rejoyce with them that rejoyce, (that is, rejoyce at the good of others) and weep with them that weep, that is, at the evils which others ſuffer. He is full to this point again (1 Cor. 12. 26.) And whether one member ſuffer, all the members ſuffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoyce with it; that is, as it is unfailably and unfeignedly in the natural body, ſo it ought to be among or in the ſpiritual body of the Saints joyned in a holy Church-fellowſhip though they ſometimes fail in this duty) if one member ſuffer, all the members ſhould ſuffer with him, and if one be honoured, all ſhould rejoyce with him. For (as it follows, ver. 27.) ye are the body of Chriſt, and members in particular, or (or as the Greek hath it ſtrictly) members of a part; that is, ye are members of that Church which is a part of the univerſal Church, or ye are members each one for his part, according to the place or office which ye hold in the body; and therefore ye ſhould have a fellow-feeling of each others afflictions, as if every one of you were afflicted, when any one of you is afflicted.

And not only doth it become godly men to be full of ſympathizing affections one towards another, but in a degree towards all men, even their enemies; for them the Goſpel commands us to love. And though that be the new Commandment of love in Goſpel-times, yet we find it in uſe before that time. This was David's practice, (Pſal. 35. 13, 14.) where ſpeaking of his enemies, who had rewarded him with evil for good, he makes this ſolemn profeſſion, But as for me, when they were ſick, my cloathing was ſackcloth, I humbled my ſoul with faſting, and my prayer returned into my own boſome (that is, I beſtowed hearty prayers upon, and whether they got any good by them or no, I am ſure I did, I found the comfort and the bleſſing of them in my boſome) nor did I only pray for them, but, I behaved my ſelf as though he (that is, every one of them) had been my friend or brother; I bowed down heavily as one that mourneth for his Mother; but in my ſorrows they rejoyced. David's enemies could rejoyce in his ruine, yet he could not but mourn in that which was leſs then theirs. As God delighteth not in the death of a ſinner, ſo neither doth he that is godly. It grieves a godly man moſt to ſee others ſinful, rivers of tears ſhould run down our eyes, (as they did David's) becauſe men kept not the Law of God, (Pſal. 119. 136.) and tears ſhould drop from our eyes when we ſee men under the revenging hand of God, for not keeping or tranſgreſſing his Law: How much more doth it become the Saints, as the Apoſtle counſels them, (Col. 3. 12.) To put on as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies and kindneſs towards each other, in any ſad and ſuffering condition. We ſhould put on not only bowels and mercy, but bowels of mercy; we ſhould be clothed with bowels of mercy, not only to grieve for the Saints that are in miſery, but to relieve them in and help them out of miſery. And therefore,

Further, Conſider Job's tears are not barely to be taken for tears of compaſſion; ſo to weep for thoſe that are in trouble is but dry comfort, though we could weep Rivers and Floods of tears over them in their troubles. Compaſſion muſt be accompained with action, and our charity with liberality as we are able, to ſuccour and comfort thoſe that are in trouble, and to ſupply their neceſſities, Thus the Apoſtle both cautions and directs, (James 2. 15, 16.) If a brother or ſiſter be naked and deſtitute of daily food, and one of you ſay unto them, depart in peace, be you warmed and filled: Notwithſtanding ye give them not thoſe things, which are needful to the body, what doth it profit? To compaſſionate another with words and tears, and do no more, is an unprofitable compaſſion; what doth it profit, ſaith the Apoſtle? As to give others real relief will not hinder our profit, ſo to give them (as to bodily wants) only a verbal relief, doth not profit them. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 22. 9.) He that hath a bountiful eye, ſhall be bleſſed; for he giveth of his bread to the poor. He doth not ſay, he ſhall be bleſſed, becauſe, he giveth good words to the poor, (we may be bountiful of them good cheap, and the poor ſtarve for all that bounty) but he that giveth his bread to the poor ſhall be bleſſed; for he indeed is a bleſſing to the poor. Again, Solomon doth not ſay, He that interrogates the poor, and puts queſtions to them, how they came by their poverty? Some when the poor addreſs to them for ſome ſupply of their wants make it their buſineſs to query what brought them into want; which is as if a man being fallen into a pit of water the next paſſenger hearing his out-cry for help, ſhould only ask him how fell you in? but never lend him a hand or uſe any means to draw him out, (I ſay, Solomon doth not ſay, he that queſtions the poor how they came by their poverty) ſhall be bleſſed, but he that giveth of his bread to the poor. Our verbal compaſſions of the poor, are poor things, and our tears but dry things, unleſs we give them bread. The heart of Chriſt was full of trouble for us that were ſick and an trouble, but he ſtayed not there, he took care to deliver us out of our troubles, to cure us of our ſickneſſes, and to make us happy for ever. The Apoſtle minds us of theſe real compaſſions of Chriſt, to make us really compaſſionate, (2 Cor. 8. 9.) Ye know the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that though he was rich, yet for your ſakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich; he did not only pity us in our poverty, but took a courſe to make us rich, and to ſet us up in a good and plentiful eſtate again, And he was fitted to ſuccour us in our ſufferings by a ſenſe of his own ſufferings. (Heb. 2. 18.) For in that he himſelf hath ſuffered, being tempted, he is able to ſuccour them that are tempted. Jeſus Chriſt hath transferred all our ſufferings to himſelf, and ſo giveth us help in our wants through a ſenſe of what himſelf once wanted and ſuffered. This the Apoſtle had aſſigned as the reaſon why he ſubmitted to a ſuffering condition, (verſ. 17.) Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful high Prieſt in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the ſins of the people. Jeſus Chriſt was merciful before he took our nature, God is infinitely merciful, and Chriſt as the Son or ſecond perſon in the Trinity, thought no robbery to be equal with God, and therefore muſt needs be infinitely merciful before he took our nature) but he was not merciful by way of Compaſſion, or as having a ſympathy with us, or a ſence of our ſorrows, and ſufferings upon him, from his own experience, as he was God; as ſuch purely he could not be ſenſible of our ſorrows in that way. And for this cauſe (among many other cauſes) he became man, that ſo he might be ſenſible of them, and that having taken our ſorrows upon himſelf, he might give us a ready relief and help out of them. This is compleat Charity, when our compaſſions are active for the relief of thoſe that are in miſery. I grant if we compare heart-compaſſion and hand-relief together, the former is in it ſelf more excellent then the latter; for he that gives relief, offers ſomewhat out of himſelf, but he that beſtows compaſſion upon another, gives him ſomewhat of himſelf, or from within himſelf, he gives him his heart and good will, which is better then any external gift; yet if any man ſhall think he hath done enough, (it being in his power to do more) for an afflicted friend or brother, when he hath pitied him and beſtowed a parcel of good words only upon him, let him know he hath done nothing at all for him. Compaſſion is better then the fruits of it, but compaſſion without fruit is not good. He that gives a cup of cold water only, (where need is) in compaſſion, ſhall not loſe his reward, but compaſſion alone (where cold water is needed, and we have it to give) ſhall have no reward.

Exterior largiens rē extra ſemet ipſum præbuit, qui autem fletū & compaſſionem porximo tribuit aliquid de ſemetipſo dedit. Greg. Moral.

Laſtly, If it be a duty to weep for thoſe that are in hard days, and to be grieved for the poor; then

Firſt, How ſhort are they of their duty, that rejoyce not only in, but at the ſorrows of others, and who are glad of their grief? The wickedneſs of ſuch was ſhewed (verſ. 9.)

Secondly, How ſhort are they of this duty, who in hard days upon others, in ſtead of pitying and weeping for them, upbraid them with their troubles, and caſt their afflictions in their teeth. Such natural and cruel men, have alſo been branded from other paſſages of this Book and Chapter.

Thirdly, How far are they departed from this duty, who inſtead of weeping with thoſe that weep, do their beſt to render their condition worſe, to impoveriſh the very poor, and ſo inſtead of drying up and wiping off the tears of thoſe that weep, they make them weep more or afreſh. How deſervedly are they abhor'd both of God and good men, who and affliction to the afflicted, and put Gall and Wormwood into their cup, whoſe ſouls are in bitterneſs.

Secondly, The circumſtance of time is conſiderable, when Job was thus filled with pity and compaſſion; was it not in the height and flouriſh of this worldly wealth? Was it not when he was at eaſe in his Houſe, and had enough? Was it not when he was not in hard days? When trouble and poverty were far from him? Even then he wept for him that was in trouble, and his Soul was grieved for the poor.

Hence Obſerve, A godly man layeth the troubles and wants of others to heart, when he himſelf is freeſt and furtheſt from trouble.

Job being in ſuch proſperity, as he deſcribes in the 29. Chapter, had no cauſe to weep for any of his own concernments. The Candle of the Lord did ſhine upon his head, and the Rocks poured him out Rivers of oyl; yet then he was pouring out tears for the poor. Thus Nehemiah a godly man was the Kings Cup-bearer, and had (though a captive) not only liberty but the favour of the Prince; yet when he heard of the afflictions of his brethren that were in Jeruſalem, he could not then rejoyce in his perſonal enjoyments, but wept and looked ſo ſadly, that coming to do his office, the King took notice of it, and asked, Art thou ſick? The affliction of his brethren was his ſickneſs, and all the trouble that lay upon him, was the report of their trouble. When worldly men are at eaſe, they little think and care as little who is in pain; when they are warm, they think no body is a cold, and when they are full-fed, they ſcarce believe that any are hungry. When David wanting bread ſent meſſengers to Nabal, who made a feaſt at that time like a King, he would not take notice of his ſtraits, nor ſend him ſo much as a loaf of bread. O how many are there, who if they can but get into an earthly Paradiſe, never trouble themſelves with thoſe that are in a wilderneſs of trouble; ſick and poor, and wanting perſons, are as far from their hearts, as ſickneſs, poverty and want are from their Houſes. Few feel that which others feel, till they feel it themſelves. Job felt no trouble himſelf, but he felt the troubles of many others.

Take this Corollary from the whole.

The life of man in this World is trouble and ſorrow.

We are either dayly preſſed with our own ſufferings, or we ought to be with the ſufferings of others. Moſt times we are preſſed with burdens of our own; and if at any time we are not, yet there are burdens enow upon our friends and relations at home, or upon the people and Churches of God abroad to preſs us. We may well conclude from theſe premiſes, as old Jacob did, Few and evil are the days of our pilgrimage, for as they who have had moſt days have lived but a little while, ſo they who have had the beſt days have lived but with little eaſe, or (as we ſay) in a kind of little eaſe. What with our own ſorrows; what with the ſorrows of others, what have we elſe but ſorrow?

Job having thus ſhewed in what frame his heart was towards thoſe whom he ſaw afflicted with any evil, proceeds to ſhew how himſelf was diſappointed of that good which he expected.

Verſ. 26. When I looked for good then evil came unto me.

The word rendred, looked for, notes hope, which is an inward look, or the look of the mind. The Soul hath its eye as well as the body; there is an eye of faith in the Soul, looking upon the truth of the promiſe; and there is an eye of hope in the Soul, looking for the good of the promiſe. And until we look to the promiſe, believing the truth of it, we can never look to the promiſe hoping for the good of it. Thus David reſolved (Pſal. 121.1.) I will lift up mine eyes upon the hills, from whence cometh my help, my help cometh from the Lord, &c. What eyes did David lift up to the hills? Surely thoſe the holy faith and hope; and ſo did Jod when he ſaid here in the Text, I looked

For good.] What good? There is a threefold good; firſt, Natural, health and ſtrength; ſecondly, Civil, peace and plenty; thirdly, Moral or Spiritual good, the Grace and comforts of the Spirit, here in this place Job intends the two former ſorts of good, with the latter branch of the third; as if he had ſaid, I expected the continuance of my health and ſtrength, of my peace and plenty, as alſo of the joys and comforts of the holy Ghoſt; but when I looked for good, or that theſe good things ſhould abide with me,

Then evil came.] Evil is of two ſorts; firſt, of ſin; ſecondly, of ſufferings; the latter is meant here, evil came, that is, trouble came, affliction came; evil of as many ſorts came as the good was, for the continuance whereof I looked; evil came upon me (as we ſay) thick and threefold, it came upon me like an armed man, I could not withſtand, much leſs overcome it. When I looked for good, then, even in the midſt, in the height and heat of my expectations, evil came.

And when I waited for light.

The ſecond part of the verſe, is in ſence the ſame with the former; light here is the ſame in general with good there (as often elſewhere in Scripture) I waited for light; what then?

Then came darkneſs.] As light is the ſame with good, ſo darkneſs is the ſame with evil, and here (as often elſewhere in Scripture) Darkneſs is put for all ſorts of evil.

The words are plain, and need no labour of expoſition. I ſhall only note ſome things from them.

Firſt, in general, Good men are often deceived of, and miſs their expectation in this world, eſpecially about the things of the World.

A godly man hath a twofold expectation; firſt, about the things of the world to come; ſecondly, about the things of this world; a godly mans expectation ſhall not be loſt in reference to the things of the world to come, but he may loſe many of his expectations as to the things of this world. How often are we deceived in our expectations from men, and then moſt when we expect moſt from them? Men are a lie, (Pſal. 62. 9.) an active lie, they deceive others, and a paſſive lie, they are deceived by others; and they who are moſt actively a lie, are moſt uſually and moſt deſervedly a paſſive lie, or fed with lies. We may look for this and that at the hand of man, and meet with neither. (Iſa. 20. 5.) They ſhall be afraid and aſhamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt their glory; that is, they who expected much help, and gloried or boaſted of the help, which they ſhould have from Ethiopia and Egypt (as the Jews and others did) looked ſo long for it that they were aſhamed to look any longer, and at laſt went without it; as is expreſſed in the words following (v. 6.) And the inhabitants of this Iſle ſhall ſay in that day, behold, ſuch is our expectation whither we flee for help to be delivered (that is, we ſee what is become of theſe Ethiopians and Egyptians, who undertook to protect us) from the King of Aſſyria, (they we ſee could not protect themſelves from the forces of Aſſyria) and how ſhall we eſcape? That is, we cannot eſcape by their means, we fly to Ethiopia and Egypt for help and deliverance from the King of Aſſyria, but their help is vain, they could not help themſelves. The help of man is often vain, when he gives us the beſt help which he hath promiſed; but ſome are ſo vain, that though they promiſe us help, they will not give it. (Zech. 9. 5.) Aſhkelon ſhall ſee it and fear : Gaza alſo ſhall ſee it and be very ſorrowful : And Ekron for her expectation ſhall be aſhamed, and the King ſhall periſh from Gaza, and Aſhkelon ſhall not be inhabited. There is nothing more common then diſappointments from men. And as men uſually fail and diſappoint our expectation, ſo God alſo doth ſometimes. God never fails his own promiſes, but he may fail our expectations, yet 'tis then only, when we expect without, beſide, or beyond the promiſe. (*Jer.*8. 15.) We looked for peace, but no good come, and for a time of health, and behold trouble. The Jews had great hopes that God would give them proſperous and happy times; but while they looked that God ſhould keep promiſes, they took no care to keep Commandments, ſo their own confeſſion clears that, (v. 14.) Our God hath given us water of gall to drink, becauſe we have ſinned againſt the Lord.) Thus to hope for the good of the promiſe, is to hope beſide yea againſt the truth of the promiſe. That other Prophet aſſigns the ſame reaſon of their diſappointment, (Iſa. 59. 9.) Therefore is judgment far from us, neither doth juſtice overtake us, we wait for light, but behold obſcurity, for brightneſs, but we walk in darkneſs. And why was all this? The anſwer is plain, (v. 12, 13.) For our tranſgreſſions are multiplied before thee, and our ſins witneſs againſt us, &c. And as for a puniſhment of ſin, as alſo for the exerciſe of patience and tryal of grace, God fruſtrates the preſent expectation of his own people, ſo much more will he for the former reaſon diſappoint wicked men of theirs; they ſhall look for light, but it will be darkneſs for ever. (Prov. 10. 28.) The hope of the righteous ſhall be gladneſs, (that is, the utmoſt iſſue of it ſhall be gladneſs) but the expectation of the wicked ſhall periſh. The wicked expect the periſhing of the righteous, but that expectation of the wicked ſhall periſh, becauſe the righteous ſhall never periſh. The things which the wicked chiefly hope for, are periſhing things, and that hope often periſheth; but if they hope for the things which periſh not, that hope always periſheth, for they themſelves ſhall periſh for ever. This Solomon aſſerts fully, (Cap. 11. 7.) when a wicked man dyeth, his expectation ſhall periſh, and the hope of the unjuſt man periſheth. Hope or expectation is uſually long liv'd; and though the hope of wicked men be blind and ſickly, yet it often holds out or lives as long as they live. But when the wicked die, they and their hope, they and their expectation die and expire together. I grant the hope of a juſt man endeth when he dieth, yet it doth not die, but it is perfected in fruition, as Solomon more then intimates at the 23, verſe of the ſame Chapter, The deſire of the righteous is only good. It is a maxim in Philoſophy, All things deſire good : And in that ſence the deſire of all men, as it is deſire, is only of that which is good. But as the righteous only deſire to do that which is good, ſo in ſtrict ſence, they only deſire to have that which is good, The deſire of the righteous as righteous, is only good, and always good; for as he deſires God above all, ſo he deſires God in all, in whom is all good, and nothing but good. Thus the deſire of the righteous (and therefore their hope, for we can hope for nothing but what we deſire) is only good. But (as it follows in the ſame verſe) The expectation of the wicked is wrath; that is, he expects the accompliſhment of his wrath, or when his expectation is accompliſhed, it is in wrath, and proves wrath to him. We cannot ſay, that a wicked man doth properly and explicitly expect wrath, he hath great preſumptions of mercy, but he ſhall have wrath in the room of that mercy which he preſumptuouſly expected; he looked for many good days here, and for the favour of God hereafter, but he ſeldom finds the former, (and when he doth they are evil to him) but he ſhall not at all find the latter. What good he hath, he hath it in this world, and 'tis of this world, he hath none of another kind, none beyond this world. When the rich man in Hell deſired but a drop of water to cool his tongue, he was anſwer'd with, Son, remember thou haſt had thy good things, there are no more to be had for thee.

Again, Both good and bad may fail in their expectations, but with a vaſt difference, the wicked look and receive not, becauſe they look not in faith, their expectation is but a fancy, they have no ground to look for good, and therefore they look for good and receive none. All true good comes out of a promiſe; they who have nothing to do with the promiſe, (as the wicked having no faith, have not, though I grant the promiſe, (I mean the abſolute promiſe) may have to do with them; now I ſay, the wicked being in the ſence opened, without the promiſe) have no ground to expect or hope for the good of the promiſe. But as for the Godly, though they preſently receive not what they look for, yet looking in faith they ſhall at laſt, one time or other receive it. (Pſal. 9. 18.) The needy ſhall not always be forgotten : The expectation of the poor (that is, of the godly poor) ſhall not periſh for ever.

Further, ſinners diſappoint God of his expectation, and therefore no marvail if God diſappoint them of theirs. (Iſa. 5. 4.) What could have been done more to my vineyard that I have not done to it, (ſaith the Lord;) Wherefore when I looked that it ſhould bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes: and I looked for Judgment, and behold oppreſſion, for righteouſneſs, and behold a cry. God hath his expectation upon man, and man, ſinful man deceives God of his expectation : He looks for righteouſneſs, for reformation, for the fruits of repentance, of faith, and love, but finds none; how juſtly then doth God let ſinners look for peace, and not find it, for mercy and find none! Yea the beſt of his people are deſervedly ſhortned in their expectation upon this ground, who is there among them that hath not failed the expectation of God? Where is that care to pleaſe God, that fear of offending him, that circumſpect walking, that redeeming of time, that denyal of our ſelves, the zeal for him, which upon the account of his free grace in Chriſt, and our hope through Chriſt, he might hope, yea challenge from us: And if we make God look ſo often for that which he receives not, ſhall we think it ſtrange if we receive not that for which we look.

Yet doubtleſs, this was not Job's caſe; we do not find that he had diſappointed the expectation of God in any thing, (humane frailty only excepted) and as God gave him a high teſtimony in this point, ſo alſo did his own conſcience; and therefore when he ſaith, I looked for good, we have reaſon to conclude that he had a good ground to look for it, yet he miſt it. When I looked for good, then evil came.

Hence Obſerve, Secondly, A godly man conſidering and examining his own heart and life, may find no ſpecial reaſon there why God afflicts him, or cauſeth evil to come upon him.

God taketh away good, and ſends evil upon us for one of theſe two reaſons; either

Firſt, When we grow wanton and vain, or play the wantons, and feed our vanity with the good things of God; when we let go the bridle of moderation, and ſerve our bellies rather then the Lord Jeſus in the uſe of our worldly comforts, then 'tis time for God, and uſually God takes that time to take them from us, and give us aſhes for bread, or mingle our drink with weeping; thus Chriſt denounceth a woe to them that laugh now, (Luke 6.25.) They are not threatned with a woe meerly for laughing, to do ſo is not unlawful, but innocently natural and proper to man as man. But Chriſt thunders a woe againſt (as Solomon calls it, Eccl. 2.2.) mad or immoderate laughter and rejoycing in the uſe of the Creature, after ſuch laughing comes crying, woe and ſorrow.

Secondly, Evil comes uſually inſtead of the good we look for, when our hearts are hardned and our bowels ſhut up againſt all pity and compaſſion towards thoſe who are under the preſent ſufferings of evil. This brought evil upon Jeruſalem when ſhe looked for good (Ezek. 16.49.) Pride, fulneſs of bread, and abundance of Idleneſs was in her, neither did ſhe ſtrengthen the hand of the poor and needy. But it was not thus with holy Job; he did not drown himſelf in carnal pleaſures, he did not ſteep his Spirit in Earthly enjoyments; nor did Job look upon himſelf as unconcern'd in the troubles and ſtraits of the diſtreſſed and neceſſitous. Job's heart was not fil'd with riches and poſſeſſions, but with pity and compaſſion to the poor. Now though Job was a man of this admirable temper, both as to his own abundance, and the wants of others, both as to the good which himſelf once had, and as to the evils which others endured; yet when he lookt for good, evil came, and he was not onely diſappointed of his hopes, but afflicted greatly. Some have met with ſufferings, which (though as ſinners they have deſerved, yet) they have not procured by their ſins. God afflicts none of his people but for holy ends, but he afflicts many of them without any reſpect to their unholineſs.

Thirdly, Conſider the word, when, which refers to the circumſtance of time, wherein evil befel Job; When I looked for good, then evil came. This when, may have a double reference. Firſt, to the time of his proſperity, and ſo to his looking for good, was the continuance or prolongation of it. Now compare the ſcope of this verſe, and this ſeaſon wherein Job looked for good, with the former verſe; Did not I weep with him that was in trouble; and we may Obſerve,

They that are pitiful and charitable to others in their ſorrows, may with a hopeful probability look for the continuation of their own comforts.

Our condoling with and ſuccouring thoſe who are in trouble is a fair argument that we ſhall keep our peace.

Secondly, When, may refer to the time of his affliction; and that, both as he looked for pity in and deliverance out of his affliction, or the renewing of his proſperity, when I looked for good, that is, when I in my afflicted ſtate, waited for good, for pity from men, and for the repair of thoſe ſad breaches, which were made upon me by the hand of God, then evil came, and I was more wrapt up in or intangled with trouble then before.

Hence Note, He that hath helped others out of their afflictions, may probably look for pity in and help out of his affliction.

Chriſt gives that general rule (Luke 6. 38.) With the ſame meaſure that ye mete withall, it ſhall be meaſured to you again. That rule hath the force both of a promiſe and of a threatning in it. And as it reſpects the quantity, that you ſhall have as much or more meaſured to you then you meaſure; ſo it reſpects the kind and quality of that which is meaſured more. For if we meaſure evil to others, we muſt look that evil ſhall be meaſured to us again; and if we meaſure out good to others, we may warrantably look that good ſhould be meaſured out to us again; Job thought he ſhould have the good of compaſſion meaſured out freely to him in his affliction, he having meaſured it out abundantly to others in theirs. And that the hearts of men would never have been hardned into ſtones in the day of his calamity, when as his heart had melted into tears at the calamity of others. That of David gives much aſſurance of this, (Pſal. 41. 1, 2, 3.) Bleſſed is the man that conſidereth the poor, the Lord will deliver him (not the poor only, but him alſo that wiſely conſidereth the poor) in the time of trouble; the Lord will preſerve him, and keep him alive, and he ſhall be bleſſed upon the Earth; and thou wilt not deliver him to the will of his enemies. The Lord will ſtrengthen him upon the bed of languiſhing: Thou wilt make his bed in his ſickneſs. To conſider the poor, is both to pity and help them. And he that is pitiful to the poor, ſhall according to this Scripture be delivered out of trouble, or preſerved from trouble, both which are high acts of mercy. And therefore Job ſeems to wonder at it, that evil ſhould come, when he had this and ſo many other probable grounds, upon which he might look for good.

Hence take two Corollaries.

First, We are apt to think ſtrange of our afflictions, when we ſee no reaſon for them.

If we cannot charge our ſelves with ſin, we conclude, we ſhall not ſuffer.

Secondly, Note, They that have been moſt exact in their walkings, ſhould yet look and prepare for changes.

Grace gives us a good title, the beſt title to Earthly things, but it doth not aſſure the poſſeſſion of them. They who are dead to worldly enjoyments, may yet ſee them die. And how compaſſionate ſoever any man hath been to the poor, pained and afflicted, yet himſelf may become poor, and pained, and afflicted; as Job ſhews us further by his own experience and example in the next verſe.

Verſ. 27. My bowels boyled and reſted not; the days of affliction prevented me.

From this verſe to the end of the Chapter, Job reckons up ſeveral ſad effects of his afflictions and ſorrows.

My bowels boyled, or were hot.

As I was full of ſorrows without, ſo I was inwardly inflamed as it were with ſorrow, his bowels were as a ſeething or boiling pot upon the fire. The Bowels ſignifie in Scripture, Firſt, the moſt feeling compaſſions of the mind: Put on (ſaith the Apoſtle, Col. 3. 12.) as the elect of God, bowels of mercy; that is, be ye very merciful. Secondly, The bowels ſignifie the moſt ſecret workings and cogitations of the mind, (Prov. 20. 27.) The Spirit of man is the candle of the Lord, ſearching all the inward parts (or Bowels) of the belly; that is, thoſe thoughts, contrivements, and conceptions which lye cloſeſt or moſt out of ſight in the mind of man. And hence the boyling of the bowels, imports inward trouble, or troubled thoughts, either with fear or grief, or both. Thus 'tis ſaid of Daniel (Dan. 4. 10.) He was aſtoniſhed for one hour, and his thoughts troubled him; and ſo of Belſhazzar when he ſaw the hand-writing upon the wall (Dan. 5. 1.) his countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him; that is, his breaſt or bowels were full of boyling tumultuating thoughts. Many Scriptures ſet out the inward Agony of the mind by fire and boyling. A man in great perplexity, is as if he were in a fire, or a fire in him; care is a fire, fear is a fire, and ſo is ſorrow, My bowels boyled (ſaith Job,) As the Lords anger is like a burning fire, (Lam. 2 3.) He hath cut off in his fierce Anger all the horn of Iſrael, he hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy, and he burned againſt Jacob like a flaming fire which devoureth round about. Now as the Lords anger, which cauſeth him to bring trouble upon a people or a perſon is like fire, ſo is that ſorrow with which man is affected in the day of the Lords anger. Thus ſpake Jeremie (Lam. 1.20.) Behold O Lord, for I am in diſtreſs, my bowels are troubled, my heart is turned within me. The heart or bowels are the ſeat of the paſſions; and when paſſion is ſo ſtrong that it turns the heart, and ſo hot that 'tis ſaid to make the bowels boyl, then paſſion is at the higheſt; My bowels boyled

Velut infremuerunt ebullierunt olla more intima atq; membra in me, Merc.

Angorem animi & dolorum acerbitatem exprimere ſolet igni, ardor, flamma; inde curarum æſtus dicitur, et cum qui dicitur aliquis cũ anxiis & moleſtis contabeſcit curis. Sanct.

And reſted not.] The Hebrew is, Were not ſilent, pain makes a noiſe, pain ſpeaks loud (Iſa. 16. 11.) My bowels ſhall ſound like an Harp for Moab. And when we are freed from pain a ſweet ſilence followeth. (Pſal. 107. 29.) He maketh the Storm a calm, ſo that the waves thereof are ſtill (or the waves thereof are ſilent what.) a roaring noiſe is there in a proper ſtorm at Sea? And is there not a roaring noiſe in the metaphorical ſtorms of trouble? Or if we take the words reſted not, in their ordinary ſence, then they note the unceſſantneſs of his ſorrow; that reſteth, which ceaſeth or giveth over working; as it is ſaid (Exod. 20. 11.) In ſix days the Lord made Heaven and Earth, the Sea and all that in them is, and reſted the ſeventh day; thus Job's bowels boyled and reſted not, that is, his ſorrow ceaſed not, he had no (lucida intervalla) comfortable lightſome intermiſſions of or vacations from his pains and griefs; he had not ſever fits, but a continual burning fever; new fewel was daily, yea hourly added to feed the fire and keep his bowels boyling; My bowels (ſaith he) boyled and reſted not.

The days of affliction prevented me.

He had ſaid a little before (verſ. 16.) The days of affliction have taken hold upon me; here he ſaith,, they have prevented me, that is, they came ſuddenly upon me, or unlook'd for. Some read, they met me, ſo the word is rendred in that charge againſt the Moabites and Ammonites (Deut. 23. 3, 4.) Even to their tenth generation ſhall they not enter into the Congregation of the Lord for ever, becauſe they met you not with bread and with water in the way when ye came out of Egypt, &c. Now whether we read Job's Text, The days of affliction met me, or prevented me, the ſence is the ſame, Implying, that thoſe days of affliction came ſomewhat unawares, or when he looked not for them, or when he looked not for them, or when he was looking, as he ſaid in the former verſe for other, for better days. There are two ſorts of meeting, firſt, looked for; ſecondly, unlooked for; oftentimes a friend meets us whom we thought not of, and ſo may an enemy; the latter meeting is meant here. Such meetings are uncomfortable preventings.

Anticipaverunt me. Vatabl. Quod alii dicunt Apprehenderunt me, minus eſt. Nam verbum Originale proprie ſignificat illã rationem veniendi, aut aliquid aliud faciendi, quod tempore & loco eſt ante nos.

Some conceive Job ſaid, The days of evil prevented him, becauſe he met with thoſe evils in the beſt of his Age, which uſually come not till the latter end, or cloſe of a mans age. There are ſome evils and afflictions which are ſo uſual in old age that they are even natural or congenial to it; of theſe Solomon ſpeaks and cautions young men, (Eccl. 12. 1.) Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou ſhalt ſay, I have no pleaſure in them. Let any man but live, and he ſhall out-live his bodily ſtrength and pleaſures. What can we expect to meet with in old age but pain and ſorrow? When, as Solomon there Allegorizeth the Sun, and the light, and the Moon, and the Stars are darkned, and the Clouds return after the rain, in the day when the keepers of the Houſe ſhall tremble, and the ſtrong men ſhall bow themſelves, &c. That is, when the powers of nature ſhall inevitably ſuffer an univerſal decay; what can any man (I ſay) expect then put pain and ſorrow? But when a man is in the beſt of his days, he looks for good days, and the continuance of his bodily ſtrength. Therefore Job being broken not only in his eſtate but in his ſtrength, being not only impoveriſhed but pained and diſeaſed, in the beſt of his days, he might well ſay, The days of affliction have prevented me.

Talia paſſus ſum, qualis in ætate jã grandi ac frigida patiuntur ſenes. Sanct.

Again, Some read this in connection with the former verſe, as if what he ſaith here were an effect of what he ſaid there; Becauſe when I looked for good, evil came to me; and when I hoped for light, darkneſs came upon me, therefore my bowels boyled within me, ſo that they could not reſt. Taking the Text in this dependance.

Quòd bonũ expectanti mihi evenit malum; & ſperanti lucem evenit caligo; viſcera mea efferviſacta ſunt, adeo ut non quieſcant. Jun.

Obſerve, It is exceeding painful and afflictive to miſs our expectations, or not to receive the good which we hope and wait for.

When we look for evil, and expect the coming of trouble, 'tis burdenſome and grievous enough when it comes; but to meet with evil when we wait for good, doubles the weight of evil. To be croſſed in our expectations, makes our croſs heavy and our bowe's boyl.

Then how will the bowels of wicked men boyl in ſorrow for ever, when when they ſhall be quite fruſtrated of their hopes and loſe all their expectations? Such are often full of hopes, and big with the expectation of good things, not only in this life but in the next; they hope their Souls ſhall go to Heaven when their bodies go to the grave; they look for light, even the light of glory after the darkneſs of death, but darkneſs ſhall be their portion, and they ſhall go to the generation of their fathers, where they ſhall never ſee light. In the ſeventh of Matthew (*verſ.*24.) we find wicked men looking for, yea laying claim to glory; they knock at Heaven Gate, as if they had much acquaintance there, yet all they ſhall hear from Chriſt is, I never knew you, depart from me ye that work iniquity. O what boyling of bowels will theſe men feel in the fire that never goeth out, when holy Job found ſuch a boyling of his bowels in a fire that quickly went out? My bowels boyled, the days of affliction prevented me.

Hence Note, Firſt, The holieſt and beſt of men, are apt to think afflictions further off from them then they are.

We uſually ſay, Bad news comes before it is looked for. Every godly man thinks he may fall into affliction; but though he hath a ſence of this upon him, that afflictions may come; yet he thinks them further off then they are, or that they will not come ſo ſoon as they do. The Prophet ſpeaking of voluptuous ſenſualiſts ſaith (Amos 6. 3.) They put the evil day far from them. And as theſe put it far from themſelves, ſo the falſe Prophet aſſured others, that it was not only far from them, but ſhould never over-take them, (Jer. 14. 15.) Therefore thus ſaith the Lord concerning the Prophets that propheſie in my name, and I ſent them not, yet they ſay Sword and Famine ſhall not be in this Land, by Sword and Famine ſhall theſe Prophets be conſumed. And again, (Jer. 5. 12.) They have belyed the Lord, and ſaid it is not he, neither ſhall evil come upon us, neither ſhall we ſee Sword nor Famine. Now as evil men put the evil day far from themſelves, and falſe Prophets put it farther from them, ſo godly men ſeldom think that the evil day is ſo near as indeed it is. Yea they may have a ſecret hope that the evil day will not come at all, but that they ſhall dye in their neſt, as Job once ſaid; but as God prevents us often with his mercies and loving kindneſſes, David hoped he would; The God of my mercy ſhall prevent me, (Pſal. 59. 10.) and he prayed that we would, (Pſal. 79. 8.) O remember not againſt us our former iniquities, let thy tender mercies ſpeedily prevent us; for we are brought very low. And as God ſometimes doth it, beyond both our hopes and prayers. (*Pſ.*21. 3.) For thou preventeſt him with the bleſſings of goodneſs, thou ſetteſt a Crown of pure Gold upon his head. Now (I ſay) as God hath preventing mercies, he ſends in mercy, or ſuch a ſpecial mercy, before we look for it; ſo it is as true, that God hath preventing Judgments, and that he ſends in afflictions before they are looked for; ſad troubles, ſad ſickneſſes, ſad breakings, ſad loſſes, ſad miſcarriages of Servants and Children come unlooked for upon many of the Servants of God. David experienced this alſo, (Pſal. 18. 5.) The ſorrows of Hell compaſſed me about, the ſnares of death prevented me; That is, deadly ſnares, ſuch ſnares as endangered my life ſurpriſed me, when I had no thought of any ſuch miſchief.

Laſtly, Note, Unexpected afflictions afflict us moſt.

As evil ſhall moſt certainly come upon thoſe ſinners who expect it not. (Amos 9. 10.) All the ſinners of my people ſhall die by the Sword, which ſay, the evil ſhall not overtake nor prevent us. So it will be moſt terrible to them when it comes. As to miſs the good that we look for (which was obſerved before) ſo to meet with any evil that we looked not for, cuts to the quick. Job looked for good, but it came not, he looked not for ſuch troubles, and they came. The days of evil prevented him. As we may look for good, ſo evil ſhould not be unlooked for. If the coming of trouble be looked for, it will not trouble us ſo much when it comes. We may poſſibly prevent or hide our ſelves from expected evils, but to be ſure we may be the better armed for them. Whereas they who do not foreſee them at all, feel them moſt. What peril, what poverty, what croſs, what ſickneſs, what loſs is there that we may not look for? Are not all theſe incident to our nature, as we are men? Are they not deſerved by us, as we are ſinners? yea as we are Saints, we may look for tryals; and if as Saints we look not for them, we hardly know what it is to be a Saint.

'Tis our wiſdom to way-lay troubles in our thoughts, and perſonate the worſt outward eſtate ſometimes, while we enjoy the beſt. They are not only wiſe men, but the beſt and choiſeſt Saints, who uſe their good days and things, as if they might every day change to worſe, yea to the worſt. To look for evil fearſully is below faith, but to look for it preparingly, is a very ſpiritual exerciſe of faith. To be upon the rack of expectation, is to antedate our ſorrows; but to be upon thoughts of them, and ſo to converſe with them, that (as the Apoſtle ſaith) the fiery tryal may not be ſtrange to us, this as it is our duty, though tryals never come, ſo it will be a great ſupport to us when they come. It is ſinful when we are behind-hand in meditating what we may ſuffer, as well as when we are behind-hand in conſidering what we ought to do. They undergo tryals with moſt patience, who are ofteneſt minding a day of tryal. And uſually they have unlooked for comforts, who are graciouſly looking for their Croſs. And though it be good to be full of holy faith, that our mercies ſhall be continued, yet it is as good to be full of holy fear that our mercies may be changed. Happy are they who are at once believing for good days, and preparing for them; yea happy alſo are they who are at onc believing about evil days, and preparing for them. This was the frame and poſture of Righteous Noah's Spirit, (Heb. 11.7.) Who by faith, being warned of God of things not ſeen as yet, moved with fear prepared an Ark to the ſaving of his Houſe, by the which he condemned the World. The old World would never believe nor fear the coming of the Flood, and ſo were drowned and ſwallowed up in it; the days of affliction at once prevented and deſtroyed them; Noah did both believe and fear the coming of the Flood, and ſo eſcaped it; while his faith aſſured him the Flood would come, his fear provoked him to provide an Ark (as God had appointed) to ſave himſelf and his in when it came. To be prevented by mercy, is the ſweeteſt and pureſt way of receiving mery, and to be prevented by affliction is the ſoreſt way of enduring affliction.

This latter age of the World, or (as I may call it) Dregs of Time, hath much need of this awakening conſideration; ſeeing Chriſt himſelf hath foretold us that the ſame Spirit of ſlumber and carnal ſecurity which poſſeſſed the old World (as we commonly call it) ſhall alſo poſſeſs the World when 'tis indeed grown old, (Luke 17. 26, 27, 28, 29.) As it was in the days of Noah, ſo ſhall it be in the days of the Son of man, (that is, in all the days wherein Chriſt reveals himſelf in any eminent way of judgment againſt the World, and eſpecially in the laſt judgment day) they did eat, they drank, they married Wives, they were given in marriage, (that is, they did all theſe things as if they had nothing elſe to do, and nothing at all to fear, though Noah had thunder'd the approaching deluge in their ears) until the day that Noah entred into the Ark: And the Flood came and deſtroyed them all. The days of Affliction by water did not more prevent and ſurpriſe that old World, then the day of Affliction by fire ſhall prevent this. That day ſhall come when (as the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaks, 2 Ep. 3. 2, 3.) ſcoffers ſhall come, walking after their own luſts, and ſaying, where is the promiſe of his coming? Will not that day of Affliction prevent theſe men? Let all prepare for it, the moſt will be prevented by it.

VERS. 28, 29, 30, 31.

I went mourning without the Sun: I ſtood up, and I cryed in the Congregation.
I am Brother to Dragons, and a companion to Owls.
My skin is black upon me, and my bones are burnt with heat.
My Harp alſo is turned to mourning, and my Organ into the voyce of them that weep.

These four verſes continue and conclude Job's complaint, or lamenting diſcourſe about his grievous ſufferings.

I went mourning.] Job confeſſed himſelf a ſtranger and a traveller in this World, as all his fathers were, and his travel was a ſad one, I (ſaith he) went mourning.

The word which we render mourning, ſignifies, black or blackneſs, hence ſome tranſlate, I went in black, or in black Garments. Blackneſs is the mourners colour, and Garments of black are the mourners livery; we render clearly to his ſence, I went mourning. The Church (Cant. 1. 5.) ſaith, I am like the Tents of Kedar. The Kedarens lived in Tents, and theirs were black Tents, they lived in open Fields, and under the ſcorching Sun; ſo that when the Church ſaid, I am like the Tents of Kedar, her meaning was plainly this, I am black; and when Job ſaith, I went mourning; we may underſtand him both of inward ſorrow, or ſorrow of the heart, in which ſence David profeſſed (Pſal. 38. 6.) I go mourning all the day long; and expoſtulates (Pſal. 42. 6.) Why go I mourning becauſe of the oppreſſion of the enemy? As alſo of ſorrow expreſſed outwardly, either in ſpeech, geſture, or habit; as we commonly ſay, Such a man goeth in or weareth mourning.

קדר Obſcurus obſcuratus, luce privatus fuit, nigruit; per Metaphoram contriſtatus fuit. Sic latinè Atrati dicuntur lugentes. Lugubri habitu inceſſi. Tygur. Pullatus. Pagn.

Hence Note, As the beſt of our life hath ſorrow mixt with it; ſo much of our life is nothing elſe but ſorrow.

Chriſt himſelf, was a man of ſorrow, and acquainted with grief, (Iſa. 53. 2, 3.) He was not only a ſorrowful man, but a man of ſorrow, while he was paying the debt of our ſin, and purchaſing joy for ſinners. Therefore we who are not only ſinful men, but (in a ſort) men of ſin, muſt not think much, if we, who alſo (through grace) are his members, do in this agree with our head; if we are men of ſorrow, as he was, if we are acquainted daily with grief, as he was, if we go mourning as he did, we have no reaſon to be offended at it. Our days, at beſt, are few and evil, as Jacob ſaid; and at worſt, our days are but many evils; and ſhould it not make us long for that life wherein we ſhall ſorrow no more, nor know what it is to go mourning any more? When our Garments ſhall be always white, as to innocency, they ſhall be ſo alſo as to joy, and we ſhall not be blackt with ſorrow, when we are fully waſht from the blackneſs of ſin. I went mourning

Without the Sun.] The Sun is expreſſed by three words in the Hebrew, whereof the firſt ſignifies to be a Servant or publick Miniſter of God to the World; a ſecond ſignifies Drineſs, becauſe the Sun by heat cauſeth drineſs; a third (that of the Text) ſignifies heat, which doth not only dry, but warm and comfort.

Some read the words thus; I went mourning out of the Sun; ſo Mr. Broughton, I walked black out of the Sun. As if he had ſaid, I took no pleaſure to walk in the Sun; I had ſo much grief upon my heart, ſo much darkneſs within, that the outward light was little or nothing to me; when the Sun ſhined, it did not ſhine to me; to me the Sun was as a Cloud, or but a ſhadow, yea I avoided the Sun, and ſought ſolitary places where to mourn in private, and weep out my ſorrows by my ſelf alone; I went mourning out of the Sun.

Sol hic חמה dicitur à calore, alibi vocatur שמש à miniſtro & חרם à ſiccitate. Druſ.

Hence Obſerve, Thoſe Creatures which are moſt pleaſant in themſelves, give us no content in great ſorrows and afflictions.

To a Soul in bitterneſs every thing is bitter except Chriſt; and to a darkned Soul no Sun ſhines bright, but the Sun of righteouſneſs. Solomon ſaith (Eccleſ. 11. 7.) Truly light is ſweet, and a pleaſant thing it is, for the eyes to behold the Sun; yet a man in ſorrow, eſpecially a man of ſorrow, cares not for the light of the Sun, he draws the curtain, and will make all dark, till the day-Star ariſeth in his heart and gives him light. The things that are moſt ſweet and contentful to nature, have no ſweetneſs, give no content, or are out of date, to a man diſconſolate, till God ſaith unto him, be of good chear, be comforted. Neareſt natural Relations, Wife, Children, Friends, are dead to a diſconſolate Soul; greateſt Worldly poſſeſſions, Honours and Riches, Houſes and Lands, Thouſands of Gold and Silver, are ſavourleſs to a diſtreſſed Soul, he goes mourning out of all theſe things, or mourns in the midſt of them. The Scripture ſaith, (Prov. 11. 4.) Riches profits not in the day of wrath, but righteouſneſs delivereth from death. Riches are no advantage, no ſhelter at all to wicked men, when the wrath of God breaks out upon them, and they are no better then poverty to a godly man, when the favour of God is hidden from him. We cannot comfort any man in an evil day, by telling him of his bags of Gold and Silver, of his Lands and Houſes, he goes mourning when ſuch comforters have done and ſpoken their beſt.

Secondly, Theſe words (as we tranſlate) I went mourning without the Sun, may ſignifie no more but this; I was in ſuch a mourning condition as had no comfort at all in it. Some are in mourning, and yet have ſome Sun-beams when they mourn, that is, they have ſome comfort, ſome joy in their ſorrows, ſome light ariſeth to them in their darkneſs; but ſaith Job, I went mourning without the Sun, I had nothing to comfort me; no light, no refreſhing rayes to keep up my Spirit, I went mourning, and no Sun to comfort me. The ſorrow of ſome men hath nothing but ſorrow with it. As there may be an eſtate, ſo comfortable, that it hath nothing but comfort, or 'tis a comfortable eſtate quite through. (Prov. 10. 22.) The bleſſing of the Lord maketh rich, and he addeth no ſorrow with it. Many make themſelves rich in ſuch a way, as addeth much ſorrow to their riches, yea (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſuch rich men, 1 Tim. 6. 10.) They pierce themſelves through with many ſorrows. Ill gotten riches in ſtead of making their owners hearts merry, make their Conſciences ake, and give them many a ſtitch in their ſides: But when the bleſſing of God upon honeſt endeavours makes a man rich, he eats the labour of his hands with joy, and knows not what ſorrow (in that point) meaneth; his eſtate is comfortable, and ſo is his life; ſuch a man hath pure comfort. Now (I ſay) as there may be a condition ſo comfortable, that it hath no ſorrow with it; ſo there may be a condition ſo ſorrowful, that it hath no joy with it, ſo dark that it hath no Sun with it. Many poor Souls go mourning without the Sun, and know not for a long time what comfort meaneth. Chriſt the Sun of righteouſneſs can ſhine upon us, and give us light in our greateſt outward darkneſs; but oftentimes he doth not, and then ſuch a Soul cryes out, I go mourning without the Sun; I cannot find Chriſt, I have no communion with, no communications of light or love from Chriſt, that's a ſad condition indeed. And ſuch was theirs who are ſpoken of (Iſa. 50. 10.) who though they feared the Lord, and obeyed the voyce of his Servant, yet walked in darkneſs, and ſaw no light.

Ater alijs; ſole dicitur de eo qui ater eſt mœrore non à ſole; vult dicere quem ſol non decoloraverit, ſed res aſperæ pullatum incedere fecerint. Druſ.

Thirdly, I went mourning without the Sun, may be expounded thus; I was ſcorched black, but it was not with the Sun. As if he had ſaid, My blackneſs, or mourning hue was not from the heat of the Sun. That did not diſcolour me, I was not offended at all by that, nor much by any outward cauſe; my blackneſs was cauſed by inward ſorrow. Bodily blackneſs is uſually from the Sun, but many (in Job's caſe) are black without the Sun. As the Scripture ſpeaks alſo both in another caſe and in that; They are drunken, but not with wine, (Iſa. 29. 9.) that is, they are drunk with ſin, while they drink iniquity like water, and take their full cups of it. Some are drunken with pride and ſelf-confidence, others are drunken with grief and trouble, as the ſame Prophet hath it, (Chap. 51. 21.) Hear now this thou afflicted and drunken, but not with wine; with what then? With affliction So we may anſwer from that 17. verſe, of that Chapter; Awake, awake, ſtand up O Jeruſalem, which haſt drunken at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury; thou haſt drunken the dregs of the cup of trembling, and wrung them out. Now as theſe were drunken and not with wine, ſo Job went in black or mourning, but not with the Sun; he was not Sun-burnt, but Sorrow-burnt. As that godly ſorrow, which works repentance unto ſalvation not to be repented of, is followed many bleſſed effects upon the Soul which are exactly enumerated by the Apoſtle, (2 Cor. 7. 11.) and as the ſorrow of the World (that is, ſorrow either meerly about worldly matters, or in a worldly manner) is followed with that dreadful black effect, Death, as the ſame Apoſtle ſaith at the 10. verſe of that Chapter; The ſorrow of the World worketh death. So that ſorrow which a godly man often meets with both in and from the World, may be followed with very grievous and viſible effects upon him. The Church before ſpoken of, (Cant. 1. 5.) having ſaid, I am like the Tents of Kedar, that is, (as hath been expounded) I am black, preſently (verſ. 6.) tells us the cauſe of her blackneſs; Look not upon me (that is either with a deſpiſing or deſpairing eye) becauſe I am black, becauſe the Sun hath looked upon me. What Sun? The Sun of perſecution and trouble from the malicious World hath looked upon me. Perſecution ſprings not out of the duſt, but is darted from above (as the providence of God permits) like the beams of the Sun. The Church was black with the fiery beams of that Sun. The viſage of the Church in her Captivity and Famine was blacker then a coal, or (as we put in the Margin) darker then blackneſs; and the Prophet either conſidering that or ſome other grievous affliction of the Church, ſaith of himſelf, (Jer. 8. 21.) For the hurt of the daughter of my people, am I hurt, I am black: Aſtoniſhment hath taken hold on me. Job was in a Famine, comparatively to his former plenty, and he was in a real Famine and deep Conſumption of all his former comforts; he had a Sun of perſecution looking upon him alſo, he was perſecuted both by the Devil and by evil men, yea his good friends (though not intentionally) had a hand in it too. And as he had all theſe outward troubles, which grieved him not a little; ſo he had inward trouble, which grieved him much more, and pained him at the very heart; he endured both the hidings of Gods face or favour from him, and the appearings of his angry frowns; the angry appearances of God, or the arrows of his appearing anger were ſhot into his Spirit. And O how black did theſe hot impreſſions make him! He might ſay with truth enough, according to the tendency of this interpretation, I went mourning, or black, without the Sun. I had ſo many extraordinary Suns caſting their ſcorching beams upon me both viſibly and inviſibly, that I need not aſcribe the cauſe of my pitiful blackneſs to the ordinary Sun.

There is yet another reading of thoſe words, which I ſhall but touch and paſs away.

The Greek and vulgar Latine tranſlations, ſay not as we, I went mourning without the Sun, but I went mourning without fury or anger; a word in the Hebrew of near ſound to that which ſignifies the Sun, ſignifies alſo anger or fury. And as to the matter it ſelf, we know blackneſs proceeds from heat, Negroes or Blackmores are born in hot climates; and as blackneſs proceeds from heat, ſo heat cauſeth choler or anger. This or that before mentioned might be the ground of that diverſity in the tranſlation, which though I approve not, yet the ſence is good, and we may make a profitable uſe of it; Job and ſuch as he, the truly godly, go mourning without fury, or without wrath. A godly man doth not rage when God afflicts him, he is not fill'd with anger becauſe full of ſorrow, he is not like a wild Bull when God puts him into his net, but abides patiently and quietly under the hand of God, he entertains his afflictions kindly, as the Lord ſaid his people ſhould or ought, (Lev. 26. 41.) If then their uncircumciſed heart be humbled, and they then accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity, then will I remember my Covenant with Jacob. The Lord looks we ſhould accept our Chaſtiſement, not except againſt it, much leſs be in a fume or rage, in a ſtorm of paſſion, or in a fret, when his hand is heavieſt on us. Nothing is more unſeemly then when we are afflicted to be diſcontented. Man naturally cannot bear blows, but lifts up his thoughts furiouſly againſt him that ſmites him; but know, 'tis dangerous to mingle anger with our ſorrow, or to be troubled in our ſelves when God is pleaſed to ſend us trouble. This is a good ſence, but I do not inſiſt upon it, the other reading being more clear to the Text. I went mourning without the Sun,

Obſerva Græcos & vulgatum חמה legiſſe pro חמה iram ſeu furorem pro ſole. Nigri eſſe ſolent bilioſi & qui irati ſunt. Merc

I ſtood up and cryed in the Congregation.

Job's troubles put him into various poſtures, of which he could give no good account. He could neither ſit nor lie nor ſtand in quiet. When he ſtood up, ſuddain fits and pangs came upon him. He ſtood up and cryed. The word Cry hath been opened before more then once. Here Job's crying implyes two things.

Firſt, The diſtreſs of his Spirit, and the extream ſorrow of his heart. A man in diſtreſs cryes out for one of theſe three reaſons, either, firſt, becauſe he is afraid, or ſecondly, becauſe he is pained, or thirdly, becauſe he would be helped and comforted. Job cryed, and he cryed vehemently, upon the latter two, if not upon all theſe three reaſons.

Hence Note, To cry out in pain, is not inconſiſtent with patience.

Job was a man of patience, yet he cryed out; as he cryed out before in prayer, ſo here for pain, and ſuccour in his pain. The patience of Jeſus Chriſt had a perfect work (as the Apoſtle (James 1. 4.) adviſeth and exhorteth ours ſhould) yet when he was in the extremity of his ſufferings, he cryed out; Even He ſaith the Scripture, (Heb. 5. 7.) in the dayes of his fleſh offered up prayers and ſupplications, with ſtrong cryes and tears, unto him that was able to ſave him from death, and was heard in that he feared. The Evangeliſt Matthew tells us, he doubled his cry, (Chap. 26. 46.) About the ninth hour Jeſus cryed with a loud voice, ſaying, Eli, Eli, Lamaſabachthani, that is to ſay, my God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? And at the 50th verſe; Jeſus when he had cryed again with a loud voice yielded up the Ghoſt. Here was cry upon cry, when Jeſus Chriſt had cryed, he cryed again and gave up the ghoſt; Then he gave his bittereſt cry, his bearing groan, when like a woman in Travail to bring forth that bleſſed Birth life for us, he gave up his own. It is not unbecoming a man of ſtrongeſt courage, yea of ſtrongeſt faith to cry out in great extremities; Chriſt did it who had the ſtrongeſt courage and the fullneſs of grace. To cry out murmuringly, is not only uncomely but ſinful, but to cry out humbly and ſenſibly diſhonors no man. A good man in great pain ſaid, I groan, but I do not grumble. Nature at beſt even when cloathed with Grace, being pincht and pained will bemoan it ſelf. Job ſtood up and cryed, and that not in ſecret, but as it followeth, Excitat vocis contentio viris, ut malum fortius feratur minuſq; ſentiatur. Merl.

In the Congregation.] It may be queſtioned what Congregation did he cry in? May we not ſuppoſe Job a priſoner in his houſe ſhut up in his Chamber by ſickneſs? How then did he cry in the Congregation?

I anſwer, though Job went not to the Congregation, yet 'tis probable that a Congregation came to him; 'Tis ſure, many came to him, ſome to counſel him, and ſome to ſee him, ſome to comfort him and ſome to wonder at him; for he was a ſpectacle to the world, to Angels, and to men. Now (ſaith Job) in the very Congregation, when there was a great company, a throng of viſitants round about me, I cryed; his ſorrow was ſo great that he could not bite it in, nor conceal it, no not from the Congregation; extremity of pain will vent it ſelf, 'twill out, let who will be preſent, though a whole Congregation be preſent. Thus the good man ſets forth his ſorrow in all the circumſtances of it.

Tanta eſt hæc mea calamitas ut nulla me frequentia hominum cohibeant quo minus palam inconditos iſtos clamores edam. Bez.

I ſhall paſs from this verſe when I have only minded the Reader that ſome expound it in connexion with the 25. where Job profeſſeth his compaſſionate feeling of the miſeries, ſorrows and ſufferings of others: Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? Was not my Soul grieved for the poor? As if he had ſaid, I had ſo great a ſence and fellow-feeling of other mens afflictions, that I went mourning without the Sun; nothing could comfort me while my friends were ſorrowful: I thought the Sun did not ſhine upon me while they were in darkneſs, and not only ſo, but I could not contain or content my ſelf, till I had preſented their caſe to the whole Congregation, that I might move others to pity them and pray for them as well as my ſelf. That's a truth, but I rather keep to the former rendring, and take the words as importing the publication of his own ſorrows, not of the ſorrows of others in the Congregation. And if we would know what the ſpecial form of his cry in the Congregation was; ſome conceive it drawn up and expreſſed in the next verſe.

Verſ, 29. I am a Brother to Dragons and a companion to Owls.

As if Job had thus bemoaned himſelf before all Beholders; Alas, alas, I am no more (I ſee) reckon'd or eſteemed among men as a man; nor do I find my ſelf fit for the ſociety of men, but of Beaſts and Birds rather, and thoſe the moſt unmanly among Beaſts and Birds, Dragons and Owls, whoſe faſhion or cuſtom of life ſeems more agreeable to my preſent temper and condition, then that of a man, I am a Brother to Dragons, &c.

Dragons are ſorted among the Beaſts of the Earth, Owls among the Fowls of the Air. But how was Job a Brother to the one, or a companion to the other? I anſwer, when Job ſaith, I am a Brother to Dragons, it notes only thus much, I am much at leaſt ſomewhat like them, or I am reduced to ſuch a condition providentially as they are in naturally. I, by my affliction am rendred ſuch as they are by their conſtitution. The word brother is often uſed in Scripture, to note likeneſs, and no more. Thus Simeon and Levi are called brethren by their old dying father Jacob, (Gen, 49. 5.) We cannot imagine that he intended only to tell us that they were brethren in nature, for ſo all his twelve Sons were as well as they two; but when he ſaid, Simeon and Levi are brethren, his meaning was this, they are men of a like Spirit, they are both fierce and bloody, at leaſt they were ſo in one remarkable action, Inſtruments of cruelty were in their habitations, in their anger they ſlew a man, &c. Yea it is conceived that Simeon and Levi were brethren in a worſer murder (though a moſt bleſſed one in the effects and fruits of it) then that of the Shechemites; for as it is undeniable that the Prieſts (who were of the Tribe of Levi) were the moſt cruel enemies that Chriſt had, and ſought his death with greateſt earneſtneſs; ſo (as our late learned Annotators upon the Bible have obſerved) ſome ſay, Judas who betrayed him, was of the tribe of Simeon. Thus theſe two tribes were Brethren in bloodſhed as much as in blood. Solomon alſo gives us this notion of a Brother, (Prov. 18. 1.) He alſo that is ſlothfull in his work, is brother to him that is a great waſter; that is, he is like him, he is ſuch an other, a ſlothful man is as bad as a waſtful man; He that folds up his arms in idleneſs, add he that opens his hand in waſtfulneſs, reſemble each other as to their iſſue, though they are very different in their way; for as one of them gets nothing, ſo the other ſpends all he gets or hath, and it is all a caſe, whether a man gets nothing, or ſpends all, for both come to nought. And as one deſcants both wittily and truly upon them, they like Brethren bear the ſame coat, the ragged coat of Beggery, only with this difference; the waſter runs into Beggery, but the ſluggard or he that is ſlothful ſits ſtill, till Beggery comes upon him. Now in the ſame ſence, that the ſloathful man is brother to the waſter, Job was a brother to Dragons; he looked upon himſelf under that preſent diſpenſation, as very like them. I am a brother to Dragons.

The word which we render Dragon, ſignifieth alſo a Whale, ſo we render it (Chap. 7. 12.) Am I a Sea; or a Whale? So that, this one word hath two great monſters in the belly of it; Firſt, the Whale, who is a water-monſter as to bigneſs. Secondly, The Dragon, who is a Land-monſter as to dreadfulneſs. Here we take the word for the Land-monſter, I am a brother to Dragons, Vox תנים nunc terreſtri nunc pro marina bellua uſurpatur.

And a companion to Owls.] The ſence is one in both; ſome render, a companion to Oſtriches; the Text ſtrictly is to the daughter of the Oſtrich, or of the Owl. And hence ſome underſtand it of young Owls, which make a great noiſe, when the old ones are gone from them; but it may as well be underſtood of Owls in general by a common Hebraiſm, ſo the Daughter of the Oſtrich or Owl, is the Oſtrich or the Owl her ſelf. Which manner of ſpeaking was opened and exemplified by many Scripture-inſtances at the 8. verſe of this Chapter.

And though in this verſe, the word is rendred by ſome, Owl, by others, Oſtrich; yet we ſhould rather keep to our tranſlation, becauſe the Oſtrich is expreſſed by a diſtinct word at Chap. 39. verſ. 16. of this Book. And the Etymological ſence of the word here uſe is applicable to the Owl rather then to the Oſtrich. For it ſignifieth to make a horrid ſcrieching noiſe; and to anſwer one another in it like an Eccho, as Owls uſe to do.

Laſtly, When Job ſaith, I am a brother to Dragons, and a companion to Owls, we may underſtand it in one of theſe two ſences.

Dicta eſt ulula יענה à lugubri cantu nam ענה ſignificat interdum vocem lugubrem edere ut videre eſt. Iſa. 13. 22. Piſcat.

Firſt, Thus; I ſit alone as they do, Dragons are melancholy Creatures, they love ſolitary places and Deſarts, and darkeſt retirements. Hence that of the Church (Pſ. 41. 19.) Though thou haſt ſore broken us in the place of Dragons, is rendred by the Septuagint, In a place un-inhabited or unfit to be inhabited. Dragons dwell where none dwell; as they are dangerous Neighbours, all men avoid them, and as they delight not in Neighbour-hood, ſo they avoid all men. Nor are Owls more ſociable the Dragons; they (as we know) ſit all day alone, and come abroad only in the night, when all other Birds are gone to Rooſt, or are at reſt. And if at any time they appear in the day, all the

the Birds in the Air make a riot againſt them, and either beat or hoot them home again. We read in ſeveral Scriptures, that as ſoon as the Lord threatens to make any City deſolate and without inhabitant, preſently Dragons and Owls are named for the inhabitants of it. (Iſa. 13. 19.) Babylon the glory of Kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees excellency, ſhall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrha, it ſhall never be inhabited, that is, by men; by whom then? Even by doleful Creatures, Owls and Dragons, (verſ. 21, 22.) And in like caſe the ſame Prophet ſaith, (Chap. 34. 13.) It ſhall be a habitation of Dragons, and a court for Owls. They ſhall King it and Lord it there. So that when Job ſaith, I am a brother to Dragons, and a companion to Owls, his meaning is, I love ſolitarineſs, and delight to be alone; he indeed ſaid before, I ſtood up, and cryed in the Congregation, many came about him, but they, it ſeems, were rather a trouble to him, yea a kind of terror to him by their unkindneſs. The company that came to him uſed him little better then ordinary Birds do the Owl, ſome making a wonderment at his miſery, and others (as he complained about the beginning of this Chapter) hooting at him in deriſion. Thus he was a companion to Owls. And beſides, 'tis the nature of ſorrow to deſire ſolitarineſs: Look away from me, (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 22. 4.) I will weep bitterly, labour not to comfort me, &c. Thus ſaith Job, I am a brother to Dragons, &c. I would be alone, (as Dragons and Owls covet to be) in my ſorrows, rather then have the company of ſuch comforters. The Prophet Jeremiah maketh a like wiſh (upon the ſence of the trouble which he had among his people, Chap. 9. 2.) O that I had in the Wilderneſs a lodging of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people and go from them, for they be all Adulterers, and an aſſembly of treacherous men. He that deſireth a Wilderneſs life, deſireth a retired ſolitary life, and declares himſelf a brother to Dragons, and a companion to Owls.

Secondly, When Job ſaith, I am a brother to Dragons, and a companion to Owls, his meaning may be this, I do as they; what's that? Dragons make a mournful cry, a terrible noiſe. Natural Hiſtories ſpeak much of the dreadful cryes of the Dragon, eſpecially when he is in Battel with the Elephant; and as all Naturaliſts agree, that the Dragon makes a fearful noiſe and howling, ſo the Scriptures conſents with them, (Mich. 1. 8.) Therefore I will wail and howl, I will go ſtript and naked, I will make a wailing like the Dragons, and mourning like the Owls. When the Prophet would expreſs his deepeſt ſorrowful ſence of the miſeries, which he foreſaw falling upon Samaria and Jeruſalem for their Idolatry, he knew not how to parallel it, but by that of Dragons and Owls, I will make a wailing like the Dragons, &c. For her wound is uncurable; or, ſhe is grievouſly ſick of her wounds, as we put in the Margin. We find David complaining in language near this, (Pſal. 102. 6, 7.) I am like a Pelican of the Wilderneſs, I am like an Owl of the Deſart; I watch and am as a Sparrow alone upon the Houſe-top. And Hezekiahs thankſgiving Song ſets forth the ſorrows of his ſickneſs in ſuch like ſtrains, (Iſa. 38. 14.) Like a Crane or a Swallow, ſo did I chatter, I did mourn like as a Dove, mine eyes fail with looking upward; O Lord, I am oppreſſed, undertake for me. The doleful ditties and lamenting tunes of thoſe Birds and Fowls, the Pelican, the Sparrow, the Crane, the Swallow, and the Dove, bear a correſpondence with this proteſtation of Job, I am a brother to Dragons, and a companion to Owls. They are ſolitary, ſo am I, they chatter and cry and mourn out their ſorrows, ſo do I. The worſt of their conditions and lamentations is not worſe then mine; I am their brother and companion in affliction.

Frater draconum ob miſerabilem & lamentabilem planctum, vociferatione funeſta imitatus ſu. Jun.

Laſtly, Some expound the Dragons and the Owls here ſpoken of by Job metaphorically, for thoſe terrible cruel and uncouth ones that were about him; whoſe carriage was ſo inſolent and inhumane, ſo void of compaſſion, yea of diſcretion towards him, that as David once ſaid, My Soul is as among Lions, ſo Job might ſay, mine is among Owls and Dragons, that is, among men either fierce and Dragoniſh, or among men inconſiderate and Owliſh. In the 19. Chapter Job brings ſuch a charge againſt his whole family or Domeſtick relations (v. 15. &c.) They that dwell in mine Houſe, and my maidens count me for a ſtranger. I am an Alien in their ſight, I called my Servant and he gave me no anſwer; my breath is ſtrange to my Wife, though I intreated for the Childrens ſake of mine own body, yea young Children deſpiſed me, all my inward friends abhorred me. They from whom he might expect the readieſt offices of love and duty, ſeemed to have put off not only their particular and ſpecial bonds of duty, but even common modeſty, and civility, acting rather the part of Beaſts then of men, of Dragons and Owls rather then of Wife, Friends or Servants, are there not many even at this day, after ſo long a ſhining forth of Goſpel light and love, who ſhew no more pity or charity, give no more comfort or ſuccour to their brethren in the fleſh, yea to their brethren (by profeſſion) in the faith, then a Dragon or an Owl will do? And may not they who have ſuch friends and kindred ſay, (without breach of charity) we are brethren to Dragons and companions to Owls? This interpretation carrieth a fair Tropological or Moral inſtruction in it; but the former being textual and proper, I inſiſt rather upon that. I am a brother to Dragons, and a companion to Owls.

Hence Note, Firſt, They that are higheſt in Grace and Saintſhip, may yet act ſometimes, not only below their Grace and Saintſhip, but even below Reaſon and Manhood.

Job was a holy as man as lived; yet he was ſometimes in his diſtreſs more like a Dragon or an Owl then a holy man. He continued always in the ſame grace, yet his grace did not always continue the ſame. He had much, very much cauſe of grief, yet he grieved too much when he had a wailing like the Dragons and a mourning like the Owls. A godly man may act below himſelf, even like a beaſt two ways. Firſt, in ſinning, as David confeſſed, (Pſal. 73. 21, 22.) *So fooliſh was I and ignorant, I was as a Beaſt before thee; Neverthel*eſ*s, I am continually with thee, thou haſt holden me be my right hand.* When David envied the proſperity of the wicked, he cenſured it as a beaſt-like folly and ignorance, and judged himſelf not only unlike a holy man, but unlike a man that's rational. While good men give any ſcope to a luſt, and do ſinfully, they play the Beaſts, and behave themſelves more like Dragons or Owls then true believers. Secondly, as good men are ſometimes like Beaſts in ſinning, ſo alſo in ſorrowing. The Apoſtle would not have believers ſorrow (for the dead) as others (that is as Heathens) which have no hope, much more would he not have them ſorrow either upon that or any other account like Brutes, which have no underſtanding, no knowledg; yet who knows how far he may be tranſported by the weight of an affliction, and the preſſure of grief? Saints do not always mourn like Saints, they ſometimes mourn like Dragons or like Owls.

Secondly, Note, We may be called brethren and companions of thoſe whoſe manners and actions we imitate, what though we are not at all akin to them, or in company with them? yet we are their companions and brethren when we do or ſuffer like them. We are like to every thing which we imitate, whether it be good or bad.

As Chriſt told ſome of the Jews, the Devil was their father becauſe they walked in his ways, and reſembled him in their works; ſo we may call any one a mans Brother, whoſe works he reſembleth. Solomon gives us this in a full aſſertion, (Prov. 13. 20.) He that walketh with wiſe men ſhall be wiſe; but a companion of fools ſhall be deſtroy'd. To walk with them is not to take a turn with them in the fields, or barely to go in company with them when and whither they go; but to walk with the wiſe, is to follow their example, and to tread the ſame paths of wiſdom which they tread. They who thus walk with wiſe men, attain to wiſdom, and prove wiſe men themſelves. And when Solomon adds, A companion of fools ſhall be deſtroy'd; his meaning is not, that every one that is in the company of a fool ſhall be deſtroyed, but he that conforms to them and take up their fooliſh faſhions; he that is or doth like a fool, is properly a fools companion, and only he. In which ſence Solomon ſpeaks again, (Prov. 28. 7.) Whoſo keepeth the Law is a wiſe Son, but he that is a companion of riotous men (that is, he that doth like riotous men) ſhameth his Father; he that doth like a Dragon, is Brother to a Dragon, and he that doth like an Owl, is a companion of Owls. I may add, He that doth like a Dog, or a Swine, or a Fox, is their Brother and companion. I am (cryed Job) a Brother of Dragons, and a companion to Owls. And he gives us ſome further account why he was ſo in the words which follow.

Verſ. 30. My ſkin is black upon me, and my bones are burnt with heat.

The ſkin is the outward or upper Garment of Nature; the beauty and bravery of Nature appears in the ſkin. What was become of Job's beauty and bravery we may eaſily judg, when he made this complaint,

My ſkin is black.] He had ſaid a little before, I went mourning or black without the Sun, now ſaith he, my ſkin is black. But what made Job's ſkin black? Or what means he by the blackneſs of his ſkin? He was black without the Sun, his ſkin was not tand (as we ſay) nor burnt black with the outward heat of the air, but with the grief of his heart, his ſorrows boyled up, and changed the colour of his ſkin.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Great afflictions and ſorrows, quickly fade the beauty of the body, and ſpoil the faireſt face.

Strong (eſpecially if laſting) diſeaſes take off beauty, or give blackneſs inſtead of beauty. (Pſal. 39. 11.) When thou with rebukes doſt correct man for iniquity, thou makeſt his beauty to conſume away like a moth, ſurely every man is vanity, Selah. The ſkin cannot hold its own againſt the ill effects of ſickneſs, much leſs when the rebukes of God upon the Soul for iniquity are mingled with the ſickneſs of the body. Then look after ſpiritual beauty, the beauty of the Soul, that grows fairer by affliction, that never fades by ſickneſs; nothing but the ſin of man and the anger of God can make that fade. When the fleſhly ſkin waxeth black with ſorrow, that retains its beauty and its brightneſs. The beauty of grace holds againſt the coldeſt blaſts, and the moſt burning heats. Job's ſkin was black, his Spirit was not. When Stephen the Protomartyr was under tryal for his life, and near ſtoning to death, All that ſate in the Council looking ſtedfaſtly on him, ſaw his face as if it had been the face of an Angel, (Acts 6. 15.) Stephens ſkin waxed fairer as the fury of his perſecuters waxed hotter; God was pleaſed to print (as it were) a viſible Not Guilty upon his face, while his adverſaries were accuſing him of blaſphemy as black as a coal. And though the ſkins and faces of many of the Saints have been perſecuted and afflicted into blackneſs, yet their Souls and Conſciences never could, but under the darkeſt appearances or covers of trouble and ſorrow they have ſtill retained a real comlineſs; and under the blackeſt ſkin, a beautiful Soul. While David ſaid (Pſal. 119. 83.) I am become like a bottle in the ſmoak; (he ſaid alſo) Yet do not I forget thy Statutes. David through the force of his afflictions was like a bottle in the ſmoak, which if of leather ſhrinks and ſhrivels up, and if of more ſolid materials, yet loſeth its beauty and is quickly ſooted black. But when David was as a bottle in the ſmoak, yet the holy frame of his heart did not ſhrink nor alter; for he adds, Yet do not I forget thy precepts; though my beauty is gone, yet my grace is not; I am like a bottle in the ſmoak, (that's true) but I do not forget thy Statutes, that's as true. If outward beauty fail, where there is no inward beauty, if the ſkin be black, and the Conſcience black too, how great, how miſerably uncomly is that blackneſs? The Prophet lamenting the famine of the Jews, ſaith (Lam. 4. 8.) Their viſage is blacker then a coal, they are not known in the ſtreets, their ſkin cleaveth to their bones, it is withered, it is become like a ſtick. And he preſents them making a like lamentation (Chap. 5. 10.) Our ſkin was black like an Oven, becauſe of the terrible famine. Thus ſickneſs, famine, any kind of deep affliction makes ſad impreſſions upon the ſkin, the beauty of that is ſoon blown off, and to be ſure old age will ſhrivel it up and make it look like a bottle in the ſmoak. Therefore, I ſay again, look to the beauty of the Soul which fadeth not, which the tears of ſorrow cannot ſtain nor death it ſelf deface, (1 Pet. 1. 7.) The tryal of our faith (or our tryed faith) being much more precious then of Gold that periſheth, though it be tryed with fire, will be found unto praiſe, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt. Faith comes purified, not corrupted, out of the fire; the body comes out black, but grace comes out white. Job was aſſured of this (Ch. 23. 10.) When he hath tryed me, I ſhall come forth as Gold. Yet here he ſaith, My ſkin is black,

And my bones are burnt with heat.

Theſe words are a further and a fuller deſcription of Job's calamity. My bones (ſaith he) are burnt, that is, my affliction doth not only afflict my ſkin, or the outſide of my body, but my very bones; it dries up the marrow and moiſture there. I feel a fire within me, drinking up my ſpirits, and ready to burn the very Beams and Rafters of this Houſe of Clay, my bones. As there is a fire which viſibly conſumes our Houſes (we have ſeen many ſuch ſad ſpectacles) ſo there are fires which inviſibly conſume our bodies and our bones. God can as quickly kindle a fire which ſhall conſume this Houſe of the Body which himſelf hath built, as thoſe Houſes which we have built. Some afflictions are as a fire, which burns inward to the bones.

Hence Obſerve, Great ſorrow waſts and ſpends not only the beauty, but the ſtrength of man.

It reacheth to the bones. David ſpake more then once of this effect of his ſorrows, eſpecially of his ſin-ſorrows, or ſorrows occaſion'd by his ſin. (Pſal. 32. 3.) When I kept ſilence (not confeſſing my ſin) my bones waxed old, that is, I had ſuch trouble in my Soul, as even haſtned me into old age, or made the ſymptoms or tokens of it to appear upon me before their time. David's bones waxed old, He complains alſo as Job that his bones was burnt, (Pſal. 102. 3.) My days are conſumed like ſmoak, my bones are burnt as an hearth, my heart is ſmitten and withered like graſs, ſo that I forget to eat my bread; by reaſon of the voyce of my groaning my bones cleave to my ſkin. How many metaphors and hyperboles, or exceſſes of ſpeech hath David brought together in this one context, to ſhew how exceſſively his heart was wounded with ſorrow for the affliction of Sion; let ſorrow come from what cauſe it will, if once it be great and ſincere, it will leave marks enough to tell every man where it is. Solomon ſaith, (Prov. 15. 13.) A merry heart maketh a chearful countenance, but by ſorrow of the heart, the Spirit is broken. And again, more emphatically and juſt in Job's phraſe (Chap. 17. 22.) A merry heart doth good like a medicine, but a broken Spirit dryeth the bones. By a merry heart in both Texts Solomon intends the ſame thing, but he intends neither of them of carnal mirth. The merry heart there meant, is a heart merry upon holy grounds, eſpecially upon a ſight, by faith, of our reconciliation to God through Chriſt, and of our acceptance in him; this will make the heart merry to purpoſe, and ſuch a merry heart, or (as ſome render) good Conſcience is like a medicine indeed, it refreſheth the whole body. Now as ſuch a merry heart is a medicine, ſo there is a ſorrowful heart, which is as a diſeaſe or a conſumption to the whole body; it waſts and withers the fleſh, it ſcorcheth and ſpoileth the complection, it dries the bones, and breaks the Spirit. Such were Job's ſorrows, My bones are burnt. And when he felt ſuch fires of ſorrow kindled in him by his great affliction, it was time for him to ſilence his Organ and his Harp, So he did.

Verſ. 31. My Harp is turned into mourning, and my Organ into the voyce of them that weep.

Job having made this ſad narrative of his ſorrows, what could be expected but this ſad concluſion? Time was when Job had his muſick; he was wont (it ſeems) to uſe his Harp and Organ, both to excite and expreſs his joy, but he either totally diſuſed them, or uſed them only to play ſad and doleful tunes, to feed and ſtrengthen ſorrow.

Lætus meus et glorioſus ſtatus meus triſti commutatus eſt. Jun.

My Harp is turned into mourning; or according to the letter of the Hebrew, my Harp is for mourning,

As if Job had ſaid, my Harp is now for no other ſervice but for ſorrow, 'tis ſet or wound up to no tune or leſſon but lachrymæ or lamentation. I mind nothing but my troubles, and they always mind me. The Harp which is an

Inſtrument of mirth, may by a Metonymy of the adjunct be put for mirth it ſelf; My Harp, that is, my mirth is turned into mourning,

And my Organ into the voyce of them that weep.

Mr. Broughton renders; And pleaſant ſounds be weepers voyce. We had the Organ at Chap. 21. verſ. 11,12. They ſend out their little ones like a flock, and their Children dance, they take the Timbrel and Harp, and rejoyce at the ſound of the Organ. The word rendred Organ, comes from a root that ſignifies to love, and to love with a kind of exceſs, either becauſe that Inſtrument of Muſick is much loved, or becauſe it ſtirs up affection, and is an incentive of love.

The general ſence of the whole verſe is but this; my comforting ſounds are changed into a mourning ſound; all my joys are turned into ſorrows, which he expreſſeth by laying aſide his Harp and Organ, which before were a help to his joy, and heightned his delights.

Hence Note, Firſt, Muſick is an ancient Art.

Job had his muſical Inſtruments: We find their invention mentioned in the very firſt Ages of the World, (Gen. 4. 21.) And his brothers name was Jubal, he was the Father of all ſuch as handle the Harp and Organ. The two Inſtruments ſpoken of by Job, were invented by Jubal, he was the Father (the firſt Inventer of any Art is called the Father of all thoſe (though none of his Children) that profeſs it after him, in which ſence Jubal was the father) of all ſuch as handle (that is, play skilfully upon) the Harp and Organ.

Secondly, Note, As muſick was a very ancient, ſo a lawful Art or invention.

It is no ſin to have or uſe a Harp or an Organ. Godlineſs doth not deprive us of outward comforts. Job a man that feared God had his muſick. Muſick is not ſinful, unleſs

Firſt, In reſpect of the muchneſs or continuance of it at any time. When men are all for mirth and muſick; we muſt not make muſick our work, but our recreation, and uſe it only as ſauce not as diet.

Secondly, In reſpect of the ſpecial ſtate of the time; as we muſt not uſe it much at any time, ſo not at all, at ſometimes. What thoſe times are the Prophet tells us expreſly (*Iſa.*22.10,12.) In that day did the Lord God of Hoſts, call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldneſs, and to girding with ſackcloth; and behold joy and gladneſs, ſlaying Oxen and killing Sheep, eating fleſh, and drinking wine. Theſe two great affections of joy and ſorrow, are both beautiful in their ſeaſons, even ſorrow is comely in its ſeaſon, and joy it ſelf when unſeaſonable, hath not only no beauty, but much danger, becauſe much provocation in it. And therefore as the Prophet ſets a Behold of wonder and aſtoniſhment before the mention of ſuch joy, (v. 13.) Behold joy and gladneſs; as if he had ſaid, what a ſtrange, what an uncouth and uncomely ſight is this, that men ſhould thus either perverſely contradict, or groſly miſtake the directions of providence, that upon the very day wherein that calls to mourning, &c. They ſhould be found rejoycing; now (I ſay) as the Prophet ſets a Behold of wonder before ſuch a joy, ſo he follows it with a dreadful denunciation in the next verſe, (14.) And it was revealed in my ears by the Lord of Hoſts, ſurely this iniquity ſhall not be purged from you, till ye die. That is, it ſhall never be purged or pardoned, and if guilt be not pardon'd, we are in danger of puniſhment every hour. To be doing with Harp and Organ in ſuffering times, may bring Swords and Spears upon us. It is both our duty and our ſecurity, to humble our ſelves, when God humbles us; and to lay away our Muſick as ſoon as ever we ſee the Lord taking it away. The Lord by Moſes ſaid to the Children of Iſrael, Put off thy ornaments, that I may know what to do unto thee, (Exod. 33. 5.) God knows well enough, what to do, and what he will do with us at all times: his counſels and reſolves what to do, depend not upon what we do: Yet when there are appearances of diſpleaſure, as then there were againſt the Children of Iſrael for their Idolatry in making the golden calf, (I will come up into the midſt of thee in a moment and conſume thee; when (I ſay) the diſpleaſure of God appears thus againſt a people) then he ſpeaks as a man unreſolved either for ſparing or for deſtroying, and ſeems willing to be determin'd either for judgment or for mercy, by what he finds in us. And bids us put off our Ornaments, that is, lay down our pride, and lie naked in the duſt, that he may know what to do with us: as if he ſhould ſay, I will ſhew thee mercy, if thou repent; or I will puniſh thee, if thou perſiſt in thy pride and impenitency; though I have decreed what to do with thee, yet thou ſhalt find my dealings with thee ſutable to what thou doeſt. Therefore in a time of paſſed provocation, and of feared affliction, let us as the Apoſtle adviſeth (James. 4. 9.) Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep, let our laughter be turned to mourning, and our joy to heavineſs, let us humble our ſelves in the ſight of the Lord, and he ſhall lift us up. Woe to thoſe who will not be afflicted when God afflicts them, who when God caſts them down, yet hold up their heads in mirth and jollity. The Lord loves to ſee us bear our Croſs, but he cannot endure to ſee us make ſport with it, or make ſlight of it. If God once perceive us driving away our ſorrow with our Harp and Organ, or drowning it in wine, he can quickly turn that wine into water, and drown the ſound of our Harp with mourning, and the pleaſant tunes of our Organ with the voyce of weeping. The Jews found this made good upon them; they would not ſit down and weep over the ſins which they had committed in Jeruſalem; but by the Rivers of Babylon, there they ſate down and wept, (Pſal. 137. 1.) And what did they then with their Harps? They hung them up upon Willows in the midſt thereof; they had little mind to their muſick in that ſorrowful day; yea when the Babylonians who carried them away Captives, required of them a ſong; they anſwered, How ſhall we ſing? And they did not anſwer, How ſhall we ſing a prophane ſong in a ſtrange Land, but how ſhall we ſing the Lords ſong in a ſtrange Land, or, in the Land of a ſtranger? They who will not hang up their Harps and forbear their ſong in their own Land, when their ſins call them to mourning, may ſoon be forced to both by the cry of their miſery in a ſtrange Land, yea though their enemies call them to ſinging.

Again, We may ſuppoſe that Job put away his muſick, his Harp and Organ, not only as being unſeaſonable, but irkſome and troubleſome to him, in that time of his trouble. His Harp and Organ gave a harſh ſound, and grated his ear, when he was in that condition; All muſick is out of tune to an afflicted Soul, 'tis grievous to them that are grieved; outward mirth doth often increaſe rather then abate our ſorrows. The Scripture is full to that point, (Prov. 25. 20.) As he that taketh away a garment in cold weather, and as vineger upon nitre, ſo is he that ſingeth ſongs unto an heavy heart. A garment taken away in cold weather, makes the perſon colder from whom it is taken, and vinegar being cold and moiſt, doth but exaſperate and draw out the ſharpneſs of nitre, which is hot and dry; thus a heavy heart by a kind of Antiperiſtaſis, is made more heavy by a delightful ſong; even as (on the contrary) that hot and fiery vapour which is in a Cloud, is more enraged and breaks out into thunder and lightning, when 'tis compaſſed about with and more cloſely pent in by coldneſs. Though in ſome leſſer caſes ſorrow is moderated, yea and removed by muſick, yet great and ſetled ſorrows are rather exulcerated and vexed by it. And as this is true of common ſorrow cauſed by any outward affliction, ſo it is more true and moſt true of that ſpecial ſorrow and heavineſs of heart, which is cauſed by pricks of Conſcience and the ſence of ſin, or by the hidings of Gods face, and the withdrawings of his favour. How ungrateful and unwelcome is carnal mirth to a wounded Spirit? To a Soul that mourns under the apprehenſions of divine diſpleaſure! Therefore when the Apoſtle James would preſcribe that to Saints which is proper both in ſad and comfortable diſpenſations, he ſaith (Chap. 5. 13.) Is any among you afflicted? let him pray, (that's muſick in the ears of God) Is any man merry? (that is, hath he cauſe to be merry, and is his heart wound up and tuned to it?) let him ſing Pſalms, or (as the Greek hath it, for there 'tis but one word) let him ſing; holy ſongs he means for the matter, and let him ſing in a holy manner, not to pleaſe the fleſh, but to quicken and recreate his Spirit. We ſee by this Apoſtolical direction, that as our eſtate in this World is full of change, ſo we muſt apply our ſelves to a change of Duties. Singing is proper to a proſperous eſtate, ſinging not only to the praiſe of God, but ſinging his praiſe; prayer is our beſt remedy, as God to whom we pray is our beſt refuge, in a day of adverſity and affliction.

Laſtly, Note, God can quickly ſpoil all our muſick and mirth, he can change our pleaſure into pain, our delights into lamentations, our health into ſickneſs, our Harp and Organ into mourning and weeping.

The Prophet gives a large deſcription of ſuch a change ready to fall upon that Land, (Iſa. 24. 7, 8, 9.) The new wine mourneth, the vine languiſheth, all the merry-hearted do ſigh; the mirth of Tabrets ceaſeth, the noiſe of them that rejoyce endeth, the joy of the Harp ceaſeth, they ſhall not drink wine with a ſong, ſtrong drink ſhall be bitter to them that drink it. Wine makes the heart of man glad; therefore to ſhew how much the wine-drinkers ſhall mourn, he ſaith the wine ſhall mourn. We read a like ſad denunciation made by another Prophet in the name of the Lord, (Jer. 7. 34.) Then will I cauſe to ceaſe from the City of Judah, and from the Streets of Jeruſalem, the voyce of mirth, and the voyce of gladneſs, the voyce of the Bridegroom, and the voyce of the Bride, for the Lord ſhall be deſolate. And again, (Jer. 25. 10.) Moreover I will take from them the voyce of mirth, and the voyce of gladneſs; the voyce of the Bridegroom, and the voyce of the Bride, the ſound of the Milſtones, and the light of the Candle. And if Jeruſalem hath felt ſuch changes, ſhall Babylon eſcape? We are aſſured ſhe ſhall not. (Revel. 18. 21, 22, 23.) And a mighty Angel took up a ſtone, like a great mil-ſtone, and caſt it into the Sea, ſaying, thus with violence ſhall that great City Babylon be thrown down, and ſhall be found no more at all. And the voyce of Harpers and Muſicians, and of Pipers and Trumpeters ſhall be heard no more at all in thee, and no Craftſman of whatſoever Craft ſhall be found any more in thee, and the ſound of a mil-ſtone ſhall be heard no more in thee, &c. All this is propheſied of Babylon, when ſhe ſhall ſing her ſong, I ſit a Queen, and am no Widdow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow; that is, all is well, and will be well with me, ſhall be Babylons ſong. But what ſaith God? Reward her even as ſhe hath rewarded thee, double unto her double according to her works; in the Cup which ſhe hath filled, fill to her double. Babylon had Harpers and Trumpeters, to make her lovers merry, but they ſhall be heard no more at all in her. The voyce of mirth may ceaſe in Jeruſalem, ſhe may have a total change of her proſperity; but the voyce of mirth ſhall be heard no more at all in Babylon, her proſperity ſhall have a final change, hers ſhall be a perpetual deſolations.

And foraſmuch as the Lord hath and doth turn mirth into mourning, and joy into ſorrow, let us not reckon upon many good days, much leſs that all our days ſhall be good, that is, days of mirth and muſick, days of peace and joy, Harp and Organ days in this World.

The Apoſtle minds us of a very neceſſary doctrine (1 Cor. 7. 29.) This I ſay Brethren, the time is ſhort; and he gives us a very uſeful inference from it, in the words immediately following; It remaineth, that both they that have wives be as if they had none, and they that weep as though they wept not; and they that rejoyce, as though they rejoyced not; and they that buy as though they poſſeſſed not, and they that uſe this World as not abuſing it, for the faſhion of this World paſſeth away.

Time is ſhort in all the notions of it, Take it firſt for the whole duration of this World, from the firſt day of Creation to the day of the diſſolution of all things, ſo (compared with eternity) time is ſhort, all times put together make but a ſhort time. Secondly, take Time for the whole duration of any one mans life, ſo 'tis ſhorter, ſo ſhort, that 'tis nothing. Thirdly, take time, for the ſpecial ſeaſon either of doing or enjoying good in this life, ſo 'tis ſhorteſt of all.

The ſhortneſs of time in all theſe conſiderations, but eſpecially in the laſt, ſhould keep our hearts in a great deal of moderation towards the beſt and ſweeteſt of our worldly enjoyments. And indeed all theſe Nots in the Apoſtles Text, before alledged, are not negations, but moderations or qualifications of our reſpects to Earthly contentments. We are as apt to over-do, or to do too much in worldly things, as we are to under-do, or to do too little in Heavenly things. Our two great failings are, firſt, that we do but make uſe of thoſe things which we ſhould enjoy; ſecondly, that we enjoy thoſe things which we ſhould only make uſe of. O how few are there who have learnt that holy art of Marriage; To have Wives as if they had none? How few are there who have learnt that holy trade of Merchandize, To buy as if they poſſeſſed not? How few are there who have learnt that holy skill and cunning in Muſick and diſports, To rejoyce as if they rejoyced not? How few have learned that divine wiſdome, which contains all that was ſaid before, To uſe this World as not abuſing it. Now what ſtronger arguments can be uſed to provoke every man to the ſtudy and attainment of all theſe points of ſpiritual learning, then theſe two which the Apoſtle urgeth; prefixing the former of them before all theſe practical leſſons, The time is ſhort; and cloſing them all with the latter, The faſhion of this World paſſeth away. As the World it ſelf ſhall paſs away ſhortly, ſo the moſt beautiful and delightful ſcheems or ſhews of it are paſſing away every moment. And as every man at his beſt eſtate is altogether vanity, (Pſal. 39. 5.) ſo is the beſt worldly eſtate of all men.

In the Twenty-Ninth Chapter of this Book, Job appeared as likely as any man to continue in his proſperity, and now you ſee through what a hard Chapter of his adverſity I have travailed; the way of this thirtieh Chapter is ſet with Briers and Thorns, 'tis full of Gall and Wormwood: And as we have travailed through it, we have met with rents and ſcratches, with ſighs and groans, with pains and troubles. Job hath now finiſht the diſcovery of his eſtate on both ſides, his former proſperous, and his then preſent afflicted eſtate, and being got over both, he proceeds to a moſt paſſionate profeſſion of his integrity; though his Harp was turned to mourning, and his Organ into the voyce of them that weep; yet he ſtill held faſt his integrity, yea and was reſolved to hold it out. Though God had caſt him into the mire of affliction, and his friends looking upon his affliction, did caſt him for a wicked man who had wallowed in the mire of ſin; yet he again and once for all, juſtifies himſelf againſt the accuſations and ſuſpicions of men.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXI. Verſ. 1.

I made a Covenant with mine eyes, why then ſhould I think upon a maid?

IN this Chapter Job makes a large narrative about his own integrity, and exact walkings, according to the rule of the word, in duty both to God and man. Yea, he doth not only ſay it, but ſwear it, binding the heavieſt curſes upon himſelf by dreadful imprecations of divine vengeance, if it were not ſo?

And this he did, not as the Phariſee (Luke 18.) proudly to proclaim his own goodneſs, but to wipe off the dirt of thoſe aſperſions which his friends had caſt upon him; or to ſhew that he was no ſuch man as they imagined him; and that therefore he was not held under the preſſure of thoſe grievous ſufferings, as a puniſhment, either of any cloſe hypocriſie, or of any open wicked practices. Upon the whole matter he might well hope that his friends would take up better thoughts, and a more equal opinion of him; or if after all the profeſſions of his integrity they ſhould not judg him him a good man, that yet they would be more ſenſible of thoſe evils which he had for ſo long a time endured. Theſe or ſurely ſuch as theſe were Job's aims, while throughout this whole Chapter he laboured ſo earneſtly to purge himſelf from the ſuſpition of both groſs crimes, and ſecret ſins.

The ſecret ſins which he purged himſelf, were

Firſt, Unchaſt deſires, or heart-uncleanneſs, which he was ſo far from nouriſhing or feeding, that he did his utmoſt to prevent the very firſt occaſions and motions of it, verſ. 1. I made a Covenant with mine eyes.

Secondly, Truſt upon or reſt in the beſt things of this world, verſ. 24, 25. If I have made Gold my hope, &c.

Thirdly, A Spirit of revenge, verſ. 29, 30. If I rejoyced at the deſtruction of him that hated me, or lift up my ſelf when evil found him.

Fourthly, Hypocriſie, or the palliation of ſin, verſ. 33. If I have covered my tranſgreſſions as Adam, by hiding mine iniquity in my boſome.

Fifthly, Baſe fear when his duty called him to appear, verſ. 34. Did I fear a great multitude, or did the contempt of families terrifie me, &c.

The groſſer crimes from which he purged himſelf in this Chapter, were Firſt, Unrighteouſneſs or injurious dealing with men, verſ. 5, 6, 7, 8. If I have walked with vanity, or if my foot hath haſted to deceit, &c.

Secondly, Adultery, or the abuſe of other mens wives, verſ. 9, 10, 11, 12. If my heart hath been deceived by a woman, or if I have laid wait at my neighbours door, &c.

Thirdly, Undue auſterity and harſhneſs to his ſervants, verſ. 13, 14, 15. If I did deſpiſe the cauſe of my man Servant or of my maid Servant, when they contended with me, &c.

Fourthly, Uncharitableneſs or incompaſſionateneſs, to the poor, eſpecially the widow, and the fatherleſs, verſ. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. If I have withheld the poor from their deſire; or have cauſed the eyes of the widows to fail, or have eaten my morſel my ſelf alone, and the fatherleſs hath not eaten thereof, &c.

Fifthly, He purged himſelf from any violent oppreſſion of the fatherleſs, verſ. 21, 22, 23. If I have lift up my hand againſt the fatherleſs, when I ſaw my help in the gate, &c.

Sixthly, From Idolatry or Creature-Adoration, verſ. 26, 27, 28. If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined, or the Moon walking in brightneſs, and my heart hath been ſecretly enticed, &c.

Seventhly, Unhoſpitableneſs, to ſtrangers, verſ. 31, 32. If the men of my Tabernacle ſaid not, O that we had of his fleſh, we cannot be ſatisfied, The ſtranger did not lodge in the Street, but I opened my door to the Traveller.

Eighthly, and laſtly, He purgeth himſelf from invading or taking lands and poſſeſſions without a right claim and Title made to them, yea from uſing any mans labour upon them, without paying wages, v. 38, 39, 40. If my land cry againſt me, and the furrows likewiſe thereof complain; if I have eaten the fruits thereof without money, or have cauſed the owners thereof to loſe their life, let Thiſtles grow inſtead of Wheat, and Cockle inſtead of Barley.

Thus far of the general ſcope, as alſo of the ſpecial matters contained in this Chapter.

Verſ. 1. I made a Covenant with mine eyes; why then ſhould I think upon a maid.

The ſum of this verſe is Job's care, yea carefulneſs to preſerve himſelf pure, from all taints of unchaſtity and uncleanneſs, even to a thought.

In it we more diſtinctly conſider.

Firſt, the means which he uſed for this purpoſe, A Covenant.

Secondly, The parties to this Covenant, he and his eyes; I made a Covenant with mine eyes.

Thirdly, The deſired ſucceſs or iſſue of this means uſed or Covenant made, Why then ſhould I think upon a maid?

I made a Covenant.] The word (Berith) which we render, a Covenant, comes from a root which ſignifies two things (both which are conſiderable in the nature and formalities of a Covenant) Firſt, to chooſe exactly and judiciouſly; becauſe a Covenant (as all elective acts,) is an act of ſad and ſerious deliberation. All elections are, or ought to be made upon the moſt rational turn and ſway of Judgment, not upon any catch of phancy or hurry of paſſions. Secondly, it ſignifies to eat moderately or ſoberly, this alſo refers to the nature and uſe of a Covenant, which is to draw ſeveral parties into a friendly communion and correſpondence one with another. Hence it hath been accuſtomed upon the making of Covenants, for the parties covenanting to feaſt temperately together, Gen. 29. 30.

בריה Fœdus pactum à ברה Elegit, ſelegit, parum modicum edit.

A Covenant ſtrictly taken is more then a promiſe; a Covenant differs from a promiſe gradually, and in the formalities of it, not naturally, or in the ſubſtance of it; God made promiſes to Abraham, Gen. 12. and Gen. 13. but he made no Covenant with him till Chap. 15. verſ. 18. In that day the Lord made a Covenant with Abraham. As the Collection of many Stars makes a Conſtellation, ſo the Collection of many promiſes makes a Covenant; or, as (Gen. 1. 10.) the gathering together of the waters, was by the Lord called Seas, ſo we may call the gathering together of many promiſes and Conditions a Covenant. The Lord gathers together all thoſe promiſes of mercy which lie ſcattered up and down throughout the whole Volume of the Scriptures into his Covenant with man, and man gathers all thoſe conditions of duty which are to be found all the Scripture over, and puts them into his Covenant with God.

This is the nature and buſineſs of a Covenant properly taken. But here, when Job ſaith, He made a Covenant with his eyes, the word Covenant is to be underſtood improperly only, or in alluſion; and ſo it imports only thus much, that Job did uſe all ſerious and ſanctified means to keep himſelf from taking any taint or defilement by vain looks, and wanton glances of his eyes. As David (Pſal. 39. 1.) kept his mouth with bit and bridle while the wicked were before him, ſo Job kept his eyes with Covenant and promiſe while any ſuch objects were before him as might allure him to wickedneſs. He did not raſhly ſwear nor coldly wiſh chaſtity, no nor barely purpoſe and propoſe to himſelf, that he would avoid luſtful provocations; but he did ſolemnly engage and bind himſelf to uſe all poſſible diligence and godly care to prevent the entrance of any poyſonous or bewitching vapour at his eyes, and that his ſpirit ſhould not receive infection by his ſenſe. Thus he gave the law to his eyes, and would not ſuffer them to wander, much leſs to feed themſelves where they ſhould not.

I made a Covenant with mine eyes.

Fœdus percuſſi.

The Hebrew is, I cut or ſtroke a Covenant. The word which we render, made, ſignifies properly to cut or ſtrike, and 'tis applyed to the buſineſs of a Covenant, becauſe at Covenant-making ſome beaſts being killed and cut aſunder, the Covenant-makers paſſed between the divided parts. When God made that firſt Grand Covenant with Abraham (Gen. 15. 9, 10.) He ſaid unto him, Take an Heifer of three years old, and a She-goat of three years old, &c. And he took unto him all theſe and divided them in the midſt, and laid thoſe pieces one againſt another, &c. At the ſeventeenth verſe, Behold a ſmoaking furnace and a burning lamp (which latter was an Emblem of Gods ſpecial preſence for the deliverance of his people) paſſed between thoſe pieces. We have an inſtance of the ſame ceremony in making a Covenant (Jer. 34. 18.) They cut the Calf in twain, and paſſed between the parts thereof. Upon this uſage or cuſtom the phraſe is grounded of cutting or ſtriking a Covenant (Pſal. 50. 5. and 89. 3.) Which ceremony had the ſignification of this ſevere curſe intimated by it, Let him be cut aſunder, let the members of his body be divided, as this ſlain beaſt, who violates this ſacred Oath. I made a Covenant

With mine eyes.] Job knew what would moſt probably prove his ſnare, and therefore he ſet the ſtrongeſt watch againſt it. His eyes were readieſt to make him break Covenant with God; What then could he do better then to make a Covenant with his eyes?

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The nature of man is exceedingly prone and bent to ſin.

We need not bind our ſelves not to do that which we are not ſtrongly bent to do, Covenants are holy bonds. The Prophet (Iſa. 5. 18.) tells us of thoſe who draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and ſin as it were with a cart-rope. Some are drawn by motives of profit and pleaſure unto ſin, or ſin is forced and preſſed upon them by ſuch like inducements; but others draw ſin unto, yea force and preſs it upon themſelves; they draw ſin to them, as a Horſe draws a Cart to him; by all means and with all their might they toil and even tire themſelves in wicked practices. Now that which ſome men do in act, all men would do by nature, unleſs through grace, or at leaſt by education and moral perſwaſions they put a reſtraint upon their violent luſts and paſſions. Paul himſelf found, that, when he would do good evil was preſent with him (Rom. 7. 21. and ver. 23.) he ſaw another Law in his members (Laws have a binding and preſſing power, he ſaw another Law in his members) warring againſt the Law of his mind, and bringing him into captivity to the Law (that is, the power) of ſin which was in his members; yea, this did work ſo ſtrongly and dreadfully in him, that he was forced to cry out for help (ver. 24.) O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death! Now if Paul, a perſon regenerate, in whom the conquering and reigning power of ſin was broken, found ſuch an impetuous bent in his ſoul to ſin, what is it in them (though poſſibly they neither find nor feel it) who are yet unregenerate, and ſo have or are under the reigning and unbroken power of ſin!

Secondly, Conſidering who Job was, and what the ſpecial ſin was againſt which, he here made a Covenant.

Obſerve. The beſt of men are ſubject to the temptation of the vileſt and vaineſt ſins.

Uncleanneſs and fornication, are ſuch ſins as many honeſt Heathens have profeſſedly abhorr'd, and bluſh'd at the mention of: And yet Job, a man much acquainted with and fearing God much, had much ado to keep himſelf clear from them. There is no ſin ſo filthy and unnatural, but the ſeed of it (in remiſs degrees) remains in the nature of a gracious man; murder, adultery, theft, envy, malice againſt man, yea, and blaſphemy againſt God, dwell in thoſe who are the workmanſhip of God, and the Temples of the holy Ghoſt. That good man declared his ſenſibleneſs of this, who, when report was made to him of any groſs ſin committed by the vileſt of men, was wont to bleſs God that he was not the man that had committed it; implying, that even he, notwithſtanding grace received, had ſo much corruption yet unmortified and unſubdued, as would have hurried him into the dirtieſt wayes of ſin, if the Spirit of God hath not both led him into and kept him in the wayes of holineſs. A godly man cannot live in the leaſt ſin; yet the greateſt ſins have ſomewhat of life in a godly man; Job had never covenanted againſt uncleanneſs, if he had not found the motions of it in himſelf.

Thirdly, Obſerve, A gracious heart engageth himſelf to the utmoſt in the uſe of holy means againſt ſin.

What ſtronger engagement can a man put upon himſelf, or bind himſelf with then a Covenant? That's alwayes an implicite virtual Oath, and it hath an explicite formal Oath often annexed to it; David ſaith (Pſal. 109. 106.) I have ſworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments! Thus a godly man fortifies himſelf (through grace) with ſacred Oaths and Covenants againſt all the aſſaults and incurſions of Satans helliſh temptations, and his own curſed corruptions. A Hypocrite would ſin if he might, but he that is ſincere ſets himſelf with all his might againſt ſin. He hath no true will againſt ſin as it is unlawful, who could or doth wiſh that it were lawful to ſin. And he who hath a real purpoſe to keep his Covenant with God not to do evil, makes a firm Covenant with himſelf not to do it.

Vellem ſi liceret, non ſane nolens peccatum, quia volebat licere peccatum.

Notum eſt illud; uritq; videndo fœmina.

Luſt enters at that window; the eye feeds greedily upon wanton objects; and there the fire uſually begins to kindle, which enflames firſt, and at laſt conſumes the whole man. Any of the Senſes may endanger the ſoul to uncleanneſs, but the eye moſt. The eye may endanger the ſoul to any ſin almoſt, but moſt to uncleanneſs. I grant Covetouſneſs is by way of eminence, called the luſt of the eyes, by the Apoſtle John (1 Epiſt. 2. 16.) yet, I conceive, the reaſon of it is not only, poſſibly, not ſo much becauſe, ſeeing the things of this world doth provoke the ſpirit of man to covet them, or becauſe covetous men deſire to ſee the things of this world, as becauſe, this is indeed all the benefit (if it may be called a benefit) which covetous men get by inordinate deſiring and gathering the things of the world, a ſight of them with their eyes: That of Solomon ſeems to carry a fair accommodation with this notion (Eccleſ. 5. 11.) When goods increaſe, they are increaſed that eat them; and what good is there to the owners thereof, ſaving the beholding of them with their eyes? But I ſhall not inſiſt upon this: It is enough to the point in hand, that though the Scripture gives inſtance of many ſins taking fire at the eye, yet the moſt frequent Inſtances are about the ſin expreſſed in this Text. The firſt ſin (which had all ſin in it, and brought ſin upon all the world) began here (Gen. 3. 6.) When the Woman ſaw that the tree was good for food, and pleaſant to the eyes, &c. ſhe took of the fruit thereof and did eat. Solomon counſels, Not to look upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his colour in the cup (Prov. 23. 31.) becauſe drunkenneſs and the intemperate uſe of the creature may come in at the eye. Achan confeſſeth (Joſh. 7. 21.) When I ſaw among the ſpoils a goodly Babyloniſh Garment, &c. then I coveted and took them. Covetouſneſs enter'd at his eye: Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt was tempted to that ſin by the eye (Mat. 4. 8.) The Devil took him up into an exceeding high Mountain, and ſhewed him all the Kingdoms of the World, and the glory of them; but he neither coveted, nor took them. Thus (I ſay) the Scripture gives inſtance of ſeveral ſins beginning at the eye; but of all ſins the entrance of uncleanneſs at the eye is moſt exampl'd in Scripture. That firſt unequal matching in marriage is thus deſcribed (Gen. 6. 2.) The Sons of God (that is, the deſcendants of Seth and Enoch, who profeſſed the pure worſhip of the true God) ſaw the daughters of men (that is, ſuch as came of the wicked and curſed race of Cain) that they were fair, and they took them wives of all whom they choſe. They were guided by ſenſe, not by reaſon, much leſs by grace in the choice of their Wives. They had no reſpect to ſpiritual beauty or deformity, but only to that which was corporal; they cared not how foul and ugly ſouls their Wives had, ſo they had but fair faces and a white skin. While men chuſe Wives meerly by the eye, their marriage is a kind of Adultery, and themſelves may be numbred among the unclean, ſo they are in heart and in their ſtate both perſonal and relational. As ſinful marriages were occaſion'd by the eye, ſo alſo were ſinnings both beſide and againſt marriage. When Dinah, Jacob's Daughter, went out to ſee the Daughters of the Land, Sechem the Son of Hamor, the Hivite, Prince of the Country, ſaw her, and took her, and lay with her, and defiled her (Gen. 34. 1, 2.) Yea David was thus defiled, while walking upon the roof of his houſe, he ſaw a woman waſhing her ſelf, and the woman (ſaith the Text) was very beautiful to look upon (2 Sam. 11. 2.) When Chriſt ſaith (Matth. 5. 28.) Whoſoever looketh on a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart, he more then intimates, that whoſoever looketh wantonly on a woman, is at next door to or within a ſtep of bodily Adultery. And hence the Apoſtle Peter characters ſome men (2 Pet. 2. 14.) Having eyes full of Adultery (or as we put in the Margin, Full of an Adultereſs) and that cannot ceaſe from ſin. Where the eye is full of Adultery, the heart is full of it too; and if once the eye and heart be taken, the man cannot hold out againſt the aſſaults of luſt. When the Out-works are once gained and poſſeſſed by an enemy, all is in danger to be taken; but when both eyes and heart are taken with a beauty, not only the Out-works, but the main Fort or Citadel alſo is taken, and how then can the beſieged City make further oppoſition?

O then, ſet a watch upon your eyes, guard that paſs well, if you deſire to preſerve your purity. He forgets that he is or hath fleſh about him, who hopes his heart ſhall not run the ſame courſe with his eye. It was the Motto of a great Commander in war, to ſhew the facility of his Conqueſts over ſtrongeſt places and opponents, I came, I ſaw, I overcame; that is, I overcame as ſoon as I could come and ſee; but many will have cauſe ſadly to take up this motto, We came, we ſaw, we were overcome; that is, we no ſooner came and ſaw, but we were overcome, we were preſently ſoyled at the eye. This will be the Drunkards complaint at laſt, yea when it will be too late, I came, I ſaw the wine, and was not only overcome to drink, but overcome by drinking. This will be the covetous mans complaint, I came and ſaw the gold, the goodly glitter of worldly ſhews, and was overcome. This will be the Adulterers complaint, I looked and luſted, and was overcome. How ſhould they be looked to, which affect the heart, and infect the whole man with a look? 'Tis more dangerous to ſlip with the eye, then with the foot; broken bones are eaſier ſet, then a broken conſcience. And as for that dirt, thoſe ſpots which we get by a ſlip of the foot, they are clearneſs and beauty compared with that defilement, which we get by a fall into ſin let in at the eye.

Veni. vidi, vici.

Chriſt had no ſooner ſaid, Whoſoever looketh on a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart (Matth. 5. 28.) but he immediately adds this counſel or command (ver. 29.) If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and caſt it from thee, for it is profitable for thee, that one of thy members ſhould periſh, and not that thy whole body ſhould be caſt into hell. To pluck out the right eye, and caſt it away, is to mortifie the luſts of the fleſh through the Spirit, by the exerciſe of faith upon the croſs, or death, and ſufferings of our Lord Jeſus. When carnal concupiſcence is thus killed and caſt out, the right eye is plucked out, the very eye of the body is then plucked out ſpiritually, and (while this work of mortification is kept up and carried on) the eye ſhall no more offend us; that is, ſhall not cauſe us to offend. This is the proper effect of making a Covenant with the eye. The Lord promiſeth (Hoſ. 2. 18.) that he will make a Covenant for his people with the beaſts of the field: And while a godly man makes a covenant with his eyes, he makes a covenant with the beaſts of his body: What are the eyes and all other ſenſitive faculties but beaſts, compared with thoſe more noble faculties of ſpiritual reaſon and underſtanding? And unleſs thoſe beaſts are bound to their good behaviour, what with their vanity and treachery, what with their lightneſs and importunity, they will break the bounds of chaſtity and modeſty, and make the heart of man a through-fare, and his body a very Brothel-houſe of uncleanneſs. Zaleuchus the Locrian Law-giver, appointed the pulling out of the eyes for the puniſhment of thoſe who had committed Adultery: And ſurely the beſt way to prevent Adultery, is in the Scripture ſenſe, here intended, to pluck out our eyes; that is, as Job here did, to make a covenant with them: I (ſaith he) have made a covenant with mine eyes.

Fifthly, Obſerve, That ſin may be avoided, we muſt avoid whatſoever leads to or occaſions it.

As this cauſed Job to covenant ſtrongly with his eyes; ſo it cauſed David to pray earneſtly about his eyes (Pſal. 119. 37.) Turn away mine eyes (or as the Hebrew may be rendred, make them to paſs) from beholding vanity. The eye is apt to make a ſtand, or fix it ſelf, when we come in view of an enſnaring object, therefore 'tis our duty to haſten it away, or to pray that God would make it paſs off from it. Joſeph did not only not hearken to his adulterous Miſtreſs to lie with her, but he would not ſo much as be with her, he avoided her company (Gen. 39. 10.) He that feareth burning muſt take heed of playing with fire; he that feareth drowning muſt keep out of deep waters; he that feareth the Plague muſt not go into an infected houſe. Would they avoid ſin who preſent themſelves to the opportunities of it, and bring their corruptions and temptations as it were to an interview? I (ſaith Job) have made a covenant with mine eyes,

Why then ſhould I think upon a Maid?

Some read, How then, &c. either reading attains the ſame ſenſe: As if he had ſaid, Seeing I have made a covenant with mine eyes, why ſhould I think upon a Maid, and ſo break my covenant and my conſcience together? or as Joſeph ſpake in a like caſe (Gen. 39. 9.) How then can I do this great wickedneſs and ſin againſt God? Why then

Should I think upon a Maid?] He doth not ſay, Why then ſhould I look, but, Why then ſhould I think upon a Maid? He made his covenant with his eyes, and the act or work of the eyes is to ſee or look, not to think: Thinking is an act of the underſtanding, not of ſenſe; yet becauſe many thoughts are occaſion'd by the ſight of the eyes, therefore it is not unuſual in Scripture to attribute thoſe acts which imply thinking to the eyes. Thus ſaith Solomon (Eccleſ. 2. 10.) Whatſoever mine eyes deſired (or asked of me) I kept not from them. Deſires are thoughts working after and longing for enjoyment. The conſent of the heart and of the eyes is ſo great, that we may well enough be ſaid to ſee with our hearts and to think with our eyes.

But why doth Job thus ſtrongly diſown thinking upon a Maid? Surely it is not unlawful either to look or think upon a Maid. I grant it is not. And therefore, we are not to underſtand Job of bare thinking upon a Maid, but of thinking to ſuch an end, or with ſuch an evil purpoſe, as he diſclaims in the whole tendency of this Text. The Conjugation of the Hebrew Verb which we render, to Think, ſignifies a very fixed and ſetled work of the mind in thinking. As if Job had ſaid, I have made ſuch a conant with mine eyes, that now I cannot ſtand gazing or poring upon the beauty of a Maid, till my heart be enflamed, or I entertain laſcivious and unchaſt thoughts about her.

אתבונן Proprie eſt meipſum intelligere aut expendere feci, & ſic aſpectum cum fixa cogitatione indicat.

But why doth Job ſay, Why then ſhould I think upon a Maid? Should he not rather have ſaid, Why then ſhould I think upon a Woman, or upon any Woman kind? Did his covenant reſtrain him only from thinking upon a Maid, and not from thinking (in the ſenſe expounded) upon other Women?

For the clearing of this doubt, I anſwer,

Firſt, The word (Bethulah) here uſed, may be taken in general for any or every fair and beautiful Woman, whether Maid, Wife, or Widow. So we read (Joel 1. 8.)

בתולה Præſertim in abſtracto ſumitur nonnunquā pro qualibet pulchra muliere ſive virgo ſit ſive non. Bold.

Lament like a Virgin (or young Widow-woman) girded with ſackcloth for the Husband of her youth.

Secondly, Job ſpeaketh by name only of a Maid or Virgin, becauſe ſuch in the flower of youth are moſt beautiful, and ſo moſt alluring, and therefore if they were as dead to him, ſurely much more other women in whom there was leſs provocation to that folly. If a man will not drink intemperately of the beſt Wine, much leſs will he of that which is baſe and diſ-ſpirited. He that doth not luſt after the faireſt face, is above the temptation of a deformed or unhandſome piece. Chaſtity is moſt aſſaulted and hazarded by beauty. This was the reaſon which ſome Hiſtorians give why Alexander the Great would not ſuffer thoſe moſt beautiful Perſian Virgins, the Daughters of Darius to be brought into his preſence, leſt he who had conquered ſuch mighty Armies of men, ſhould himſelf be conquered by thoſe Captive-women. So then, Job inſtanceth the preſervation of his chaſtity, where it was moſt difficult to preſerve it; and having ſo far conquered all ſolicitations from Maiden-beauty, that he would not ſo much as think upon a Maid, he might well conclude himſelf a conqueror (through grace) over all aſſaults from women-kind.

Lis eſt cum forma magna pudicitiæ.

Thirdly, Job might ſay, Why then ſhould I think upon a Maid? To ſhew, that if he made conſcience of the leſſer ſin, then much more of the greater. Fornication or the committing of folly with a Maid (though it be a very great ſin, and to her an irreparable diſhonour) is yet a leſſer ſin then adultery, which is the committing of folly with another mans Wife. And therefore alſo Job ſpecially acquits himſelf of, and proteſts againſt that former wickedneſs, that he might give evidence how much he abhorred the latter.

Fourthly, Job a little after (ver. 9. 10.) purgeth himſelf expreſly from all adulterous complotments or embracements, and therefore here he ſpeaks only of his freedom from thoſe other ſinful and defiling thoughts about any ſingle or unmarried perſon; Why then ſhould I think upon a Maid?

The words thus opened, yield ſeveral inſtructions.

Firſt, In that Job having made a covenant with his eyes, preſently adds, Why then, or how then ſhould I think upon a Maid?

Obſerve, To ſin againſt a Covenant is a great aggravation of ſin.

The more we are bound or juſtly bind our ſelves not to do a thing, the more we ſin in doing it. A covenant is a bond, a ſacred bond, 'tis not ſafe to trifle with ſacred things. The Lord threatned to ſend a ſword upon his own people, that ſhould avenge the quarrel of his Covenant (Levit. 26. 25.)

Secondly, Job having made a covenant with his eyes, puts the Queſtion, Why then ſhould I think upon a Maid?

Hence Note, It is good often to put Queſtions to and catechiſe our own ſouls.

When David found himſelf almoſt overſet with grief, he falls to queſtioning the matter (Pſal. 42 5.) Why art thou caſt down, O my ſoul, and why art thou diſquieted in me? Give me an account, a reaſon, O my ſoul, why is it thus with thee? As we may ſtop immoderate grief, by asking a reaſon why do we grieve thus? So we may ſtop the inordinate motions and deſires of luſt, by asking a reaſon, why ſhould we do thus? When temptation hath prevailed with us to do evil, repentance will cauſe us to ask what have we done? Yea, to conſider what we have done. And when we are tempted to do evil, common prudence, much more ſpecial grace will cauſe us to ask what are we doing? Or why ſhould we do it? Some have ſaid, that, man by reſting, or a quiet retirement, grows more wiſe, or improves in wiſdom. 'Tis as true, that man by theſe kind of motions and traverſes of his ſoul, grows both wiſer and holier. The reaſon why ſo many do things, which are, at leaſt, very queſtionable, is becauſe they did not queſtion themſelves about the doing of them. We ſay (and we ſay it truly) A fool may put more Queſtions then many wiſe men can anſwer: But that man is not wiſe, nor can he do wiſely, who doth not put many Queſtions to himſelf about the things which he is about to do.

Foraſmuch as Job made a covenant with his eyes, that he might not think upon a Maid.

Thirdly, Obſerve, That which is in the eye, eſpecially, if it be much or long in the eye, gets quickly to the heart.

'Tis no eaſie matter to ſtay our ſelves from thinking of that which we have been ſeeing: The eyes are as doors by which Meſſengers enter, and meſſages are ſent into the ſoul concerning all things which are done and ſeen abroad; yea, at theſe doors the ſoul it ſelf doth, as it were, go forth and ſcatter it ſelf among thoſe things which are done and ſeen abroad. In this ſenſe the ſoul may be ſaid to cleave to, yea, to dwell in the eye; and where this works that will not be idle. Therefore let not your eye (if it be poſſible) ever ſee that, upon which you would not have your mind think. One great reaſon why we find it ſo hard a matter to bring our minds to think of God, is, becauſe he is inviſible. And becauſe we ſhould have ſome help this way, he who is altogether inviſible in his nature, hath made himſelf viſible in his works, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 1. 20.) The inviſible things of him, from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal Power and Godhead: And becauſe Jeſus Chriſt in perſon is gone out of our ſight, therefore, that we might keep him in our minds, he hath left a viſible remembrance of himſelf in his holy Supper, in which we ſhew forth, and, even to the eye, act his death till he cometh. And ſurely the power of ſight is very great upon the thoughts of the heart, elſe the Apoſtle would never have laid ſo ſevere a rebuke upon the Galatians for not obeying the truth, for this reaſon, becauſe Jeſus Chriſt had been evidently ſet forth before their eyes crucified among them (Gal. 3. 1.) We have, no doubt, a very great advantage to think much and often of that good which we much and often ſee; and 'tis no ſmall trouble to keep that evil out of our thoughts which is much in our eyes. This may be ſome matter of comfort, yea, in part a recompence to thoſe who have loſt their eye-ſight. A Heathen hearing a man bitterly bewailing that loſs, comforted him chiefly upon this conſideration; Doſt not thou underſtand (ſaith he) that thy blindneſs is a part of thy innocence? Doſt thou not know that the eye puts adultery into this mans mind, and inceſt into anothers? Doth not the eye ſhew this man a houſe which his heart preſently covets? And what evil is there which the thoughts of the heart are not let out to by the ſight of the eyes? Though blindneſs be in it ſelf an evil, yet it may be good to us, eſpecially by ſhadowing all evil from our ſight. Even Job could not promiſe himſelf, not to think upon a Maid, till he had made a covenant with his eyes.

Nonne intelligis partem innocentiæ eſſe cæcitatem. Senec.

Fifthly, Obſerve, Inordinate thoughts are ſins.

Job doth not ſay, I have made a covenant with mine eyes, why then ſhould I corporally defile or commit actual fornication with a Maid, but, Why ſhould I think upon a Maid? The ſin of the old world, for which God brought a deluge upon the whole world, is thus deſcribed (Gen. 6. 5.) And God ſaw that the wickedneſs of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. Such as the work of their hearts was, ſuch was the work of their hands, both ſtark naught; and their evil thoughts were as much put to their account for ſinfulneſs, as their evil works were. A man cannot render himſelf more vile and foul in the eye of God by acting, then he may do by thinking: Hence was that paſſionate counſel or command in the Prophet (Jer. 4. 14.) O Jeruſalem, waſh thine heart from wickedneſs, that thou mayeſt be ſaved: How long ſhall thy vain thoughts lodge in thee? As if he had ſaid, All thy hopes of being ſaved, or of eſcaping the vengeance of God, whether temporal or eternal, will prove but preſumptious or vain thoughts; that is, ſuch as ſhall never be anſwered with thy expected ſafety or deliverance, while thy heart is thus unclean by and unwaſht from ſinful or wicked thoughts. The Apoſtle Peter in that dreadful increpation which he thunders out againſt Simon Magus, ſeems to make the greateſt doubt of the mercy of God to him about, or that the mercy of God would ſtick moſt at the pardoning of his thoughts (Acts 8. 22.) Repent (ſaith he) therefore of this thy wickedneſs; and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee: As if he had ſaid, 'Tis this vile thought of thy heart, if any thing or above any thing which will be thy eternal ruine, and render thy caſe remedileſs.

There are three ſteps or degrees of ſin, before it comes to the outward act.

Firſt, When ſome fleeting tranſient thoughts of evil ariſe from, and are ſlightly formed up in the fancy, or are occaſion'd by the ſight of ſomewhat from without.

Secondly, When the mind ſtayeth upon ſuch thoughts, gives them ſome entertainment, holds parley with them, and hath a kind of delight in them.

Thirdly, when we cloſe freely with them, and ſettle fully upon them, ſo that nothing delayes the drawing of them forth into act, but the want of power or opportunity. When evil thoughts are wrought up to this height, then ſin is fully formed and ſhapen in us, ſuppoſe the outward act ſhould never be committed. And though an evil thought conſidered abſtractly or in it ſelf be leſs ſinful then an outward evil act, yet every evil thought is very ſinful; and concerning their ſinfulneſs I ſhall lay down theſe five brief Aſſertions.

Firſt, The leaſt evil thought, though unconſented to is ſinful, mortally ſinful, it calls for death as the wages of it. If any evil thoughts are ſinful and deſerve death, theſe alſo do; the reaſon is, becauſe degrees do not vary the kind or nature of ſin, and therefore they neither add nor take away the properties or effects of it: Greater degrees may add ſomewhat to the properties and effects; that is, they may make them greater, but they do not add them. And ſo leſſer degrees may abate or take ſomewhat from the properties and effects of ſin, but they cannot take them away.

Secondly, When evil thoughts are conſented to, and delighted in, they are more vile and ſinful then any ſudden or unpremeditated acts of ſin.

Thirdly, Some ſins, and thoſe the vileſt, are or may be compleated in the thoughts; ſuch are envy at anothers good, rejoycing in anothers hurt, diſcontent with our own condition, pride in our own condition, or in any thing we have or are, as alſo, unbelief of the Word of God, whether in the Hiſtory or Propheſie, whether in the promiſes or threatnings of it.

Fourthly, Evil thoughts are ſo ſinful, that as they are moſt like the Devils ſins, ſo they render us moſt like the Devil in ſinning. Evil thoughts are called by ſome, the Firſt-born of the Devil, they have compared them to the Vipers brood, which eat out and deſtroy their own mother; to burning coals, or fire carried in the boſom, which quickly ſcorch, and will at laſt conſume him that carrieth them; as alſo to the little ones of Babylon (ſpoken of Pſalm 137.9.) which 'tis our happineſs to take and daſh againſt the ſtones. Theſe evil thoughts are indeed worſe then thoſe Idols put into a ſecret place, the makers whereof the Lord pronounceth curſed (Deut. 27. 15.) Evil thoughts, like Idols, are molten and graven, formed and faſhioned in the heart, and then laid up or put into that ſecret place; there are the chambers of this imagery.

Fifthly, Evil thoughts, as they are very ſinful, and in ſome caſes more ſinful then other ſins; ſo in all caſes they are more dangerous then other ſins. And that upon a twofold ground: Firſt, The multiplicity of them; many Flies and Graſhoppers (ſmall creatures) ſpoiled Egypt, a great Kingdom; many Lice eat up and deſtroyed Herod a great King; many twine threads will make a cord big enough to bind the ſtrongeſt Giant, yea, a cable big enough to hold the greateſt Ship; a huge multitude of little ſands will endanger a Veſſel at Sea as much as the mightieſt Rock. While we conſider, what multitudes, what myriads of evil thoughts are moving in us, or paſſing through us, how ſhould we tremble at the danger? And yet there is a ſecond thing conſiderable in evil thoughts, which endangers us more then the multitude of them, and that is, our inſenſibleneſs of them. We quickly take notice of, and poſſibly are ſtartled at evil words, or evil acts, but as for evil thoughts, they ſwarm in us, and yet ſcarce fall under any obſervation, much leſs are they taken into any ſolemn or ſerious examination. Now, how dangerous it is to have many unſeen enemies near about us, every man can conclude. Yet ſuch are our evil thoughts. How wiſely then and how holily did Job, who took ſo much care to keep his thoughts in compaſs, and ſeriouſly ſaid, Why then ſhould I think upon a Maid?

Hence Note, Sixthly, A gracious heart is as careful not to ſin by evil thoughts as by evil acts.

And indeed conſcience of and about our thoughts, is the great Character and diſcovery of a godly man. He that takes leave to think what he will, would gladly have leave to do what he will. Our thoughts are leaſt known to others; but we may beſt know our ſelves by our thoughts; and he who is afraid (as every godly man is) to think amiſs, will much more fear to do amiſs.

Laſtly, Obſerve, It is an excellent means to keep our ſelves from ſinful actings, to keep our ſelves from ſinful thinkings.

What we muſt not act, we muſt not think, unleſs it be how we may beſt be preſerved from acting it. That man can never hold diſtance enough from doing what is unfit, who doth not (which Job here did) hold his heart at a due diſtance from thinking of what is unfit. There are many things to be done, that we may not do evil. Firſt, We muſt be ſober in the uſe of the creature: Secondly, We muſt be diligent in our callings; Satan will quickly find us work, if we find not our own: Thirdly, We muſt meditate much in the Word: Fourthly, We muſt ſtudy the vanity of the creature: Fifthly, We muſt be much in prayer: Sixthly, We muſt admire the beauty of holineſs, the invaluable worth of a pure and chaſt mind: Seventhly, We muſt live much in the thoughts of our own death, but eſpecially in the thoughts of the death of Chriſt. Now as all theſe things ſhould be done, that we may be preſerved from doing evil; ſo many things muſt be avoided, that the ſame end may be attained, chiefly theſe four: Firſt, We muſt avoid wanton ſpeeches; luſt comes often in at the ear: Secondly, Wanton dances and dalliances; luſt is much provoked by the touch: Thirdly, Wanton ſpectacles; luſt is ſtirred by the ſight: Fourthly, Wanton thoughts; luſt is fomented by the heart. All theſe, doubtleſs, holy and chaſt Job avoided, the two latter are expreſſed in the Text, while he ſaid, I have made a covenant with mine eyes, why then ſhould I think upon a Maid?

VERS. 2, 3, 4.

For what portion of God is there from above? And what inheritance of the Almighty from on high?
Is not deſtruction to the wicked? And a ſtrange puniſhment to the workers of iniquity?
Doth not he ſee my wayes, and count all my ſteps?

IN theſe three verſes Job gives a reaſon of that holy watch which he had kept over himſelf, or of the guard which he ſet upon his ſenſes, his eyes eſpecially, in the former verſe; I have made a Covenant with mine eyes, why then ſhould I think upon a Maid? Here (I ſay) he gives a reaſon of that holy ſtrictneſs and gracious ſeverity, yea, he gives us three reaſons of it, as will appear in opening of theſe words.

Firſt, Becauſe his neglect of that watch over himſelf might juſtly have hinder'd that good which he expected from the hand or bleſſing of God (ver. 2.) What portion of God is there from above? That is, from God, to that man who care not how, nor on what he looks, but gives undue liberty to his eyes, and ſo to his thoughts; Can this man look in faith for a portion of good, or for a good portion from God, who looks not to himſelf in holy fear?

Secondly, Becauſe as ſuch a man ſhall have only a lean, or no portion at all from God, ſo he hath reaſon to expect utter perdition and ruine from him. (ver. 3.) Is not deſtruction to the wicked, and a ſtrange puniſhment to the workers of iniquity? Certainly it is, God will puniſh and deſtroy them ſtrangely.

The third reaſon which he gives of that care he had over his own eyes, was his apprehenſion of the eye of God; as if he had ſaid, it is but need for me or for any man to look to his own eyes, who believes that the eyes of God are alwayes upon him, and upon all his wayes. (ver. 4.) Doth not he ſee my wayes, and count all my ſteps? If Gods eye be upon us ſtrictly, watching not only what way we take in general, but what ſpecial and particular ſteps we take in that way, ſhall we let our eyes run at random, and fix upon any object that comes next, without ſo much as putting the queſtion to our hearts, whether right or wrong, good or bad? Any one of theſe three reaſons, much more all three laid together, have weight enough in them to preſs even a rational, ſurely then a godly man to maintain a conſtant watch over his eyes, that his thought contract no pollution by them. That's the ſcope and common tendency of the context now in hand.

Verſe. 2. What portion of God is there from above, or, what lot?

God as a Father, provides portions for his Children, and cuts out or divides to every one his lot: Every godly man hath a Childs portion from God his Father. What portion

Of God is there from above?] That is, Firſt, What portion is there prepared and laid up by God, either firſt in his Decree, or Secondly, in his Promiſes, (our portions are thus laid up, they are laid up in the Decree or Purpoſes, as alſo in the Covenant and Promiſes of God) Now, what ſhare or portion (ſaith Job) can any man hope for in the Decree or Promiſes of God, if he neglect the Commandments of God? Secondly, What portion of God is there from above? That is, What portion is there wrought or cut out by the providence of God for his good whoſe wayes are evil? That which is laid up in promiſes for us, is wrought out or brought forth by providences. The love of God makes promiſes, and the care of God fulfills them. We have that diſtinction expreſly (Pſal. 31. 19.) O how great is thy goodneſs which thou haſt laid up for them that fear thee, and which thou haſt wrought for them that truſt in thee before the ſons of men? Here is a twofold goodneſs of God.

Genitivus efficientis. Piſc.

Firſt, A goodneſs laid up; Where? Surely in his Decrees and Promiſes.

Secondly, A goodneſs wrought out. How? Surely by his Diſpenſations and Providences. When Job ſaith, What portion of God is here? (ſc. for the wicked) we may extend his negative queſtion to both: There is no portion either in the promiſes or providences of God for a wicked man. What portion of God is there

From above?] The Scripture every where ſpeaks of God as above, and therefore all our good is ſpoken of as coming from above; there is neither above nor beneath to God, for he fills Heaven and Earth; but according to our apprehenſions and notions, God is generally ſaid to be above, that is, in Heaven, which is called by the Prophet (Iſa. 63. 15.) The habitation of his holineſs, and of his glory, from whence he is alſo there deſired to look down upon his Church and people. So that any portion received from God, is rightly ſaid to be from above. Thus the Apoſtle James ſpeaks (Chap. 1. 17.) Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableneſs, neither ſhadow of turning. Our good gifts do not ſpring out of the duſt, they are not vapours exhaled or drawn up from the earth, but they are influences coming from above, and falling upon man on earth. And as every good gift is from above, ſo indeed are our very troubles; as Eliphaz told Job at the fifth Chapter of this Book (ver. 6.) Affliction cometh not forth of the duſt, neither doth trouble ſpring out of the ground. And if our afflictions and troubleſome evils come from above, not from the ground, then much more our mercies are not from the ground, but from above. What portion of God is there from above?

And what inheritance of the Almighty from on high?

This latter part of the verſe is in ſenſe the ſame with the former; What inheritance? An inheritance may be of two ſorts, or it falls under a twofold conſideration, Firſt, There is an inheritance, to which we have only a right; Secondly, There is an inheritance, of which we have poſſeſſion. The word in the text notes an inheritance poſſeſſed, or in hand. Again, a man may come to poſſeſs and inheritance two wayes; Firſt, In his own right, as being the lineal or lawful heir: Secondly, By free gift, as having it voluntarily beſtowed upon him. We may take the word inheritance in either, but rather in both notions here, becauſe that which a Believer receives as his right, being a Son of God, he receives it alſo of a free gift, becauſe it is a free gift that we are ſons, (John 1. 12.) So that when Job ſaith, What inheritance, &c. His meaning is only this, Such a man can never have an eſtabliſhed comfortable eſtate from the Almighty.

Non ירושה eſt in fonte ſed נחלה quod proprie poſſeſſionem denotat. Druſ.

There is ſome critical difference in Law, between a portion and an inheritance. A portion in that ſtrictneſs conſiſts of Money or Moveables, or, as Lawyers ſpeak, of goods and Chattels. And inheritance is of houſes and lands. Job in either word (I ſuppoſe) includes both, and ſo there is no difference between them in the mind of this Scripture. What inheritance

Of the Almighty from on high?] This Title, or Name of God, Shaddai, rendred Almighty, hath been opened more then once before; I ſhall only add here, The Almighty is he who hath all things in his hand, and therefore he can give as great portions, and as large inheritances as he pleaſeth: He is infinitely full in himſelf; yea he is infinitely full of himſelf; and the earth is his with the fulneſs of it; yea, Heaven with all the fulneſs and furniture of it is his. But what inheritance of the Almighty is there to ungodly men, either in Heaven or Earth? Either from below, or

From on high?] The queſtion muſt be reſolved into this negative Propoſition, There is no inheritance of the Almighty from on high to that race or generation of men. The words are plain and need no further labour of an Expoſition; yet there is a threefold apprehenſion about the ſcope and purpoſe of them.

Firſt, Some underſtand them thus; What portion of God is there from above, and what inheritance of the Almighty from on high? As if Job had complained, that notwithſtanding all his care to preſerve himſelf clean and pure, both in heart and life, notwithſtanding all his circumſpect walkings, and holy watchfulneſs, yet he found that God had not beſtowed a portion of good, but of evil upon him, and that (as he ſpake, Chap. 7. 3.) The Almighty had made him inherit or poſſeſs nothing but wearisome nights and months of vanity. Thus Job is ſuppoſed expreſſing his grievance, What recompence have I gotten of God for my chaſtity but chaſtiſements? I have not ſuffered mine to glance wantonly, yet I ſuffer from the hand of God as if I were ſome filthy wanton, or debaucht adulterer. Moſt of the Rabbins inſiſt upon this ſence, and ſo do ſome of our own Interpreters, who alſo lengthen out the ſame ſcope to the third and fourth verſes; Is not deſtruction to the wicked, &c? As if he had ſaid, How comes it to paſs that God deals thus with me? If deſtruction be to the wicked, why am I deſtroy'd? The eye of the Lord is upon all my wayes, he knows I have laboured to keep my ſelf pure as the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, yet a ſtrange puniſhment is my portion: What portion of God is there to me from above, and what inheritance of the Almighty from on high is beſtowed on me, but ſores and ſickneſſes? Are not a broken ſtate, a blotted name, and a troubled ſoul, the lot of my preſent inheritance? But I ſhall not inſiſt upon this ſence, becauſe it ſavours of too high a diſcontent, as if Job had found no fruit of his obedience, nor reſpect from God, though he had diligently maintain'd a reſpect to all his Commandments. And therefore.

Secondly, I rather conceive that theſe words (as I intimated before) give us a reaſon why Job was ſo careful to keek himſelf pure and chaſt; becauſe there is no portion of God from above, nor inheritance of the Almighty from on high, to wicked men. What is there to be gotten, what fruit, benefit, or advantage can he expect from God, that gives himſelf up to the Dominion of any luſt? Thus the Chaldee Paraphraſe expreſſeth it; What good portion, or what portion of good could I have from God, if I had let mine eyes wander after, and my thoughts feed upon forbidden pleaſures?

Ubi eſt merces mea quod caſtiſſimè vixerim? quid datur mihi ab omnipotente qui in excelſis habitat præmium propter vitam bene actam? nihil minus affligor quàm flagitioſiſſimus quiſque. Hæc autem vox non eſt fidei vel ſe humiliantis ſed potius indignantis Brent.

Hence Obſerve, He that is wicked, or doth wickedly, hath no ground to hope for good from God.

What good can a meer natural, or unregenerate man expect, ſeeing while he is without Chriſt, and an Alien from the Commonwealth of Iſrael, He is alſo a ſtranger from the Covenant of promiſe. And therefore the Apoſtle in the ſame place (Eph. 2. 12.) concludes him without hope

(that is without any true ground of hope, as well as without God, that is, without the favour of God) in the world; the natural man being without Chriſt, is without the promiſe; and being without the promiſe, he cannot but be without hope too; or if he do hope for any good, his hope is meer preſumption. For as the truth of the promiſe is the object of faith, ſo the good of the promiſe is the object of hope. Faith cannot live, much leſs can hope be lively without a promiſe, and therefore unregenerate men are hopeleſs as to all conditional promiſes, till their ſtate is changed by free grace revealed in the abſolute Promiſe; And though it be a clear Goſpel truth, and the glory of Goſpel-truths, that there are many precious abſolute Promiſes made concerning unregenerate or unconverted perſons, yet properly even thoſe Promiſes are not made to them but of them. Now if a perſon conſidered only as unregenerate can expect no good, and ſo is hopeleſs, much more are they hopeleſs who have heightened their natural ſinfulneſs by actual ſins, and have given themſelves over to laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs. Can they come and plead with God in prayer to give them a portion from on high, who have thus highly provoked him? Will the Lord open any of his treaſures to ſuch, but the treaſures of his wrath? We may ſay to ſuch ſinners as Peter did to Simon Magus (Acts 8. 21.) You have neither part nor lot in this matter, for your heart is not right in the ſight of God. Simon Magus hoped to receive great matters from the Apoſtles, but when Peter ſaw him offering money to purchaſe the holy Ghoſt, he tells him plainly, Thou haſt neither part nor lot in this manner. Thus I may ſay to ungodly men, Ye have no part nor portion in God. Go repent of your wickedneſs, ye that are proud, covetous, or unclean; cleanſe your hands ye ſinners, and purifie your hearts ye double-minded, elſe what portion of God is there from above, and what inheritance of the Almighty from on high to men either of your ſpirit or practice.

Quam enim partem haberet Deus deſuper in me? Vulg. In tantum Deus in me partem habet, in quantum mens mea ad ſuperiora rapitur. Si vero per luxuriam mens mea ad carnalē luxuriam ejiciatur nullam partem in me Deus deſuper habebit. Aquin.

There is another reading of theſe words, which I ſhall take notice of, both becauſe the Text may bear it, and becauſe it hath a uſefullneſs in it. 'Tis given thus;

For what portion ſhould God above have in me? As if he had ſaid, When my eye is polluted with wanton looks, and when im pure thoughts have corrupted thoſe higher and more noble faculties of my ſoul, what ſhould God do with me? Or why ſhould he regard me? As man draws neer to God by the ſpiritual actings and motions of his mind, ſo by fleſhly motions he departs from him, and renders himſelf a ſubject unfit for God to own.

Hence Obſerve, God hath no part nor portion in a wicked man.

As wicked men have no part nor portion in God; ſo God hath no part nor portion in wicked men; God hath a portion only in Believers, and theirs only in him (Deut. 32. 9.) The Lords portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance: There we have both the words of the Text. When Peter (John. 13. 8.) ſaid to Chriſt, Thou ſhalt never waſh my feet; Jeſus anſwered him, if I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part with me. As they that are not waſhed have no part in Chriſt; ſo Chriſt hath no part in thoſe that are not waſhed; that is, he doth not look upon them as his own; or he doth not own them. The wicked are Satans portion, he owns them, and they (though few do it profeſſedly) own him. The greateſt part of mankind will fall to the Devils ſhare. Conſider what portion or intereſt God hath in you, if you do wickedly, he hath none at all. Impure thoughts, and wicked actions, defile a man both within and without, God will have his portion clean and holy; God hath and will have a portion among men, but it is a fair portion. The ſacrifices of old were of clean beaſts and of them without ſpot; none are the part and portion of God, but the clean and ſpotleſs. They that defile themſelves with adultery and fornication, God will judge, but he cannot approve. When God calleth for the heart as his portion, he means a pure heart, and a whole heart; he calls for our whole body to be his Temple, but it muſt be a chaſt body, a body free (through Grace) from defilements. (1 Cor. 6. 15.) Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Chriſt, ſhvll I then take the members of Chriſt, and make them the members of a Harlot? God forbid. Clean bodies, not the members of a Harlot, are the members of Chriſt. The Apoſtle joyns thoſe two together, the fornicator, and the prophane, and figures them both by Eſau who was caſt out, and in whom God had no part nor portion (Heb. 12. 16.) Leſt there be any fornicator or prophane perſon as Eſau, who for one morſel of meat ſold his birth-right. Even ſo doth every wicked and unclean perſon; he ſels his birth-right for a poor morſel of meat, for a vaniſhing pleaſure; theſe like Eſau are hated of God, he hath no pleaſure, nor portion in them: Yea (as the Lord ſpeaks in the Prophet concerning hated Eſau (Mal. 1. 3.) He will lay their Mountains and their heritage waſt for the Dragons of the Wilderneſs, and will at laſt do that againſt them for ever, which the Church complained God had done againſt her for a time, (Pſal. 44. 10.) He will break them ſore in the place of Dragons, and cover them with the ſhadow of death.

Thirdly, This verſe may be underſtood, as a query or queſtion, to which anſwer is made in the next verſe; What portion of God is there from above? &c. What hath God deſigned them to, and provided for them? I will tell you what (ſaith Job) Is not deſtruction to the wicked, and a ſtrange puniſhment to the workers of iniquity? This connexion is of like ſenſe with that of the Apoſtle (Rom. 6. 21.) What fruit had ye then of thoſe things whereof ye are now aſhamed? For the end of thoſe things is death. As here the queſtion is, What portion of God is there from above? &c. So there the queſtion is, What fruit had ye? To this the Apoſtle anſwers, The end of thoſe things is death. And Job's anſwer is the ſame, though preſented in a queſtion, Is not deſtruction to the wicked? That's a pregnant Expoſition, leading to the next verſe; only before I come to thoſe words take this Inference from the verſe in hand.

Job, we ſee, propounds this as a reaſon why he was ſo watchful over his eyes and heart, namely leſt it ſhould hinder his portion with God, or take God off from being his portion.

Then, A godly man may keep his heart off from doing evil, leſt doing it he ſhould keep off good from himſeef.

Thus Job a godly man tutor'd his ſoul, and thus any godly man may. When we are tempted to ſin, we may well demand, What portion ſhall we have from God? Or conclude we can have no portion worth the having: 'Tis beſt to watch againſt ſin, and over our own ſouls, becauſe we love holineſs, and deſire to pleaſe God, or becauſe we would not grieve him, theſe are the moſt ſpiritual Arguments of our abſtinence from worldly luſts, yet 'tis good to ſay, I will abſtain, and take care of mine eyes and heart leſt I ſin, becauſe ſin will hinder my receiving a portion from God, or weaken my plea with God for a portion. What was ill anſwered by that Kinſman, when he was invited to marry Ruth (Chap. 4. 6.) will be a good anſwer when we at any time are tempted to contract with ſin, or match with any wickedneſs. We cannot do it, leſt we mar our own inheritance. As ſelf-love might move us, if there were nothing elſe to move us, to do good, ſeeing by doing good we do moſt good to our ſelves; ſo ſelf-love may move us, were there no other motive not to do evil, ſeeing by doing evil we do moſt evil to our ſelves. Will any man knowingly ſpoil his own portion, and mar his own inheritance? If we have no love to God, none to holineſs, yet let us take heed of ſin, leſt we undo our ſelves, and loſe our portion. There is a ſelf-love, which is the root of all evil (2 Tim. 3. 1, 2.) This know alſo that in the laſt dayes perillous times ſhall come, for men ſhall be lovers of their own ſelves, covetous, boaſters, proud, blaſphemers, diſobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy. There is alſo a ſelf-love that is good, and is a root of all good; did men love themſelves truly, they would not be covetous but charitable; they would not be proud but humble, obedient, thankful, holy. True ſelf-love is ſo good, that it is the rule of loving others and doing them good. Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf; though we ought to turn from evil upon higher principles, yet we have need to deal with our ſouls upon this alſo, and upon all other Topicks (and all little enough) eſpecially upon thoſe two which are the moſt general and comprehenſive ones; the withholding of good from us, and the drawing of evil upon us, as it follows in the next verſe.

Verſe 3. Is not deſtruction to the wicked, and a ſtrange puniſhment to the workers of iniquity?

Whether we take theſe words as an Anſwer to the ſecond verſe, or as the ſecond reaſon of what Job aſſerted concerning himſelf in the firſt verſe, the meaning is alike; he would not hinder his own mercies, nor would he run upon his own miſchief.

איד Perditio pernicies interitus.

Is not deſtruction to the wicked?] Is not that their portion, and all the portion they can rationally expect from God? The word ſignifieth utter deſtruction, ruining deſtruction, ſuch as leaves nothing undeſtroyed, like that which the Prophet Nahum threatened the Lords Enemies with (Chap. 1. 9.) What do ye imagine againſt the Lord? He will make an utter end: Affliction ſhall not riſe up the ſecond time. The Ninevites and Aſſyrians, to whom the Prophet turns his ſpeech, thought they had to do only with the people of Iſrael and Judah, but the Lord ſaw himſelf concern'd and ſo imagin'd againſt and oppoſed in the imaginations or counſels which they took, and in the oppoſition which they made againſt his people; and therefore tells them of ſuch a deſtruction ready to fall upon them, as might evidence that the hand of God was in it; He will make an utter end; A conſuming end he means. He will make ſuch an end, as that he ſhall not need to begin again. He will deſtroy them as it were at one blow. Affliction ſhall not riſe a ſecond time. 'Tis a mercy and a favour when God having afflicted once, will not let affliction come again to deſtroy what is left. But it ſhews fulneſs of wrath when God deſtroyeth ſo fully at once that there's nothing left for an affliction to deſtroy if it ſhould come a ſecond time. Such a deep deſtruction, Job intended, when he ſaid, Is not deſtruction to

The wicked?] He doth not ſay, is not deſtruction to him that ſinneth? For then deſtruction muſt be to all; But, Is not deſtruction to the wicked? That is, to ſuch as love and live in ſin, to ſuch as trade and go on in ſin, adding ſin to ſin, drawing iniquity with cords of vanity, and ſin as it were with Cart-ropes; Is not deſtruction (to ſuch) to the wicked? Certainly it is. And though it be not as yet, yet certainly it ſhall be, it ſhall ſo certainly be, that he ſpeaks of it (as the fall of Babylon is propheſied, Rev. 14. 8.) in the preſent time, Is not deſtruction to the wicked? It is.

> Hence Note, Utter ruining deſtruction is the portion of wicked men, as ſurely as if they were already deſtroyed.

And if they are plainly dealt with, they muſt be told ſo, and if they would deal plainly and faithfully with their own ſouls, they muſt tell themſelves ſo. Wicked men alwayes flatter themſelves, and are often flattered with hopes of peace here and ſalvation hereafter. But the truth it ſelf hath ſaid, Deſtruction is to the wicked. I ſhall not inſiſt further upon it here, having met with it upon ſeveral paſſages of this Book, and ſomewhat enlarged upon it at the twenty-ninth verſe of the twentieth Chapter.

And a ſtrange puniſhment to the workers of iniquity.

The word puniſhment is not expreſſed in the Hebrew, but ſupplyed (to clear this ſenſe) by our Tranſlators. Now as Deſtruction in the former part of this verſe ſeems to ſtand in direct oppoſition to portion in the ſecond verſe. So the Word here rendred ſtrange puniſhment, or ſtrictly alienation, ſeems to ſtand in oppoſition to inheritance in the ſame verſe. A ſtranger doth not inherit. And alienation is either a violent turning of a man out of his inheritance, or a legal paſſing of it from him to another. At the twelfth verſe of the Prophecy of Obadiah, 'tis ſaid, Thou ſhouldeſt not have looked on the day of thy Brother, in the day that he became a ſtranger; Or in the day of his alienation when he was thruſt out of his inheritance, and ſtrangers took poſſeſſion of it: Or according to this rendring of Job's Text, in the day of thy brothers ſtrange puniſhment, thou ſhouldeſt not have looked upon him rejoycingly, or inſultingly, but when ſtrange evils and troubles did befal him (which we render fully, In the day that he became a ſtranger) thou oughteſt to have pitied and prayed for him. Mr. Broughton tranſlates this place in Job, neer in ſence to that in Obadiah, And be not ill doers rid away? That is, are they not driven out or baniſhed out of houſe and home? According to which reading their alienation or being made ſtrangers is their particular puniſtment; but according to ours their puniſhment in general, whatſoever it is, is a ſtrange one. Is there not a ſtrange puniſhment? (ſome render a monſtrous puniſhment) to the workers of iniquity?

This ſtrangeneſs of their puniſhment, may be underſtood two wayes.

Firſt, As intimating ſuch a puniſhment, as God doth not uſually inflict upon any: That is ſtrange to us that is ſeldome ſeen or done.

> Hence Obſerve, God puniſheth ſome wicked men, in unheard of and unuſual wayes.

As the corruptions of men ſometimes bring forth new and ſtrange births of ſin, ſuch as either to the matter or manner, have either not at all or only rarely been brought forth or committed: So God inflicts upon ſome ſinners new and rare puniſhments, ſuch as either have not at all or very rarely been inflicted. Thus the Prophet threatneth (Iſa. 28. 21.) The Lord ſhall riſe up as in mount Perazim, he ſhall be wrath as in the Valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his ſtrange work, and bring to paſs his act, his ſtrange act. This ſtrange work, this ſtrange act of the Lord againſt a provoking people may be expounded in general of all his works of judgment, becauſe judgments are the ſtrange works of God, in compariſon of his works of mercy, mercy pleaſeth him, or as the Prophet ſpeaks (Mic. 7. 18.) He delighteth in mercy; and he did ſo eſpecially with reference to the people of Iſrael, his own people, who had enjoyed the multitude of his mercies, manifold mercies, and that for a long time together. Therefore any work of judgment upon them was a ſtrange work. Now as all puniſhments are (in a ſenſe) the ſtrange work of God, compared with his works of mercy (though we know, judgment and mercy according to occaſions are alike to him) ſo ſome puniſhments are ſtrange puniſhments in compariſon of others. There are puniſhments that we do not wonder at, they are common; and there are ſtrange puniſhments, wonderful puniſhments, ſuch as we ſtand ama'zed at. Moſes (Deut. 28. 59. 61.) denounced theſe alſo againſt the Iſraelites in caſe of diſobedience; Then the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy ſeed, even great plagues, and of long continuance, and ſore ſickneſſes, and of long continuance. Moreover, he will bring upon thee all the diſeaſes of Egypt which thou waſt afraid of, and they ſhall cleave unto thee, alſo every ſickneſs, and every plague, which is not written in the Book of this Law, them will the Lord bring upon thee, until thou be deſtroyed. Here are ſtrange afflictions, ſuch as had not been written or heard of, I will make thy plagues wonderfull; Thy plagues ſhall be ſuch as either have not been ſeen at all or rarely ſeen.

Secondly, It may be called a ſtrange puniſhment, with reſpect to the perſons puniſhed; they who ſpend their years in vain delights, in fulfilling the luſts of the fleſh, and following the courſe of this World, are not uſed to puniſhment, nor acquainted with ſorrow. Puniſhment is ſtrange to them that live in pleaſure; they know not what it means, nor have they any experience of it, When they feel ſmart, or pain, they feel that which they never felt before. It is ſaid of Chriſt in the Prophecy (Iſa. 53. 3.) He is deſpiſed and rejected of men, a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with grief: Grief was no ſtrange thing to Chriſt, he had been trained up to it; but as for men of joy, wanton and voluptuous perſons, they are not at all acquainted with grief, and they hope alwayes to eſcape acquaintance with it. And therefore as any puniſhment is ſtrange to thoſe who have conſtantly received favours and mercies from God, ſo is it alſo to them who have conſtantly accuſtomed themſelves to carnal contentments and delights.

Calamitatem inuſitatam & cui minime aſſueverant ſuſtinent. Druſ.

> Hence Note, God can quickly and often doth make them know ſorrow, who never knew it, nor were uſed to it before.

Rich men know not what poverty means; yet God can make them poor, and melt down their vaſt eſtates, their heaps of wealth in a moment, like heaps of ſnow before the Sun, and bring them to ſtark beggery: Is not this to ſuch a ſtrange puniſhment? So when a man that hath lived at his full Table, (as the Glutton is deſcribed) faring deliciouſly every day, not knowing what hunger means; when (I ſay) God brings this man to a morſel of bread, or as it is ſaid in the Lamentations of Jeremy, to embrace dung-hills, and ſcrape there for a mouldy cruſt, is not this a ſtrange puniſhment to him? Again, When a man that hath been healthful and ſtrong all his dayes, never knowing what an hours ſickneſs meaneth, When (I ſay) God ſends diſeaſes to waſt and weaken, or to torment and vex his body, ſuch as the Gout, Stone, &c. Is not this to him a ſtrange puniſhment? Many may ſay in reference to their afflictions, as the Lord ſpake concerning Ephraim, (Jer. 31. 18.) I have ſurely heard Ephraim bemoaning himſelf thus; Thou haſt chaſtized me, and I was chaſtized as a Bullock unaccuſtomed to the yoak. Ephraim was wont to be dandled on the knee, or laid in the boſome like a pleaſant Child, not to be under the yoak like a ſlave or a captive. As all carnal men are like Bullocks unaccuſtomed to the yoak of active obedience, (they are the ſons of Belial) ſo when God lays the yoak of paſſive obedience upon the neck of ſome of his Ephraims, they are unaccuſtomed to it; much more are many of the workers of iniquity. God leaves them long to their way and their will; and as it is ſaid of David's indulgence to Adoniah, (1 Kings 1. 6.) that he had not diſpleaſed him at any time, by ſaying, why haſt thou done ſo; So the Lord (poſſibly) doth not diſpleaſe ſome workers of iniquity for a long time, by any kind of outward puniſhment for what they have done; but he can ſoon do it, and hath often done it, putting ſuch a yoak of ſuffering upon their fair and tender necks as they never felt, much leſs were accuſtomed to before. Their puniſhment whatſoever it is, muſt needs be ſtrange to them, who have all their former dayes been ſtrangers unto puniſhment.

Further, the Word puniſhment, is not expreſſed in the Hebrew text, but only implyed and couched in another word. And ſo the Scripture ſpeaks elſewhere, ſpeaking of puniſhment (Amos. 4. 12, 13.) Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Iſrael, and becauſe I will do thus to thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Iſrael. The Lord threatens the people of Iſrael, for their incorrigibleneſs under puniſhment, with other puniſhments, then Famine and Sword and peſtilence (all which they had formerly felt) but he doth not tell them how or in what kind he will puniſh them, but leaves them to imagine the worſt, or intimates that he would bring upon them worſe evils then they could imagine; Thus will I do unto thee, &c. So here when Job ſaith; Is not deſtruction to the wicked, and a ſtrange to the workers of iniquity? not ſaying what ſtrange he means. Surely his meaning is, that it is an evil ſo ſtrange, that he was either loth or knew not how to expreſs it, which ſhall come upon the workers of iniquity.

Yea ſome conceive that this Word which we render as an adjective or Epithete, ſtrange, is to be taken ſubſtantially, for ſtrangeneſs or Alienation, and ſo is not an intimation of ſome other puniſhment, but an expreſſion of that particular puniſhment which ſhall come upon the workers of iniquity. And then the words are rendred thus; Is not ſtrangeneſs (eſtrangement or Alienation) to the workers of iniquity? But you will ſay, what puniſhment is there in that, or what puniſhment is that? I anſwer, The worſt of all puniſhments. Strangeneſs ſhall be to the workers of iniquity; that is, They ſhall be ſtrangers to God, they ſhall be ſtrangers, not only to their own habitations, and relations, to their kindred and Countrey (though that is ſometimes their puniſhment) but they ſhall be ſtrangers to God alſo. As they have not owned him in his wayes, the wayes of holineſs, ſo he will not own them in their wayes, the wayes of wickedneſs.

Hence Note, Alienation or eſtrangement from God, is the worſt of all puniſhments.

God is the chief Good, there is none good but God, therefore alienation from him muſt needs be the greateſt evil. Who can ſhew us any good, if God ſhew us none?

There is a twofold eſtrangment or Alienation from God.

Firſt, Active, when men alienate or eſtrange themſelves from God; for as all men are ſtrangers from God by nature (Eph. 4. 18.) Having their underſtandings darkned, being alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in them, becauſe of the blindneſs of their minds (the heart of a natural man goeth off from God, and the thoughts of God, he doth not like to think of God, or, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 1. 28.) to retain God in his knowledge; now as all men are thus alienated from God in the ſtate of nature) ſo many are much more alienated from him by ſinful practiſes; man grows more a ſtranger to God by renewed acts of ſin, then he is by the ſinfulneſs of his old condition; and eſpecially by acts of uncleanneſs, againſt which Job profeſſed (ver. 1.) and by acts of unrighteouſneſs, againſt which he profeſſeth (ver. 5.) they that deſire union with the creature ſinfully, either by acts of wantonneſs or of injuſtice, ſhall find their hearts going further off from communion with God. Thus 'tis ſaid of Solomon (1 Kings 11. 4.) It came to paſs when Solomon was old, that his Wives turned away his heart after other gods, and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as was the heart of David his Father. His Wives, that is, the ill counſel or example of his Wives, and his inordinate affection to his Wives, eſtranged him from God; that worſhip and ſervice which he owed and ſhould have given to God, he gave to Idols. As that luſt turned him away, ſo any luſt turns man away, yea takes man away from God; as the Prophet ſpeaks (Hoſ. 4. 11.) Whoredome Wine, and new Wine, take away the heart; that is, they make a man heart-leſs, ſpirit-leſs to any thing that is good, much more to any pure communion with God himſelf. And as theſe take away the heart from whatſoever is holy, juſt, and good, ſo they pitch and place the heart upon baſe things; new Wine takes away the heart of a man from man, and leaves him only the heart of a Beaſt. He that is drowned in ſenſuality, loſeth the uſe of common ſenſe and reaſon, how much more is he below the exerciſe of Grace and Godlineſs? Even a godly man falling into ſin, ſhall find an eſtrangement from God upon his heart, unleſs he ſpeedily riſe again by repentance.

Impuri homines à re divina (quod ingens quoquè ſcelus eſt & ſceleris pœna) abalienato ſunt animo.

Secondly, As there is an active, ſo a paſſive alienation from God. Some men are caſt out, or (as it were) excommunicated by God; As there is a paſſive alienation from the Church of God, when a corrupt member is caſt out and cut off by a juſt cenſure or ſentence from fellowſhip with it. (For as ſome withdraw ſcandalouſly, that is, without any juſt cauſe from the Church, and forſake (againſt which the Apoſtle cautions the Hebrews, Chap. 10. 25) the aſſembling themſelves together, ſo others for a juſt cauſe, that is, for ſcandal, are caſt out of the Church) ſo when any withdraw and alienate themſelves from God by following their luſts, then God caſts them out, and will have nothing to do with them, but lets them ſtand as perſons excommunicated and baniſhed from his preſence. God cannot bear but loaths unchaſt perſons, and ſaith to them, be gone, get ye hence; you have ſtrangely gone from me, and my heart is gone and eſtrang'd from you. Thus the Lord proteſted againſt his own people for their Apoſtacies (Jer. 15. 1.) Then ſaid the Lord unto me, though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me, yet my mind could not be towards this people; caſt them out of my ſight, and let them go forth. There is a dreadful alienation of God from a perſon or a people, when he openly profeſſeth his heart cannot be towards them. We have a Prophecy of this concerning both the Leaders and whole body of the Jewiſh Nation, who oppoſed the miniſtry of Chriſt for the ſalvation of his people (Zech. 11. 8.) Three Shepheards alſo (that is, as moſt interpret, the Scribes, Phariſees and Saduces) I cut off in one moneth, and my ſoul loathed them, and their ſoul alſo abhorred me. Here we ſee a reciprocal alienation, they abhorred Chriſt, and Chriſt loathed them; they never left abhorring Chriſt, till they had (by death) caſt him out of the World; and Chriſt never left loathing them, till he had caſt them out of the Church, and made them wanderers among the Nations. Holy David ſets out this alienation of God diſtinctly (Pſal. 5. 4, 5, 6.) Thou art not a God that hath pleaſure in wickedneſs (that is, in wicked men) neither ſhall evil (that is, evil perſons) dwell with thee: The fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in thy ſight, thou hateſt all workers of iniquity, thou ſhalt deſtroy them that ſpeak leaſing, the Lord will abhor the bloody and deceitful man. Here the Lords alienation from the wicked is ſet forth gradually, and ſeems to riſe by ſix ſteps. Firſt, He hath no pleaſure in them; Secondly, Ἀπαλλοτρίωσις τοῖς ποιῦσιν ἀνομίαν. Sept. Poteſt ſimplicitèr intelligi cum Græcis ἀπαλλοτρίωσις alienatio, quod eos ſit à ſe abalienaturus prorſus dominus & in tenebras exteriores ablegaturus. Merc.

ly, They ſhall not dwell with him; Thirdly, He caſteth them forth; They ſhall not ſtand in his ſight; Fourthly, His heart turns from them; Thou hateſt all the workers of iniquity; Fifthly, His hand is turned upon them; Thou ſhalt deſtroy them that ſpeak leaſing; Sixthly, His ſpirit riſeth againſt them, and is alienated from them; The Lord will abhor the bloody man. This eſtrangement is indeed a ſtrange (yet a certain) puniſhment to

The workers of iniquity.] Theſe words, the workers of iniquity, may be conſidered two wayes.

Malorum Artifices.

Firſt, As intending (not all Degrees of ſinners, or ſinners of every Degree, but) the higheſt Degree of ſinners, great and groſs ſinners, reſolved and wilful ſinners. Such as ſin induſtriouſly, and (as it were) artificially with skill and care to get themſelves a name, as if they had an ambition to be accounted workmen that need not be aſhamed in doing that whereof all ought to be aſhamed; theſe in ſtrictneſs of Scripture ſenſe are workers of iniquity.

Hence Note, Notorious ſinners, make ſin their buſineſs, or their trade.

Though every ſin be a work of iniquity, yet only ſome ſinners are workers of iniquity; and they who are called ſo make it there calling to ſin. We read of ſome (Rev. 22-15.) who love and make a lie. A lie may be told by thoſe who neither love nor make it; but there are lie-makers, and they (ſure enough) are lovers of a lie. Such Craftſmen in ſinning are alſo deſcribed (Pſal. 58. 2.) Yea in heart you work wickedneſs. you weigh the violence of your hands in the earth. The Pſalmiſt doth not ſay, they had wickedneſs in their heart, but they did work it there; The heart is a ſhop within, an under-ground ſhop, there they did cloſely contrive forge and hammer out their wicked purpoſes, and fit them into actions: Yea they weighed the violence of their hands in the Earth. That's an alluſion to Merchants, who buy and ſell by weight, they weigh their Commodity to an ounce, they do not give it out in groſs but by exact weight Thus (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) they weigh the violence of their hands, they do not oppreſs groſly, but with a kind of exactneſs and skill, they ſit down and conſider what and how much violence they may uſe in ſuch a caſe, or how much ſuch a perſon may endure, or ſuch a ſeaſon may bear; they are wiſer then to do all at once, or all to one, leſt they ſpoil all. They weigh what they do, though what they do be ſo bad that it will hold no weight, when God comes to weigh it. Nor do they arrive at this skill preſently, but after they have (as it were) ſerved an apprenticeſhip for it; and they bind themſelves to the trade very early; for as it follows at the third verſe of that Pſalm, The wicked are eſtranged from the womb, they go aſtray as ſoon as they are born, ſpeaking lies, that is, they are eſtranged both by nature, and by early practice; they loſe no time, they go to it young, even as ſoon as they are born, that is as ſoon as they are fit for any uſe, or to do any thing, they are uſing and fitting themſelves to do wickedly.

Secondly, as theſe workers of iniquity may be taken for all ſtudied or great ſinners of any kind; ſo for that ſpecial kind or ſort of ſinners, who give themſelves over to uncleanneſs and wantonneſs, which is the ſpecial iniquity which Job here diſclaims, and from which he had, by a ſacred covenant with his eyes, laboured to preſerve himſelf. Is not a ſtrange puniſhment to the workers of (this) iniquity.

Hence Obſerve, God doth often inflict unheard of or ſtrange puniſhments upon unclean perſons.

As there is no reſolved ſinner, but God followeth him with puniſhments; ſo he follows ſuch ſinners with ſtrange puniſhments. And as they often deviſe new wayes to ſatisfie (which will never be ſatisfied) their luſt, So God may be ſaid to deviſe new wayes to ſatisfie (which muſt be ſatisfied) his Juſtice. There is a new and a ſtrange diſeaſe peculiar to unclean perſons, moſt know how it is called, and many feel the ſad effects of it; we may well call it a new and a ſtrange puniſhment, becauſe it was not heard of till theſe latter Ages of the world: The Italian Neopolitans felt it firſt, and now 'tis commonly called the French diſeaſe. How often do they live and lie in grievous pain, who have been greedy of unlawful and forbidden pleaſures? How often are ſuch forc'd to ſpend their time and ſtate upon medicines and Phyſicians, to patch up a poor rotting carkaſs, which they have ruin'd by their folly? With what incurable aches are ſuch tormented? What feebleneſs falls upon their limbs? How are their ſenſes ſpent and ſtupified? How unſavory is the breath, how inſufferable the ſtench of theſe painted Sepulchres? What loathſome ſores break out upon them? What Armies of diſeaſes aſſault them? How doth old age haſten upon them? How many deaths do they endure before they die? He that thus ſows to the fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reap a plentiful harveſt of corruption. God finds out ſtrange puniſhments for theſe workers of iniquity. Hence Solomon gives this warning againſt the whoriſh Woman (Prov. 7. 25, 26, 27.) Let not thine heart decline to her wayes, go not aſtray in her paths; for ſhe hath caſt down many wounded, yea many ſtrong men have been ſlain by her, her houſe is the way to Hell, going down to the Chambers of death. The ſin of uncleanneſs doth not only wound the body, but kill it; The ſtrange Woman caſteth ſtrong men down, not only upon a bed of ſickneſs, but of death: Yea, ſhe hath ſlain many not in reſpect of their temporal but eternal life, ſhe ſends them to Hell as well as to the grave. They who are poſſeſſed with this unclean ſpirit, are not only ſpiritually but (upon the matter) corporally dead while they live; And may be ſaid like him in the Goſpel (Mark 5. 3.) who in another ſenſe was poſſeſſed with an unclean Spirit, to have their dwelling among the tombs; and when they die indeed and go to their tombs, what hope can we have of their going any whither but to Hell? and therefore it followeth in this place (ver. 27.) Her houſe is the way to Hell. For ſeeing in her houſe that courſe of ſinning is practis'd and continued, which muſt needs (without repentance) end or conclude in Hell, her houſe is juſtly called the way to Hell. Thus, as at the firſt, ſo ſtill death worketh by the Woman, yet, as then, ſo ſtill man cannot excuſe himſelf by the Woman, ſeeing he hath been ſo often warned, that while he goeth to the Chambers of a ſtrange Woman, he is going down to the Chambers of death. O how ſtrange, how unlooked for (though they have no reaſon to look for any other) will that puniſhment be to theſe workers of iniquity?

Laſtly, Seeing there is (in one ſenſe or other) a ſtrange puniſhment to the workers of any iniquity, we are admoniſht, To meditate often upon the ſad conſequents of ſin (which at beſt and at leaſt is a work of iniquity) that our hearts may be awed from it. How often doth the Lord lay the ax of puniſhment (in his holy Word) to the root of all iniquity, that he might cut it down, yea root it up? And we have but need to make uſe of the terror of God, as well as of his mercy, to preſerve our ſouls from the growth and curſed fruits of it. Iniquity works in us, that we may work iniquity; O let the bitter fruit of iniquity work in us a holy reſolution to lay aſide or not to meddle with that work. It is good to forbear the works of iniquity, becauſe of the evil that follows them, though it is beſt to avoid them, becauſe of the evil that is in them. 'Tis our wiſdom to make uſe of the fear of Hell to keep us from that which leads to Hell. The fear of loſing the favour of God ſhould prevail moſt with us, but the fear of pulling down wrath upon our ſelves may prevail much with us to abandon and abominate all the works of iniquity. Thus Job affected his own heart to abandon them; for (as it follows) ſaith he,

Verſe 4. Doth not he ſee my wayes, and count all my ſteps?

This verſe contains (as was ſhewed before) the third reaſon of what he affirmed in the firſt verſe. The ſtrict covenant which he had made with his eyes; 'Tis alſo a reaſon of what he ſaid in the ſecond and third verſes, That God would ſurely withhold all good from him, and bring all evil upon him, if he had been wicked, or done wickedly. The argument may be gathered up thus;

He that hates all the wayes and works of iniquity, and is able to puniſh them, will ſurely puniſh them, when he ſeeth and diſcovereth them.

But God who hates and is able to puniſh all the wayes and works of iniquity, doth alſo ſee and diſcover them all.

Therefore he will ſurely puniſh them.

The latter part of the aſſumption, is the plain ſubject of this fourth verſe.

Doth not he ſee my wayes? &c.] That God ſeeth all men and their wayes, was an article of Job's faith; and therefore he could not but believe that God ſaw him and his. Doth not he ſee my wayes? How blind were I if I did not ſee his truth! God is all ſight, all eye, his eye beholdeth all things. Doth not he ſee my wayes? Surely he doth, that is, He knoweth all that I do; He knoweth all that I ſpeak, yea he knoweth what I think. The ſight of God is the knowledge of God, and the object of that knowledge is all things, whether reſerved in the heart, as our thoughts, or uttered at the lips, as our words, or any way effected and brought to iſſue, as our deeds; which is yet more fully expreſſed in the next clauſe.

And count all my ſteps?] As ſeeing is an act of ſenſe; ſo counting is a work of the underſtanding. God (as it were) acts both the Arithmetician and the Watchman: He ſeeth or obſerveth all our wayes, and he counts or reckons all our ſteps, not ſome of, but all our ſteps. And when we find theſe two words in conjunction, wayes and ſteps, the Word wayes, may be taken for what is inward, Doth not he ſee my wayes? that is, my purpoſes, and intentions, my thoughts and reſolutions. And then ſteps denote works and actions, which are external and progreſſive. Our ſteps or acts are guided and ſhaped according to our counſels and deſignments.

Doth not he count all my ſteps?] The word ſignifies not only to take the count or number of things, how many they are, but alſo to judge and diſtinguiſh concerning them, what they are; as alſo to preſerve a record or keep a regiſter of them, both as to their number and their nature; and hence Sepher, ſignifieth any Catalogue of names or the Muſter-roll of an Army, or any Book wherein matters are digeſted, rehearſed, and declared. So that here Job gives glory to God in the acknowledgment of that perfect knowledge which he had of every particular turn and motion of his life, which he calleth his ſteps, in purſuance of that frequent ſcriptural metaphor, which we have alſo in the former part of this verſe, calling the general courſe of a man, whether outward of his converſation, or inward of his cogitations, His way.

I have met with like paſſages ſetting forth the omniſcience of God elſewhere in this Book, and expreſly in the ſame terms with this (Chap. 14. 16.) and therefore I ſhall only give ſome brief touches from both parts of the verſe together.

Note, First, There is nothing of man hid from or a ſecret unto God.

He that ſeeth our wayes, and counteth all our ſteps, cannot be a ſtranger to what we are, to what we are doing or have done. The Lord doth not ſee in general only, or take a light tranſient view of us, but he views us exactly, and (as it were) caſts or ſums up all our ſteps, and he doth it two wayes; Firſt, as to their number; Secondly, as to their nature; He knows how many ſteps we take, how many acts paſs from us. All finite numbers (and there can be no other) are but as one to him, who is infinitely one. And as God knows how many our ſteps are, ſo he knows of what kind and quality they are, whether good or bad, right or wrong, holy or prophane. As he will not call that work evil which is good to injure us, ſo he will never call that good which is evil to favour us. (2 Chron. 16. 9.) The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole Earth, to ſhew himſelf ſtrong in the behalf of them whoſe heart is perfect towards him; and whatſoever imperfection there is either in the heart or way of man, God quickly finds it out; as it follows in the ſame place; Herein (ſaith the Lord by his Prophet to Aſa) thou haſt done fooliſhly, from henceforth thou ſhalt have wars. Aſa, a good King no ſooner ſtept awry but the Lord took notice of it, and preſently told him, wherein; Herein thou haſt done fooliſhly; this act is thy fault and thy folly. For, as Solomon aſſureth us (Prov. 5. 21.) The wayes of man are before the eyes of the Lord, ſo he aſſureth us that he pondereth all his goings, he doth not only number them but ponder and weigh them, he can weigh them to a grain, and though he (through grace) giveth his people many grains of allowance, and is not extream to mark what they do amiſs, yet he doth not give them one grain of allowance to do what is amiſs. For as the ſame Solomon tells us (Prov. 15. 3.) that the eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good; ſo he beholdeth the good to reward it, and the evil to puniſh it.

Hence take this Corollary, God who ſeeth and takes an account of all our wayes and ſteps, will certainly puniſh thoſe who take a liberty to ſtep out of thoſe wayes, which himſelf hath chalked out, and commanded us to walk in.

If God did not ſee our wayes, we might ſin and go unpuniſhed, but foraſmuch as he ſeeth them with purer eyes then to behold iniquity and approve it, he is ingaged both in juſtice and honour to puniſh all that iniquity of our wayes which he ſeeth or beholdeth. David makes this the very deſign of Gods ſuperintendency over the wayes of men (Pſal. 10. 14.) Thou haſt ſeen it; for thou beholdeſt miſchief and ſpite to requite it with thy hand; the poor committeth himſelf unto thee, thou art the helper of the fatherleſs. Thus the Pſalmiſt repreſents the Lord as having taken a view or ſurveigh of the wayes of men, Thou haſt ſeen, what had God ſeen? Even all that wickedneſs and oppreſſion of the poor ſpoken of in the former part of the Pſalm, as alſo the blaſphemy of the wicked againſt himſelf. (ver. 13.) Wherefore doth the wicked contemn God? He hath ſaid in his heart, thou wilt not requite it. What ſaith the Pſalmiſt concerning God, to this vain, confident man; Thou (ſaith he) beholdeth miſchief and ſpite, but to what purpoſe? The next words tells us that, to requite it with thy hand. As thou haſt ſeen what miſchief they have done ſpitefully, ſo in due time thou wilt requite it righteouſly. The Lord is not a bare ſpectator, he is both a rewarder, and an avenger. Therefore from the ground of this truth, that the Lord ſeeth all our wayes, and counteth all our ſteps, we (as the Prophet exhorts (Iſa. 3. 10, 11.) may ſay to the righteous, that it ſhall be well with them, for they ſhall eat the fruit of their doings. We may alſo ſay, woe unto the wicked, it ſhall be ill with him, for the reward of his hands ſhall be given him. Only Idols, which have eyes and ſee not, have hands and ſtrike not.

Thirdly, This truth, it ſeems was much upon Job's ſpirit; for he ſpeaks it or brings it in with an emphatical quickneſs; Doth not he ſee my wayes?

Hence Note, A gracious heart conſiders himſelf much and alwayes under the eye of God.

And as it ſhews a very holy frame of heart to do ſo, ſo it is an excellent means to keep the heart in a ſteddy frame of holineſs. Thus 'tis ſaid in that prophecy of Chriſt (Pſal. 16. 8.) I have ſet the Lord always before me, becauſe he is at my right hand, I ſhall not be moved. He that ſets the Lord, alwayes before him, ſuppoſeth the Lord alwayes ſeeing him; As by faith he ſeeth the Lord, who is inviſible, ſo he conſidereth himſelf as viſible and naked to the Lord; and becauſe the Lord is at his right hand, therefore he riſeth up to this immoveable confidence, that he ſhall never be moved. Temptation ſhall not prevailingly move him to ſin againſt God, nor ſhall afflictions and ſufferings prevailingly move him to deſert the ways and work of God. Our hearts are fixed truſting in and obeying God, or in a holy truſt upon and obedience unto God, while the eye of our faith is fixed upon God, as having his eye of omniſcience fixed on us. As this remembrance, that God ſeeth us is a powerful means to keep us from ſinking under affliction, ſo from yielding unto temptation. It is impoſſible to live either comfortably or holily, unleſs we make God always preſent with us. As, in that full preſence of God, ſpoken of at the eleventh verſe of this Pſalm, for which we wait, there is fulneſs of joy with fulneſs of holineſs, and at his right hand there are pleaſures (with purity) for evermore; ſo, as we are more filled with with the preſence of God here, both our joy and our holineſs are the fuller, and as we get God more at our right hand, we likewiſe get more both pleaſure and purity while we are in this world.

Laſtly, Whereas Job made this ſight of God a motive of his making a Covenant with his eyes.

Note, A gracious heart is ſweetly over-awed by the ſerious thoughts of the preſence of God with him, and of his eye upon him.

Thus Joſeph argued the matter both with his wanton Miſtriſs, and with his own ſoul, (Gen. 39. 9.) How then can I do this great wickedneſs and ſin againſt God? As if he had ſaid, ſhould I conſent to do this great wickedneſs, I can no more keep out of the ſight of God while I do it, then I can keep to the rule or Law of God while I do it; As therefore I hate to do it in the latter reſpect, ſo I am afraid to do it in the former reſpect.

The Apoſtle exhorts Servants to obey their Maſters according to the fleſh, (that is, their earthly Maſters) in all things, not with eye ſervice as men-pleaſers, but in ſingleneſs of heart, fearing God. To ſerve men meerly becauſe or while their eyes is upon us, proves us ſuch as would pleaſe men in our ſervice, though the ſervice of ſuch is indeed pleaſing to no man who knows or finds it to be ſuch. And ſurely to ſerve God in doing good or avoiding evil, meerly becauſe he ſeeth us, or hath his eye upon us, is ſuch a piece of eye-ſervice as renders our perſons not only unpleaſing but odious to God, how much ſoever the ſervice we do is in its own nature pleaſing to him. And if God forbiddeth us to ſerve one another with eye ſervice, then much more doth he forbid us to ſerve himſelf ſo. Nevertheleſs, though all eye-ſervice be unacceptable to God, yet he accepts it well that we ſhould ſet him alwayes before our eyes, doing every good thing as in his ſight, and forbearing to do any evil becauſe we are in his ſight, A godly man abſtains from doing evil not only becauſe he believes God ſeeth what he doth, but becauſe he hates it; a wicked man doth the evil which himſelf loves, becauſe he hopes God ſeeth him not in doing it, or that he can hide from him what he hath done.

That which Adulterers do moſt harden themſelves by is, that as they are ſure no man ſees them, ſo they preſume God ſees them not. And we may conceive that Job adds this as a reaſon which kept his heart in compaſs, with ſpecial reference to that ſin, which himſelf had diſclaimed in the firſt verſe, becauſe unclean perſons uſually flatter themſelves into this falſe hope, that God doth not ſee them in their dark retirements while they commit that ſin.

VERS. 5, 6.

If I have walked with vanity, or if my foot hath haſted to deceit;
Let me be weighed in an even balance, that God may know mine integrity.

The ſcope of Job in theſe two verſes, and the two which follow, is to acquit himſelf from the ſuſpition or imputation of doing wrong to others that himſelf might gain by it.

Verſe 5. If I have walked with vanity, or if my foot hath haſted to deceit, &c.

This verſe is expounded by ſome relatively, and that in a twofold relation. Firſt, to the words immediately fore going; Doth not he (that is, God) ſee my wayes, and count all my ſteps? Doth not he ſee it, if I have walked with vanity, or if my foot hath haſted to deceit? As if he had ſaid, God who ſeeth all my wayes, knoweth whether or no I have walked with vanity, &c. Intimating alſo that he had abſtained and turned his foot from all falſe wayes, becauſe he knew or was aſſured that all his wayes were known to God, and that he would puniſh him for any wilful error of his wayes. Secondly, Theſe words are expounded with relation to that wiſh which followeth at the ſixth verſe; Let me be weighed in an even ballance. As if Job had ſaid, If I have walked as you ſay I have, let that be tryed, and let me appear in mine own colours, or let me be weighed that it may appear how light and vain I have been in my walkings; if I have been ſo; I am willing to be weighed and thereby to be diſcovered whether I have walkt in wayes of vanity, or have haſtened to deceit.

Others take the words abſolutely, and independently, only ſuppoſing Job's uſual imprecation in theſe caſes; And then the ſenſe of this verſe, is plainly no more but this. If I have walked with vanity, or my foot hath haſted to deceit. Then let the righteous God avenge it, let evil befal me; and he points us to the particular evil at the eighth verſe, Then let me ſow and let another eat, yea let my off-ſpring be rooted out.

Once more, ſome read the words interrogatively, or by way of Queſtion; Have I walked with vanity? Or hath my foot haſted to deceit? Surely no; the queſtion carries a ſtrong negation, I have neither done ſo nor ſo.

But I rather add here to the former reading Job here aſſirming of himſelf by a ſolemn imprecation, that he had not walked with vanity, while he ſaith,

If I have walked with vanity, &c.] Walking implyeth frequent acts, or a courſe of life, as hath been ſhewed from ſeveral texts in this Book. For as every act of our lives is a ſtep, ſo the whole of our actions, is our walk. If I have walked

With vanity.] Or if vanity and I have been companions, or have walked together. He warns the Epheſians (Chap. 5. 11.) to have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs but to reprove them rather. We chuſe thoſe ſins as our fellows and companions with which we conſtantly walk. 'Tis bad enough to walk with vain perſons, but 'tis worſe to walk with vanity; Job proteſted againſt both while he names the worſt of them, the latter; If I have walked with

Cum temeritate.

Vanity.] The Word ſignifies alſo inconſiderateneſs or raſhneſs; As if he had ſaid, If I have been unadviſed or fooliſh or heady in my walking, then, &c. The oppoſite whereof is, circumſpect walking, to which the Apoſtle exhorts (Eph. 5. 15.) We may alſo tranſlate it, unprofitableneſs; that which is vain is unprofitable, it produceth no benefit, no good, either to others or our ſelves. A vain man is a meer outſide, an empty nothing; he is but ſounding braſs and a tinkling Cymbal; a meer Cipher without a figure, he ſtands for nought; what then is vanity, but as the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 40. 17.) Leſs then nothing.

The Septuagint render in the concrete, If I have walked with mockers. What are mockers and ſcoffers, but vain perſons? Nor doth any thing more diſcover vanity of ſpirit, then mocking. Now they who walk with ſuch vain perſons, walk alſo with vanity, and they that walk with any vanity, cannot be better then vain perſons. Though a man be not known by himſelf, yet he is known by his company; any of theſe tranſlations may anſwer Job's purpoſe.

Εἰ δὲ ἤμην πεπορευμένος μετὰ γελοιαστῶν. Si inceſſi cū irriſoribus. Sept.

Yet I ſhall take the word more generally.

Firſt, For any ſinful way, or courſe of life. Sin and vanity uſualy expreſs one another; and therefore to walk in ſin is to walk in vanity. Secondly, To walk with vanity, is to purſue and ſeek after any worldly thing, or the things which are preſent. And ſo the meaning is, if I have made it my buſineſs to get the World, this were a vanity; the beſt of meer worldly things are vanity, yea vanity of vanities, ſaith the Preacher, vanity of vanities, all is vanity (Eccl. 1. 2.) The vanity whereof Solomon the inſpired preacher ſpeaketh, is the contentment which worldly good things promiſe, but cannot perform or make good. And ſo they are vanity of vanities, that is the greateſt vanity, ſuperlative vanity, or more then vanity, if any thing can be more vain, then vanity it ſelf is. Yea the Preacher as if he had a mind to ſay more of worldly things but could not, ſaith the ſame again, and leſt he ſhould not have ſaid all, he ſaith once more, All is vanity. And though nothing of this world is vanity conſidered ſimply in it ſelf (for the contrary aſſertion carrieth a reflection upon the wiſdom of him who created the world and all things in it) yet in three reſpects all worldly things are altogether vanity: Firſt, As compared with thoſe better things of the world to come, or with eternals. Secondly, As conſidered in their utter inability to advance man to the enjoyment of thoſe things which are eternal; or the bleſſedneſs of the World to come. Thirdly, As uſed by fallen man, whoſe firſt ſin made the creature ſubject to vanity, and whoſe after-ſins, in the acting and fulfilling of his luſts, have made it to him it to him a vain ſubject. And therefore as one of the Ancients gave very ſerious warning, If men were truely wiſe, They would write this divine ſentence upon the palms of their hands, and upon their garments, upon the Gates of their houſes, but eſpecially upon their hearts and conſciences, Vanity of Vanities, All is vanity. Thirdly, To walk with vanity, is to deal falſly, and then vanity in the former part of the verſe and deceit in the latter are the ſame; and hence, fourthly ſome tranſlate; If I have walked with or in a lie. There is a lie in word, and there is a lie in practice. This reading agrees with the deſcription of the perſon that ſhall aſcend the holy hill of God

In vanitate. i.e. in aliqua falſitate; dicuntur enim vana illa quæ ſoliditatem non habent; ſoliditas autem maxima eſt per veritatem. Aquin.

Si inceſſi cū mendacio. Targ.

Si non ſyncere verſatus ſum cum hominibus tranſigens, non fucatè, aliud in ore habens aliud in pectore clauſum gerens. Pined.

God (Pſal. 24.4.) Who hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not lift up his ſoul to vanity, nor ſworn deceitfully. And again (Pſal. 12.2.) They ſpeak vanity every one with his neighbour, with flattering lips and with a double heart, &c. Once more (Pſal. 4.2.) How long will ye love vanity, and ſeek after leaſing? In all which Scriptures, vanity in the firſt part of the verſe ſeems to be expounded by deceitful ſwearing, flattering and lying in the latter.

So then, though vanity in this Text may include all ſinful wayes, and the eager proſecution of all worldly things (in an honeſt way) which are but vanity; yet it is chiefly to be underſtood of purſuing worldly things in a falſe way, by over-reaching and deceiving thoſe with whom we have to do. And that's the ſin which Job here proteſts againſt before the Lord, as will appear further in opening the next words: But before I meddle with them, take ſome Obſervations from what hath been already opened; If I have walked with vanity.

Hence Note, Firſt, Sinful wayes are vain wayes.

Sin is vanity under all the notions of vanity: Firſt, It is vanity becauſe unprofitable. So the Prophet Samuel defines a vain thing (1 Sam. 12.21.) while he dehorts the people of Iſrael from following their own wayes, and going away from the Lord, Turn ye not aſide from following the Lord, but ſerve him with all your heart, and turn ye not aſide, for then ſhould ye go after vain things which cannot profit nor deliver, for they are vain. Sinful wayes are unprofitable wayes, and therefore vain wayes. Carnal men look upon the wayes of God as vain. They ſay it is a vain thing to ſerve the Lord. They can get better wages, or trade to better profit elſewhere. But we may truly affirm that ſinful wayes have no real profit in them, as the Apoſtle doth while he puts the queſtion (*Rom.*6.21.) What fruit had ye then in thoſe things whereof ye are now aſhamed? For the end of thoſe things is death. Come produce your fruit, your profit, tell me, how much you made of ſin while you made ſo much of it.

Secondly, Sin is vain not only becauſe it can do us no good, but becauſe it doth us much hurt. There is not only a negative, or privative, but a poſitive evil in it, or flowing from it. The effects of ſin are fatal and deadly. 'Tis an Egyptian Reed, which is not only too weak to ſupport us, but ſharp enough to wound us: He that leans and layeth the ſtreſs of himſelf upon any creature of God, much more he that leans upon ſin, which is his own creature, gets nothing by it but ſhame and ruine. (Jer. 4.18.) Thy way and thy doings have procured theſe things unto thee; this is thy wickedneſs becauſe it is bitter. If any one enquire what thoſe things were which their doings procured them, he may receive ſadning ſatisfaction to that doubt from the former part of the Chapter, eſpecially from the ſixth verſe, where the Lord threatneth, I will bring evil from the North, and a great deſtruction: This deſtruction was their wickedneſs, that is, the reward of their wickedneſs, as another Prophet telleth us (*Hoſ.*13.9.) O Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thy ſelf; thy ſin hath utterly undone thee. Sin deſtroyeth two wayes: Firſt, Meritoriouſly: Secondly, Inſtrumentally. It alwayes deſerves deſtruction, and often works our deſtruction: By ſinful actings many pull the houſe upon their own heads, and are buried in the ruins. And when a mans own ſin is the thing which ruines him, how vain a thing is his ſin to him!

Thirdly, Sin is vain, and to walk with ſin is to walk in vanity; becauſe it deceiveth us: Sin makes us many fair promiſes, not only that it will do us no hurt, but that it will do us much good; yet it can neither do us good, nor can it keep off hurt from us. Sin is a meer pretender, yea an impoſtor. (Epheſ. 4.22.) Put off concerning the former converſation the old man which is corrupt according to the deceitful luſts. Luſt makes us many proffers, but it alwayes leaves us under diſappointments; And is not that a vanity which doth ſo?

Again, taking vanity more ſtrictly, as was ſhewed in the explication of the Text.

Obſerve, As all ſin, ſo eſpecially the ſin of falſe dealing, or wronging others by wayes of unrighteouſneſs, is a vain thing, a very vanity.

That's the ſin which Job ſo vehemently diſclaimeth in this context, and he had done it more then once before. How vain a thing is it to enrich our ſelves by impoveriſhing another? Seeing he who doth ſo draws that upon himſelf which is worſe then poverty; and while he deceiveth his brother, deceives himſelf moſt. Unjuſt gain proves our own loſs: And is not loſing gain a vanity? Now that every man who gains by injuſtice is a loſer by his gain, may be cleared by theſe following Conſiderations.

Firſt, A man either repents of wronging others, or he repents not: There's no middle between theſe two. If he repents of what he hath done, his repentance is a demonſtration that what he had done was vain. No wiſe man will do that knowingly, of which he muſt or ought to repent. Repentance is the relief of folly. And if ever God give a ſinner true repentance for his iniquity, his own Conſcience will preach and preſs this Doctrine upon him, That ſin is folly.

Secondly, Unjuſt gain is a vanity, becauſe he that repents of it to purpoſe, will be convinced that there is a neceſſity for him to reſtore and give back what he hath gotten unjuſtly. 'Tis indeed a mercy, and the beſt of the caſe, when a mans Conſcience is ſick of his (in this ſenſe) unrighteous Mammon, and he vomits it up again by reſtitution. But is it not a vanity to get that which we may not keep, and keep a good Conſcience too? Is it not a vanity and a madneſs to gather that which we muſt ſcatter, or to take that from the right owners, which we cannot poſſeſs as our own?

Again, if we inſiſt upon the other part of the ſuppoſition, That he who hath done wrong repents not, nor reſtoreth what he hath wrongfully gotten, this will prove a greater vanity. For

Firſt, Though he hold what he hath, yet it is under a curſe; and the curſe of God will either make the beauty of it fade as a flower, and wither in his hand, or (which is worſe) his heart will be hardened the more, and he the more dangerouſly enſnared by it. But

Secondly, he that repents not, but holds what he hath unduly gotten, is often brought to ſhame and trouble in the face of the world: And is not that gain a vanity, by which we loſe (which to a meer mortal man is more precious then thouſands of Gold and Silver) our credit and reputation? What hath any man to loſe (as to this world) which is worth the having when once he hath loſt his good name?

Thirdly, Suppoſe a man holds what he hath unrighteouſly gotten, and holds it without either danger or diſgrace, ſuppoſe he keeps his gain, and keeps up his reputation too; yet at laſt, or (as we ſpeak) at the long run, he muſt confeſs he hath walked in a vain ſhadow, and diſquieted himſelf in vain. He will find that he hath made but a very bad market, though his preſent profit be very great. Thus Chriſt himſelf concludes (Mat. 16.26.) What is a man profited if he gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? Or what ſhall he give in exchange for his ſoul? Suppoſe he gets and gets, not only ſome pieces and patches, ſome odd ends of the world, but the whole world, with all its array and furniture, yet, if he repents not, he loſeth his own ſoul by the bargain: And when he hath ſet down the loſs of his ſoul upon the one leaf of his Book, and the value of the world upon the other, what will appear at the foot of the account but loſs, loſs, loſs, irreparable loſs? The world hath not enough in its richeſt treaſures to ballance the loſs of the pooreſt ſoul.

Thirdly, Obſerve, A godly man doth not, cannot walk on in a ſinful or a deceitful way.

He may (very poſſibly) ſtep out of the way, and turn aſide, but he doth not continue out of the way, he walks not in crooked wayes. Job durſt not ſay, I never did any thing vainly; but he ſaid it confidently, I have not walked with vanity. There is much vanity in the beſt of men, and ſome vanity paſſeth from them, yet their courſe, their walk is not with vanity. This or that act of ſin doth not denominate any mans perſon or his condition. 'Tis a habit of ſinning which denominates both. In this ſenſe the Apoſtle John ſaith (1 Epiſt. 3.9.) Whoſoever is born of God doth not commit ſin, for the Seed of God remaineth in him; and he cannot ſin becauſe he is born of God. He cannot remain in ſin in whom the Seed of God (that is, a principle of new life and grace by Chriſt) remaineth. Sin remains in him that is born of God, but he that is born of God doth not remain in ſin, either as to a ſinful ſtate, or a ſinful converſation. Againſt the latter Job makes proteſtation here, while he ſaith, If I have walked with vanity,

Or, If my foot hath haſted to deceit.

The feet, in proper ſence are the pillars and ſupporters of the body, They are thoſe members of the body, by which our locomotive faculty is exerciſed; And in a tropical ſence, our feet ſignifie our affections, which are to the Soul as the feet to the Body; Whitherſoever we are carried our affections carry us. When Solomon adviſeth (Eccl. 5. 1.) Keep thy foot when thou goeſt to the houſe of God, he intends not a ſuperſtitious affectation of a demure outward gate or bodily behaviour, but a due attention to the motions or affections of the mind; As if he had ſaid, Look well with what heart you go to the publick worſhip, or what moves you to go and worſhip. The foot, and the hand, are the two great inſtruments of action. Yet the foot (which the hand doth not) includes the action both of the outward and inward man. We move from place to place by our outward feet, and whatſoever we do freely in any place, our affections move us to the doing of it. If my foot

Pes meus. i. e. affectus meus, & quæcunque altera virtus animæ eſt motionis principium. Aquin.

Hath haſted to deceit.] Before he ſpake of walking, now of haſting. To walk intimates the ſettledneſs of our courſe, to haſte the forwardneſs or quickneſs of it. A man that is very hot and zealous upon a buſineſs, doth not only walk, but run or go apace, he makes haſte. If my foot hath haſted

To deceit.] That is, to or about any work or act wherein I have deceived others; Deceivers are no ſlugs at their work; we ſay proverbially, They muſt needs run whom the Devil drives; There are none more driven by the Devil than deceivers are. If my foot hath haſted to deceit. Deceit is any ſubtle, cloſe or ſecret way of wronging others. And when Job ſaith he had not haſted to deceit, we are not to take it as a grant, that he uſed deceit leiſurely, or acted it with ſlow pace; but his meaning is, that he did not ſo much as ſtir a foot towards it, yea that he turned and haſted from it. I have ſhewed the vanity of deceit before, Here I ſhall ſhew the ſinfulneſs of it. If my foot hath haſted to deceit.

Hence obſerve, All deceit is carefully to be avoided.

Deceit is an odious thing both to God and all good men. God is the God of truth; as he cannot be deceived becauſe he is infinitely wiſe and all knowing; So he cannot deceive becauſe he is infinitely true and faithful; and though all men in ſome ſence are lyars; yet every good man is (in his meaſure) a man of truth. The Spirit of God gives it as the character of the man that ſhall aſcend into the hill of God, he hath not lift up his ſoul to vanity, nor ſworn deceitfully (Pſal. 24. 4.) They that can make haſte to deal deceitfully, will not be very ſlow or backward to ſwear deceitfully. And how great a wickedneſs falſe-ſpeaking, much more falſe-ſwearing is, Solomon tells us, (Prov. 12. 22.) Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord; Though lyars often perfume their lips with fair words to men, yet the Lord ſmells the ſtench and ill ſavour of their rotten hearts. What Solomon meaneth by lying lips, appears by the following oppoſition, but they that deal truly are his (that is the Lords) delight. Lying words are uſually accompanied with lying works, and they who ſpeak not the truth, will not deal truly. They who ſpeak the truth and do it, whoſe works make a comment upon their words, are the delight of God. To ſay what is true, and to be true to what we ſay, is a high character of Godlineſs. A godly man hath ſo much love to and zeal for truth and honeſty, that whatſoever he ſpeaks, he ſpeaks it as if he were upon his oath. And though an oath be a more ſacred thing than a word, yet he will not be bound conſcientiouſly by an oath, who makes no conſcience of his word. I grant there is ſome liberty and latitude allowable in ſpeaking as to ſpecial caſes, yet we ſhould always keep within the bounds of truth. No man will ſpeak deceitfully, but he that intends to deal deceitfully; And as all deceit whether it be in ſpeaking or dealing is an abomination to God, ſo it hath not only an ill name, but an odious one among all men, even thoſe who are moſt remote from God, the Heathens.

Quicquid dixeris juratum te putares.

Firſt, Becauſe 'tis contrary to the Law and light of nature; every ſinful act is the more ſinful, by how much it is a ſin againſt a more common light. There are ſome ſins which God will puniſh ſeverely, which are ſins only againſt divine inſtitution and ſpecial revelation; But ſuch ſins as are againſt the general light of nature, ſuch ſins, as he that never heard of a Bible condemneth, how doth God condemn them! How ſeverely will he puniſh them?

Secondly, As deceit is a ſin againſt the light or law of nature; ſo againſt the expreſs laws both of God and man. I need not quote the laws of men againſt it; What Nation or Common-wealth hath not enacted laws and declared penalties againſt it? I need not ſtay to prove it a ſin againſt the law of God; who forbids all kind of deceit, in thoſe two negative laws; Thou ſhalt not ſteal; Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs againſt thy neighbour. Whatever fine colours men put upon falſe dealing, the beſt of it muſt come out under this plain cenſure, ſtealing. The Deceiver ſhall be ranked and numbred among thieves. And whatſoever fine colours men put upon falſe ſpeaking, it muſt come under this plain cenſure of lying and falſe-witneſs-bearing. Deceit croſſeth all the laws of commerce and converſe with men, and breaks aſunder all the tyes and bonds of humane ſociety; what can we call (except downright blaſphemy againſt God) more odious than that which doth ſo?

Thirdly, Deceit is (in ſome ſence) far worſe than open violence; we cry out (and well we may) againſt thieves and robbers, who aſſault honeſt travellers upon the high-way, and take their purſes; yet Deceit is more dangerous and detrimental than that, becauſe we have no defence againſt it, nor (in moſt caſes) remedy for it; yea 'tis done, and that not ſeldom, under the notion of friendſhip and courteſie. Now as it is a more odious crime to poyſon a man whom we invite to our table, than to kill him openly in the field; Becauſe poyſon is then conveyed ſecretly and under a pretence of kindneſs; So to wrong thoſe whom we invite to deal with us, is worſe than doing it by open invaſion or violence.

Tuta frequenſque via eſt per amici fallere nomen.

Let none think this a ſuperfluous warning; For as our hearts are deceitful, ſo they are eaſily drawn to uſe deceit. Some (that I ſay not many) men would deceive God himſelf. That's the buſineſs of all hypocrites, and they are more (as we ſay) than a good many. Now what an hypocrite is in religious, the ſame is a deceitful man in civil things. The one would deceive God, the other men. Yea ſuch is the baſeneſs and vilany of our deceitful hearts, that we often yea ofteneſt deceive our ſelves; And indeed we are always (though not at all intentionally) contriving and plotting our own ruine, while we pretend to pleaſe and hope to raiſe our ſelves, by deceiving, that is, by wronging others; no wonder then if we are inclined to wrong others, when we ſee a ſelf-advantage, yea ſelf-advantage doth ſo blind or deceive our eyes, that we can hardly ſee deceit where we ſee profit.

To arm our ſelves againſt this ſin, let us often remember that truth is very precious to God; Truth of heart is ſo, and ſo is truth of word carried on to truth of action, both in ſpirituals and in civils. God loves truth ſo much, that he takes it up for his Title, and calls himſelf the true God, both in oppoſition to Idols which are lying vanities, and to vain men who give themſelves up to lying; Yea the greateſt honour which we can do to God is this, when by believing we put to our ſeal that He is true (Joh. 3. 33.) And when the Apoſtle would ſet forth the honour and beauty of the new creature, he calls it that new man which after God is created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs (Eph. 4. 24.) The new man is made, after God, that is, (as it were) of God's faſhion, or in his likeneſs, which is holineſs, yet the Apoſtle doth not ſay only, in holineſs (for there may be an appearance of holineſs which is not after God, or the image of God) But in true holineſs; which includes both holineſs in truth, and the holineſs of truth. Truth is a holy thing; truth reſpecting God, and truth reſpecting man; Of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks in the next words (v. 25.) Wherefore putting away lying, ſpeak every man truth with his neighbour, &c. For even that truth holds forth the image and likeneſs of God too. In this image or likeneſs of God, Job deſired to appear when he ſaid, If my foot hath haſted to deceit.

Secondly, As in theſe words Job ſets forth what himſelf was by grace, ſo what every man is by nature; which we may take in this Obſervation.

Man naturally makes haſte to ſin.

Yea Solomon ſeemeth to affirm, that whenſoever we make haſte it is to ſin (Prov. 19. 2.) He that haſteth with his feet ſinneth. But doth every one ſin that haſteth with his feet? David made haſte and delayed not to keep the commandments of God; ſurely then a man may make haſte and not ſin. The Church excites Chriſt (Cant. 8. 14.) Make haſte my beloved, and be thou like a roe or young hart upon the mountains of Bether. Chriſt, in whom is no ſin, makes haſte with his feet. Why then ſaith Solomon, He that haſteth with his feet ſinneth? I anſwer, He leaves it indefinitely with reſpect to man, becauſe men are moſt apt to make haſte about that which is ſinful. We have both the tide of corruption and the wind of temptation carrying us on ſo haſtily to ſin, that we ſcarcely, no nor at all, but by grace, haſte with our feet to any thing but to ſin. Or we may expound theſe latter words of the verſe by the former, That the ſoul be without knowledg is not good; but he that haſteth with his foot ſinneth. Solomon condemns only an ignorant raſhneſs, or a raſh ignorance. A man who makes ſuch haſte in a buſineſs that he will not ſtand to examine whether it be right or wrong, nor take time to inform himſelf whether his way be good or evil; the man, I ſay, who maketh ſuch haſte with his feet, can hardly hit upon any thing but ſin, and ſo makes a great deal more haſte than good ſpeed. So that, when Solomon ſaith, He that haſteth with his feet ſinneth, his meaning either is, that they who act haſtily, are in extream danger to act ſinfully, or that man makes ſo little haſte to any thing but to ſin, that whenſoever he makes haſte, we may ſuſpect it is to ſin. His haſte and ſpeed that way are teſtified by many Scriptures. Their feet run to evil (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 59. 7.) and make haſte to ſhed blood. And the Apoſtle from the Pſalm (Rom. 3. 15.) Their feet are ſwift to ſhed blood. We ſee few haſtning righteouſneſs (as it was prophecyed Chriſt ſhould, Iſa. 16. 5.) But we ſee too many haſtning unrighteouſneſs, that is, making haſte to do unrighteouſly. As a godly man hath a bent and forwardneſs of Spirit to that which is good; I made haſte (ſaith David, Pſal. 119. 60.) and delayed not to keep thy Commandments. So a wicked man hath a bent to do evil. The tide and ſtream of his ſoul ſets that way, and therefore he makes haſte to break the commandments. Both make haſte from the ſame common principle, That ſutableneſs which is between the heart and the work; Though their ſpecial characteriſtical principles, are not only different but utterly contrary. Why doth a godly man make haſte to keep the commandments of God? 'Tis becauſe the commandments and his heart are ſutable. Grace conforms our will to the will of God, or, 'tis our conformity to his will. Grace is not only the conformity of our actions (that's a fruit of grace) but the conformity of our wills to the will of God. From this principle of conformity to the will of God, ariſeth a promptneſs to obey the commandments of God (which are the exemplifications of his will) in all that receive the grace of God. Thus alſo the heart of a natural man is ſutable to the world, and therefore he makes haſt to get it, ſo much haſte that he ſcarce conſiders how he gets it, but haſtens to deceit, rather than he will not get it. Thus Solomon determines (Prov. 28. 20.) He that maketh haſte to be rich, ſhall not be innocent; that is, he by his haſte to get much riches, contracts much guilt; For as the Apoſtle concludes (1 Tim. 6. 9.) They that will be rich, fall into temptation and a ſnare, and into many fooliſh and hurtful luſts, which drown men in perdition and deſtruction. The eager purſuit of the world layeth a man open to ſo many temptations, that he can hardly hold his innocency, and if once a man loſe that, he is often a loſt man for this world, and he is ſo always for the next, and he that is under either of theſe loſſes, eſpecially the latter is drowned in perdition and deſtruction. The word in that text of the Proverbs which we render innocent, ſignifieth, unpuniſhed, ſo we put in the Margin, He ſhall not be unpuniſhed; Guilt hath in it, yea is an obligation to puniſhment; And if ſuch guilty ones eſcape puniſhment in this life, yet puniſhment will be ſure to find them in that which is to come. As Job was convinced of the ſinfulneſs, ſo of the dangerouſneſs of this ſin; And therefore ſaith, If my foot hath haſted to deceit.

Verſ. 6. Let me be weighed in an even ballance, that God may know mine integrity.

We ſay in the text, Let me be weighed, and put in the Margin; Let him weigh me; Job ſpeaks indefinitely, not determining who this he ſhould be, nor caring who it ſhould be; Let God weigh me, let man weigh me, let friends or foes weigh me. I paſs not, ſo they do me juſtice, and take (as I mean it) my true weight. Mr. Broughton renders reſtrictively, Let God weigh me in an even ballance. We tranſlate paſſively, Let me be weighed. The ſence is the ſame in either reading. The word is appliable to any kind of weighing; But here, that of a right judgment and underſtanding, reſpecting both the ſtate of perſons and nature of actions is intended; 'Tis a metaphorical alluſion to Merchants or Tradeſmen, who weigh their goods, and ſell them by weight; in old time all payments in Money whether of gold or ſilver were paſſed by weight (and ſo they are in ſome places at this day) I weighed him the money in the ballances, ſaith the Prophet (Jer. 32. 10.) when he (according to the word of the Lord) bought the field of Hananeel his Uncles Son. From this Hebrew root in the Text the word Shekel is derived, ſignifying a piece of coin among the Jews, frequently mentioned in Scripture, which was of a known weight, and the Standard, by which all other weights were regulated. Such alſo was the Stater among the Grecians. Job deſires to be weighed exactly, as gold in the ballance.

He ſaid before, If I have haſted to deceit; And here he ſeems to ſay, If I have uſed any deceit in my dealings with men, or in my ſervices and addreſſes to God, let God weigh me, and ſhame me for my lightneſs. Let me be weighed, or, Let him weigh me; that is, let him try me to the utmoſt in my morals, and in my civils; let him try me in the whole courſe of my life; let him try me as a man, and try me as a Magiſtrate, let all my ways, works, and words, yea all my thoughts, purpoſes and deſigns be tryed and weighed. He includes all theſe in the word Me, which he offers to the ballance. And indeed though our outward actions are all that man can weigh, yet they are the leaſt part of that which God will weigh when he comes to weigh us. Thus we may extend the me in the text to Job in all his capacities and relations; he was willing to be weighed and tryed throughout, only he deſired a fair proceeding, and a righteous tryal; Let me be weighed, ſaith he,

In an even ballance.] A Ballance properly taken is an Artificial Inſtrument, wherein any thing which is weighable is put to be weighed, or that the weight of it may be taken and known. And though all ballances though of different kinds and ſorts, as to matter and ſize, ſhould be of one kind and ſort as to truth and evenneſs; yet through the corruption of men and manners, there are ballances of two ſorts; Firſt, even or right; Secondly, uneven or deceitful ballances. Job craves no favour, but to be weighed in an even ballance; that is in ſuch a ballance, as hath no intrinſecal preponderation one way or other, but turneth truly as thoſe things which are put into it do preponderate, or are more weighty. The Hebrew is, in ballances of juſtice, that is, in juſt ballances; in ballances ſo juſt, that Juſtice her ſelf may be ſaid to have made them, or ſo juſt that (as Juſtice is commonly pictured or emblem'd) Juſtice her ſelf might hold them in her hand to weigh with. The ballance hath a kind of ſacredneſs in it. And becauſe men are apt to deceive by falſe ballances, therefore in all well-govern'd Kingdoms and Common-wealths there is a publick ballance, by which all other ballances are to be tryed, and to which they muſt be conformed. The Kings beam, or, The States beam hath a publick Officer to attend it. Job would be tryed by ſuch a beam or ballance, an even ballance; As if he had ſaid, I deſire with all my heart, that God would take full cognizance of me, and weigh me exactly according to righteouſneſs. O that he would aſſume my judgment into his own hand, who, I am ſure, would do me right, and weigh all my matters impartially. I know his eyes cannot be ſo blinded with mine afflictions (though mens are) but that for all them he would diſcern and judg me upright.

But was not this a huge boldneſs (may ſome ſay) in Job, that he ſhould call ſo earneſtly to be weighed? was not this a boaſt of, if not a truſting to his own righteouſneſs?

I anſwer, Job did not deſire to be weighed, nor offered he himſelf to be weighed like a proud ſelf-Juſtificiary, as if he thought he had no ſin in him, or as if he thought his ſins were but light, or could bear no weight to over-ballance his good deeds. It was not any ſwelling opinion of the worth or merit of what he had done, but a ſound ſaving faith in the mercy and free grace of God through the Redeemer, together with the integrity of his heart towards God, which gave him the confidence to deſire and ſtand this Tryal. Job was not further off in time than in temper of ſpirit and true Goſpel-knowledg; from thoſe old Popiſh Monks, who were wont to tell their blind Votaries of St. Michael's ballances, and that he, when a man dyed, put all his good works into one ballance, and his evil ones into the other, and if his evil deeds did out-weigh his good deeds, then the poor ſoul muſt go to Hell, but if his good deeds did out-weigh his evil deeds, then he was ſure of Heaven. This was the goodly (ſhall I call it in ſcorn or in truth) the deadly Goſpel doctrine of thoſe dark times, in which the blind led the blind and both (we have cauſe to fear) fell into the ditch. And doth not this vail of ignorance as to the myſtery of free-grace in the Goſpel remain upon the hearts of many untaken away until this day? What utter ſtrangers are they who dream of ſuch a kind of ballancing our good and evil deeds both to Law and Goſpel? This is ſo far from being the Goſpel ballance, that it is not ſo much as the ballance of the Law. For if a man ſin but once, he is gone for ever by the Law. The covenant of works, or the meer legal covenant ſaith (Gal. 3. 10.) Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the Law to do them. It is not the doing more evil than good, but the doing of any evil at all, which condemns according to the tenour of that covenant. If a man could be ſuppoſed to have but the weight of one grain of ſin in him, that would make all his good works of no weight under the covenant of works. And though a mans ſins are (as indeed every mans ſins, the ſins of the moſt holy man on earth are) heavier than the ſand, and of more weight than a thouſand mountains, and his own righteouſneſs not bearing the weight of a feather, indeed none at all, but rather (ſo the Prophet calls them, Iſa. 64.6.) as filthy rags, yet that man being in the covenant of grace hath a righteouſneſs, even the Righteouſneſs of faith, which will make him bear weight enough before God in the ballance of the Goſpel Sanctuary, and will infinitely out-weigh all his ſins.

But, to return, Job ſtood not upon any legal juſtification of himſelf, or of his ways. His purpoſe was only to ſhew that he had a clear conſcience, and that (as Paul profeſſed before the Counſel (Acts 23. 1.) He had lived in all good conſcience before God until that day; and that if he were weighed in an even ballance, he ſhould neither be found an hypocrite towards God, nor a deceiver towards man. Upon theſe aſſurances Job was ready to be weighed, not upon any conceit of ſelf-righteouſneſs; and this he expreſſeth in the latter part of the verſe, That God may know mine integrity; This was all that Job ſtood to maintain, his honeſty and ſincerity; And as to that he was but forward enough to challenge all men, though poſſibly (as himſelf at laſt was convinced) a little too forward and confident before God, while he ſaid, Let me be weighed in an even ballance.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, A ſincere godly man is willing to have himſelf and all his ways brought to tryal.

He is not afraid of the ballance; no not of God's ballance; Though he cannot ſay his ſins are fewer than his good deeds; yet he can ſay (through grace) his heart is upright with God in all the good which he hath done, or that there is a vein, a thread of uprightneſs running through the whole web of his life. The Apoſtle Paul had no ſooner ſaid (2 Cor. 5. 10.) We muſt all appear before the Judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done whether it be good or bad; (which is as if he had ſaid in Job's language, we muſt all appear before Chriſt to be weighed in an even ballance, that it may appear what we are, Now (I ſay) the Apoſtle had no ſooner ſpoken of this general weighing day, when all men muſt appear, and from the ſence of the terror of the Lord againſt all thoſe who ſhall be found too light, perſwaded men to look to it) but he preſently adds with a kind of Joy, But we are manifeſt unto God, and I truſt alſo are made manifeſt (meaning the Corinthians) to your conſciences. As if he had ſaid, This is my comfort, and the comfort of my Fellow-labourers in the Goſpel. That we are well aſſured God hath weighed us, and that our weight is manifeſt to God; he knows not only what we have done, but (which bears the greateſt weight with him) with what hearts we have been doing it. They who rejoyce that God hath weighed them, cannot but be willing he ſhould weigh them again, and they who are willing to be weighed by God, cannot be unwilling to be weighed by men, if they will but do it in an even ballance.

Secondly, Note, Perſons and things ſhould be weighed before we give ſentence and judgment upon them.

Some are too haſty, they judg others light before they have weighed them, at leaſt before they have weighed them in an even ballance. To give ſentence before tryal is not good, though the ſentence given ſhould be good. The Apoſtles rule is, Prove all things, hold faſt that which is good (1 Theſ. 5. 21.) Suppoſe we hold that which is good, yet if we have not proved it to be good, 'tis no better to us than that which is evil. Now if our judging a thing good which is ſo, without weighing it, doth not commend us to God, how great will their condemnation be, who judg thoſe things evil which they have never weighed, or if they have, it hath been in an unrighteous ballance?

Thirdly, Obſerve, We muſt weigh perſons and things righteouſly, not in the ballance of prejudice and paſſion, but in the ballance of juſtice and moderation.

How often doth the Scripture condemn uneven ballances, as a burden both to God and man? God will not indure that you ſhould weigh the meaneſt commodity you trade in with falſe ballances, or by a bag of deceitful weights. Thus he commanded the Children of Iſrael by Moſes (Lev. 19. 36.) Juſt ballances, juſt weights, a juſt Ephah, and a juſt Hin ſhall ye have; I am the Lord your God, which brought you out of the Land of Egypt. As if he had ſaid, I have delivered you from your oppreſſors, therefore take heed ye do not oppreſs one another. A falſe ballance (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 11. 1.) is an abomination to the Lord, but a juſt weight is his delight. And again (Prov. 16. 11.) A juſt weight and ballance are the Lords (They have (as it were) his ſeal upon them, and he owneth them for his) for all the weights of the bag (that is, all juſt weights, and there ought to be no other in the bag) are his work. 'Tis therefore a high offence againſt God, and a colouring of theft with juſtice, to weigh with uneven ballances. Hence the Lord ſpeaks with high indignation (Mic. 6. 11.) Shall I count them pure with the wicked ballances, and with the bag of deceitful weights? As if he had ſaid, whatſoever I do, I abhor to do that; I can as ſoon count an Adulterer or a drunkard pure, as they that uſe deceitful weights. Their neighbours (poſſibly) may count them pure, and they ('tis like enough) count themſelves ſo, but ſo will not I, to whom the true account of every mans worth is perfectly known. Now if the Lord will not indure that we ſhould weigh any thing for ſale in an uneven ballance; what think you will God ſay to them who weigh men and their actions in uneven ballances? There are not more falſe ballances for wares and commodities, than there are for perſons and actions. Where almoſt among men ſhall we find a ballance of Juſtice for man, Though the weighing of a man or of a matter, is of greater conſequence, than the weighing of any worldly Merchandize? 'Tis much more difficult to get an even internal ballance of reaſon and judgment to diſcover the right of a cauſe, than to get an even external ballance to find out the weight of a commodity. And ſurely we have reaſon to be very exact in weighing both our own works, and the works of other men, ſeeing the Lord will certainly weigh both theirs and ours over again, and that in a moſt even ballance. The Scripture ſpeaks much and often of God weighing the ways and works of men; and 'tis not what we judg of our ſelves, but what he judgeth that muſt determine our condition. (Prov. 16. 2.) All the ways of a man are clean in his own eyes. Some men, I grant, are condemned in and of themſelves, yet if every man might be his own final Judg, few or none (as we ſay) would be condemned. The eyes of moſt men are ſo unclean, that all their ways are clean in their own eyes. But howſoever any man may acquit himſelf, or be acquitted by others, yet God judgeth rightly; he judgeth not by appearances, but by realities, he judgeth the inſide as well as the outſide, and therefore it followeth in the ſame verſe, But God weigheth the ſpirits. The ſpirit of a man often miſtakes the weight of his own actions, but God who is himſelf a ſpirit, never miſſeth the weight of our ſpirits. Some have ſerious weighty ſpirits, others have light and frothy ſpirits. We can do ſomewhat towards the weighing of actions, but we can hardly, if at all, tell how to weigh ſpirits, God weigheth both. (1 Sam. 2. 3.) The Lord is a God of knowledg, and by him actions are weighed. He can eaſily weigh actions, who weigheth ſpirits, which are the principle and ſpring of action. And as God weigheth the actions of all men righteouſly, ſo the actions of all righteous men favourably, (Iſa. 26. 7.) The way of the juſt is uprightneſs, thou moſt upright doeſt weigh the path of the juſt. Which Scripture though according to other tranſlations, it be interpreted of the providential path wherein the upright walk, that God doth ſmooth and level it for them; yet according to our tranſlation, it plainly holds out the point in hand, that God taketh ſpecial conſideration, as if it were by weighing of the moral path of an upright man, that is of the path of his converſation.

Yea, God hath a beam and a ballance not only to weigh particular perſons, but whole Nations by, not only to weigh private perſons, but the greateſt Princes by. (Dan. 5.25.) And this is the writing that was written, Mene Mene Tekel Upharſin; God hath numbred thy kingdom, and finiſhed it, thou art weighed in the ballances, and art found wanting. Belſhazzar a great King, was weighed in that capacity as a King, both he and his government were weighed in the ballance and found wanting; that is, he wanted righteouſneſs in the Adminiſtration of his great power over the Nations. Thus God weigheth the metaphorical as well as the proper Mountains in ſcales and the hills in a ballance (*Iſa.*40.12.) Is it not time then for us to be weighing our ſelves, ſeeing we our ſelves are and ſhall be weighed? We ſhall be tryed and examined, therefore it is our duty and our intereſt to try and examine our ſelves. Every man ſhould put the queſtion often to his own ſoul, Am I weight in the ballance of the Sanctuary, in the Lord's ballance? The Apoſtles counſel is (1 Cor. 11. 28.) Let a man (that is, every man) examine, or in Job's phraſe, weigh himſelf, and 'tis but need he ſhould, for God will weigh us all, in all that we are and have and do. Doubtleſs holy Job had often weighed himſelf, elſe he had never ſignified this deſire, Let me be weighed in an even ballance,

That God may know mine integrity.

But was Job's integrity a ſecret to God? muſt God take ſuch a courſe, before he could know it? muſt he ſtand conſidering and poyzing him and his ways as in a ballance, before he could give a definitive ſentence concerning them? Doth not God know without tryal or inquiſition? Doth not God know intuitively, in himſelf and from himſelf? Hath he not the neat and exact weight of all perſons and actions in his own mind? Is not he omniſcient? carrieth he not the ballance of all things always in his infinite and infallible underſtanding?

How then doth Job ſay, Let me be weighed in an even ballance, that God may know mine integrity?

I anſwer, It is moſt true and undeniable, that God knows all things in himſelf, not only when they are, but he knew them before they were, even from eternity. Yet the Scripture ſpeaks of God ſometimes as beginning to know this or that in time, or upon inquiry; which doth not import any neſcience in God of ſuch things till then, but only a teſtimony of his divine omniſcience. God is then ſaid to know, firſt, when he makes it manifeſt to us that he doth; or ſecondly, when he makes that known to others which himſelf knew while none elſe did. Some things are then ſaid to be done by or known to man when they appear to be ſo, though they were both done by him and known to him long before; much more is it ſo in reference to God. He knew what was in the heart of the children of Iſrael before he brought them out of Egypt; yet Moſes ſaith (Deut. 8. 2.) The Lord thy God led thee theſe forty years in the wilderneſs, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thy heart, whether thou wouldſt keep his commandments or no. The beſt of men have corruptions in them which themſelves know not, they have many more corruptions which others know not. God led Iſrael about in the wilderneſs thoſe forty years, and there exerciſed them with various providences, that he might make them and others know that unbelief, that rebellion and frowardneſs which himſelf knew lay in their hearts undiſcerned, till ſtraits and temptations drew it out. When Abraham had offered up his Son at the command of God, we find God preſently telling him (Gen. 22. 12.) Now I know that thou feareſt me. The Lord knew that before, but he ſpake ſo, becauſe by that tryal he had made Abraham's holy fear known. Thus David prayed (Pſal. 139. 23.) Search me O God and know my heart: try me and know my thoughts. Why did David deſire this of God? he tells us at the 24. verſe, And ſee if there be any wicked way in me; yet he had ſaid (v. 1.) O Lord, thou haſt ſearched me and known me; and (v. 2.) Thou underſtandeſt my thoughts afar off. David knew, that God knew him to a thought, and that he knew his thoughts not only when they were in being, but before they were, he knew his thoughts afar off, that is, before he had actually thought them. God doth not ſearch us to know what we are, he knows it without ſearch. But he is ſaid to ſearch what he knows, that he may make us know what we did not: So then, as David deſired God to ſearch him, and ſee whether there were any wicked way in him; ſo Job deſired God to weigh him, that he might ſee the good way that was in him, or that it might appear to his friends who judged him an hypocrite, that he was upright; Let God weigh me, or let me be weighed in an even ballance, that God may know

Mine integrity.] The word which we tranſlate integrity, may be underſtood two ways.

Firſt, Generally, and ſo it is that grace which runs through and graces all our duties; Integrity is a general vertue, or the vertue of all our vertues; Integrity adorns and crowns all; There is an integrity in every thing that is truly good, and the more any man excels in goodneſs, the fuller he is of integrity. The word, as hath been ſhewed heretofore, properly ſignifieth perfection or ſimplicity; honeſt ſimplicity, not ignorant ſimplicity. The Scripture calls it alſo ſingleneſs of heart, in oppoſition to that double mindedneſs or complexedneſs which is in hypocrites whoſe hearts are not ſingle, but plighted and folded to wrap up and hide the badneſs and baſeneſs of their purpoſes. Job was as famous for this Grace of integrity before his tryal, as he was in and after it for the grace of patience. Therefore the Lord ſaid to Satan (Chap. 2. 3.) Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, and ſtill he holdeth faſt his integrity? Job held his integrity, that is, his ſincerity, though he could hold nothing elſe, and the Devil had made many violent aſſaults to pull that from him too.

Secondly, Integrity may be taken ſtrictly, as oppoſed to deceit or vanity, in the former verſe; ſo it notes the righteouſneſs of a man's way and practice, when he deals ſquarely and fairly with all men that he hath to do with: And thus 'tis the ſame with honeſty and faithfulneſs. He that performeth his promiſe according to ingagement, and diſchargeth his truſt according to agreement is a man of integrity: As he that doth good to many is a man of charity, ſo he that doth right to all is a man of integrity. 'Tis integrity in this latter notion which Job ſeems here to put to the teſt and tryal of God; For as in the former verſe he had proteſted, that his foot had not haſted to deceit, ſo in the verſe following he proteſteth, that no blot had cleaved to his hands. In both he obviates or taketh off that ſuſpition of unrighteous dealing in any way of commerce or converſe with men as a man, or of unrighteous diſtributions unto men as a Magiſtrate or a man of Authority. As to both which duties his friends had often charged him not only with failings, but wilful prevaricatings. And therefore Job being burdened with theſe ugly accuſations for perverting the ballances of Juſtice, had reaſon enough for his own vindication, to beg this juſt favour in the Text, Let me be weighed in an even ballance, that God may know (that is, make known) mine Integrity.

Hence Note, Though a godly man hath the root of all ſin in him, and much ſin hath been done by him, yet he hath always an integrity of heart and hand, both towards God and towards man abiding with him.

A godly man ſins, and he ſins not, He ſins in many things, but he doth not give himſelf a liberty to ſin in any thing, and that's his integrity. When God came to weigh Job, doubtleſs there was ſomething in him beſides integrity, doubtleſs there was, yet ſaith he, Let God know mine integrity.

Obſerve, Secondly, Though a Godly man knoweth he hath much ſin in him, yet he is confident when God weigheth him he will not take notice of them, but only of his integrity.

He is confident God will not mention iniquity where he finds ſincerity, and that the failings which he hath bewailed, ſhall not be remembred. The Lord ſpeaks of David as if he had never ſinned ſave only but once; ſo we read in the reign of wicked Abijam King of Judah (1 Kings 15.3.) who walked in all the ſins of his father (Rehoboam) which he had done before him. And his heart was not perfect with the Lord as the heart of David his father; Nevertheleſs for Davids ſake did the Lord God give him a lamp in Jeruſalem, to ſet up his ſon after him, and to eſtabliſh Jeruſalem; Becauſe David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aſide from any thing that he commanded him all the days of his life, ſave only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite. The Scripture reports divers failings of David, and queſtionleſs he had many that are not reported. Yet God would take notice but of one, knowing his integrity. The righteouſneſs or attonement of Chriſt only takes off the guilt of ſin from us; but our own uprightneſs or integrity, may take away the reproach of ſin from us.

Again, When Job ſaith, Let me be weighed, &c. that God may know mine integrity. He intimates thus much to us, That nothing is ſo pleaſing to him that is upright as to know that God knoweth he is. As it is a ſmall matter with thoſe who are ſincere to be condemned by men, ſo it is not much with them to be commended or approved by them; for indeed neither he that commendeth himſelf, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, (2 Cor. 10. 18.) nor he that is commended by others, is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth. The Teſtimony or Letters commendatory of all the men in the world will do us no good, unleſs God give us his alſo. Therefore ſaith Job, I would be weighed that God may know, or approve, or give teſtimony to my integrity. The knowledg of God is frequently put in Scripture for his Approbation; And that interpretation of it here makes the ſence of the text very clear.

I ſhall paſs from theſe words when I have only named the tranſlation of the Septuagint, who render this verſe, not as Job's deſire to be weighed in an even ballance, but as an Aſſertion concerning himſelf; I have ſtood in an even Ballance (or kept an even poiſe in all my actions) And the Lord knoweth my integrity or innocency. As if he had ſaid, I have laboured to keep the golden mean of Juſtice towards all men in all things; and the Lord who knows all things, knows I have, or I have not ſuffered my ſelf to be ſwayed or over-ballanced by any partial or ſelf-reſpects to violate Juſtice in any matter, and the Lord, who knows all things, knows I have not. This rendring carries a fair ſence as to Job's ſcope, but it doth not carry ſo even a ballance, nor ſo rightly weigh the conſtruction of the Original text as the former, and therefore, I ſhall ſay no more of it.

*Ἕστημαι γὰρ ἐν ζυγῷ δικαίῳ, οἶδε δὲ ὁ κύριος τὴν ἀκακίαν μου. Steti enim in ſtatera juſta, novit autem dominus innocentiam meam. Sept.

VERS. 7, 8.

If my ſtep hath turned out of the way, and mine heart walked after mine eyes, and if any blot hath cleaved to my hands:

Then let me ſow, and let another eat, yea let my off-ſpring be rooted out.

JOB from the fifth to the ninth verſe of this Chapter, proceeds in purging himſelf by ſacred Imprecations, from the ſuſpition of injuſtice towards men. At the fifth verſe he ſaid, If I have walked with vanity; or if my foot hath haſted to deceit; here

Verſ. 7. He ſaith, If my ſtep hath turned out of the way, and mine heart followed after mine eyes.

So that in this verſe he heightens what he had ſaid before in aſſerting the integrity of his heart, and the righteouſneſs of his ways.

If my ſtep have turned out of the way.] There is an inward ſtep, and that is deſire, or the motion of the heart; and there is an outward ſtep, and that is endeavour, or the motion of the body to any buſineſs. Job doth not ſpeak in the plural number, If my ſteps, but in the ſingular, If my ſtep hath turned out of the way; Thereby intimating that he had looked to every ſtep, and that he did not give way to any one wandring thought for the advancement of his own profit by his neighbours loſs or damage; not that Job walked ſo exactly, or that any man can, as not to make a falſe ſtep, or never to ſwerve or decline from the right way (for there is no perfection of life in this life) but, when Job ſaith, my ſtep hath not turned out of the way, we are to underſtand this proteſtation;

Toties greſſus de via declinat quoties noſtra cogitatio iter rectitudinis per conſenſum relinquit errore. Greg.

Firſt, Of his aim and purpoſe, it was both his purpoſe and endeavour to keep every ſtep even, to walk with a right foot, or as Solomon adviſeth (Prov. 4. 26, 27.) To ponder the path of his feet, to order all his ways aright; not to turn to the right hand, nor to the left, but to remove his foot from evil. And therefore,

Secondly, If at any time he did ſtep aſide, and fail in any thing, yet he did it not willingly, nor deliberately, nor delightingly, but was miſtaken or miſled through inadvertency or infirmity. This is the ſum of what Job affirms, when he ſaith, that, his ſtep had not turned

Out of the way.] Some tranſlate with an emphaſis, Out of that way; indeed there is but one right way, but one way wherein God would have us to walk, all ways beſides that are crooked ways, by-ways, and while we walk in them, we do but wander out of the way. If my ſtep hath turned out of that way; yet this way may be taken two ways.

Firſt, For the way of Righteouſneſs and truth in general.

Secondly, For that ſpecial way of truth and righteouſneſs which conſiſts in the preſerving of each man's inheritance intire to himſelf. And this is conceived by ſome Interpreters to be Job's purpoſe here; as if he had ſaid, I have not gone beyond thoſe bounds which ſever and diſtinguiſh my poſſeſſions, or lands, from the lands of other men; I have not invaded their eſtates, either violently or cunningly. There are three ways of wronging our Neighbours in their Eſtates.

Firſt, By removing Land-marks.

Secondly, By a forcible entry upon and caſting them out of their poſſeſſions.

Thirdly, By putting Cattle into their grounds to eat up the fruits of it.

Some inſiſt much upon this interpretation, becauſe of the ſutableneſs of it, with the letter of that ſevere and ſolemn imprecation, which immediately followeth at the 8. verſe; Then let me ſow, and let another eat, yea let my off-ſpring be rooted out; As if he had ſaid, If I have taken other mens eſtates, then let other men take mine; but I conceive we need not take the word way ſo narrowly, but for the way of holineſs and righteouſneſs at large, which yet is a narrow way. If my ſtep hath turned out of the way.

Hence note, Firſt, God hath given man a way to walk in.

We are not left at large to do what, or to go where we will. Our way muſt be God's way, Bleſſed is the man that walketh not in the counſel of the ungodly, nor ſtandeth in the way of ſinners (Pſal. 1. 1.) There is a way of ſinners, and a way of Saints. There is God's way and the Devil's way: God hath ſhewed his people their way; and Satan endeavours to put them out of the way; Bleſſed are the undefiled in the way, ſaith David (Pſal. 119.1.) What that is he tells us in the latter part of the verſe; Who walks in the law of the Lord; and he tells us ſo again (v. 32.) I will run the way of thy Commandments, when thou ſhalt enlarge my heart. The Prophet calls it a High way (Iſa. 35 8.)

A high way ſhall be there, and a way, and it ſhall be called the way of holineſs; the unclean ſhall not paſs over it, but it ſhall be for thoſe, the wayfaring man, though a fool, ſhall not err therein. The King of Heavens high way, is the way of holineſs; And that is,

Firſt, The beſt way. The Apoſtle exhorts (1 Cor. 12. 31.) To covet earneſtly the beſt gifts, and yet (ſaith he) ſhew I you a more excellent way. That comparative is a ſuperlative, The moſt excellent way; that is, the way of grace, the way of faith, hope, and charity, the exerciſe of which three graces contains the perfect way of Holineſs.

Secondly, 'Tis the ſhorteſt way; The way of ſin is about. We make our ſelves work by doing ill work, and lengthen our way, by going ill ways. How far ſoever we go in wrong ways, we muſt come back every ſtep of it by repentance, before we can begin to go right, or take one ſtep in a right way.

Thirdly, This way is the ſafeſt way; they that keep the way of Commandments are kept by promiſes, yea the promiſes hold a banner of protection over them; while we travel in God's way. God appoints us a guard, a convoy of Angels (Pſal. 91. 11.) He ſhall give his Angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways (that is, while thou keepeſt in thoſe ways which he hath given thee to walk in there) they ſhall bear thee up in their hands, leſt thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone; that is, leſt thou take any hurt, or fall into any danger. How ſafely are they kept who are thus kept, and thus are all they kept who walk in the way of holineſs. No Prince in the world, who is not a Saint, hath ſuch a Guard at home, ſuch a Life-guard when he goes abroad, as the meaneſt Saint hath.

Fourthly, The way of holineſs is the moſt pleaſant way; Her ways (that is, the ways of wiſdom ſaith Solomon, Prov. 3. 17.) are ways of pleaſantneſs, and all her paths are peace; that is, they yield us much ſweet peace and ſoul-pleaſure in the very act of walking in them, and they will yield us much more in the iſſue or end of them, though in ſome ſence they are endleſs. By-ways, and wrong ways, may pleaſe a while, yet always at laſt, and often at preſent they are troubleſom and toylſom ways, they are bitterneſs in the end. Thou art wearied in the greatneſs of thy ways, ſaith the Prophet (Iſa. 57. 10.) Worldly men are often wearied in their way, and they will be weary of their ways, when once they ſee either what indeed they are, or whither they lead them. A good man may be wearied in his way, but he ſhall never be weary of it, both becauſe he knows his way is good, and the end of it is better. His way is good, and his way is pleaſant, and therefore chiefly pleaſant to him becauſe tis good.

Fifthly, This way, the way of righteouſneſs and holineſs is a clean way; The ways of ſin are dirty ways, he that walks in them doth at once defile and deſtroy himſelf. Saints are therefore undefiled in the way (Pſal. 119. 1.) becauſe the way wherein they walk is undefiled. And as they are clean ways, ſo they are cleanſing ways too, and the farther or longer we walk in them, the cleaner ſhall we be,

Secondly, Obſerve, Sin is a turning out of the way.

David confeſſed his ſins under the Metaphor of wandrings (Pſal. 119. 176.) I have gone aſtray like a ſheep that is loſt. A good man goeth ſometimes out of his way, but all the goings of a carnal man are out of the way, he is always wandering, for he is always ſinning; what is ſinning, but wandering? and what is wandering, but going out of the way? A Godly man is careful not to go out of the way; he prayeth earneſtly (as David did, Pſal. 119. 10.) O let me not wander from thy commandments. But a carnal man is willing to go out of the way, and by his good will (indeed his bad will) he would always go out of the way; and therefore the Prophet ſaith of ſuch (Jer. 14. 10.) Thus have they loved to wander, they have not refrained their feet. No man loves to go out of the way to his earthly home, but how few of thoſe who pretend a love to Heaven as their home, love the way to it? He that goes a journey is careful of his way, he would take and keep, the beſt, the ſhorteſt, the eaſieſt, the ſafeſt way. If he knows it not, he will enquire of every man he meets, whether he muſt turn to the right hand or to the left. And if any man (of whom he enquires and asks the way) ſets him in a wrong way, is he not angry? And if he himſelf miſs or miſtake his way, doth he not grieve? doth not every ſtep tire him? hath he not as it were a clog upon his heels, when he is uncertain, whether he is in his way, or out of it? Now ſeeing men are ſo careful not to miſs their outward way, that they may get well to their journeys end; is it not to be lamented, that they are even willing, yea deſirous to go out of their ſpiritual way? moſt are not only negligent of their way, never enquiring about it, as the Lord by his Prophet commands us to do (Jer. 6. 16.) Stand ye in the ways and ſee (that is, ſtay a while and conſider your way before ye venture to go in it; for ſo it follows) and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye ſhall find reſt for your ſouls; (now I ſay moſt are not only negligent of their way) But when they are ſhewed the right way, they are obſtinate and wilfully reſolve againſt it, as the Prophet tells us thoſe Jews were in the cloſe of the ſame verſe, But they ſaid, we will not walk therein. Job was afraid that any one ſtep of his ſhould turn out of the way, whereas the moſt of men utterly refuſe to turn or ſtep into it.

Thirdly, Obſerve, Every moral act or work of man, is a ſtep, either in the way, or out of the way, which God hath given us to walk in.

All the while we are thinking, ſpeaking, or doing, we are moving in a good way or in a bad one. Though there are ſome things indifferent in their nature, that is, they may be done, or they may be left undone without ſin; yet there is nothing indifferent when it is done by us. Whatſoever we do, we do either well or ill in doing it; if we hit not the right way, our ſtep turns out of the way, and then we are in a wrong way; There is no way lyes between theſe two.

Fourthly, Obſerve, Falſe ways, or wrong ways, are indeed no ways.

Job ſpeaks as if there were but one way; If my ſtep hath turned out of the way. The way of holineſs and righteouſneſs is not only better than other ways, the ways of ſin and error, but 'tis the only way. They who turn out of that way are in a wilderneſs not in a way; in a Maze not in a way.

Fifthly, Obſerve, He that is Godly and ſincere, would not turn one ſtep out of the way of God.

He would not only be in the way of holineſs; but he would only be in the way of holineſs; He as the Apoſtle exhorts (Eph. 5. 15.) walks circumſpectly, he looks to every ſtep, that he may keep his foot from evil. He had rather fall ſeven times a day into affliction, than ſtumble once into tranſgreſſion. If my ſtep hath turned out of the way,

And my heart hath walked after mine eyes.

The heart is put here, as elſewhere often in Scripture for the whole inward man, yet eſpecially for the will, deſires and affections. The heart may be ſaid to follow or walk after the eyes, when from a principle of innate or natural corruption and vitioſity, we deſire and embrace (without diſpute) whatſoever is pleaſing to or flattereth our eyes) or when we indulge thoſe luſts which are kindled at our eyes.

Job profeſſed at the firſt verſe of this Chapter, that he had made a covenant with his eyes, as to wanton looks after women; and here he profeſſeth that he had not only kept that covenant, but enlarged it as to all other objects: ſo that though his eyes ſaw ſinful allurements, yet he did not ſuffer them to have acceſs to his heart, nor ſuffer his heart to run after them. The Prophet diſcovering the ſinfulneſs of the Jews ſaith, Their heart walketh after the heart of their deteſtable things; that is, they heartily follow the way and worſhip of Idols. As the heart of a godly man is after the heart of God; So the heart of Idolaters is after the heart, that is, the worſt of their Idols, they love them quite thorough, or thoroughly. The heart hath its way; ſin lyes cloſe there, and it moves from thence (Iſa. 57. 17, 18.) For the iniquity of his covetouſneſs, was I wroth and ſmote him, I hid me and was wroth, and he went on frowardly in the way of his heart; And as the heart hath a way, ſo 'tis uſually led into that way by the eyes.

Sequi dicitur animus oculos cum pro innata vitioſitate expetit quicquid oculis placet. Mer. Si indulſi cupiditatibus meis per oculos accenſis. Piſc.

If mine heart hath walked after mine eyes, ſaith Job.

His ſuppoſition may be reſolved into theſe negations; I have not acted according to ſence, but according to rule, or I have not acted according to ſence, but according to reaſon, yea according to faith. The heart (as was toucht before) followeth the eyes; firſt, when we chooſe thoſe things which have a fair though a periſhing appearance; when we do what is before us, whether it be right or wrong, juſt or unjuſt. Laſtly, the heart walks after the eyes, when we would get all we ſee, and have as much in our hands, as we have in our eyes; we ſay, 'tis better filling a mans belly, than his eye, yet that which filleth a mans eye, cannot fill his heart, how long ſoever his heart walketh after his eyes. And therefore Job did wiſely as well as holily, when if his eyes did wander and rove unduely at any time, or when he occaſionally and inevitably ſaw that which had matter of temptation in it, yet he did not ſuffer his heart to wander after it, much leſs to cloſe with it, and feed upon it. When his eye was enſnared and caught by any unlawful object, yet he ſtopt it at his heart, his ſoul oppoſed it. It is ſaid in Nature, that an error in the firſt concoction is ſeldom helped by the ſecond; and an error in the eye is ſeldom rectified at the heart; but Job did it, though his eye were extravagant, yet he kept his heart at home. If my heart hath walked after mine eyes.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, The eye doth often miſlead the heart.

The eye uſually falls a luſting upon any delightful object; we ſeldom ſee any creature of God that is beautiful, and fair, but we draw it to an occaſion of ſinning againſt God, and ſo defile the beauty of our own ſouls. Our beholding that which is good in it ſelf, endangers us to evil; If we are not very careful to watch over and keep our hearts, our eyes will ſeduce and maſter them. The looks and caſts of the eye ſtrike fire upon the heart, and that like tinder is quickly ſet on fire. The eye is no ſooner affected, but the heart is enflamed, and then preſently ſin is perfected, unleſs grace prevent. There are three ſteps or degrees of ſin; Firſt, by ſence, when that is pleaſed; Secondly, by deſire, when that is moved; Thirdly, by the will, when that is fully reſolved and determined upon any ſin. If once ſence ſtir up deſire, it is more then probable that deſire will overcome the will, and fix it upon the attainment and enjoyment of the moſt ſinful object. The eye is an importunate ſuiter to the heart, And 'tis a great part of our ſpiritual wiſdom, to know when we ought to give way to, and when to deny that which the eye ſues for.

There are four ſpecial ſins, to which the eye doth miſlead the heart.

Oculus & cor duo ſunt proxenetæ peccati. Perſonam in Judicio reſpicere hoc loco poſt oculos ambulare dicitur. Brent.

De avaritia ſermo eſt. Sanct.

Firſt, To wantonneſs, of which Job ſpake in the firſt verſe.

Secondly, To injuſtice; when the Judge looks upon the man more then upon the cauſe, or upon the gift more then upon right, Juſtice is ſoon perverted and turned aſide. And therfore Juſtice is commonly pictured, hood-winkt or blind; implying, that where the perſon is looked upon, the cauſe ſeldom is. And this ſome will have ſpecially intended here.

Thirdly, The eye miſleads the heart to covetouſneſs and covetous practices. Thus Achan confeſſed (Joſh. 7.21.) When I ſaw among the ſpoyls a goodly Babyloniſh garment, and two hundred ſhekels of ſilver, and a wedg of gold of fifty ſhekels weight, then I coveted them and took them, and behold they are hid in the earth in the midſt of my tent, and the ſilver under it. Here we have ſins progreſs, Achans eye provoked him to covet, his covetouſneſs, provoked him firſt to take, and ſecondly, to uſe the beſt means he could to keep thoſe forbidden ſpoils. The Apoſtle John (1 Ep. 2. 16.) diſtinguiſheth all that is in the world into three luſts, The luſt of the fleſh (that is, wantonneſs or uncleanneſs) the luſt of the eyes (that is, Covetouſneſs) the pride of life (that is, Ambition and deſire of honour) Covetouſneſs is juſtly called the luſt of the eyes, both becauſe the ſight of the eye blows up covetous deſires, as alſo becauſe as Solomon ſaith (Eccl. 5. 11.) When goods increaſe, they are increaſed that eat them, and what good is there to the owners thereof, ſaving the beholding of them with their eyes? And if ſo, is not Covetouſneſs purely the luſt of the eyes? This (I conceive) was the particular ſin for the accompliſhment whereof Job here proteſts, that his heart had not walked after his eye. His ſoul did not hunger nor haſten after the enjoyment of that worldly wealth which was daily preſented to or within the proſpect of his eye.

Fourthly, The eye enſnares the heart to Idolatry; To prevent which the Lord gave that Law to the Iſraelites about making fringes in the border of their garment (Numb. 15. 38, 39.) And it ſhall be unto you for a fringe, that ye may look upon it, and remember all the Commandments of the Lord and do them, and that ye ſeek not after your own hearts, and your own eyes, after which ye uſe to go a whoring. God prepared an object upon which they ſhould fix, and buſie their eyes, he would have them make a fringe upon which ſome memorials of the Law were written (theſe the proud Phariſees did enlarge, Matth. 23. 5, 6.) that ſo their eyes might be taken up in beholding the will of God, and not ſeek after their own hearts, and eyes, after which they uſed to go a whoring (forgetting their vow of loyalty to God) as ſoon as they ſaw any vain thing, an Idol eſpecially; as the Lord complaineth of them by his Prophet (Ezek. 6. 9.) And they that eſcape of you ſhall remember me among the Nations, whither they ſhall be carried Captives, becauſe I am broken with their whoriſh heart, which hath departed from me, and with their eyes, which go a whoring after their Idols; and they ſhall loath themſelves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations. Their eyes are ſaid to go a whoring, becauſe their eyes carried their hearts off from the true God (who had eſpouſed them as his peculiar people) to joyn themſelves with Idols, which was ſpiritual whoredom and fornication. The ſame Prophet gives the reaſon of the Lords anger againſt that people in the ſame terms. (Ezek. 20. 23, 24, 25.) I lifted up mine hand unto them alſo in the wilderneſs, that I would ſcatter them among the heathen, and diſperſe them through the Countries: becauſe they had not executed my Judgments, but had deſpiſed my ſtatutes, and had polluted my Sabbaths, and their eyes were after their fathers Idols. Wherefore I gave them alſo ſtatutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they ſhould not live. Thus their whoring eyes (which were a provocation to the eyes of his glory) were puniſhed by God in a wonderful manner, even with ſtatutes which were not good. Not that God did give them any bad Law either moral or ceremonial; For all the Laws of God are holy and juſt and good; yea they are ſuch, that if they were perfectly kept, men might live in them. So that theſe ſtatutes which were not good, were not of things to be done, but of things to be ſuffered, even all thoſe ſore puniſhments which the Lord as by a ſtatute from heaven inflicted upon that people in the wilderneſs. Or the Lord may be ſaid to have given them ſtatutes, which were not good, when he gave them up to their own luſts, or to follow the evil ſtatutes and inventions of other men, as a puniſhment of their Idolatrous eyes.

When David prayed (Pſal. 119. 37.) Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity; he ſhews how apt the eyes are to lead the heart to all theſe vanities. That profeſſion which Solomon makes (Eccl. 2. 10.) is a very ſtrange one; Whatſoever mine eyes deſired, I kept not from them, I withheld not my heart from any joy; that is, I gave mine eyes full ſcope to go whither they would to gather up delights; I turned them looſe to the whole heard of the creature, and to pitch upon what game they pleaſed to pleaſe themſelves. The eye is a craving ſence, and will ask enough if it may have for the asking. Solomon was thus bountiful to the ſuits of his eye, whatſoever that deſired he kept not from it: and to ſhew how cloſe his heart followed his eye in this purſuit, he adds, I withheld not my heart from any joy. He was as free to his heart as he was to his eye, letting that take in all the contentments which his ſence could meet with or preſent unto him. Solomon's practice ſeems directly oppoſite to this of Job; He was careful that his heart ſhould not walk after his eyes, but Solomon let his heart walk whitherſoever his eyes carried it. He let both his eyes and his heart go without a keeper, he did not withhold his heart from any thing which delighted his eye. Solomon doth not in this ſet us an example what we ſhould do, but by his example tells us that they who do ſo, ſhall find no better than he confeſſeth himſelf had done, when his heart had hunted after his eyes through all creatures for creature-contentments (v. 11.) Behold all was vanity and vexation of ſpirit, and there was no profit under the Sun. And therefore while he ſeems to give the young man liberty to do ſo, he checks him in it (Eccl. 11. 9.) Rejoyce O young man in thy youth, and let thine heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the ſight of thine eyes, but know thou, that for all theſe things God will bring thee into Judgment; As if he had ſaid, let thine heart follow after thine eyes, and ſee what thou ſhalt get by it in the day of Judgment.

But it may be objected, that uncleanneſs, covetouſneſs, and all ſenſual luſts, are firſt in the heart. Chriſt is expreſs in the Goſpel (Math. 15. 19.) Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, falſe witneſs, blaſphemies. The heart is that unclean fountain out of which theſe filthy ſtreams iſſue continually.. Were the heart pure, the eye would be ſo too. The eye cannot ſin alone, nor hath it any undue motion, but as provoked by the heart, how then ſaith Job, that his heart did not walk after his eyes? Whereas rather the heart doth miſlead the eye, and the eye when it offends doth but walk after the heart.

I anſwer, Both the eye and the heart, the outward and the inward man, the ſences and the affections have their ſhare and act their ſeveral parts in ſin. To clear this we muſt remember, that ſin of any kind may be conſidered; firſt, in its root and original; ſecondly, in its motions and occaſions. Sin is originally in the heart, it dwells there, it is rooted there, as the Apoſtle ſhews in the 7*th* chapter of his Epiſtle to the Romans v. 17*th.* but conſider ſin in its motions and occaſions, conſider what brings it forth, and draws it out; then we may ſay, ſin is in and from the eye, becauſe the eye allures the heart, and occaſions it unto ſin. What the eye ſees, ſtirs the heart to ſin. The ſeed of all ſin is (I grant) in the heart, but there it lyes and moves not ordinarily till the ſight of the eye, or the hearing of the ear, draweth it out. This object ſtirs up wantonneſs, and that covetouſneſs, a third revenge and wrathfulneſs: ſo that though ſin be originally in the heart, yet occaſionally it is from the eye. Indeed if there were no corruption in the heart, the eye could not miſlead it; if the heart were not vain, what the eye ſees would not engage us after vanity. Chriſt was tempted by the eye, the Devil took him up and ſhewed him in one view all the glory of the world, but becauſe the Prince of this world found nothing in him, the ſight of all this world could do nothing upon him; his heart did not at all walk after his eyes to ſin, becauſe his heart was altogether clean from ſin. It is ſaid (Gen. 3. 6.) When the woman ſaw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleaſant to the eyes, and a tree to be deſired to make one wiſe; ſhe took of the fruit thereof, &c. Yet we are not to think, that the ſight of the eye in a ſtate of innocency could have infected the womans heart, had not ſome poyſon got into her heart before, had not the Serpent inſtilled a vicious deſire into her mind, had he not wrought ſome inordinate affection or affectation rather in the woman to mend her eſtate, the ſight of the tree had never overcome her. But we read how before that ſight of the tree overcame her, ſhe minced the matter, and abated the ſtrictneſs of that Divine Law which forbad the eating of the tree, with a peremptory penalty; In the day that thou eateſt thereof in dying thou ſhalt die, or thou ſhalt ſurely die, this (I ſay) ſhe abated with at leaſt an implicit peradventure, while ſhe ſaid to the Serpent (Gen. 3. 3.) God hath ſaid, ye ſhall not eat of it leſt ye die. Thus the Devil firſt enſnared the womans heart, elſe her heart had not followed her eye, nor given her leave to taſte that tree. So then ſin is originally in the heart, but occaſionally from the eye; if there were no ſin in the heart, there would be no hurt taken at the eye; but the heart being ſinful, every vain ſight of the eye endangers it to ſin, by awakning thoſe luſts which lie cloſe, and are as it were (till ſuch occaſions are offered) dormant there.

Secondly, When Job ſaith, his heart did not walk after his eye; he ſheweth what the natural courſe or walk of the heart is, even after the eye; that is, after vanity.

Hence Obſerve, The natural mans heart walketh after his eyes, or he is led by ſence.

In homine per corruptelam naturæ, omnia inverſa ſunt; quod ſequi debet ducit, quod ducere, ſequitur. Non [illegible] in illo [illegible] τὸ ἡ- [illegible] per. Cor.

As the ſervant ſhould follow the Maſter, not the Maſter the ſervant, ſo the heart ſhould not follow the eye, but the eye the heart. Corruption hath inverted this order; And therefore no ſooner doth a corrupt eye ſee any thing that is vain, but the heart is ſtirred up to luſt after it. There are many things in the world worthy to be ſeen, as the beauty and ſymmetry of the body of man, The luſtre of precious ſtones, the order and ornaments of the heavens, yet the heart ſhould not walk after any of them, nor be taken ſo with them, as to be taken off from God a moment. All our ſences ſhould be kept holy, clean, and God ward. As ſoon as we look upon any creature, the glory of God ſhould appear to us in it, and we ſhould be led by it to honour him, and be wholly enflamed with his love; the ſight of our eyes ſhould help us on in goodneſs. But where ſin bears rule (as it doth in all perſons unregenerate) ſence bears rule too, and often over-rules, yea captivates not only the will and affections, but the underſtanding and judgment, and then which way ſoever the eye walketh, the heart walketh alſo, and danceth after it. Moſes reporting the corruption of the old world, or the ſtate of thoſe degenerating times, ſaith, When the ſons of God (that is, ſuch as profeſſed and held out the worſhip of the true God) ſaw the daughters of men that they were fair, they took them wives of all that they choſe; they did not make their choice by their judgment and reaſon, but by their ſence: when they ſaw thoſe daughters of men beautiful and handſom they were ſatisfied, never enquiring (which ſhould be the firſt and greateſt enquiry about a wife) whether they were godly and gracious, or whether they had any thing in them that ſavour'd or looked like holineſs and goodneſs, which the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaking of and to women (1 Ep. 3, 4, 5.) calls, The hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, which is in the ſight of God of great price; after which manner in old time the holy women alſo who truſted in God adorned themſelves; As for theſe beauties and ornaments (I ſay) they looked not after them, when they choſe them wives. Thus their hearts walked without the leaſt controul after their eyes, nor did they look at any thing in a wife but what was viſible and bodily. The Apoſtle (2 Cor. 4. 18.) ſaith of believers, We look not at the things that are ſeen; that is, Things viſible are not the chief mark in our eye, they are not our aim and ſcope. We look further, and we look higher; or we may commodiouſly enough explain the Apoſtle by Job, We look not at the things that are ſeen; that is, while we ſee them, our hearts do not walk after them. Our hearts are at once fixed upon and moving after inviſibles; that is, we walk not by ſight, but by faith, which is the great ſpiritual difference among men; moſt walk by ſight, few by faith.

Thirdly, Obſerve, Both the eye and the heart are diligently to be watched and looked unto.

We muſt look to our eyes, leſt they inſnare our hearts, and we muſt look to our hearts, leſt they be inſnared by our eyes; but I ſhall not inſiſt upon this, having ſpoken to it before at the firſt verſe; and there ſhewed how diligent we ought to be in watching the eye, and in keeping the heart from walking or wandering vainly after it. Job having proteſted his integrity in this point, If mine heart hath walked after mine eye, makes yet a further proteſtation;

Cum ea quæ ſenſui jucunda ſunt in vita contempleris, vide ne capiaris iiſdem, nam in illis laqueus & eſca mortis latitat; Neq; enim nudum piſcator hamum in aqua dimittit. Ephrem Ser. de recta vivendi ratione.

And if any blot hath cleaved to my hands.

As the heart of a natural man is ready to walk after his eyes, ſo his hands are ready to work after his heart, or he is apt to do what his heart ſuggeſteth. Therefore Job to clear himſelf quite thorough, profeſſeth, that as his heart did not follow his eye, ſo his hand had not been defiled by his heart, that is, by any work which his heart had ſet him about: He doth none but good and clean work, who is able (as Job here did) to challenge all the world and ſay,

If any blot hath cleaved to my hands.

Some of the Hebrews render the Original word generally, as ſignifying any thing: If any thing hath cleaved to my hands, that is, any unlawful or unjuſt thing. We take it ſtrictly and expreſly for an evil thing; which whatſoever it is, is a blot.

If any blot (ſpot or taint) hath cleaved to my hands.] This carrieth the mind of the text more clearly, though both rendrings meet in the ſame interpretation. The blot here diſclaimed by Job is a ſin-blot, or any unrighteous act; As if he had ſaid, If any unjuſt gain, the gain of oppreſſion hath cleaved to my hands, then let me be oppreſſed, let me ſow and another eat, &c.

Quidam Hebræorum מאום macula exponunt מאומה quicquam rerum ſcilicet alienarum per fraudem aut rapinam, eodem ſenſu ſed malo pro macula. Merc.

'Tis ſaid of thoſe captive Jews, who purpoſed not to defile themſelves with the Kings meat, that they were children in whom was no blemiſh, but well favoured and skilful in all wiſdom, &c. (Dan. 1. 4.) As they had no bodily blemiſh upon them, ſo they were careful to keep themſelves from any ſoul-blemiſh or moral blot. This alſo was ſo much the care of holy Job, that he durſt ſtake or adventure all that he had or ever might have in the world, upon the clearing of his honour and integrity in that point.

If any blot hath cleaved (or been glu'd, as the word properly ſignifieth) to my hands.

We tranſlate it by cleaving, becauſe things glued cleave together. It notes alſo the neareſt union of affection. (Gen. 34. 3.) And his ſoul clave unto Dinah the daughter of Jacob, and he loved the damſel, and ſpake kindly to the damſel. As greateſt affliction is ſet forth by this word (Pſal. 44. 25.) Our ſoul is bowed down to the duſt, our belly cleaveth unto the earth; So alſo the greateſt affection, not only of man to man, but of God to man. (Jer. 13. 11.) For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, ſo have I cauſed to cleave unto me the whole houſe of Iſrael, and the whole houſe of Judah ſaith the Lord, that they might be unto me for a people, and for a name, and for a praiſe, and for a glory; but they would not hear. The Lord is therefore ſaid to cauſe that people to cleave to him as a girdle, becauſe of their nearneſs to him, and his love to them. God was deſirous they ſhould ſit cloſe to him, and he had a purpoſe to make them conſpicuous to the world, as a girdle is when it is claſped and ſo cleaveth to the loins of a man.

This notion of the word ſutes fully with the ſpecial ſin that Job proteſts againſt, gain by unjuſt dealing, for what is ſo gotten ſticks in the fingers and cleaveth as cloſe to the hand of an unrighteous man, as thoſe things which are faſt glued together.

The Septuagint render thus; If I have touched gifts (or bribes) with my hands; And ſo this blot may more particularly be expounded of bribe-taking, which as it perverts juſtice, ſo it blots and blemiſhes their reputation who uſe it. A Bribe received doth two things: Firſt, it blinds the eyes of the receiver, ſo that he cannot or rather will not ſee right from wrong. Secondly, it defiles and corrupts the hands, it puts a baſe blot upon them. Bribe-taking hands are blotted hands, not only becauſe to take bribes is a blot, but becauſe the taking of them makes many a blot, both in the mind of the taker, and in the matter or buſineſs which he undertaketh. Therefore the Prophet (Iſa. 33. 15.) gives this deſcription of a righteous man; He deſpiſeth the gain of oppreſſion, he ſhackleth his hands from holding of bribes. If any bribe fall into his hand, he ſhaketh it off as we do dirt, or as Paul did the Viper that hung upon his hand; yea as ſome interpret the Prophet, he ſhaketh his hand from taking hold of, or receiving any bribe. From the which righteous Job alſo vindicates himſelf, while he ſaith, If any blot hath cleaved to my hands.

Εἰ δὲ καὶ ταῖς χερσὶ μου ἡψάμην δώρων. Sept.

Hence obſerve, Sin is a blot.

There are three things in ſin.

Firſt, The fault; every man that ſinneth is faulty, for he doth what he ſhould not.

Secondly, The guilt; which is a binding over to puniſhment. Whoſoever ſinneth and commits a fault is obliged to anſwer it, and to be ſure he ſhall at the great Seſſions.

Thirdly, There is in every ſin a ſpot a blemiſh; ſin hath not only a fault, and a guilt, but a ſpot, the ſinner is diſhonoured by it and gets a reproach. There is a twofold ſin-blot; the godly man hath his blot, and the wicked man hath his blot. This diſtinction may be grounded upon that ſpeech of Moſes (Deut. 32. 5.) They have corrupted themſelves, their ſpot (or blot) is not the ſpot of his Children, they are a perverſe and crooked generation; that is, they ſin as if they were the children of this world, yea as if they were the Devil's children, they ſin as if they had never heard of God, they ſin as the Heathen; The children of God have their ſpot, but theirs was not the ſpot of his children.

Every ſin is a blot, and 'tis firſt an inward blot, a ſoul blot, that which blots the hand (in this ſence) blots the heart alſo. Sin is not a blemiſh upon the ſkin, nor a ſpot upon the face, nor is only a ſpot upon the name and reputation of a man, but 'tis a ſpot upon his ſpirit. And as ſin is an internal blot, ſo ſecondly, it is an eternal blot, an indelible blot, unleſs Chriſt fetch it out; nothing can cleanſe the ſoul from ſin-ſpots, but the blood of Jeſus Chriſt, who was the Lamb without ſpot.

Secondly, Take this blot more particularly, for unrighteouſneſs, or injuſtice in any kind. There are two ſorts of Juſtice, and each hath its blot, there is Commutative Juſtice, that's the Merchants Juſtice in dealing and trading with men, 'tis a blot to wrong any man in dealing. There is alſo Diſtributive Juſtice, that's the Magiſtrates Juſtice; 'Tis his blot not to give every man his own, in ruling over men. Theſe blots render both Merchants and Magiſtrates not only diſhoneſt and diſhonorable, but odious and abominable in the eyes of God and all good men. What ſo diſgraceful as to be a Deceiver? What ſo diſhonorable as to be a corrupter of Juſtice? Let all ſuch remember the Apoſtles ſerious exhortation (James 4. 8.) Cleanſe your hands ye ſinners, and purifie your hearts ye double-minded. Unjuſt gain is oppreſſion, and oppreſſion is blood; God will not endure that ſuch hands as have oppreſſed others, and ſo defiled themſelves, ſhould be lifted up to him; I will, ſaith the Apoſtle, that is, God by me declareth his will, that men pray every where lifting up holy hands (1 Tim. 2. 8.) And therefore, the Lord ſaid to Iſrael (Iſa. 1. 15.) When ye ſpread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood; That is, the guilt of blood cleaves to your hands. And ſo it doth, not only when we murder a man and take away his life, but when by oppreſſion or extortion we take away a man's goods, which are his livelihood. Thus blots of blood cleave to the hands of many, who think not of it, and ſo carry it ſilently (though it cryeth aloud for vengeance) to their grave.

Thirdly, Whereas Job ſaith, If any blot hath cleaved to my hands.

Obſerve, That which is unjuſtly gotten and taken away, is not eaſily parted with, it cleaves to the hand.

The Prophet ſaith of the obſtinate Jews (Jer. 8. 5.) They hold faſt deceit, which as it may be underſtood of their deceitful ways of getting, ſo it is as true of what is deceitfully gotten. O how faſt do men hold that, which they ought not to touch? The unrighteous Mammon, that is, the Mammon which they have gained by unrighteouſneſs (That's a true, though not the only ſence in which the Scripture calls worldly wealth, The unrighteous Mammon) We ſay of thieves, that they have pitchy hands, becauſe what they can lay hands on is their own, it cleaves to them as if their hands were pitcht. And as the groſs, ſo the cloſe thief hath pitchy hands too, both as to having and holding. He is as backward to let go his ſinful gettings, as he was forward to take them up; He is loth to reſtore. There are few inſtances of reſtitution. Who ſaith like Zacheus (Luke 19. 8.) If I have taken any thing from any man by falſe accuſation, I reſtore him four-fold. 'Tis beſt not to do any wrong, and 'tis the next beſt to repair thoſe whom we have wronged. And as 'tis good to reſtore becauſe it is juſt, ſo becauſe it is ſafe, and that not only in reference to the Soul which is in danger of being loſt for ever by ſuch gain; but alſo in reference to an intereſt in this world. The gain of unrighteouſneſs uſually cauſeth a rot in the eſtate, or kindles a fire in the houſe which conſumes all.

Fures picatas manus; quibus facile aliquid adhæret, habere dicuntur.

Fourthly, Note, Though a godly man by temptation may get a blot upon his hand in medling with the world, yet he will not let it cleave to his hands.

Poſſibly Job durſt not ſay, I never had any blot upon my hand, but he ſaith it confidently, that No blot cleaved to his hands. It is very probable that David found ſome blot upon his hand, when he profeſſed (Pſal. 26. 6.) I will waſh my hands in innocency; ſo will I compaſs thine Altar. Zacheus had gotten a blot upon his hand, but as ſoon as he believed, he would not let it ſtick there. As there is ſcarce any man having to do in this muddy dirty world, who doth not get ſome blot; ſo there is no godly man who ſeeing it, or being convinced of it, but is reſtleſs till he hath waſht his hands of it by the renewed acts of repentance and of faith. Sin-blots cannot cleave long to their hands, who have real union with Chriſt, and (as that good man Barnabas exhorted the Antiochians Acts 11. 23.) with purpoſe of heart cleave unto the Lord.

Thus it appears what a pattern of integrity Job holds out for our inſtruction and imitation; His ſtep did not turn out of the way, his heart did not follow his eyes, nor did any blot (of unjuſt gain) cleave to his hands, and that it was ſo with him, he upon the matter takes his oath by a vehement Imprecation in the verſe following, If my ſtep hath turned out of the way, &c.

Verſ. 8. Then let me ſow, and let another eat, yea let my off-ſpring be rooted out.

The ſum of this verſe is, as if Job had ſaid, If I have ſinfully gotten other mens goods, then let me not quietly or comfortably injoy my own.

Let me ſow.] We may conſider ſowing;

Firſt, Properly what ſuch ſowing is all know, 'tis the Huſband-man's work to caſt the ſeed into the earth in hope of a Harveſt.

Secondly, If we conſider ſowing improperly or metaphorically, Then any kind of work or labour may be called ſowing. The Apoſtle ſpeaks ſo of all our works (Gal. 6. 7.) Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatſoever a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap; that is, whatſoever a mans work is, his reward or the iſſue will be like it. Our actions are as ſeed ſown in the ground, and our harveſt will be ſutable to our ſeed-time. We may expound ſowing in this Text, either properly or improperly; let me till my land and ſow it, or let me labour in any kind, and let others take the profit of it, If any blot hath cleaved to my hands; Let me ſow

And let another eat.] This act of eating may alſo be underſtood, firſt, ſtrictly for the receiving of food into the body, to nouriſh, ſtrengthen and comfort it. Secondly, eating may be taken in a large ſence for any kind of injoyment, let another eat, that is, let him receive the benefit, let him have the comfort of my labours.

צאצאים Germina a יצא exiit.

And let my off-ſpring be rooted out.] The word off-ſpring may alſo be taken two ways.

First, Properly according to the letter of the Hebrew; And ſo it ſignifies a plant, or the branch of a tree; As if Job had ſaid, let my Orchards and Plantations be rooted out. And then as in the former part of the verſe he imprecated wrath upon his labours in ſowing his land with corn, ſo in this latter he imprecates vengeance upon his labour in planting Groves, Orchards and Gardens. Let what I have ſown be eaten by others, and let what I have planted be rooted up. Let men ſpoil all my labour, let what I have done either for profit or for pleaſure, come to nought. Some inſiſt much upon this tranſlation and expoſition, becauſe it ſuits beſt (as they conceive) with the former part of the verſe.

Faxit mihi juſtus judex, ut extranei ſatis meis veſcantur, & quæcunq; mihi germinant radicitùs perdantur. Bez.

Secondly, The word is taken improperly and metaphorically in Scripture, for Children, who are as ſprouts and branches growing out of man, or as his tender olive plants round about his table (Pſal. 128. 3.) Thus we render, Let my off-ſpring be rooted out. And thus the ſence is heightned. As if Job had ſaid, I am willing not only to loſe what I have ſown, or to have my Corn violently taken away, if I have wronged others; but I am willing, that my children or poſterity ſhould be utterly extirpated, who are more dear to me than all other things. The word is uſed in this ſence (Chap. 21. 8.) Their ſeed is eſtabliſhed in their ſight with them, and their off-ſpring before their eyes. And again (Chap. 27. 14.) If his Children be multiplied, it is for the ſword, and his off-ſpring ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread.

Quamvis alias in hoc libro צאצאים germina metaphoricè liberi intelligantur à parentibus exeuntes, hic malo in genuino ſenſu cum Hebræis ſumi, ut poſterior pars verſus priorem declaret, pro germinibus è terra exeuntibus, Merc

Some object againſt this tranſlation, that it had been a vain thing for Job to imprecate upon himſelf the loſs of his children, becauſe at that time he had none, his ſons and daughters being all deſtroyed while they were feaſting, by the fall of a houſe (Chap. 1. 19.) ſo that his off-ſpring being rooted out before, how could he congruouſly wiſh that his off-ſpring ſhould be rooted out.

I anſwer, Firſt, Job might well enough uſe ſuch an imprecation upon ſuppoſition, that if ever he ſhould have children, if God ſhould reſtore him that bleſſing, he might wiſh them rooted out; that neither he nor his might ever proſper.

Again, Should we ſuppoſe that Job had no expectation of Children, and indeed he often gave up himſelf for a dead man, and even called for the grave: ſuppoſe, I ſay, he had no expectation of Children, yet it was not improper for him to ſay, Let my off-ſpring be rooted out; that is, if I had children, who are the beſt treaſure in the world, I would venture them upon the iſſue of this my profeſſion and proteſtation, That no blot hath cleaved to my hand. So that we need not narrow up the text to the former interpretation, becauſe Job had no Children; for as he might ſay, Let others eat what I have ſown, though he had not ſo much as an acre of Corn, he might ſay, Let my off-ſpring be rooted out, though at that time he had no off-ſpring upon the earth: his imprecation carrieth only this general ſence, that he would indeed undergo the utmoſt of penal evils, if he had done thoſe ſin-evils of which he was ſuſpected.

Talis optandi modus nihil niſi affectus requirit; potuitq; petere mala ſibi inferri, ſi ſtatus id ferret.

Laſtly, For the clearing of this verſe, it may be queſtioned whether it be lawful, or how far forth it is lawful to uſe Imprecations or to wiſh evil to our ſelves.

I anſwer, An Imprecation, being a kind of oath, if an oath be lawful, that is lawful too, but it is lawful to uſe an oath in a ſerious matter, and in a ſerious manner, for our vindication, and the ending of a Controverſie; and therefore upon theſe terms it is lawful to uſe Imprecations. Job had ſpoken often before, but he could not be believed, and therefore he was neceſſitated to make this Imprecation. As for the ſinfulneſs and danger of uſing Imprecations lightly, I ſhall not ſtay upon it here, having ſpoken to that point before upon thoſe words of Job (Chap. 16. 18.) O earth cover not thou my blood, and let my cry have no place.

Only from the matter of this Imprecation, Let me ſow, and let another eat.

Obſerve, It is a ſore Judgment upon us, when others injoy the fruit of our labours, and not our ſelves, nor ours.

This was threatned (Lev. 26. 16.) Ye ſhall ſow your ſeed in vain, for your enemies ſhall eat it. And again (Deut. 28. 38.) Thou ſhalt carry much ſeed out into the field, and ſhalt gather but little in, for the Locuſt ſhall conſume it. So (Iſa. 1. 7.) Your land ſtrangers devour it in your preſence; that is, they eat up or ſpoil the corn and other fruits which your land brings forth. The Prophet Jeremy puts this among the greateſt evils which the Jews lamented in their captivity (Lam. 5. 2.) Our inheritance is turned to ſtrangers, our houſes to Aliens. 'Tis a ſad affliction to build, and others to dwell in our houſes; to ſow, and others to eat the increaſe of our field. The Apoſtle puts thoſe queſtions (1 Cor. 9. 7.) Who goeth a warfare at any time, at his own charges? Who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? This is a law of nature, and every mans common right, that where he ſows he ſhould reap, &c. Therefore to ſow and not to reap muſt needs be a vexatious ſuffering. As thoſe ſins are vileſt which are againſt the very light of Nature, ſo thoſe afflictions are moſt grievous which carry ſomewhat in them againſt the law of Nature, as for a man's own child to riſe up againſt him, or to ſee others eat what we have ſown. The Lord made a promiſe, yea took an oath to his people, That a time ſhould come when this evil ſhould befall them no more (Iſa. 62. 8.) The Lord hath ſworn by his right hand, and by the Arm of his ſtrength, ſurely I will no more give thy Corn to be meat for thine enemies, and the ſons of the ſtranger ſhall not drink thy wine, for which thou haſt laboured; but they that have gathered it ſhall eat it, and praiſe the Lord. And again the promiſe runs in the ſame terms (Iſa. 65. 21, 22.) concluding thus; Mine elect ſhall long injoy the work of their hands. A Heathen Poet bewails this; O (ſaith he) to what a paſs hath diſcord brought us, have we ſown, and ſhall the wicked Souldier, ſhall the Barbarian come in, and take all? O ſee for whom have we ſown our fields!

Impius hæc tam culta novalia miles habebit? Barbarus has ſegetes? en quo diſcordia cives Perduxit miſeros: en queis conſuevimus agros. Ovid.

Secondly, From the correſpondence of the ſin and puniſhment, Let me ſow and let another eat, if I have unjuſtly eaten the labours of others.

Obſerve, God doth often puniſh ſin, in way of retaliation.

He puniſheth ſin in ſuch a way, that you may read the ſin in the puniſhment: when they who have unjuſtly eaten what others ſowed, ſhall have that eaten up which themſelves have ſowed, is not this exact Juſtice! Thus the Lord threatned the cruel oppreſſors of his people, and their ſubtle circumventers, (Iſa. 33. 1.) Woe to thee that ſpoyleſt, and thou waſt not ſpoiled, and dealeſt treacherouſly, and they dealt not treacherouſly with thee; when thou ſhalt ceaſe to ſpoil, thou ſhalt be ſpoiled, and when thou ſhalt make an end to deal treacherouſly, they ſhall deal treacherouſly with thee; he doth not mean, that they would make an end of their treacherous dealing, by giving it over in a way of repentance, but Juſtus eſt ut ſi quis bona aliena rapuit, bona ejus ab aliis rapiantur.

but in way of ſatiety; as if he had ſaid, when you have filled and glutted your ſelves with the ſpoils of others, till ye cannot get down a morſel more, then others ſhall feed and fill themſelves with your ſpoils, (Hab. 2, 8.) Becauſe thou haſt ſpoiled many Nations, all the remnant of the people ſhall ſpoil thee, becauſe of mens blood, and for the violence of the Land, of the City, and of all that dwell therein. How notable is that acclamation of the Angel of the waters (Rev. 16. 5,6.) Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art and waſt, and ſhalt be, becauſe thou haſt judged thus: For they have ſhed the blood of Saints and Prophets, and thou haſt given them blood to drink, for they are worthy. To this voice John heard another (ecchoing as it were) out of the Altar, Even ſo Lord God Almighty, True and righteous are thy Judgments. Yea we may ſay, that the Judgments of the Lord are not only true and righteous, but critical and curious, when they that have ſhed blood unjuſtly, ſee their own blood ſhed; when they are made drunk with their own blood, who have drunk the blood of others. This alſo is the Lord's ſentence againſt Babylon (Rev. 18. 6.) Reward her even as ſhe rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works; in the Cup which ſhe hath filled, fill to her double. The Cup that Babylon filled was a Cup of blood, and therefore ſaith God, Babylon ſhall have a double Cup of blood. She ſhall have the ſame in kind, and double in meaſure, or degree. The puniſhment of many ſinners is as a glaſs wherein they may ſee the filthy face and deformed portraicture of their ſin.

From the laſt words, Let my off-ſpring be rooted out,

Note, The loſs of Children is the greateſt outward loſs.

When Job would wiſh upon himſelf the worſt of outward evils, he goes off from wiſhing any further loſs of his goods, and wiſheth the loſs of his children. The ſevereſt threatning which the Lord commanded Moſes to denounce againſt Pharaoh if he ſhould refuſe to let Iſrael his ſon, his Firſt-born go to ſerve him, was this; Behold I will ſlay thy ſon thy firſt-born (Exod. 4. 23.) And though the other nine plagues were full of terror and aſtoniſhment, yet we do not read that either Pharaoh or the Egyptians made a great cry till this was executed (Exod. 12. 30.) And when bloody Herod commanded all the male children to be ſlain, Then (ſaith the Goſpel, Mat. 2. 17, 18.) was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremy the Prophet, ſaying, In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation and weeping and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, becauſe they are not. Children are not only parts of our ſelves, but even our whole ſelves multiplyed, and therefore tender-hearted Parents feel as many deaths themſelves as they have children dye. How obſtinate is that ſorrow which reſolves againſt, the only means of its removal, comfort! Some who have loſt the ſolace of their children, have found no ſolace but in ſorrowing for them. And though this was inordinate ſorrow, or the over-acting of it; yet that which is ordinary and orderly (where there is a due working of Natural affection) for the loſs of Children is very great; yea it is ſo great, that the ſorrow for ſin, by which Chriſt is pierced, yea the ſorrow for that ſpecial ſin of piercing Chriſt, which 'tis prophecied the repenting Jews ſhall be affected and afflicted with at laſt (which ſurely will be as deep and as ſoaking a ſorrow as ever any was, that ſorrow I ſay) is but parallel'd by his mourning, who mourneth for his only Son, and by his bitterneſs, who is in bitterneſs for his firſt-born (Zach. 12. 10.) Then God layeth his axe to the root of a man's heart, when he lets him ſee his off-ſpring rooted out.

Some can part eaſily enough with their children, yea ſome are ready to think themſelves eaſed by parting with them, and are even willing their children ſhould die to ſave charges. How inhumane, how unnatural this is needs no other proof but the report of it. Children are the beſt goods, the beſt good things which God hath to give us, except his Grace and Himſelf. God will give (as he promiſed Iſa. 56. 4, 5.) to the Eunuchs that keep his Sabbaths, and chuſe the things that pleaſe him, and take hold of his Covenant, a name and a place in his houſe, and within his walls, better than of ſons and daughters. Yet it muſt be confeſſed that the name of ſons and daughters is the beſt outward treaſure in our houſe, and the moſt beautiful ornament of our walls. How naked are thoſe walls, how unfurniſht is that houſe, where the children are taken down and removed by death, eſpecially where (as Job ſpeaks) a man's off-ſpring are wholly rooted out?

VERS. 9, 10, 11, 12.

If mine heart hath been deceived by a woman, or if I have laid wait at my neighbours door:
Then let my wife grind unto another, and let others bow down upon her.
For this is an heinous crime, yea, it is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judges.
For it is a fire that conſumeth to deſtruction, and would root out all my increaſe.

JOB having acquitted himſelf, both by way of proteſtation, and imprecation; Firſt, from fornication and wantonneſs with young Women or Maidens, in the firſt, ſecond, third, and fourth verſes of this Chapter: Having alſo ſecondly, by a like proteſtation and imprecation, acquitted himſelf from all deceit and guile in his dealings with men, in the fifth, ſixth, ſeventh, and eighth verſes foregoing; he in this context proceeds to acquit himſelf in like manner, from that groſſer part of wantonneſs, and uncleanneſs, adultery, or the abuſe of his Neighbours wife; which he doth,

Firſt, By a ſtrong denial, that he was chargeable with any ſuch crime, v. 9. If my heart hath been deceived by a woman, or if I have laid wait at my neighbours door; As if he had ſaid, I know I have not done it, nor can any man upon his knowledg charge me with it.

Secondly, He doth it by imprecating the like meaſure upon himſelf, in caſe he were guilty of this crime, at the tenth verſe, Then let my wife grind unto another, &c.

Thirdly, He ſignifieth what he had in his eye, which kept him from this wickedneſs, and that may be conſidered two ways.

Firſt, The greatneſs, and the vileneſs of the ſin conſidered in its own nature, which he lays down at the beginning of the 11. verſe; For this is a heinous crime, this is no ordinary ſin; As if he had ſaid, Suppoſe this were a ſin of the leaſt dimenſion, yet I ought to avoid it, how much more ſeeing it is a notorious wickedneſs, a heinous crime.

Secondly, As he was kept from it, by conſidering the foulneſs and filthineſs of the ſin in its own nature, ſo likewiſe, by conſidering, the woful, and ſad conſequents and effects of it, or the bitter fruits which that ſin bringeth forth, and thoſe twofold.

Firſt, Puniſhment from man, at the latter end of the 11. verſe; Yea it is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judges: A man may commit many ſins, which the Judges have nothing to do with, there's no humane law againſt them; but this is ſuch a groſs and heinous crime, that the law takes Cognizance of it, and is therefore to be puniſhed by the Judges.

Secondly, This ſin is purſued with divine vengeance, if it eſcape the vengeance of man, or if earthly Judges neglect to puniſh it, yet God the Judg of all the earth will not; he will pay it home; It is a fire that conſumeth to deſtruction, and would root out all mine increaſe. As if he had ſaid, The fire of this luſt in my heart will kindle a devouring fire in my houſe, and will not only lop off the boughs and branches, but utterly root up all that I have planted, how fairly ſoever it ſhould flouriſh and increaſe.

Thus we have the parts and reſolution of theſe four verſes. The general ſcope and tendency of which is Job's acquittal of himſelf from that worſer ſort of filthineſs and uncleanneſs; he thought it not enough to ſay, that neither his eye nor heart had vainly wandered after maids or virgins; but he alſo diſclaims that groſſer crime, adultery.

Verſ. 9. If my heart hath been deceived by a woman, &c.

In this verſe Job offers two things to prove his clearneſs from that ſin.

Firſt, That he had kept a faithful watch at all times upon his heart, leſt it ſhould go vainly out after, or be enticed by women.

Secondly, He had been careful to avoid (which is the cuſtom of unclean perſons to ſeek) all opportunities of running into that ſin. As he watcht his heart at all times, ſo he never watcht his time at his neighbours door, to injoy thoſe forbidden pleaſures.

If my heart hath been deceived by a woman.

What the heart is, hath been explained already upon ſeveral paſſages of this Book; here 'tis put for the will and affections, for the concupiſcible appetite or deſire of the ſoul. The heart of an Adulterer is a Brothel-houſe of filthy deſires. Job begins at the root, he openeth the very fountain of uncleanneſs. As the blood of Chriſt is a fountain opened for ſin and for uncleanneſs (Zech. 13. 1.) that is, for the waſhing away and purging out of ſin and uncleanneſs; ſo the heart of man is a fountain opened both for taking in, and letting out of ſin and of uncleanneſs, eſpecially the ſin of uncleanneſs. For though (as was ſhewed in the former context) the eye is a great occaſion of inflaming the heart with this luſt (the heart taking fire at the eye) yet even this luſtful eye, or the luſt of this eye cometh out of the heart (Math. 15. 19.) Out of the heart proceed adulteries, fornications, &c. There they have their beginning, that's the cage or neſt, which is full of theſe unclean birds, and from thence they take their flight; they proceed out of the heart, or as the Greek word properly ſignifies, They march like an Army out of the fort or ſtrong hold of the heart, upon ſome baſe expedition, to beſiege ſome neighbours houſe, and aſſault the chaſtity of his wife. Therefore, I ſay, Job is at the very fountain of this ſin, while he ſaith, Ἐξέρχομαι proprie ſignificat exire in expeditionem & pugnam contra hoſtes. Novar.

If my heart hath been deceived, or allured.

The word which we tranſlate Deceived, ſignifies to ſeduce or deceive, either by flattery or by any kind of ſubtlety, and craft. The heart, yea the whole man is drawn out of the way of righteouſneſs, holineſs and chaſtity, by ſubtle pretences, and falſe perſwaſions. Further to clear the emphaſis of the text, we may take notice, that the words are paſſive, If my heart hath been deceived by a woman: he doth not ſay, If my heart hath deceived or beguiled me, in ſpeaking to a woman, but if my heart hath been deceived by a woman ſpeaking to me. Which implies that Job had not only not been deceived, or catcht at unawares, by ſome ſudden or unexpected meeting with or ſight of other mens wives; but that though he had been ſet upon, tempted and aſſaulted (as Joſeph was by his Maſter's wife) with many fair ſpeeches and cunning allurements to entertain ſuch a motion, yet he remained untainted, his heart was not deceived, nor enſnared, but manfully withſtood all thoſe feminine aſſaults, even when he was in the vigour and flower of his youth. To be victorious againſt ſuch attempts, is not every man's honour. One of the Ancients ſaith, That among all battels we moſt hardly overcome in thoſe which aſſault chaſtity; Conflicts with luſtful temptation are frequent, but the conqueſt of them few and rare. Solomon having ſhewed at large how the ſilly young man was captivated by a ſtrange woman, concludes with an awakning admonition (Prov. 7. 25, 26.) Let not thine heart decline to her wayes, go not aſtray to her paths, for ſhe hath caſt down many wounded, yea many ſtrong men have been ſlain by her. Her ways of deceit are many, and, one way or other, not a few have been overcome by her. To be a conqueror of a ſingle woman in this ſence, is a greater glory than to conquer an Army of men. Chaſt Job wore the crown of this gracious conqueſt; no whoriſh woman could ever take that Fort or Caſtle, that Citadel of his heart. My heart (ſaith he) hath not been deceived

By a woman.] The woman here intended is not a woman at large, but a harlot, and ſhe another man's wife; ſo the Septuagint expreſs it, If my heart hath followed the wife of another. Job ſpake of unmarried women, maids, or virgins, at the firſt verſe; I made a covenant with my eyes, why then ſhould I think upon a maid? and here Job made a covenant with his heart, that it ſhould not be deceived by a woman, or another man's wife.

Εἰ ἐξηκολούθησεν ἡ καρδία μου γυναικὶ ἑτέρου. Si ſecutum eſt cor meum mulierem viri alterius. Sept.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, The heart, which is the great deceiver, is often ſet upon to be deceived.

While Job ſaith his heart had not been deceived, he intimates that many a time it had been attempted by thoſe deceivers. Who hath not found, by ſad experience, the truth of that Teſtimony which the holy Prophet gives againſt the heart of man (Jer. 17. 9.) The heart is deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked, who can know it? The heart of man is a miſchievous piece, even a piece of miſchief; 'Tis wily, fraudulent, full of impoſture, prone to ſupplant; 'Tis always plotting and contriving miſchief, to inſnare it ſelf, or ruine others; 'tis like a crooked way full of turnings and windings, a very labyrinth; There is nothing like it, no match for it in ſubtlety; 'tis deceitful above all things, and about all things; pretending one thing when it intends another: moſtly croſſing our promiſes both to God and man by ſecret purpoſes. Who can know it? No man can know another man's heart at all, no man can know all, no nor one half of his own heart; God only can. Now as the heart is the greateſt deceiver of others, ſo it is as greatly deceived; Our own hearts put fallacies and tricks upon us, and there are as many fallacies and tricks put upon the heart by the world, and by Sathan: 'Tis deceitful above all things, and 'tis deceived more than any thing. He is a wiſe and a holy man indeed, whoſe heart doth not deceive him. And he is no leſs, whoſe heart hath not been deceived. But where ſhall we find ſuch a man? who is there either ſo wiſe or ſo holy, whoſe heart hath not deceived him, or whoſe heart hath not been deceived? They are beſt who have been leaſt deceived, there are none ſo good as not to be deceived at all; There are not many who can ſay (as Job here did) their hearts have not been deceived by a woman.

Hence obſerve, Secondly, Women have often proved men-Deceivers. The woman was firſt made for man's good; ſhe was made for a meet helper (Gen. 2. 18.) yet through the corruption of man, ſhe becomes his ſnare, a meer deceiver.

All that God made was good, and it was all made good for man. But man turning to evil from good, hath turned all his own good to evil. What good thing is there which one time or other one way or other hath not been evil to man? That was a dreadful denunciation againſt the Jews, whom the Spirit of prophecy fore-ſaw crucifying Chriſt, giving him gall for meat, and in his thirſt giving him vinegar to drink (Pſal. 69. 22.) Let their Table become a ſnare before them, and that which ſhould have been for their welfare, let it become a trap. Now as this was a ſpecial curſe upon that people for that ſpecial ſin; ſo ſin in general hath ſubjected all men to ſome droppings of this curſe. And as while we look through the whole creation, we meet with ſnares and traps in thoſe things which were inſtituted and appointed for a Table to us, or for our welfare; ſo this is moſt obvious in that part of the creation, Woman, in reference to whom the Lord ſaid, It is not good for man to be alone; How ſoon did ſhe become a ſnare to the firſt man, and ſo an occaſion of his fall, in whom mankind fell, and had been loſt for ever if Free-Grace had not provided a remedy. The Devil uſed the Serpent, as an inſtrument, to deceive the woman, and he uſed the woman, as an inſtrument to deceive the man. The firſt deceit that ever was put upon man, was by the agency of a woman; Satan well knew how potent that weaker veſſel would be to do man a miſchief. He knew the man would not eaſily ſuſpect any harm from the woman, and he knew he could as hardly refuſe it, when it was tendred to him by her hand, and urged upon him by her perſwaſion. The Apoſtle uſeth this as an argument to humble the woman, and to keep her within the ſphere of her proper duty. (1 Tim. 2. 11, 12, 13, 14.) Let the woman learn in ſilence with all ſubjection; But I ſuffer not a woman to teach (that is, in the Church, ſhe may teach her children and ſervants at home) nor to uſurp authority over the man, but to be in ſilence. For Adam was firſt formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived (that is, immediately or at firſt hand by the Serpent, or he was not deceived by that error or miſtake (as ſome conceive) that he ſhould be made more wiſe and knowing by eating it, for he heard not thoſe reaſonings or inſinuations of the Serpent, thus (I ſay) Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the tranſgreſſion; that is, ſhe was firſt in the tranſgreſſion, and having tranſgreſſed her ſelf by eating the forbidden fruit, ſhe gave unto her huſband and he did eat; ſhe was not in the tranſgreſſion as a plotter and contriver of it (ſo the Serpent only was in it) yet ſhe was in the tranſgreſſion more then by her own act, for ſhe was made uſe of both by her examp'e in eating, and by her offer to Adam to draw him to eat, and ſo into the tranſgreſſion. And though Adams ſin was greater then Eves, firſt, becauſe he received the commandment in perſon from God, which forbad his eating of that tree; and Secondly, becauſe he had greater ſtrength, as alſo greater knowledg and wiſdom then ſhe, yet in this her ſin was greater then his, that ſhe was the engin that brought him into that ſnare of the Devil.

And as the firſt man was deceived by the firſt woman; ſo to deceive man hath been the trade of ſome women ever ſince. Solomon tells us his experience in this matter (Eccl. 7. 26) I find more bitter then death, the woman whoſe heart is ſnares and nets, and her hands as bands. Solomon doth not here charge woman-kind or women in general, as if all of them were more bitter then death, or as if the hearts of all of them were ſnares and nets; But he ſaith he had found the woman or, That woman (as the Original may be rendred) whoſe heart is ſnares and nets, and whoſe hands, are bands, that is, who by what ſhe deviſeth in her heart, and uttereth with her mouth, and acts with her hand, doth inſnare, intice, and captivate man. This woman he found more bitter then death; For death doth only ſeparate the Soul from the Body, But ſhe, by enſnaring and captivating a man to ſin, ſeparates both body and ſoul from God. No corporal death gives a man ſo many bitter draughts as ſin doth. And therefore it followeth in the ſame Verſe; Whoſo pleaſeth God ſhall eſcape from her. The Hebrew is, He that is good before God ſhall eſcape from her; that is, he that hath a good and an honeſt heart, (which is the thing which God chiefly looks to and moſt highly prizeth) ſhall be delivered from the ſnares and nets which her heart hath made, and her hands ſpread to catch and entangle vain men. Only they who pleaſe God, or with whom God is pleaſed, and ſo beſtoweth this ſpecial grace and ſingular favour upon them, can eſcape her ſnares; and therefore it follows in the cloſe of the ſame Verſe, But the ſinner ſhall be taken by her. And to be taken by her is neither better nor worſe, then to be taken by the Devil; is not then ſuch a deceitful woman more bitter then death?

Now as there are many vicious, yea flagitious women (the reproach of their ſex) ſuch as Solomon there deſcribes, who actively deceive men, that is, who lay ſnares and ſpread nets to entrap them, who make it their trade and buſineſs to ruin the eſtates, to deſtroy the bodys and ſouls of men; ſo there are others who deceive paſſively; who though they do not plot to deceive any, yet many are deceived by them; They may be innocent, yet men doting upon, and luſting after their beauty are drawn away and deceived; thus they deceive paſſively; That woman is happy, who being beautiful, is neither proud of it her ſelf, nor thereby a ſnare to others. And becauſe Job ſpeaks it ſo Emphatically, My heart hath not been deceived by a woman, I will ſhew you ſeven ways, by which women deceive the hearts of men.

Firſt, They deceive by their favour and natural beauty; Beauty is good, a good gift of God, yet it often doth hurt, it hurts many who have it, and it hurts not a few who behold it. Solomons mother, who knew well the heart of a woman, having painted out a vertuous woman in her beſt beauty and moſt proper colours, preſently adds (Pro. 31. 30.) Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain, but a woman that feareth the Lord, ſhe ſhall be praiſed. Favour is not here put for good will; as we ſay, I have ſuch a mans favour, or am in favour with him; but favour is the external comlineſs and handſomneſs of a perſon. Thus we ſpeak in common language; ſuch a one hath a good favour, you favour ſuch a one, that is, you are like him, or I know your favour. It is ſaid, as a part of Joſephs commendation (Gen. 39. 6.) that he was a goodly perſon and well-favoured. As his perſon was highly favoured by God, as alſo by Pharaoh, who made him his Favourite, ſo he was a well-favoured perſon; this is intended by Solomon, when he ſaith, Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain. Joſephs favour deceived his wanton Miſtreſs, and had almoſt undone him; For though while her heart was deceived by him, his heart was not deceived by her, but graciouſly reſiſted her ſolicitations and preſerved his chaſtity, yet he loſt his liberty and got a priſon while he kept himſelf free from that pollution. Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain two ways.

Firſt, Becauſe it deceives thoſe that have it; How ſoon doth favour fade, and beauty wither away? The beauty and favour of the face, is like a flower of the field, which quickly declines; old age will certainly do it, time wrinkles and deforms the beſt bodily favour, and uſually that ſooneſt which is beſt: yea before old age comes, the beauty of many is gone, ſickneſs and ſorrow, cares and tears will ſtain it. If the face be but a while flooded with tears, favour and beauty are drowned and defac'd. Many have uſed high waſhings to preſerve their natural beauty, or to get them an artificial one; but God hath waſht off their beauty with briniſh tears, and broken their favour with heart breaking ſorrows. Some flatter themſelves they ſhall ever be green, and freſh, as the ſpring, but they have felt an autumn, yea a hard providential winter which hath blown off, yea frozen off all their natural bravery.

Secondly, Favour it is deceitful; becauſe it deceives thoſe that look upon it, ſtirring up vain thoughts and luſts, which while they pleaſe the phancies of men, do indeed befool their underſtandings, and render them objects of pity to many, and to the moſt of contempt and ſcorn.

Secondly, The woman deceives by the very caſt of her eye; luſt looks out at thoſe windows of the eyes, and from thence thoſe ſhowers of amorous darts are caſt, and arrows ſhot which have wounded many a heart to death. Thus it is ſaid of Potiphars adulterous wife (Gen. 39. 7.) She caſt her eyes upon Joſeph and ſaid, lie with me. The holy Prophet (Iſa. 3. 16.) reproves the vain daughters of Zion, who walked with ſtretched out necks, and wanton eyes; the Hebrew is, (and ſo we put in the Margin) deceiving with their eyes. The eye is as full of deceit, as the heart or tongue are. There are ſnares and nets in a wanton womans eye, and many have been intangled, and taken by them. The holy Ghoſt ſetting forth the moſt pure and ardent love of Jeſus Chriſt to his Spouſe the Church, and how his heart was (as I may ſay) taken with her ſpiritual beauty, is pleaſed to expreſs it in this very notion (where note by the way, that in the Book of Canticles the Spirit of God often alludes divinely to thoſe things which ſome men and women do vainly, while in higheſt ſtreins he tells us of that ſweet reciprocation of unſpotted affections between Chriſt and his Spouſe) for thus he is repreſented ſinging to his Beloved (Cant. 4. 9.) Thou haſt raviſhed my heart, my ſiſter, my Spouſe, thou haſt raviſhed my heart, with one of thine eyes, with one chain of thy neck. How ſpiritually paſſionate is this language of love! Raviſhment is the ecſtaſie of Joy; He that is raviſht in ſpirit, ſcarce knows where he is, what he doth, or ſpeaketh. Thus was Chriſts heart raviſht; His ſiſter (ſo he calls the Church with reſpect to his own future incarnation) his Spouſe (ſo he calls her with reſpect to his preſent affection) had raviſht his heart, or (as the Septuagint tranſlate) unhearted him; ſhe had gotten away his heart from him (and then what might ſhe not get of him?) But how did ſhe raviſh or get away the heart of Chriſt? The Text anſwers, With one of thine eyes; that is, with a caſt or glance of thine eye. Chriſt ſaid of the Spouſe at the firſt Verſe of the fourth Chapter, Behold thou art fair my love, behold thou art fair, thou haſt doves eyes; That is, ſimple, chaſt, pure eyes; ſuch is the eye of faith, which not only looks up to, but looks into Heaven, and ſeeth him who is inviſible; 'Tis this one eye of faith (though this is never alone, or without the eye of love) which raviſheth the heart of Chriſt. This eye of faith gives Chriſt ſuch a look, that his heart cannot but be toucht with it graciouſly; even as the wanton looks of Adulterous women touch and wound the hearts of graceleſs men. That's the ſecond way, by which women deceive the hearts of men, They can do it with their eyes.

Thirdly, Women deceive the hearts of men, as by their eyes, ſo by their tongues; Their muſical voyce is a ſnare, that's a deceiver too. The whoriſh woman hath her bewitching ſongs and melodious ditties, by which ſhe inſinuates her poyſon at the ear to the heart. That Poetical Fable of the Sirens drawing Sea-paſſengers to them by ſinging, and then devouring them, was but the ſhadow of what I am now upon. And how few are there who can ſtop their ears (as Ulyſſes is ſaid to command his companions) or (as he did) bind themſelves faſt while they paſs by theſe inchanting Sirens. We have many who will (with the deaf Adder) ſtop their ears, and will not hearken to the voyce of the charmer charming wiſely, yea charming never ſo wiſely; But there are not many (comparatively to thoſe who do not) who ſtop their ears at the voyce of theſe charmers, charming vainly, yea charming never ſo vainly.

Fourthly, Women deceive as by the muſicalneſs and ſweetneſs of their voyce, ſo by the Rhetoricalneſs of their ſpeech, and flattering perſwaſions. As ſome women have their melodious Tunes, ſo others have oyly eloquent tongues and ſubtle inſinuating language, by which they wind themſelves into the affections, and ſteal away the hearts of men. Of ſuch Solomon gives warning (Pro. 2.) where he aſſures us, that as when wiſdom entreth into the heart, and knowledg is pleaſant to the Soul, it will deliver us from the way of the evil man, from the man that ſpeaketh froward things (Verſ. 12.) ſo it will deliver us from the ſtrange woman, even from the ſtranger which flattereth with her words (Verſ. 16.) This ſtrange woman, is either another mans wife, or ſuch a one as is not a wife; And ſhe, how neer a neighbour, or how well known ſoever ſhe is unto any man, ought to be as a ſtranger to his bed and embraces, yet ſhe is apt enough to ſmooth and pave man a way to both by her fauning flattering words. For as the ſame Solomon tells us again (Pro. 5. 3.) The lips of a ſtrange woman drop as an honey-comb, and her mouth is ſmoother then oyle. The lips of man or woman drop ſweetly like an honey-comb, when the Bees that make it are honeſt and gracious thoughts in the heart; But the honey-words which drop from the lips of a ſtrange woman, are made by ſtinging waſps, by vile, graceleſs, helliſh thoughts. And therefore a harlot is full of luſt not of love, her kiſs hath venom in it, and all the honey which drops from her lips is pernicious poyſon. And yet with this poiſonous honey of her lips, and with her mouth (that is, the words of her mouth) which is ſmoother then oyl, ſhe allures and deceives the heart of vain man. We find this the iſſue of her glozing diſcourſe (*Pro.*7.21.) With much fair ſpeech, ſhe cauſed him to yield, with the flattering of her lips, ſhe forced him; her words led him away captive to her will; the young man, whom this harlot enticed, is expreſſed by a word which implyeth him eaſie and perſwadable, one that would be ſoon catcht with a mouth full of good words; But ſhe plyed him ſo faſt and gave him ſo many mouth-fulls of good words, that ſhe put a kind of force upon him, and won him over to her ſelf, that is, to her ill courſes, whether he would or no. How woful is that victory where ſin rides in triumph, and how terrible a force is it which makes a breach, whereat the Devil enters. Yet the young man could not plead this force as his excuſe. It was his own folly which ſubjected him to her force. And how much ſoever ſhe forced him, ſhe had the leave of his own heart. Nothing compells luſt but it ſelf, nor is any man properly forced to that with which he is delighted. No man commits fornication againſt his will; Only to ſhew that there is a great force in a harlots flattery, it is here ſaid, With the flattery of her lips ſhe forced him.

Fifthly, The heart of a man is ſometimes deceived by the gay attire, and vain-dreſſes, and new-fangled faſhions of a woman. Though ſhe be not beautiful, though ſhe hath not many fine words, yet her fine cloaths may prove a ſnare; Harlots have their proper attire when they intend to deceive. This Solomon reports as one way by which the young man was deceived (Pro. 7. 10.) Behold there met him a woman with the attire of an harlot; ſhe was fitted for the purpoſe from head to foot to deceive. The Prophet (Zech. 13.4.) intimates, that ſome uſed to wear a rough garment to deceive. A harlot weareth ſoft ſilken garments to deceive. Her wantonneſs appeareth in her attire, her cloathing is a flag of vanity to allure beholders, and draw eyes upon her. The Prophet leads us to the wardrobe and opens the cabinets of the proud daughters of Jeruſalem, and ſhews us by name, or gives us an exact inventory of all their vain dreſſes, while he threatens the ſpoil and removal of them (*Chap.*3.18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23.) In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments about their feet, and their cauls, and their round tiers like the Moons, the chains and the bracelets, &c. Not that ſuch apparel and ornaments were ſimply or in themſelves ſinful and unlawful to be uſed, But that which the Prophet condemns, is firſt, their exceſs in them, Secondly, their affectation and abuſe of them, to the fomenting of their own pride, and provoking the luſts of others.

Sixthly, Women deceive by their bold, toyiſh deportment and wanton geſtures. Thus Solomon deſcribes the harlot (*Pro.*7.13.) She caught him, and kiſſed him, and with an impudent face ſaid unto him, &c. Though ſhe had been ſilent and ſaid nothing to him, yet her action towards him ſpake loudly and plainly enough what her mind and meaning was. Geſtures are full of ſignifications. And 'tis no hard matter to expound them. The behaviour of a wanton woman needs no comment.

Seventhly, Women deceive with their gate or manner of going (Iſa. 3. 16.) Solomon ſaith of a wicked man, He teacheth with his feet (*Pro.*6.13.) And ſo doth a wicked woman, not only becauſe ſhe goeth in wayes morally ſinful, but becauſe while ſhe goeth in material ways, ſhe hath a ſinful faſhion or manner of going. Thus the Prophet taxeth the degenerate Daughters of Zion (Iſa. 3. 16.) They are haughty (ſaith he) and walk with ſtretched forth necks, &c. Walking and mincing as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet. They trip it as they go; The Hebrew word rendred mincing, is by ſome derived from a root which ſignifies to beat or play upon a taber, and ſo they tranſlate, Tabering as they go, which may be expounded of their creaking ſhoes or pantofles, or rather of an affected clap or ſtroak upon the floor as they ſet down their feet, which ſutes beſt with that which followeth, They make a tinkling with their feet. The general ſence is, that what with their twinkling eyes, what with their tinkling feet, they declared the lightneſs of their ſpirits, and their aptneſs to deceive others, though themſelves moſt.

Thus we ſee it is no ſmall matter which Job profeſſeth, while he ſaith, My heart hath not been deceived by a woman; Modeſt women may deceive paſſively; They may be an occaſion by their beauty, to entice thoſe who vainly look on them; and many vile women make it their buſineſs purpoſely to deceive men, and they practice many ways, even theſe ſeven ways to do it, by their fair faces, by their wanton looks, by their ſweet voyces, by their eloquent perſwaſions, by their vain attire, by their inſinuating geſtures, and mincing motions, making a tinkling with their feet; he that can avoid all theſe ſnares and aſſaults of women, is for chaſtity, a man of men; poſſibly Job had been aſſaulted by women all theſe ways. But of this we are ſure, that how many ways ſoever he was aſſaulted by women, yet he was never conquered. He puts himſelf in that point to the judgment both of God and man, while he ſaith, My heart hath not been deceived by a woman, And as here he profeſſeth that himſelf had not been deceived by women, ſo he makes a like profeſſion that he had much leſs attempted to deceive any woman; This he doth in the words which follow,

Or if I have laid wait at my neighbours door;

The word rendred to lay wait, ſignifieth to watch narrowly, to ſet (as it were) an ambuſh for ſuddain ſurpriſal. Souldiers in time of war keep Centinel to prevent ſuddain attempts, and they lie in wait at or neer the Gates of their Enemies, to make, if opportunity be offered, a ſuddain attempt. That's alſo the manner of Thieves and Robbers in time of peace. Job may allude to either, while he ſaith, If I have laid wait at my neighbours door. Unclean perſons are vigilant, they watch all opportunities to ſatisfie their luſts; and ſo do all ſorts of reſolved ſinners, who therefore, as to their waiting to do any kind of miſchief, are compared to the Lyon, (Pſal. 10. 8, 9.) He lieth in wait ſecretly as a Lyon in his Den, he lieth in wait to catch the poor, he doth catch the poor when he draweth him into his net, he croucheth and humbleth himſelf, that the poor may fall by his ſtrength. Thus the oppreſſor lieth in wait for his prey. He is at once a Lion for his fierceneſs and greedineſs, as alſo for his diligence and watchfulneſs. Solomon warns his Son againſt a conjunction with the wicked in ſuch like practices (Pro. 1. 10, 11.) My ſon, if ſinners entice thee, conſent thou not, if they ſay, come with us, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent without cauſe, (that is, without any cauſe given by them) my ſon walk not thou in the way with them, reſtrain thy foot from their path. The Adulterer is as watchful as the thief, or the oppreſſor; He beſiegeth and beſets his neighbours houſe, that he may find a time to abuſe his neighbours wife. Now when Job giveth this inſtance in one particular, he includes all the cuſtoms of unclean perſons, the cunning fetches and artifices which they make uſe of to compaſs and bring about their filthy deſigns. Mr. Broughton renders the whole verſe thus; If mine heart were drawn by a woman, that I waited at my neighbours door: As if he had ſaid, Though poſſibly temptations by women, have made ſome impreſſion upon me, yet none of them did ever riſe ſo high, or prevail ſo far over me, as to cauſe me to ſtudy ways or contrive means how to fulfil or attain the accompliſhment of ſuch fleſhly luſts. I have ſpoken of the Adulterers waiting (Chap. 24. 15.) therefore I ſhall ſay the leſs now; yet take two or three notes from theſe words; If I have waited at my neighbours door.

Per ſynecdochen exprimit Adulterorum artes, quibus ad perpetrandum ſcelus uti ſolent. Merl.

Firſt, Strong deſires, and motions within put on to ſutable actions, and endeavours without.

He whoſe heart is once deceived by a woman, will preſently lie in wait; Job in denying the one, denieth the other; my heart hath not been deceived by her, nor did I lie in wait, &c. As if he had ſaid, Had mine heart been deceived by a woman, I could not have forborn lying in wait, I muſt have uſed thoſe means to the utmoſt which I found moſt convenient to get my deſire. What a man would have, he will do what he can to have it; ſuch as our motions within are, ſuch alſo are our actions without. 'Tis ſo in ſpirituals, if a man be taken with any holy truth, his heart will be acting in obedience to it, if his heart be catcht with deſire to know the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom he hath ſent, which is eternal life, he will (as 'tis ſaid Pro. 2. 3, 4.) cry after knowledg, and lift up his voyce for underſtanding, he will ſeek her as ſilver, and ſearch for her as for hidden treaſures: Or as Solomon ſpeaks neer the language of Job's Text (Pro. 8. 34.) He will watch dayly at wiſdoms gates, and wait at the poſt of her doors. Deſire is the hunger of the Soul, we need not bid a Soul pincht with hunger ſeek bread, his own hunger will bid him faſt enough. The ſlothful have ſomewhat like deſire, but theirs is not a true deſire, becauſe (as Solomon ſaith) their hands refuſe to labour. We think no labour too much for that which we deſire much; nor any waiting no lying in wait too long for that after which we long. Jeſus Chriſt expreſſeth the ſtrength of his deſire, and the ardency of his affections to poor Souls, by waiting at their doors. He ſtayed and knocked at the Churches door, ſaying, Open to me my ſiſter, my love, my dove, my undefiled, for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night. (Cant. 5. 2.) He that waits knocking at a door till he finds his hair wet with dew, muſt needs wait long; yet thus Chriſt waits for ſweet communion with believers, even beyond the waiting of a moſt affectionate lover. He ſpeaks thus again (Revel. 3. 20.) Behold I ſtand at the door, and knock, if any man hear my voyce, and open the door, I will come in to him, and ſup with him. Why doth Jeſus Chriſt ſtand at the door, and knock? why doth he take ſo much pains and exerciſe ſo much patience? Surely 'tis becauſe he hath a great deſire to enjoy the ſweet ſociety of his People. Now I ſay, as holy deſires, and Soul-motions tend to action, as they put us on to ſeek after and wait for Chriſt, and put Chriſt on to ſeek after and wait for us; ſo if the heart of a man be once engaged and his luſts blown up by any ſinful temptation, he will be working and waiting, he will be ſeeking and earneſtly purſuing all opportunities which may ſerve his ends. And therefore Secondly, As to this particular ſin, If I have laid wait at my neighbours door.

Note, Unclean perſons will not refuſe any pains to enjoy forbidden pleaſures.

They will wait all night, they will watch like ſervants or ſlaves to ſatisfie their filthy luſts; let the weather and danger be what they will they will venture both health and life, in hope to ſpeed. They are no longer their own Maſters, who ſerve thoſe luſts and pleaſures. When a man hath loſt his heart, he will loſe himſelf in ſeeking that which hath taken it away. How pittifully did Sampſon enſlave himſelf to Dalilah? At how dear a rate did he give her aſſurance that he loved her? What a woſul courſe did Amnon run to enjoy his inceſtuous deſires? He was ſo vexed (ſaith the Text, 2 Sam. 13. 2.) that he fell ſick for his ſiſter Tamar; and a little after by the advice of a friend, who is alſo there called a ſubtle man, and had indeed more of the ſubtle man then of the true friend in him (by his advice I ſay) he counterfeited a ſickneſs (Ver. 6.) or made himſelf ſick, that is more ſick then he was; and all this to get privacy with his ſiſter, and ſo his will, his ſenſual will upon her. Luſt knows no limits either of Nature, Reaſon, or Religion. Though Amnon could not lie in wait at his ſiſters door, yet by a ſtratagem he got her to wait upon him within his own door, that he might defile her.

Thirdly, Job doth not only ſay, he never committed Adultery with his neighbours wife, but he did not lie in wait at his neighbours door, that is, he kept his feet from going in any of thoſe ways, which led to that groſs iniquity. Had he lain in wait at his neighbours door, he could not have pleaded his innocency, or freedom from Adultery, though he had never (as indeed he had not) lain with his neighbours wife.

Hence obſerve, They who ſet themſelves in any ſinful way, are guilty of the ſin, though they do not actually commit it.

As the good which we would do and wait to do, is reckoned to us as done, though either through diſability or want of opportunity, we are hindred or taken off from doing it; ſo the evil which we would do and wait to do, ſhall be reckon'd to us as done, though ſomewhat intervene which ſtops us from doing it. A reſolved will to do, without the deed done, is enough to denominate us either good or evil. It is not our being hindred or prevented in doing the evil we had a mind to, but our repentance that there was ſuch a mind in us, and the pardon of it, that makes us guiltleſs. They that lie in wait for blood, will be caſt for murderers at Gods Bar, though they ſhed not a drop of Blood; And they who lie in wait at their neighbours door, will be caſt for Adulterers, though they never ſet foot over the threſhold. David being reſolved to avenge himſelf upon Nabal, and upon his march to the execution, was ſtopt by the counſel of Abigail, a diſcreet woman, which he accepted as from God, ſaying, Bleſſed be God, and bleſſed be thou who haſt met me this day, and kept me from ſhedding Blood; Though David did not ſhed Nabals Blood, yet if he had not been ſtopt againſt his will from ſhedding it, meerly by ſome outward accident, he had been guilty, but David accepting of this ſtop, and bleſſing God for it, the ſin was not charged upon him. To be ſtopt in a way of revenge, or in a way of uncleanneſs, by an external providence, which we are troubled at, leaves the ſin fully upon us. Indeed if we have had a purpoſe to do any evil, and can bleſs God, who hath hedged up our way with thorns (as the Lord ſaid he would do Iſraels, Hoſ. 2. 6.) and made a wall that we cannot find our paths, which lead to the accompliſhment of that evil, (in this caſe, I ſay) God will not lay that evil to our charge. When we are glad that we are croſſed and ſucceſleſs in ſin, when we account ſickneſs, poverty, any affliction a mercy, becauſe we ſee it hath checkt us in what our corruptions were carrying or hurrying us out to, this ſhews either that it was our temptation rather then our proper inclination which carried us to it, or that the inclination is now (through grace) changed, and we become other men.

Laſtly, When Job ſaith, If I have laid wait at my neighbours door; He ſpeaks (as was intimated before) of a greater ſin, then barely to have had his heart deceived by a woman, becauſe that might be by ſome ſuddain unexpected irritation, but this muſt needs be from a ſetled reſolution.

Hence obſerve, By how much any man ſins, with the more deliberation, by ſo much the greater is his ſin.

To wait to ſin, is to ſin deliberately, yea to wait to ſin, is to ſin reſolvedly; That ſin is exceeding ſinfully committed which we ſet and prepare our ſelves to commit. David deſcribing a wicked man, ſaith (Pſal. 36. 4.) He ſetteth himſelf in a way that is not good; that is, in an evil way; he doth not only fall into ſin, or through miſtake go into an evil way (that may be the caſe of a good man), but he takes or chuſeth an evil way, and then ſets or ſettles himſelf in it, reſolving not to leave it, no nor to be beaten out of it. Sin may be ſaid to wait for a godly man, that is, Satan waits and watches his ſeaſon to tempt him unto ſin, but a godly man doth not wait nor watch to ſin. It is bad enough to be overtaken with ſin, or with a fault (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Gal. 6. 1.) but to be taken with ſin, and ſo to wait for a ſeaſon to take our fill of it, is as bad as bad can be. It is the height of the Lords goodneſs, that he waiteth to be gracious (Iſ. 30. 18.) that is, to do us good. This alſo is the height of mans goodneſs, when he not only doth that good which he is put upon and preſſed unto, but when he waiteth to do good, and ſeeks occaſions of doing good; And this is the height of mans ſinfulneſs when he waits to do evil, and ſeeks occaſions, or open doors for the doing of it. From all ſuch ſtudied wickedneſs Job clears himſelf by this proteſt, If I have laid wait at my neighbours door, which he backs with a ſutable imprecation in the next Verſe.

Verſ. 10. Then let my wife grind unto another, and let others bow down upon her.

This verſe contains Job's wiſh of Evil to himſelf, if he had done either of thoſe evils ſpoken of in the former verſe.

Sunt ex Hebræis qui ad literam exponunt. Molet uxor mea in piſtrino alterius, q. d. ſerviat ſervitutem graviſſimam Druſ.

Let my wife grind unto another. That is, Firſt, Say ſome, Let her be a ſlave, let her be reduced to the loweſt condition; let her be a ſervant in the moſt inferiour form of ſervitude. To grind in a Mill is the meaneſt imployment; To govern and to grind note the two extreams of mans eſtate in this life. (Exod. 11. 5.) And all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt ſhall die, from the firſt born of Pharaoh that ſitteth upon his throne, even unto the firſt-born of the maid-ſervant, that is behind the Mill. Chriſt ſhewing in what poſtures the world ſhall be found at his coming, ſaith, Two women (that is, Bond-women) ſhall be grinding in the Mill (Math. 24. 41.) And when the Philiſtines had bound Sampſon and put out his eyes (Judges 16. 21.) they put Sampſon to grind in the Mill. Anciently Mills were ſet up in priſons, and there poor Captives were kept to work at them. And hence in good Authors, to ſend a perſon to the Mill-houſe is the ſame, as to ſend him to priſon or to puniſhment; For which reaſon (I ſuppoſe) the Chaldee Paraphraſe renders this Text in Job, Let her ſerve, or, let my wife become a ſervant.

Paſſim apud doctores Talmudicos, ut Hebræi notant, molendi verbum ſumitur ut honeſta cognominatione rem maxime obſcœnam deſignent. Merc.

Yet if we conſider both the antecedents and conſequents of theſe words, I conceive another ſenſe rather intended, which is alſo followed by moſt Interpreters, eſpecially by the Talmudiſts or Jewiſh Doctors, who generally conſent in this uſe of the word, which in the received language of thoſe times denotes an obſcene act by a modeſt and inoffenſive expreſſion. According to this expoſition, when Job ſaith, Let my wife grind unto another, his meaning is plainly this, Let my wife turn Harlot. The Septuagint tranſlate fully to this ſence, Let my wife pleaſe or give content to another. The vulgar Latin and Chaldee Paraphraſe yet more fully and literally, Let my wife be a whore, or, Let my wife lie with another man. And in the Greek tongue the ſame word ſignifies both to grind in a Mill, and to commit Adultery; nor is the ſame phraſe unuſual in good Authors among the Latins. And whereas we render that of the Prophet Jeremy deſcribing the miſeries of the people of God in the Babyloniſh Captivity (Lam. 5. 13.) They took the young men to grind; The vulgar Latin Reads, They immodeſtly abuſed the young men: which clearly complies with this latter expoſition of this firſt part of Job's wiſh, Let my wife grind unto another. And that this ſhould be his meaning is more then probable by the latter part of his wiſh, which (and that is all I ſhall ſay for the expounding of it) can have no other meaning, And let others bow down upon her.

But here a Queſtion may ariſe, how Job (without ſin) could wiſh ſuch a thing as this; he made many imprecations, of pœnal evils upon himſelf; But might he imprecate ſin-evil or any evil of ſin upon another? might he wiſh that his wife ſhould be diſloyal and become a harlot, or that others ſhould abuſe his wife; might he deſire that his adultery ſhould be puniſhed with his wives adultery? or that ſhe might be falſe to his bed, if he had been ſo to hers? Are theſe lawful wiſhes?

I anſwer, It is not lawful to acquit our ſelves from a charge of ſin, by wiſhing that either our ſelves or others might fall into ſin. Therefore Firſt, Job wiſhed this, not as if he deſired to have it ſo, but to ſhew how far he was from giving any cauſe why it ſhould be ſo. Secondly, he did it to aſſure us how much he abhorr'd adultery, ſeeing all men abhor, what he wiſht, that their wives ſhould be Adultereſſes; Thirdly, this imprecation informs us, that he could not only ſubmit himſelf to bodily puniſhment, as he had done before in other caſes; but even to a blot of greateſt diſhonour upon his name and family in this caſe. Fourthly, holy Job did not wiſh his Adultery might be puniſhed with his wives adultery; but he ſpeaks thus to ſhew, that by the law of counter-paſſion he deſerved it ſhould be ſo, if he had done ſo. This is one of the moſt unnatural wiſhes that any man can make, yet it contains the moſt connatural or proportionable puniſhment imaginable to the ſin in revenge whereof he wiſheth it. An adulterous and unfaithful wiſe is the fitteſt affliction for an adulterous and unfaithful husband. Breach of the marriage-covenant is a due reward for marriage-covenant-breakers.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt. God may juſtly give up their wives to be abuſed by others, who give themſelves up to abuſe others mens wives.

Job hoc ſibi non imprecatur, ſed exponit quid commeritus eſſet ſi id flagitii commiſiſſet. Ramban. Imprecationis forma horrenda, ſed quæ indicat, quid juſto dei judicio eveniet alieni thori corruptoribus. Connexa inter ſe ſunt, homo nec abſtinens alieni matrimonii nec cuſtos ſui. Quintil.

To do Juſtice by the laws of retaliation is the moſt exquiſite Juſtice; And though the Juſtice of man cannot, may not always proceed by that rule, yet the Juſtice of God both can and may. He can make a ſin a puniſhment, who is himſelf free from the leaſt touch of ſin: he can puniſh the husbands adultery with the wives, and then puniſh the wife for her adultery too. What the Lord did in Davids caſe, (and that was a very ſad one) was very near this. David was overcome by that temptation over which Job proteſted himſelf (through grace) a conquerer; Davids heart was deceived by a woman, and being deceived, he upon the matter (laid wait) at his neighbours door; (a godly man for one Act may ſin as bad as the worſt of ſinners, it cannot be denied but in that act David did ſo, for,) he luſted after his neighbours wife, he ſolicited her chaſtity, and obtained his deſire; and how did God chaſtiſe this great ſin? The Holy Story tells us, his wives were given up to another, as Nathan threatned (2 Sam. 1[illegible] 11.) Thus ſaith the Lord, behold I will raiſe up evil againſt thee out of thine own houſe, and I will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them to thy neighbour, and he ſhall lie with thy wives in the ſight of this Sun. For thou didſt it ſecretly, but I will do this thing before all Iſrael, and before this Sun. Davids heart was but once deceived by a woman, and God ſpared him not; yea puniſhed him in ſuch a way, as might well make his heart not only ake, but bleed at the remembrance of his ſin; nor indeed could he hear of, or be told what had been done by his Son, but he muſt ſee or be told by his own conſcience, what himſelf had done. When the people of Iſrael had committed ſpiritual Adultery, and (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Hoſ. 4. 12.) had gone a whoring from under their God; they are ſhewed their puniſhment in the 13. Verſe, Therefore your daughters ſhall commit whoredom, and your ſpouſes ſhall commit Adultery. Yea as the Lord in much wrath puniſhed that former ſin with this ſin, ſo he told them in more and further wrath, that he would leave theſe latter ſins for a time, poſſibly for the whole time of this life (as to any outward appearance) altogether unpuniſhed (Ver. 14.) I will not puniſh your daughters, when they commit whoredom, nor your ſpouſes when they commit adultery; As if he had ſaid, I will let them alone in their adulteries; they ſhall be as wicked as they will, I will not hinder them, I will not at preſent check the courſe or full career of their luſts by any viſible pœnal evil or affliction. Not that the Lord owned or allowed them for a moment in thoſe impure acts and noiſom abominations, but he gave them up in Judgment to the power of their luſts, and would not give them any trouble how much ſoever they deſerved. God ſometimes leaves ſons or daughters to their luſts, in Judgment to their Fathers, as he leaves a wife to ſuch like luſts in judgment to her husband; So it follows in the Prophet, I will not puniſh your daughters when they commit whoredom, nor your ſpouſes when they commit adultery, for themſelves (that is, their fathers & husbands) are ſeparated with whores, and they ſacrifice with harlots. Some expound it of ſpiritual, others of corporal uncleanneſs, but take the words either way, they hold out the ſame general truth, that the reaſon why their daughters and ſpouſes were given up to the vileſt uncleanneſſes, was becauſe themſelves were vile and unclean. This the Lord hath often done, and we muſt adore his Juſtice (though ſevere) in doing it.

Secondly, Obſerve. The diſloyalty of a wife, is one of the greateſt evils that can befall a husband.

It is a great evil to all men becauſe of the diſhonour of it. It is a greater becauſe of the trouble and vexation of it. It is greateſt of all becauſe of the ſin and filthineſs of it. Job knew not how to wiſh a greater miſchief to himſelf, as to any worldly comfort, then this, an unfaithful wife. We read how extreamly the ſons of Jacob were both grieved and enraged, when they heard that Shechem had raviſhed their ſiſter Dinah (Gen. 34. 7.) and when after that deep revenge taken by Simeon and Levi in the ſlaughter of the Shechemites, Jacob reproved them, ſaying, Ye have troubled me, &c. They preſently and bluntly anſwered him with a queſtion (Ver. 31.) Should he deal with our ſiſter as with an harlot? As if they had ſaid, This is inſufferable. Indeed it was ſo; but ſo alſo was their way of revenging it. Now if the raviſhment of a ſiſter be ſo highly reſented by her Brethren, then much more is the whoredom of a wife by her husband. It is reported of the Lacedemonians, That they had three ill wiſhes for ſuch as they were offended with. Firſt, They wiſht, They might build, becauſe that's troubleſome and coſtly; Secondly, That they might dreſs horſes, becauſe that's low and ſervile; Thirdly, They wiſht thoſe whom they moſt hated, That their wives might be harlots, becauſe, That's a perpetual Diſgrace.

And if the diſloyalty of a wife is the greateſt diſgrace to her husband; then, how great is the wickedneſs of thoſe husbands, who have taught or provoked their wives to be ſo by their own examples? For though it be no excuſe, much leſs warrant for a wife to be diſloyal to her husband, becauſe he hath been ſo to her, yet how can any man expect his wife ſhould be true to him while he is falſe to her. Indeed grace will keep a wife to her duty how much ſoever her husband departs from his; And the Scripture teacheth her to ſeek a divorce from him, but utterly forbids her to take any ſuch revenge upon him; nor can ſhe take it without doing her ſelf a greater wrong then ſhe doth to him. Yet what hath that husband to ſay for himſelf; whoſe conſcience tells him, that his own example hath ſet his wife the copy of that abominable wickedneſs; and that he hath taught her to break her faith by breaking it firſt himſelf. He that would have faith kept muſt keep his faith. That which thou thy ſelf wouldſt not ſuffer from another take heed of doing to any, eſpecially to a wife, who is as thy ſelf, or a ſecond ſelf.

Improbus eſt qui ab uxore pudicitiam exigit, ipſe alienarum corruptor uxorum. Senec. Epiſt. 9.

Thirdly, Conſider Job is here clearing himſelf from the ſuſpition of a foul ſin, by wiſhing ſin his puniſhment.

Hence obſerve, Thoſe ſins that are puniſhed with ſin, have the greateſt puniſhment.

There is nothing ſo bad as ſin, and therefore ſin muſt needs be the foreſt puniſhment; God is never more diſpleaſed or provoked, then when he ſuffers men to do that which diſpleaſeth and provokes him more. Thus the Lord puniſhed the wickedneſs of the old Gentiles (Rom. 1. 26. 28.) By giving them up to vile affections, and a reprobate mind, and ſo to thoſe bodily filthineſſes which are the abhorrence of nature; all which the Apoſtle wraps up in thoſe milder words (which yet have a world of divine revenge in them) The doing of thoſe things which are not convenient. Sin is a worſe puniſhment, then ſword and fire, then poverty and ſickneſs, then famine and peſtilence, and death, yea then a thouſand bodily deaths. Sin is a puniſhment without bound or bottom, no man knows the height and depth, the length and breadth of it. Who can tell when or where it will end? 'tis endleſs. When God puniſheth a ſin, with ſin upon our ſelves, or families, upon our wives and children, O how dreadful a puniſhment is that! and O how deeply do they ſin, who provoke the Lord to puniſh their ſin with ſin, giving up either themſelves or their relations, wives or children to take their full ſwinge in the ſame or in any other ſinful way, wherein we have gone aſtray, and departed from the living God. None are ſo miſerable as they who proſper in ſin, who go on ſinning and proſpering.

Laſtly, Conſider that the Language which the holy Ghoſt uſeth in this verſe, doth as much cover as expreſs thoſe acts of filthineſs, and uncleanneſs.

Hence obſerve. When we ſpeak of unclean things, we we ſhould wrap them up in clean words.

The Scripture is rightly called the holy language; For ſo it is, not only becauſe the matter it ſpeaks of is all holy, or becauſe it ſpeaks always to a holy purpoſe, but alſo becauſe when it ſpeaks of things unholy and offenſive, not fit to be named, it ſtill ſhadows them with ſuch metaphors and circumlocutions as take away the offenſiveneſs of them. Thus, the eaſing of nature is expreſſed by covering the feet (Judg. 3. 24.) and Adultery, by going in to a Woman, in the Title of the fifty and firſt Pſalm; Here by grinding, and bowing down. The Apoſtle gives this charge to Saints (Eph. 5. 3.) But fornication and all uncleanneſs or covetouſneſs, let it not be once named among you as becometh Saints; And (Ver. 12.) It is a ſhame to ſpeak of thoſe things which are done of them in ſecret. What the Gentiles were not aſhamed to do, the Apoſtle was (and would have us to be) aſhamed to ſpeak. Some ſins are of ſo ill a name and ſo reproveable, that they ſhould not be named, but to reprove them, and ſcarce then by their own names. The Lord chargeth the children of Iſrael (Exod. 23. 13.) In all things that I have ſaid unto you be circumſpect: and make no mention of the names of other gods, neither let it be heard out of thy mouth. That is, either thou ſhalt not at all ſpeak of them, or not without ſome note of diſlike or teſtimony of thy utter deteſtation of them. In which ſence alſo the Lord ſaith (Hoſ. 2. 17.) I will take away the Names of Baalim out of her mouth, and they ſhall no more be remembred by their Name. Evil words (ſaith the Apoſtle out of a heathen Poet. (1 Cor. 15. 33.) or communication, corrupt good manners. And ſo they do both as to the worſhip of God, and common practice among men. When blaſpheming God is ſpoken of. The Hebrew text expreſſeth it by way of contrary ſpeaking, that is, by a word which ſignifies to bleſs, as was ſhewed at the ſecond Chapter of this Book: When Jobs wife ſaid to him (as we tranſlate) Curſe God and dye, the Original is, Bleſs God and dye. To curſe God is an act ſo execrable, that the Jews abhorr'd to mention it in any way, but that which is figurative; ſo likewiſe the Hebrew word for a whore or harlot, is a ſeparate or Holy woman. They were loth to foul their mouths with ſuch a loathſom creature in a proper dreſs of ſpeech; Or to ſhew how contrary all ought to be from her they ſpake of her only by contraries. The Spaniards call a harlot in ſcorn or deteſtation, The honourable woman, that is, the baſe woman. As the Scripture ſpeaks or words ill matters, ſo ſhould we. Chriſtians ſhould ſeaſon their ſpeeches with modeſty; And their words ſhould miniſter grace not offence to their hearers. What ſhall we ſay, then, of thoſe, who, not only, broadly name the fouleſt acts of ſin, but act them broadly; if, as the Apoſtle ſaith, ſuch ſins ſhould not be ſo much as named among Saints, what ſhall we think of thoſe who would go under the name of Saints, and yet do ſuch things?

Job having thus proteſted his innocency, as to the breach of his conjugal Covenant, proceeds to tell us what preſerved him in it, and kept him both in heart and life from any ſuch extravagancy. The firſt thing which he propounded to himſelf was the greatneſs and foulneſs of the ſin conſidered in it ſelf or in its own nature.

Verſe 11. For this is an heinous crime, &c.

The Original is but one word without any epithete, we tranſlate not barely, This is a crime, but exegetically, An heinous crime; Which epithete is clearly intimated in the Hebrew root ſignifying properly to meditate, deviſe or think. And though it be a middle word (as Grammarians ſpeak) and ſo applicable either to good or evil thoughts and devices. Yet if we look through the whole current of Scripture, it is not only moſt commonly, but almoſt always taken in an ill ſence, to note ſuch heart deviſings and thinkings, as tend to miſchief, or have miſchief intended by them. And hence the noun (uſed in the Text) ſignifies any evil practice, practice, fore-plotted and deviſed. So that the ſupplement in our tranſlation is a proper expoſition of the force of the Original, An heinous crime; and we find it often uſed in Scripture to expreſs the moſt heinous crimes. When the law of Moſes forbids inceſtuous marriages by this word (Lev. 18. 17.) Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of a woman and her daughter, &c. Why? It is wickedneſs or an heinous crime. How great a wickedneſs is it for a Father, who ſhould by all means preſerve his daughters chaſtity, and reſtrain her from wantonneſs, to encourage and expoſe her to it? This wickedneſs is called by the ſame name (Lev. 19. 29.) Do not proſtitute thy daughter to cauſe her to be a whore, leſt the land be full of whoredom, and the land become full of wickedneſs, even of ſtudied and contrived wickedneſs. That Abomination acted upon the Levites wife or Concubine, is delivered in this word (Judges 10. 6.) They have committed lewdneſs and folly in Iſrael. And when the Pſalmiſt would ſet forth that wrathful malice which lies working in the head and heart of an ungodly man, he gives it thus (Pſal. 37. 12.) The wicked plotteth againſt the juſt. Once more, I find it applyed to that heinous crime of bearing falſe witneſs (Deut. 19.18,19.) If the witneſs be a falſe witneſs, and hath teſtified falſly againſt his brother, Then ſhall ye do unto him as he thought to have done unto his brother; That is, as he miſchievouſly plotted to do againſt his brother. The Rabbins put this title upon a falſe witneſs, becauſe he is full of thoughts how to carry a buſineſs wrongfully againſt his brother. Thus the Prophet Ezekiel ſeems to apply it (Ezek. 22. 9.) where making a Catalogue of Jeruſalems ſins, he put this in among the greateſt of them; In thee are men that carry tales (that is, falſe tales, and ſo bear falſe witneſs) to ſhed blood, and in thee they eat upon the mountains, in the midſt of thee they commit lewdneſs. 'Tis this word, Zimmah, which the Septuagint render, Unholy things; As if the Lord had ſaid, Thou that art a holy people to me by profeſſion, and ſhouldeſt be holy in thy converſation, thou doeſt lewd filthy and unholy things. They eat upon the mountains, there's lewdneſs againſt the firſt Table; They bear falſe witneſs, there's lewdneſs againſt the ſecond Table. So then the force of this word in all forms implyeth a ſtudied and contrived evil, and that is whatſoever it is, An heinous crime.

Vox זמה a radice זמם quod eſt cogitare, propriè ſignificat cogitationem ſed ferè ſemper ſumitur in malum, ſc. pro eo ſcelere quod adverſus alium nefariè molimur & in opus prodit. Merc.

Hence Note, Firſt, There are degrees of ſin.

All are not of the ſame ſize, weight, or meaſure. Men differ not more in ſtatur, then their iniquities do; every fault is not a crime, and every crime is not an heinous crime. There is much ſinfulneſs in every ſin, yet there is not a like ſinfulneſs. When the people of Iſrael committed Idolatry, Moſes returned unto the Lord and ſaid, Oh this people have ſinned a great ſin, and have made them Gods of Gold (Exod. 32. 31.) There is no ſin little in it ſelf, yet ſome ſins compared with others are eminently great, and even little ſins will be charged upon them as great ones, who encourage themſelves, or take liberty to do them, becauſe they think them little.

Secondly, From the reaſon why this word is expreſſed an heinous crime,

Obſerve, Thoſe are heinous ſins which are committed adviſedly, or with deliberation.

When any evil is plotted, when men ſit down and meditate how to bring it about, this wind's it up to an high degree, and to ſin thus, is to ſin with a high hand (Iſa. 32.7.) The inſtruments alſo of the Churl are evil; That is, the perſons or the means which he uſeth to bring an evil matter about are evil; for as it followeth, He deviſeth wicked devices to deſtroy the poor with lying words, even when the needy ſpeaketh right; that is, be his cauſe never ſo right, and never ſo righteouſly or truly managed, yet he hath ſome trick or nicity or other to pervert it. To wrong any man is ſinful, much more to wrong the poor, and to deviſe or contrive how to do it is yet more ſinful. (Pro. 24. 8, 9.) He that deviſeth to do evil, ſhall be called a miſchievous perſon. To do evil is natural to man in his depraved ſtate; But to deviſe evil is the Art of depraved Nature. The Devil is the Maſter of evil deviſes; and they that do ſo are his Schollers. He that doth evil, being tempted to it, is a weak man: But (ſaith Solomon) he that deviſeth to do evil, deſerves to be called a miſchievous perſon. Men often miſcal both things and perſons, but God doth not; What and whom he calleth ſo or ſo, is certainly ſo. What a black brand doth the Scripture ſet upon Balaam, who taught Balac to caſt a ſtumbling block before the Children of Iſrael, to eat things ſacrificed unto Idols, and to commit fornication (Rev. 2.14.) Balaam was the Inventer of this ſtratagem, which brought ſo great a miſchief upon the people of God; How fitly then may he be called a miſchievous perſon? Such another Maſter of evil deviſes was Jeroboam, who is as often almoſt ſtigmatiz'd as remembred in Scripture with that helliſh Title, Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat who made Iſrael to ſin. He was not only a party in but the Author of that woful Apoſtacy of the ten Tribes from the pure worſhip of God, by ſetting up thoſe two golden Calves, The one in Bethel, and the other in Dan; and by offering ſacrifice upon the Altar which he had made in Bethel, the fifteenth day of the eighth month, even in the month ſaith the Scripture, (1 Kings 12. 33.) which he had deviſed of his own heart. Thus as Solomon concludes in the next verſe to that in the Proverbs laſt opened, The thought of fooliſhneſs is ſin; That is, a fooliſh or a wicked man is thinking and caſting about how and which way he may ſin; And as the ſame Solomon hath it (Pro. 21.4.) The plowing of the wicked is ſin: both the field which he ploweth, that is, the matter which he is about, and the furrows which he makes, his workings and plottings in every matter are ſinful; he is always contriving and hatching ſome miſchief. His ſin is full of deliberation, and therefore full of abomination, or deep corruption, as the Prophet ſpeaks (Hoſ. 9.9.) They have deeply corrupted themſelves, as in the dayes of Gibeah; that is, as the men of Gibeah corrupted themſelves in abuſing the Levites Concubine (Judg. 20. 6.) Some ſinful corruptions lye as it were in the skin, or they are but skin-deep, they appear as a botch or ſore in the fleſh; but there are other corruptions that are like an exulceration in the lungs, heart, or liver, in the bowels or intralls. There is ſin in the hand as outwardly acted, and there is ſin in the heart, which is a plot or contrivement how to act it. Some are hurried into evil, or violently thruſt upon it by force of a temptation: Others ſit down and conſult how to bring it forth.

There are two things which very much abate and extenuate, though not totally excuſe a ſin.

Firſt, Ignorance, when we ſin and do not know it to be ſin.

Secondly, Violence, when a ſuddain ſtrong temptation ruſhing upon us unawares, doth rather drive then intice us to it. But when we ſin knowingly, leiſurely and adviſedly, our ſin is great, even an heinous crime. We may add another Conſideration which makes any ſin a heinous crime; that is, when we take content in the act of doing it, eſpecially after the act done. Solomon ſpeaks of ſuch (Pro. 2. 14.) Who rejoyce to do evil, and delight in the frowardneſs of the wicked. And the Prophet (Jer. 11. 15.) chargeth Judah with this aggravation of ſin; When thou doeſt evil, then thou rejoyceſt. They who now rejoyce to do evil, ſhall (unleſs they ſorrow for it here with a godly ſorrow) weep for ever under the ſufferance of evil; Satan is glad to ſee men play the fools (that is, ſport) with ſin here, that he may play the Tyrant over them hereafter.

Again, As to the particular ſin here proteſted againſt.

Thirdly, Obſerve, Adultery is a notorious ſin, an heinous crime.

It is uſually a plotted ſin, and hath many contrivements in it. I have ſpoken of the devices of the Adulterer (Chap. 24. 15.) Many are traders and Artiſts in this wickedneſs. Adulterers ſet their wits upon the tenters to deviſe means for the ſatisfying of their luſts. The Prophet (Jer. 29. 23.) calls it, villany; Becauſe they have committed villany in Iſrael, and have committed (or, in committing) adultery with their neighbours wives. So the latter branch is exegetical, ſhewing what that villany was which they committed, even Adultery with their neighbours wives. 'Tis alſo called folly, lewdneſs, filthineſs, uncleanneſs, &c. Theſe are the terms and titles put upon Adultery in Scripture to ſhew the vileneſs of it. When Abraham through fear denyed his wife, and ſo ſubjected her unto a temptation (Gen. 20. 9.) Abimelech came to him and expoſtulated the matter with him, ſaying, What haſt thou done unto us? And what have I offended thee, that thou haſt brought on me and on my kingdom a great ſin? Thou haſt done deeds unto me that ought not to be done. And Abimelech ſaid unto Abraham, What ſaweſt thou that thou haſt done this thing? That is, in denying or at leaſt concealing that ſhe was thy wife, and ſo expoſing her to the danger of adultery. This he calls a great ſin. And he chargeth Abraham with bringing on him and on his people a great ſin, becauſe he had brought them in danger of it. When Joſeph was ſolicited by his wanton Miſtreſs to adultery, he puts her off, with How then can I do this great wickedneſs and ſin againſt God(Gen. 39. 9.) He a young man counted it wickedneſs, and a great wickedneſs, though ſome make light of it, and count it only a trick of youth. But God judgeth not as man judgeth; Chriſt ſaith (Luke 16. 15.) That which is highly eſteemed among men (as good, yea as a great good) is abomination in the ſight of God; how much more then are thoſe things abomination in the ſight of God, which in the eſtimate of ungodly men are but a light or a little ſin-evil. And that Adultery, how lightly ſoever any man eſteems the ſin of it, is yet a great ſin, or (as the Text calls it) an heinous crime, we may demonſtrate ſeveral ways.

Firſt, It is a direct breach of a divine commandment, there's a law againſt it by name, Adultery is not a ſin againſt Scripture-conſequences and inferences, but againſt the expreſs letter of Scripture, which ſaith to every man, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery.

Secondly, Adultery is an heinous crime, as it is a breach of a ſpecial ſolemn Covenant between husband and wife in the day of their eſpouſals or marriage; they then gave up themſelves mutually to each other, the husband to be no more his own, much leſs any other womans but his wives, and the wife to be no more her own, much leſs to be any other mans but her husbands; and this ſolemnly witneſſed in the preſence of God and before his people. Therefore adultery is a Covenant-breaking as well as a Commandment-breaking ſin. (Mal. 2. 14.) Yet ye ſay, Wherefore? Becauſe the Lord hath been witneſs between thee and the wife of thy youth, againſt whom thou haſt dealt treacherouſly: yet is ſhe thy companion, and the wife of thy Covenant; That is, the wife with whom thou haſt covenanted to be hers, as well as ſhe to be thine only. The covenant is reciprocal. The husband is to the wife the husband of her covenant, and the wife is to the husband the wife of this covenant. He to her and ſhe to him hath covenanted to be faithful and loyal.

Thirdly, To ſhew the heinouſneſs of this crime, Solomon makes it worſe then Theft (Pro. 6. 30.) Men do not deſpiſe a thief if he ſteal to ſatisfie his ſoul when he is hungry, &c. Which we are not to underſtand abſolutely, but comparatively to ſome other ſort of ſinners, and particularly of the Adulterer (Ver. 32.) But who ſo committeth adultery with a woman lacketh underſtanding, he that doth it deſtroyeth his own Soul, As if he had ſaid, A thief is a wiſer and an honeſter man then an Adulterer (though a thief be far enough from being an honeſt or a wiſe man) And we may ſay Adultery is worſe then Theft, as being indeed the worſt theft. To ſteal any thing from another is wickedneſs, and the better that is which is ſtoln the theft is the worſe. But adultery ſteals that which is more valuable then gold and ſilver, or any goods whatſoever that belong to us; He that commits adultery ſteals from a man the beſt thing that he hath, his wife, who is one fleſh with him; yea Adultery is ſelf-robbery, it robs us firſt of our honeſty; Secondly, of our honour; It robs thoſe that are unborn as well as thoſe that are born; it ſteals away the whole inheritance, which often goes not to the right heir, but to a ſpurious brood. It is a wrong to whole private families as well as perſons, yea it is a wrong to the publick or to nations. The evil of it hath been ſhewed more largely at the twenty fourth Chapter of this Book, therefore I ſhall add no more here; But only mind the Reader of thoſe Scriptures (1 Cor. 6. 19.) What? know you not that your body is the Temple of the holy Ghoſt which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own. And (1 Cor. 3. 17.) If any man defile the Temple of God, him ſhall God deſtroy. Adultery defiles the Temple of God. There is ſacriledge in it. Our Bodies are or ought to be dedicated unto God, and ſet apart for his ſervice. From theſe premiſes, we may conclude, This is an heinous crime, And what more?

It is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judges.

The Hebrew is very conciſe, conſiſting only of two words. That which we render Judges, is taken either ſtrictly of a conſtituted Magiſtrate, or more largely for any one that is an arbitrator or umpire of differences between man and man, or that judgeth and determineth upon any matter. Thus Moſes ſpeaks, (Deut. 32. 31.) Their rock is not as our rock (that is, the Idols or creature helps which they rely on, are not like God, upon whom we rely for help) Our enemies themſelves being Judges. That is, let any of our enemies ſit down and conſider this thing, they muſt be convinced and determin the queſtion for us though againſt themſelves.

Some take the word Judges here in this large ſence, as to Judge imports any kind of conſideration of or pondering upon a buſineſs. And ſo they make this latter part of the verſe as an expoſition of the former. This is an heinous crime, and an iniquity commited by thoſe who judge perpend or conſider the matter; As if he had ſaid, few fall into this ſin abruptly or without meditation, There are many deviſings and workings in the heart antecedent to the perpetration of it. That's a truth.

But I ſuppoſe the Judges here intended, to be ſuch perſons as have power to judge and puniſh the Adulterer upon deliberation about the circumſtances of his ſin; not the perſons who fall into the ſin of Adultery, deliberating (as they often do) how to accommodate all circumſtances for the committing of that ſin. Thus the word is uſed for Judges by office (Exod. 21. 22) He ſhall pay according to the Judges; This is, what the Judges ſhall determine, or as the ſentence of the Judges ſhall be. And it is often applyed in Scripture and elſewhere to thoſe who are called to decide matters of difference between others. And hence the ſame word in another form, ſignifieth to pray; and the reaſon is, becauſe prayer doth as it were put our cauſe into the hand of God to be judged and determined by him, what he will be pleaſed to do concerning it or us. Thus we read (Pſal. 106. 30.) Then ſtood up Phineas and executed judgment, ſo the Plague was ſtayed. The Chaldee ſaith, Phineas aroſe and prayed, &c. The Septuagint give the ſame ſence in their tranſlation, He aroſe and appeaſed, or made a pacification. So the word hath this threefold ſignification; Firſt, to judge; Secondly, to pray; Thirdly, to make a pacification, becauſe as in prayer we commit our cauſe to the judgment and determination of God, ſo it is our great buſineſs in prayer to make our peace and ſeek reconciliation with God through the Atonement of Jeſus Chriſt. We render it well in the noun, by the Judges,

Iſta verba iniquitas judicata vel judicum ſeu potius judicantium, ſunt prioris ſententiæ expoſitio; ut ſenſus ſit, eſt iniquitas eorum qui benè perpendunt; non eorum qui ex abrupto peccant. Bold.

פלילים dicuntur arbitri in lege; hinc generaliter Pelilim, pro judicibus qui cauſas cognoſcunt & diſceptant. Mer.

התפלל oravit quod qui orationem habet ad aliquem is cauſam ſuam ad illum referat & judicandum permittat. Merc.

This is an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judges.] Theſe words (to be puniſhed) are not expreſly in the Original; and therefore the Text is tranſlated, firſt, by ſome, This is a judged ſin. As if Job had ſaid, This is a judged caſe, or that which hath been often determined an heinous crime by the Judges in all Common wealths. Secondly thus; An iniquity that ought to be judged of by the Magiſtrate. So Mr. Broughton, This is a ſin for the Judges; that is, A ſin fit for the Judges to take notice of and puniſh. It is not only an iniquity that men ſhould avoid, decry, and reprove, but it ſhould be brought to publique judgment and cenſure. From theſe rendrings it appears that Jobs ſcope here is to ſhew, that this is ſuch a breach of the Law, ſuch a tranſgreſſion as requires more then an ordinary dealing with. And therefore thoſe additional words which we put to the text in another letter, To be puniſhed, Are a plain expoſition what the Spirit of God meaneth, when he ſaith here by Job, It is an iniquity for the Judges.

Iniquitas Judicata. Iniquitas Judicanda. Comp.ut.

Hence Obſerve, Adultery is a ſin that deſerveth to be puniſhed by the Magiſtrate.

There are ſome ſins which the Magiſtrate is not to puniſh; other ſins there are which he cannot puniſh, becauſe they fall not under his cognizance. But Adultery calls for the Magiſtrates coercion.

Firſt, Becauſe it is a wrong to any Common-wealth, and many wayes diſturbs the peace of it, by riots and quarrels.

Secondly, Becauſe it diſturbs the peace of Families, and provokes implacable diſſenſions there.

Thirdly, Becauſe it provokes the wrath of God, and brings dreadful calamities upon Nations. (Hoſ. 4. 2.) God hath a controverſie with nations, and ſends Judgments upon them for it; Therefore it is an iniquity that ought to be judged; or, An iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judges. There are as many conſiderations in this ſin, which cry to Magiſtrates to puniſh it, and put a ſtop to it, as there are in moſt ſins, if not in any ſin, which lieth within the verge of his power. And therefore in all ages and places where Magiſtracy hath been, this ſin hath come under their ſword and cenſure. Adultery is not only a very ſinful ſin, and a very ſhameful ſin, but a ſin againſt which the very light of nature hath given ſevereſt ſentence. Among the ancient Germans, if a wiſe were taken in adultery, the law gave her up to the will of her husband, to do with her what he would, not only to exerciſe ſeverity towards her, but even to put her to death. They thought nothing cruelty which was inflicted for Adultery. The Saxons before their converſion to the Chriſtian Religion, did ſo deteſt Adultery, that they ſtrangled the Adultereſs, and then burnt her; and hung the Adulterer over the fire till he dyed. The Romans made many pœnal laws againſt this ſin. And it ſeems the Canaanites had a law, or at leaſt a cuſtom among them, to puniſh adultery with burnings; when Judah heard that Tamar was with child by adultery, he preſently ſentenced her to the fire (Gen. 38. 24.) And it came to paſs about three months after that it was told Judah, ſaying, Tamar thy daughter in law hath played the harlot, and alſo behold ſhe is with child by whoredom. And Judah ſaid, bring her forth and let her be burnt. This, I conceive, Judah ſpake according to the cuſtom of the place where he lived; for there was no ſuch law then given by God to the Patriarchs. We read how thoſe two falſe Prophets Ahab and Zedekiah were delivered by God into the hand of that Heathen Prince Nebuchadnezzar, who for this heinous crime put them both to exquiſite torments by fire. And the judgment was ſo remarkable that it grew into a Proverb (Jer. 29. 22, 23.) And of them ſhall be taken up a curſe by all the captivity of Judah which are in Babylon, ſaying, The Lord make thee like Zedekiah and like Ahab, whom the King of Babylon roaſted in the fire, becauſe they committed villany in Iſrael, and have committed adultery with their neighbours wives, &c. Thus the fire of luſt was puniſhed by fire, even among thoſe who had no light to ſee the heinouſneſs of this crime by, but that of Nature. And though few offenders in that kind have fallen under this puniſhment, yet Solomon tells us they are all lyable to that or ſome other grievous puniſhment (Pro. 6. 2. &c.) Can a man take fire in his boſom, and his clothes not be burnt; Can one go upon hot coals, and his feet not burnt? So is he that goeth in to his neighbours wife, whoſoever toucheth her ſhall not be innocent; That is, he ſhall be greatly guilty; And what is guilt but an obligation to puniſhment. When David fell into this heinous crime, he found to his ſmart that he was far from being innocent; He taſted, yea was filled with the bitter fruits of it all his days. For though Nathan upon his repentance and the humble confeſſion of his ſin, had declared his pardon (2 Sam. 12. 13.) And ſaid unto him, The Lord hath put away thy ſin, thou ſhalt not die; that is, thou ſhalt not die either preſently (as this thy ſin according to law deſerves) nor eternally, as every ſin by the law deſerves, though I ſay David was thus pardoned as to condemnation; yet he was threatned (even in the ſame breath) with ſore and grievous chaſtiſements. God would let him know, and others in him, that his own Children ſhall pay dear for it (not at all in a way of fatisfaction to Juſtice) if they venture to provoke his Fatherly diſpleaſure by that or any other heinous crime.

Tacitus de Antiquis Germanis.

Non ut Judex ita ſtatuit, ſed ex gentis illius conſuetudine in Judiciis recepta fieri procuravit. Merl.

The Moſaical law made Adultery death (Lev. 20. 10.) And the death to which that law adjudged Adulterers was ſtoning (Deut. 22. 23. 24.) When Chriſt was captiouſly queſtioned by the Jews about the woman taken in adultery, they urged this law (Joh. 8. 3, 4.) And the Scribes and Phariſees brought unto him a woman taken in adultery, and when they had ſet her in the midſt, they ſaid unto him, Maſter, this woman was taken in adultery in the very act. Now Moſes in the law commanded us that ſuch ſhould be ſtoned; but what ſayeſt thou? This they ſaid tempting him, that they might have to accuſe him. But Jeſus ſtooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not: So when they continued asking him, he lift up himſelf and ſaid unto them; He that is without ſin among you, let him firſt caſt a ſtone at her. As they propoſed a queſtion to inſnare him, ſo he makes a propoſal to them, as they thought, to inſnare them; As if he had ſaid, though I do not deny but ſhe is worthy to be puniſhed with death; Yet here is an anſwer for you; He that is without ſin among you, let him caſt the firſt ſtone at her, (Ver. 9.) And they which heard it being convicted by their own conſcience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldeſt even unto the laſt: And Jeſus was left alone, and the woman ſtanding in the midſt; When Jeſus had lift up himſelf, and ſaw none but the woman, he ſaid unto her, woman where are thoſe thine accuſers? hath no man condemned thee? ſhe ſaid, no man Lord. And Jeſus ſaid unto her, neither do I condemn thee, go, and ſin no more. He ſaith not, no man ought to condemn thee, but ſeeing none have condemned thee, I will not take that office upon me, I came not into the world to exerciſe Judiciary power againſt offenders, but to purchaſe and procure pardon for offenders. Though Chriſt would have nothing to do in judging that ſin according to the law, yet he doth not deny but rather determin that it was a ſin condemned by the law, and to be puniſhed by the Judges.

Nor is it a ſmall piece of Juſtice or of the Judges duty to proſecute and execute thoſe laws which concern either the preventing or puniſhing of this heinous crime. And if this crime ſhould eſcape unpuniſhed by men, yet ſure enough God will take his time, and find out ways to puniſh it, yea he will make this ſin puniſh it ſelf, or make it a puniſhment to it ſelf, rather then it ſhall not be puniſhed: As Job ſhews in the next Verſe.

Verſ. 12. For it is a fire that conſumeth to deſtruction, and would root out all mine increaſe.

This Verſe contains a further conſideration, which kept Job from theſe defilements; And ſurely if the heinouſneſs of the crime in its own nature, and the puniſhableneſs of it by men, be not enough to draw off the Sons and Daughters of Men from it, yet the fiery indignation and wrath of God may.

For it is a fire that conſumeth to deſtruction,] or, A fire eating to deſtruction; as the elegancy of the Hebrew hath it. Fire is a great eater; fire hath a ſtrong ſtomack, a little will not appeaſe its appetite; it eats all even to deſtruction; That is, it eats till all be deſtroyed. Some render it, a fire that eateth to Hell, (the ſame word ſignifieth Hell and deſtruction) or, it conſumeth to deſtruction; that is, to the place of deſtruction, into which they are caſt who periſh with an everlaſting deſtruction. There are ſeveral expoſitions and opinions about this fire; I will give you four diſtinct ones.

אש תאכל Ignis comedens. Ignis videtur habere os & linguam & actiones comedendi. 1 King. 18. 38. Iſa. 9. 5.

עד אבדון Ad Gehennam uſq; Piſc.

Firſt, Some conceive, that Job in theſe words carrieth on his imprecation, or maketh another imprecation; As if he had ſaid, If I have laid wait at my neighbours door, if thoſe ſinful fires have kindled in my boſom, then let fire conſume my houſe, and all I have to deſtruction.

Secondly, Others expound this fire in a tropological or moral ſence; luſt doth not only meritoriouſly kindle outward fires to conſume and deſtroy us, but it ſelf is a conſuming fire, and it conſumes to deſtruction. The fire of this luſt conſumes both body and goods, that is, the good things which concern the body. Further, it conſumes the good things of the Soul; it conſumes the indowments and furniture of the Soul, all the ſtock and ſtore of the inner man, all vertuous diſpoſitions and inclinations. This fire burns up thoſe buds and bloſſoms of the mind, good thoughts and deſires, right affections and intentions. This fire is moſt deſtructive to our beſt goods or good things. And as it devours the flowers of ingenuity and vertue in moral men, with the gifts and appearances of goodneſs in common profeſſors, ſo it extreamly withers the real graces of godly men. This ſin conſumed David even to deſtruction, and brought him as low as Hell in his ſpiritual condition. David was brought ſo low by it, this fire had ſo conſumed his graces, that he begs (Pſal. 51. 10.) Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right ſpirit within me: and this fire had ſo conſumed his comforts, that he pray'd, Reſtore to me the joy of thy Salvation (Verſ. 12.) The fire of this Adulterium eſt ignis omnia virtutum & ſanctarum rerum in homine incrementa conſumens. Phil.

Aſmodeus ille dæmon malus, qui dicitur rex ſuper omnes filios luxuriæ; nomen habet ab igne nam אש ignis eſt et מדד metiri is igitur eſt qui ignem menſurat, novitque quantum incendii luxuriæ in corde humano excitari poſſit, &c. Pined.

luſt makes woful havock whereſoever it comes and kindles. That evil Spirit Aſmodeus, who is called by ſome, a King over all the ſons of luſt and uncleaneſs, hath his name compounded of two words, the firſt ſignifying fire, the ſecond to meaſure, becauſe he (as it were) meaſures out fire, filthy fire, and blows up thoſe luſtful flames in proportion to the deſires and opportunities of unclean perſons.

Thirdly, This fire ſay others is the fire of jealouſie, kindled either in Husband or wife when wronged by adultery. Solomon deſcribes the jealouſie of an abuſed Husband (Prov. 6. 34, 35.) Jealouſie is the rage of a man (that is, jealouſie puts man into ſuch a rage, that it hardly leaves him to be a man, and what is rage but fire in man?) therefore it followeth, He will not ſpare in the day of vengeance; he will ſpare no more then fire will by any entreaty; yea he will not let this fire be quencht with that which often quencheth rage, a gift, or ranſom; He will not regard any ranſom, neither will he reſt content; though thou giveſt many gifts; we know 'tis fire which kindles fire; the fire of adultery, kindles the fire of jealouſie, which nothing can put out. 'Tis in its kind an unquenchable fire, a fire that goeth not out of man, till man goeth out of the World.

Ignis dicitur ab effectu.

Fourthly, I rather take this fire for thoſe conſuming effects which are produced by this ſin, Firſt, it kindles divine wrath, which is often compared to fire, as God himſelf in his anger is (Heb. 12. 29.) Our God is a conſuming fire. Not that this or any other ſin makes any change in God, but when we ſin, God diſcovers that wrath againſt ſinners, which before he did not. Secondly, all or any other evils which God in wrath ſends upon ſinners, are as a fire to conſume them to the deſtruction. (Deut. 32. 22.) A fire is kindled in mine anger (that is, mine anger hath kindled a fire) and it ſhall burn to the loweſt Hell, and ſhall conſume the Earth with her increaſe. So Job ſpeaks in the cloſe of this verſe. It would root out all mine increaſe. Adultery is a ſin, which not only pulls off the leaves, flowers and fruit, or which only pulls down the branches, boughs, and body of the Tree; as it was ſaid of that Tree (Dan. 4. 14.) Hew down the Tree, and cut off his branches, ſhake off his leaves, and ſcatter his fruit, &c. *Neverthele*ſ*s, leave the ſtump of his roots in the Earth, even with a band of Iron and braſs in the tender graſs of the field,* &c. But Adultery pulleth up the very roots; it not only deflours mans eſtate or takes off the beauty and glory of it, but layeth it waſt root and branch.

It would root out all mine increaſe.

תבואה à radice בוא quod eſt venire, exire, egredi. Specialiter & cum adjuncto dicitur fructus terræ, &c.

The word ſignifieth all kind of increaſe, or any thing that cometh forth; eſpecially the increaſe of the Earth or of Cattel, (Lev. 23. 29.) Hence we may expound it in this largeſt ſence; as if Job had ſaid, This ſin of Adultery would have utterly ruin'd and undone me.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, As adultery is a foul ſin in the nature of it, ſo it is a dangerous ſin in the effects and conſequents of it.

It is a fire, or it ſtirs up a fire, it provokes the wrath of God, and that wrath of God ſends fire to conſume all. How many have felt the woful conſumptions and deſtructions which this ſin hath made? How many have been conſumed to deſtruction by it? Adultery conſumes all.

Scortum viro ſicut eruca cytino. Proverb. Hebr. Omnia hujus ſeculi bona diſſipat, vorat, perdit, eo nempe ſenſu, quo Helena dicitur conſumpſiſſe Trojanos.

Firſt, It conſumes Riches, and is a moth in a mans outward eſtate, many have been begger'd by it. The Hebrew proverb is, As the Palmer-worm to the buds of the Pomgranates, ſo is a Harlot to a man. And Solomon's ſpecial proverb ſaith as much (Prov. 6. 26.) By means of a whoriſh woman a man is brought to a piece of bread, &c. Beggery attends at the Adulterers door, and wantonneſs is paid with want. Great and Noble families, large and fair revenues have been eaten up, and brought to nothing by it. Uncleanneſs is a coſtly ſin; for beſides incident expences which are many, (and expence of time which is moſt) Harlots and whoriſh women often demands great bribes of their adulterous lovers; Hiſtory tells us of one profeſſing that curſed Trade, who demanded ſo high, that her lover was wiſe enough to anſwer; I will not buy repentance ſo dear.

Secondly this fire conſumeth (which is better then wealth, yea then precious ointment) a mans honour and good name, among all thoſe whoſe names are truly honorable. Adultery expoſeth to obloquie; Solomon tells us, it leaves an indelible blot of diſgrace upon the Adulterer (Prov. 6. 33.) A wound and diſhonour ſhall he get (that is, a wound in his honour) and his reproach ſhall not be wiped away. Some men get honour while they get wounds; ſo do valiant Souldiers in lawful Wars; and ſo do noble Martyrs in faithful ſufferings, or ſufferings for the faith. Theſe get honour while they get wounds, and ſtill the more wounds the more honour. But certainly the Adulterer can never get honour by any wounds he gets, and he gets many in that baſe and ignoble War, ſeeing his greateſt wound is in his honour, and the ſcar of that wound is ſuch as cannot be taken out. The ſcar of reproach which that ſin made in the name of David, was not quite wiped away, though the ſin as to guilt was pardoned. God hath cauſed that ſin of his to be mentioned, even in thoſe Scriptures where he is pleaſed to paſs over all his other ſins as if he had never ſin'd them.

Thirdly, As it conſumes honour, ſo the health and ſtrength of the body, it leaves the man ſpirit-leſs, and unfit for the labour of any honeſt or honourable employment. Solomon gives this, among the former, as an argument to draw off all wandrings of affection after unlawful pleaſures (Prov. 5. 8, 9, 10, 11.) Remove thy way far from her, and come not nigh the door of her Houſe, leſt thou give thine honour unto others, and thy years unto the cruel; leſt ſtrangers be filled with thy wealth, and thy labours be in the Houſe of a ſtranger. (Thus he urgeth the two former Topicks, poverty and diſgrace, then follows this third) And thou mourn at laſt when thy fleſh and body are conſumed. A whoriſh woman doth not only waſt the ſubſtance of a mans wealth, which his or his progenitors labour hath gotten, but ſhe waſts alſo the ſubſtance of his fleſh, by which he is enabled to labour, and at laſt leaves nothing but a debilitated languiſhing body, and a mind full of anguiſh.

Fourthly, This fire conſumes life, and ſhortens the days of man on Earth; it brings untimely old age, or makes a man old before his time, or makes an end of him before he is old.

I might ſhew Fifthly, how this ſin darkens and dulls the underſtanding; how ſixthly, it defiles the Conſcience; how ſeventhly, it enthrals the will, and makes the affections wild; how eightly, it deſtroys or weakens the memory; how ninthly, it corrupts all the ſences; how tenthly, it brings wrath, contention, diviſion and confuſions into the family. And Nequitia eſt quæ te non ſinit eſſe ſenem. Ovid. lib. 1. Faſt.

Laſtly, Which is worſt of all, it is ſuch a fire a devours the peace of the Soul, and eats up the hopes of eternal life. Adultery conſumes not only to a temporal but to eternal deſtruction; though we deny the Popiſh diſtinction of ſins into mortal and venial, yet ſome ſins (and this above many) are, ſpecially markt in Scripture as mortal ſins. Every ſin hath death in it, the wages of ſin as ſin (not as great) is death (Rom. 6. 23.) yet this is one of the moſt dangerouſly deadly ſins. Solomon ſpeaks of the Adulterers caſe as deſperate (Prov. 2. 19.) None that go unto her return again, neither take they hold of the paths of life. Not that every one who commits that ſin is irrecoverably damned; the free and powerful grace of God hath given both repentance and pardon to the worſt of ſinners. But when the Spirit of God ſaith, None that go unto her return, we are to underſtand it, firſt of ſuch as are accuſtomed to that filthineſs, which is implied in that word go, noting a continued act, or a conſtant courſe of it. Secondly, when 'tis ſaid, none return, it teacheth us, that very few of them, or (as we ſay) few or none of them return. Thirdly, it ſhews how extream difficult it is for ſuch to return; where there is much delight, much of the will in any ſin, O how unwilling are men to leave it, and come off from it! Adultery is a bewitching ſin, an enthralling ſin, and God in wrath gives Adulterers up many times into the hands of their luſts, ſo that they prevail over them for ever. Laſtly, that which makes the recovery of ſuch ſo difficult, is that they ſeldom perceive their own danger, and are apt to flatter themſelves that God will not be ſo ſevere as to caſt them to Hell, or ſhut them out of Heaven for it. When the Adulterer is put into that black Catalogue, of which it is ſaid none of them ſhall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, the Apoſtle promiſeth a caution againſt this ſelf-flattery and deceit (1 Cor. 6. 9.) Be not deceived neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abuſers of themſelves with mankind, &c. ſhall inherit the Kingdom of God. As if he had ſaid, I know many will think this over-hard and harſh, and feed themſelves with vain hopes of ſpeeding better then ſo; But, ſaith he, Be not deceived. And as there he would not have them deceive themſelves with vain hopes, ſo he cautions the ſame ſort of ſinners, to take heed of being deceived with the vain words of other men, who poſſibly might ſpeak peace to them in this ſin; For (ſaith he, Eph. 5.6. let others ſay what they will) becauſe of theſe things the wrath of God cometh upon the children of diſobedience.

Again, Job having ſaid, Adultery is an heinous crime, and that the Judges ought to take notice of it and puniſh it, he preſently adds, it is a fire, &c.

Hence obſerve, Secondly, The more ſinful any ſin is, the more certain are the woful effects of it.

By how much any ſin goes higher in tranſgreſſing the rule of the law of God, by ſo much doth it fall the lower under the penalty of the law. Every ſin hath deſtruction in it, yet deſtruction is not the iſſue of every ſin; But Job ſpeaks of this ſin as unavoydably concluding under this iſſue, It is a fire that conſumeth to deſtruction.

Thirdly, Whereas Job having ſpoken of this ſin as calling for puniſhment from the Judges, preſently ſpeaks of its puniſhment by God, we may note.

If Magiſtrates neglect to puniſh adultery, yet God will not.

The Lord will kindle a fire that ſhall conſume ſuch ſinners to deſtruction, though men touch them not with a little finger, The Judges of the earth often let thoſe wholeſome laws which have been made againſt this heinous crime (as it was once complained in the Common-wealth of Rome) lie dormant or aſleep; yet the judgment of God againſt it ſlumbreth not, (Heb. 13.4.) Marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled: but whoremongers and adulterers God will judg: As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, let men neglect to judg Adulterers, God will be ſure to judg them, &c. But will not God judg all other ſinners? Doubtleſs he will. Why then doth the Apoſtle ſay, Whoremongers and adulterers God will judg. The meaning is, firſt, he will judg them certainly; Secondly, he will judg them ſeverely, God hath ways enough to puniſh this ſin, he hath rods, yea ſcorpions ready for the backs of theſe fools. And he can make his little finger heavier upon the back of this ſin, then the Magiſtrates loins; And where the Magiſtrate doth not his part, he uſually doth ſo. It is the complaint of a modern Expoſiter upon this place; The fire of divine Judgments (ſaith he) hath waſted far and near in revenge of theſe unruly luſts, which the world makes but a ſport of, and paſſeth by as a jeſting matter, ſo that they are themſelves the deſtroyers of Chaſtity who ought to be the maintainers and defenders of it. If this ſin be not judged and puniſhed in private offenders, it may quickly call down publick Judgments. The Prophet (Hoſ. 4.1,2.) numbers Adultery among thoſe abominations, for which the Lord hath a Controverſie with the inhabitants of a Land, yea for this un-oppoſed and unpuniſhed ſin a land ſometimes ſpeweth or vomiteth out its inhabitants (Lev. 18.20,25,28.) And O how burdenſom are the inhabitants of a land to it, when it ſpeweth out its inhabitants!

Late nunc ignis ille divini judicii omnia corripuit & vaſtavit propter vagas libidines, quas mundus hic pro joco & ludo ducit, ita ut pudicitiæ ſint expugnatores, qui ejus defenſores eſſe debuerunt. Merl.

Fourthly, In that the Spirit of God directs Job to expreſs this ſin, which is a metaphorical fire in the nature of it, by natural fire, as to the deſtructive effects of it. Here again

Obſerve; God ſometimes ſheweth us the nature of a ſin in the puniſhment of it, or lets men ſee their ſin in their puniſhment.

This bodily luſt is a fire, As the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 1.27.) They burned in their luſt one towards another; So here one fire kindles another, and God puniſheth burning with burning; many make it their buſineſs to blow up thoſe luſtful fires, (whereas we ſhould make it our buſineſs to quench and mortifie them) therefore the Lord kindles a fire in his anger to burn them up. This was litterally acted upon Sodom and Gomorrha; They burned in their unnatural helliſh luſts (Gen. 19.) and the Lord ſent a fire from Heaven which eat them up. We may conceive that many Nations and Common-wealths have appointed that puniſhment of fire for Adulterers, becauſe that ſin hath in it the nature of fire. Yea God hath prepared that lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone, to puniſh theſe burnings and filthy fires.

Further, Job ſpeaking of this ſin, Acquaints us not only with the evil nature of it, as it is an heinous crime, but with the evil effects of it, as it renders us obnoxious to the laws of men, eſpecially to the law of God, and thoſe terrible fires which are kindled in his wrath againſt it. All theſe conſiderations Job laid to his own heart, and improved them to keep himſelf at the utmoſt diſtance from complying with the Allurements of this luſt.

Hence note, We may look to the effects and ſad conſequents of ſin, as well as the nature of it, to keep our ſelves from falling into it.

A godly man is carried out againſt ſin, chiefly as it is a breach of the law, a defilement of the Soul, and a grief to the Spirit of God. But yet he knows how to make uſe of all other notions, in which it is repreſented. He can make uſe of the fire and wrath that is in ſin. And this not in a legal but ſpiritual way. He that hath attained to the greateſt ſpiritualneſs may do ſo, and be ſpiritual in it. How holy a man was Job! how full of evangelical principles! yet thoſe principles of the danger of ſin had their place with him. Chriſt directs to ſuch apprehenſions (Luk. 12.5.) Fear him which after he hath killed, hath power to caſt into hell, I ſay unto you fear him. Threatnings have their uſe as well as promiſes; And they who are heirs of the promiſe, know how to make a profitable uſe of threatnings. A godly man looks not only to the evil and filth of ſin, and abhors it, but he looks alſo to the danger of ſin and avoids it. He looks upon the blackneſs of ſin and loaths it; And he looks upon the fire that is in ſin and fears it. Who can take fire in his boſom, and not be burnt? is Solomons queſtion in relation to this ſin of adultery, (Pro. 6.27.) Surely no man can; He that takes this ſin into his boſom, takes fire into his boſom, and will not fire in the boſom burn? And we may put another queſtion in relation to the ſame ſin; Is any man ſo fooliſh or fool-hardy, as to take fire into his boſom? Surely no man is. But though no man will take natural fire into his boſom, no nor touch it willingly with his little finger, yet how many are there who take this figurative fire into their boſoms, yea let it lie burning in their Souls.

Again, Job ſaith of Adultery, It is a fire that conſumeth; He puts it in a direct predication.

Hence note, Sixthly, The evils that at any time are upon us, are vertually or in effect our ſins.

Thus the Prophet tells the people of Iſrael (Jer. 4.18.) Thy way and thy doings have procured theſe things unto thee, this is thy wickedneſs, becauſe it is bitter, becauſe it reacheth unto thine heart. So we may ſay of the fire that conſumeth theſe ſinners, This is your adultery, this is your uncleanneſs. We may ſay of Famine, and the ſword deſtroying other ſinners, theſe are your drunkenneſs, &c. Some wickedneſs or other produceth all theſe.

Laſtly, (ſaith Job) it is a fire that conſumeth. We ſay of thoſe natural elements, fire and water, They are good ſervants, But bad Maſters, becauſe they are deſtructive where they have a prevailing power. Fire hath of it ſelf but one way of coming to an end or going out, and that is by the utter conſumption of that matter which feeds it, or is the fewel of it; ſuch a thing is ſin.

Ignis unum terminum vincendi habet ut deſtruatur quod ſubactum eſt. Plutarch. in Camillis.

Hence note, Sin conſumeth all.

Fire is an unmerciful element, But ſin is ten thouſand times more unmerciful. Myſtical fire is more unmerciful then natural fire. Natural fire when it hath done its utmoſt can but conſume corporal things, but this myſtical fire conſumeth ſpiritual things. It conſumeth and will conſume the whole ſubſtance of the Soul (I mean not as to the being, but comfortable being of it) unleſs the blood of Chriſt quench it. Sin will never leave till it hath deſtroyed all in one of theſe two ſences, either by taking away our being in this world, or by giving us a moſt miſerable being in the world to come.

Thus Job hath purged himſelf by proteſtation from a third ſin, the ſin of Adultery; He proceeds to a fourth, And that is injuſtice towards or harſh dealing with his ſervants.

VERS. 13, 14, 15.

If I did deſpiſe the cauſe of my man-ſervant, or of my maid-ſervant, when they contended with me:
What then ſhall I do, when God riſeth up? and when he viſiteth, what ſhall I anſwer him?
Did not he that made me in the womb, make him? and did not one faſhion us in the womb.

IN the four Verſes laſt opened, Job approved himſelf a faithful Husband to his Wife, his heart had not been deceived by a woman; he had not laid wait at his neighbours door. In theſe three Verſes he proceeds to prove that he had been a juſt Maſter to his ſervants. Thus Job ſhined bright in the ſphere of all his relations, and was an ornament to them all; and indeed the profeſſion of Religion ſhines brighteſt and is moſt adorn'd in our anſwerableneſs to the duty of our relation, as Husbands to our Wives, as Fathers to our Children, as Maſters to our ſervants. How juſtly and gently Job had carried himſelf in that relation of a Maſter to his ſervants, appears

Firſt, In that conditional propoſition, Ver. 13. If I did deſpiſe the caſe of my man-ſervant, or of my maid-ſervant, when they contended with me; Which may be reſolved into this negative; I never did deſpiſe the cauſe of my man-ſervant; nor of my maid ſervant, when they contended with me. Nor doth he barely deny the doing of this, But Secondly, He gives us the grounds upon which, or the motives why he did it not. And thoſe very prevailing ones.

Firſt, Becauſe he knew that himſelf had a Maſter, and that he was an impartial Maſter, who would take an account of him, as well as of his meaneſt ſervant (Ver. 14.) What then ſhall I do when God riſeth up? and when he viſiteth, what ſhall I anſwer? This is, I can never anſwer it in caſe I have been unjuſt to my ſervants.

The ſecond motive or ground preſſing Job's ſpirit to an evenneſs, and moderation toward his ſervants, was becauſe he had no preheminence over them, as to his and their natural production and procreation. He and they were formed and moulded by the ſame individual hand or power, and in the ſame ſpecifical place or houſe (Ver. 15.) Did not he that made me in the womb, make him? and did not one faſhion us in the womb? As if he had ſaid, Though my ſervant and I be at a diſtance, and much differenced in our civil condition or capacity, yet we are the ſame in our natural, and therefore I have always had a regard to do him right, and to deal with him as my equal in that one reſpect, how much ſoever in other reſpects I know my ſelf his ſuperior and above him. Thus you have the ſcope and parts of theſe three Verſes. Which I ſhall now more diſtinctly open.

Verſ. 13. If I did deſpiſe the cauſe of my man-ſervant, or of my maid-ſervant, &c.

Men in power are very apt to deſpiſe thoſe who are below them, and proud men cannot but do ſo. They that are in high places, have uſually high thoughts of themſelves, and they that are high-minded can have no other. With what diſdain do ſuch behold poor underlings? how lightly do they eſteem, yea how heartily do they deſpiſe them?

The word rendred deſpiſe, ſignifieth alſo to loath, and ſuch loathing as cauſeth vomiting. In proper ſence to deſpiſe another is to ſlight him; yea it is ſlighting to the utmoſt, ſuch ſlighting as we beſtow upon the vileſt and moſt abject either things or perſons. Now when Job ſaith, If I did deſpiſe, or, I did not deſpiſe the cauſe of my man-ſervant, we are not to take the words in a ſtrict and rigid ſence, as if Job only denied that he did deſpiſe the cauſe of his ſervant, or utterly reject him as unworthy to be heard when he complained to him or brought his cauſe before him; Bnt when he ſaith, I did not deſpiſe the cauſe of my man-ſervant, &c. his meaning is, I treated with him fairly, and heard him favourably, I gave him all that reſpect which was due unto him in his place, and to his cauſe in the equity of it. Thus the Scripture ſpeaks often by that figure which Rhetoricians call Meioſis, giving us a word of a lower ſignification then the ſcope of the place intendeth. Thus when David ſaith (Pſal. 51. 17.) A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not deſpiſe, the meaning is, God graciouſly accepts and highly prizeth a broken heart. And when the Apoſtle dehorts the Theſſalonians, and us in them, from deſpiſing Prophecy (1 Epiſt. 5. 20.) we are not to think we have done our duty, if we do not ſlight that ordinance of Prophecy, or not utterly caſt it off and lay it aſide as uſeleſs; but when the Apoſtle dehorts from deſpiſing, he exhorts to an honourable eſteem of it, or that we ſhould uſe and attend it often. So here Job's purpoſe is to ſhew, that he gave his ſervants, all deſerved countenance and encouragement, when he only ſaith, If I did deſpiſe

The cauſe of my man-ſervant, &c.

The word rendred cauſe, ſignifieth alſo judgment, rule, meaſure, we tranſlate clearly to the point in hand, the cauſe of my man-ſervant; that is, I did not deny him Juſtice when he called for my Judgment in a righteous or good cauſe: I did not throw the buſineſs out of the Court, or ſay I would not meddle with his matters, I did not deſpiſe the cauſe משפט variam habet notionem, ſignificat enim judicium, normam, menſuram, regulam, legem.

Of my man-ſervant, or maid-ſervant.

He expreſſeth ſervants under both ſexes, becauſe he would ſhew how extenſive his Juſtice was. The word rendred man-ſervant, put alone, ſignifieth a ſervant in general; but becauſe the maid-ſervant is expreſt, we tranſlate diſtinguiſhly, man-ſervant, If I did deſpiſe the cauſe of my man-ſervant,

Or of my maid-ſervant.

Who being of the weaker ſex had the leſs ability or opportunity of the two, to right her ſelf, if I had done her wrong; yet I did not deſpiſe the cauſe, no not of my maid-ſervant.

The word rendred maid-ſervant, ſignifieth to be true and truſty, and faithful; As if he had ſaid, I did not deſpiſe the cauſe of a faithful ſervant, though a ſimple maiden. He had reaſon to deſpiſe a wicked and unfaithful ſervant, but the meaneſt ſervant, the meaneſt of maid-ſervants that was truſty and did her duty faithfully, Job did not deſpiſe. If I did deſpiſe the cauſe of my man-ſervant, or of my maid-ſervant,

When they contended with me.

The word rendred, to contend, ſignifies both judicial and extrajudicial contendings. 'Tis yet reſtrain'd uſually to contending in words and law-ſuits. The Children of Iſrael (Exod. 17. 2.) did chide with Moſes when they wanted water, and thereupon (Ver. 7.) he called the name of the place Maſſah and Meribah, becauſe of the chiding of the Children of Iſrael, &c.

But how did Job's ſervants contend with him? I anſwer, we are not to underſtand this contending, either firſt, of bold, or as we ſay, ſaucy contendings; Job was a wiſe man, and would not have indured ſuch unmannerly ſervants in his houſe. Neither ſecondly, are we to underſtand it, of contending, by gain-ſaying, or contradicting his orders and commands, a Maſter who knows his place will not ſuffer that. Nor thirdly, are we to underſtand it of any unreaſonable murmuring and diſlike upon every frivolous or light occaſion. Theſe things are not to be permitted, much leſs cheriſhed in any (ſuch as Job's was) well governed family: and if ſervants will contend thus with their Maſters, they have reaſon not only to deſpiſe and diſlike them, but unleſs they amend, to diſmiſs, and put them out of their houſes. Therefore this contending of his ſervants with him, was upon ſome conſiderable cauſe, and then he did not deſpiſe them, Though they contended with him.

There is a theefold expoſition of this their contending with him.

Firſt, Some interpret it of complaints made by his ſervants againſt him before other Judges. But this is objected againſt upon a double reaſon. Firſt, Becauſe ſervants in thoſe times had not the liberty of impleading their Maſters, though though they had done them wrong, or made them (as the Egyptian task-maſters made the Iſraelites, Exod. 1. 13.) ſerve with rigor. Secondly, Job being himſelf a Magiſtrate, and as ſome aſſert the chief Magiſtrate in that Country, would not (probably) admit of an appeal, eſpecially made by a ſervant from himſelf; And therefore, though to have done ſo would have argued a very great condeſcenſion in Job, yet I do not conceive this proper to the Text.

Si quid ambiguum in quo famuli deciſionem judiciariam quærerent, non eos imperioſe rejici, ſed ad judicem alium, ego ipſe ſupremus regionis judex rem totam remiſi. Paraph. Servis olim non competebat actio in jure civili. Druſ.

Secondly, Others expound it of contentions between ſervant and ſervant brought before him to judge and determine; As if he had ſaid, When my ſervants complained of, or brought accuſations againſt one another, I did not deſpiſe their cauſe, but laboured to reconcile them, or do them Juſtice as well as any other of my ſubjects or people within my Dominion. But though it be a great honour to a man in Authority, to ſee Juſtice done in his own family as well as abroad, and that, as he will not ſuffer his ſubjects, ſo not his ſervants to oppreſs and wrong one another. Yet the Text doth not favour this interpretation; which without too great a violence done to the Grammatical conſtruction, cannot be rendred when they contended before me, but with me. And therefore Servis meis libertæ orationis & cauſæ ſuæ defendendæ poteſtatem faciebam ut ſi quid fortè à me per injuriam in eos committi ſuſpicarentur, audacter dicerent. Olimp.

Thirdly, (as we render) This contention was moſt probably with himſelf. As if Job had ſaid. When any of my ſervants had matter of complaint about any houſhold grievance, I gave them free liberty to do it; they were not afraid to preſent their caſe to me, whom they always found their Patron as well as their Maſter; and as ready to do them right, as to expect ſervice from them. Sometimes ſervants complain that their reward or wages is too little, ſometimes that their work is too much and lyeth too heavy upon them. When Job's ſervants contended with him about theſe or any ſuch matters, he heard them patiently, and either gave them redreſs, if their complaints were right, which many Maſters would not, or convinced them by his wiſdom and the weight of his reaſons, that their complaints were unreaſonable, which moſt Maſters could not. I did not deſpiſe the cauſe of my man-ſervant, or of my maid-ſervant, when they contended with me.

Hence note, Firſt, There may be occaſions of contending, or differences ariſing between Maſters and Servants, even in well ordered Families.

Job was a juſt man, A man that feared God and eſchewed evil; yet he intimates there had been contentions in his Family. 'Tis hard (if not impoſſible) to walk ſo evenly in any relation, but there may be occaſions of complaint. And as the Maſter hath uſually many occaſions to complain of his ſervant, ſo the ſervant may have ſome to complain of his Maſter. The corruptions of men will work in all relations, nor is any eſtate in this life without its ſpecial temptations. The Apoſtle Paul was ſurely much convinced of this, elſe he had never taken up ſo great a part of his ſhort Epiſtles to the Coloſſians and Epheſians, of thoſe alſo to Timothy and Titus, in giving ſuch exact and particular rules about the duties both of Maſters and Servants.

Meminerimus & adverſus infimos juſtitiam eſſe ſervandam: Eſt autem infima conditio & fortuna ſervorum. Cic. lib. 1. de Offic.

God hath ſet Maſters over their ſervants, but he hath not given them a liberty to trample them under their feet; ſervants are under their Maſters power, not under their luſts, they are to be governed, not deſpiſed by them. Maſters ſhould be as ready to diſcharge duty towards their ſervants, as to require duty and ſervice of them. When the Apoſtle (Eph. 6. 5.) had exhorted ſervants to do their duty, and to do it (as they ought) with fear and trembling in ſingleneſs of heart as unto Chriſt; he adds (Ver. 9.) And ye Maſters do the ſame things unto them; That is, do that in your place which belongs to you, as you expect they ſhould do what belongs to them in theirs. As they ought to ſerve, ſo you ought to govern in the fear of God. Maſters are not bound to do the ſame things for the matter with their ſervants. They are not to wait upon their ſervants, or be at their appointment, as ſervants ought, for then all order were diſſolved. But Maſters are bound to do the ſame things for the manner, for the care of both ſhould be in their mutual duties chiefly to pleaſe and approve their hearts to God. Thus we are to underſtand the Apoſtle when he ſaith to Maſters concerning ſervants, Do the ſame things unto them, forbearing threatning (that is, hard and grievous words, cloathed with wrath) knowing that your Maſter alſo is in Heaven. He urgeth the ſame argument again (Col. 4. 1.) Maſters give unto your ſervants that which is juſt and equal, knowing that ye alſo have a Maſter in Heaven. There is no Maſter but is a ſervant; And therefore as he requires work of his ſervants; ſo his Maſter requires this work of him, that he do what is juſt and equal to his ſervants. And as every ſervant muſt be juſtly dealt with, ſo ſome ſervants deſerve to be kindly and reſpectfully dealt with. It is ſaid (Luk. 7. 2.) The Centurion had a ſervant who was dear unto him. Both the Syriack and Greek word imports a ſervant of great price, or a precious ſervant. Good and faithful ſervants are rare, and therefore precious, As ſuch ſervants are of great uſe, ſo they ſhould be of great price or eſteem with their Maſters. A wiſe ſervant (ſaith Solomon, Pro. 17. 2.) ſhall have rule over a ſon that cauſeth ſhame, and ſhall have a part of the inheritance among the Brethren. The Moraliſt ſaid of a faithful ſervant, he is (humilis amicus) a leſſer friend, an inferiour friend; and indeed much ſuperior to many, who are under the name of friends and are our kindred. Some in high prejudices againſt ſervants, and poſſibly from their own experiences, having never met with thoſe that were good, have ſaid, There is nothing worſe then a ſervant, no not then a good ſervant; if you uſe him well, he will be the worſe, if ill, he will be ſtark naught. But we need not take theſe mens votes, againſt ſervants, for Oracles; The Oracles of God, the holy Scriptures have ſpoken better things of them and for them. This is all I ſhall ſay of them, that (as in all other relations among men) for a few good there are many bad, and that like Jeremies figgs, the good uſually are very good, and the bad very bad.

Eadem dicit non opere aut officio ſed modo & proportione. Eſtius.

Servo nihil pejus ne bono quidem; ſi benè tractas pejor eſt, ſi malè peſſimus.

Again, Job was not only a Maſter but a Magiſtrate, and ſo he was two removes from his ſervant. The meaneſt man in the world, that hath a ſervant is above his ſervant; But ſome are above their ſervants more then others. Job was above them by a double diſtance; yet fearing God he ſpeaks thus; I did not deſpiſe, &c.

Hence note, A godly man will not make uſe of his power, to the oppreſſion of any, how mean ſoever.

Though his ſervants are his ſubjects alſo, yet he will not wrong them. 'Tis a rare thing for a man to be a righteous Judg in his own cauſe, and that towards an inferior. And if we conſider the ſtate and condition of ſervants in thoſe times wherein Job lived, we ſhall ſee that he was a mirror of patience in bearing with his ſervants, as well as in bearing his ſufferings under the hand of God. For Firſt, Servants in thoſe times could not change their Maſters at pleaſure, if they diſpleaſed them: they could not go from them when they would. Servants were then in the nature of ſlaves, or ſervants for life.

Secondly, Such ſervants had nothing that they could call their own; what they got it was to their Maſters uſe.

Thirdly, Their Maſters might uſe them at their pleaſure. No plea was allowed them in Courts of Juſtice. Servants had none to right or relieve them, how much ſoever their Maſters did abuſe and wrong them, or deny them thoſe things that were neceſſary.

Omnis illis ne illos licebant. Senec.

Fourthly, In ſome places Maſters had power of life and death; If a Maſter had kill'd his ſervant, there was no more matter made of it, nor account given about it, then if he had kill'd a beaſt. Their ſervants were their own, even as their cattel were their own; Thus it was in thoſe times. But under the light and knowledg of the Goſpel, ſervants have better terms, and Maſters have only a limited power over them. This ſhews the evenneſs of Job's ſpirit, his gentleneſs and kindneſs in not taking liberty to do what the courſe of the world gave him leave to do, becauſe it was againſt a good conſcience and the will of God. He did not deal with his ſervants by his Prerogative, but they had free liberty to plead for themſelves. And where in equity he was obliged to do them right he did it. From all take theſe five inferences.

Firſt, If Job were ſo ready to hear his ſervants when they contended with him; then much more to right them againſt the contentions of other men.

Secondly, If he dealt mildly with them that contended with him, then much more with thoſe who were meek and quiet.

Thirdly, If he were thus reſpectful to ſervants, then much more to friends and equals.

Fourthly, They that are advanced unto any authority, ſhould remember that God doth not give them power to be proud of it, or vex others with it. Let not the greateſt Princes think that the world was made for them, but they for the world. The reaſon why God hath ſet up Maſters and Magiſtrates, is not the advancemet of one or more above the reſt, but that there might be order and government for the good of all men in common.

Fifthly, Every man ſhould be owned as a Maſter in his own family. That's the Orignial of all Government; and a man may expect to be heard and obſerv'd in his own Houſe.

Job having ſhewed how he treated his ſervants, ſheweth upon what ground it was ſo, or what fell upon his thoughts, cauſing him to carry himſelf with ſo much moderation towards them.

Verſ. 14. What then ſhall I do, when God riſeth up? and when he viſiteth, what ſhall I anſwer?

As if he had ſaid, when God ſhall be awakened by the cry of my oppreſſed ſervants, what then will become of me? Theſe are the words of a man in diſtreſs, or in a ſtrait; he turns himſelf this way and that, he thinks of this and that, but nothing will do; and then in much amazement of Spirit, he crys out, what ſhall I do? I know not what to do. Such was the language of good King Jehoſhaphat (2 Chron. 20. 12.) We know not what to do, but our eyes are upon thee.

This praiſe, What ſhall I do? May have a threefold ſignification.

First, 'Tis a word of enquiry; What ſhall I do? Saith he, that asketh counſel and advice, not knowing and being unreſolved what to do; that the loweſt ſenee.

Secondly, It is a word of grief and trouble; What ſhall I do? Saith he, that bemoaneth his own ſad caſe, or bad condition, being perplexed in mind about what he hath done or fears to ſuffer.

Thirdly, (which is the height of it) 'Tis a word of deſpair, What ſhall I do? Saith he, that thinks is quite undone. Job might ſay in all theſe ſences, What ſhall I do? Job's fair dealing with his ſervants, did not proceed meerly from the ingenuity and gentleneſs of his nature, much leſs from a fear of humane Laws, but from a holy fear of God in his righteous judgments. What ſhall I do? If I have done that which God and my own Conſcience bear me witneſs, I never did, deſpiſed the cauſe of my man-ſervant, or of my maid-ſervant, when they contended with me. If that were my caſe, in how woful a caſe were I? What ſhall I do

Deus Judex ſedere dicitur quando jus reddit, in executione ſententiæ idem quaſi ſurgit. Druſ. Surrectio eſt declaratio potentiæ. Rab. David in Pſal. 68. 1, 2.

When God riſeth up?] Properly God doth neither ſit nor riſe, but theſe poſtures are attributed to God in Scripture figuratively, or after the manner of men, who ſometimes ſit and ſometimes riſe. God is ſaid to ſit in alluſion to Earthly Judges who ſit to hear Cauſes and give Sentence; and when God proceeds to Execution, then he is ſaid to riſe up. To riſe up notes a readineſs or preſent preparedneſs for ſpeech or action. He that riſeth up bucgles himſelf to ſome buſineſs, to do what he hath determined. Gods riſing up is but the manifeſtation of his purpoſe, and the actuating of his power. Thus Moſes prayed and thus the Church of the Jews was taught to pray at the removing of the Ark (Numb. 10. 35. Pſal. 68. 1.) Riſe up Lord (ſaid Moſes) and let thine enemies ſcattered. Let God ariſe (ſaid the Church) let his enemies be ſcattered, let them alſo that hate him flee before him. The very riſing of God is the fall and fliht of his enemies, Who can ſtand when he riſeth? What elſe then is his riſing but the exertion or putting forth of his great power? And therefore Job had reaſon enough to put this trembling queſtion, What ſhould I do when God riſeth up?

And when he viſiteth, what ſhall I anſwer?

To viſit is taken three ways in Scripture.

First, To viſit is to ſhew favour and kindneſs freely Luke 1. 68.) God hath viſited and redeemed his people, and (verſ. 78.) Through the tender mercies of our God, whereby the day-ſpring from on high hath viſited us. This was the kindeſt viſit that ever was made in this world. Chriſt in the great day will recount and everlaſtingly reward the kindneſs of thoſe who have viſited him (that is, any member of his) when he was ſick. And how will his people for ever recount his kindneſs to them, and bleſs him for it, who viſited them when they were ſin ſick to death, yea dead in ſins and treſpaſſes.

Secondly, To viſit is to declare diſpleaſure and to puniſh (Exod. 32. 34.) Nevertheleſs, in the day when I viſit I will viſit their ſin upon them; that is, I will puniſh them for it, and they ſhall feel the ſmart of this ſin. The Scripture ſpeaks much and often of this viſitation. This is a ſad viſit, yet always a righteous and juſt one.

Thirdly, to viſit is the work of any ſuperior, when he reckons with or calls thoſe to account, who are under his charge and inſpection. Thus the founders of Colledges and Hoſpitals appoint Viſitors to enquire how the ſtatutes and rules of thoſe Societies are obſerved, how their Revenues are diſpoſed, and how the Officers and Governours of them have diſcharged their truſt, and performed their duties. The viſitation here ſpoken of is directly this third, and conſequentially the ſecond. As if Job had ſaid, when God who is the great Superintendent over all the families in the World, ſhall come to viſit mine, and to enquire how I have dealt with my ſervants, if I have wronged them, or not done them right againſt thoſe who would, What ſhall I anſwer? Surely I ſhall have never a word to ſay, I ſhall not be able to frame an anſwer my ſelf, nor can any Advocate among the ſons of men draw up one for me, which will hold water in the day of that viſitation. When he viſiteth, what ſhall I anſwer?

In viſitatione ejus; cū ipſe in nos animadvertet.

He conſiders, there is one who will riſe up and viſit for him that is oppreſſed; Job looked upon himſelf not only as he was a Lord and Maſter, but as having or as being under a Lord and Maſter. There are few ſo high on Earth, who have not ſome on Earth higher then they; but there are none on Earth ſo high, who have not one higher then they. The proud Aſſyrian Prince ſaid in his heart (Iſa. 14. 13, 14.) I will aſcend into Heaven, I will exalt my Throne above the Stars of God, I will aſcend above the heights of the Clouds, I will be like the moſt high; yet how unlike he was to the moſt High, and how low the moſt High laid him, notwithſtanding all his pride and pomp, we read at the 15. verſe of the ſame Chapter, Thou ſhalt be brought down to Hell, to the ſides of the Pit. 'Tis good for all that are in place above others, to think often of this, leſt they provoke the moſt high God, who hath ſet them on high, to lay them low, yea lower then the loweſt. One of the Ancients reproving the extream and unlimited ſeverity of Maſters towards their Servants, or of Princes towards their Subjects, gives them this ſchooling; You do not acknowledg your Lord God or God to be your Lord, while you exerciſe ſuch Lordſhip over men. It is reported of Trajan the Emperour, that he gave free leave to his Subjects to implead him in open Court, and his chief glory was this, that in Law-ſuits his Exchequer was often caſt; Which (ſaith the ſame Author) never hath bad cauſe, but under a good Prince. Nations and Families are happy, when Magiſtrates and Maſters remember there is a Maſter over them, and act as men accountable to a higher power. Job knew there was one who would riſe up and viſit him, as he viſited his Servants, and required duty and obedience from them. What then ſhould I do, when God riſeth up?

Præcipua tua gloria eſt, ſæpius vincitur fiſcus cujus mala cauſa nunquam eſt niſi ſub bone principe. Plin. in panegyr. Trajani.

Hence Note, Secondly, The fear of God not of man, keeps a godly man from doing wrong to any the meaneſt man.

Job poſſibly might have eſcaped well enough from all the men in the World, if he had trampled his Servants under his feet, or (as ſome ſay) made dice of their bones; but the fear of God preſerved him from ſuch rigorous and unrighteous dealings. Abraham argued (Gen. 20. 11.) I thought ſurely the fear of God is not in this place, and therefore they will ſlay me. And ſurely where the fear of the Lord rules in the heart, it will over-rule the life and keep power within its bounds or due compaſs from breaking out to the hurt of others. Thus Joſeph ſpake to his Brethreh (Gen. 42. 18.) Do this and live, for I fear God; As if he had ſaid, I being ſo far above you, could make good my accuſation againſt you that ye are ſpies, and deſtroy you, and no man in Egypt but would take my part: But I fear God, therefore do this and live. There are many who, were it not for the fear of men, would never make any ſtop or ſcruple to do what they have power and will to do. Yea there are ſome, who make a kind of mockery at it, when they are told God will judg them; Let us alone (ſay they) till that day and we care not. Atheiſm lies cloſe in the hearts of moſt over whom it prevails, yet it prevails ſo mightily over ſome, that they cannot keep it cloſe, but out it will, at their lips. That Judg in the Parable, feared not God, nor regarded man. They who are not awed by the fear of God, will do little in love to man. Job ſaith at the 34. verſe of this Chapter, Did I fear a great multitude? Or did the contempt of families terrifie me? That is, did I for fear of men, either of the many or of the mighty forbear to do Juſtice? I did not: I was above ſuch cowardiſe and baſe fears. But though Job was not afraid of men, ſo as to be kept from his duty, yet the fear of God kept him from doing any thing againſt his duty. What ſhould I do, when God riſeth up? &c.

Thirdly, Note, The fear of evil to be endured, is a good motive to keep us from doing evil.

Job was really afraid of after-reckonings, if he had over-reckoned, or dealt unrighteouſly with his ſervants. It is our duty to mind our danger, that we may be more mindful of the rule. Penalties are the word of God as well as Precepts, and Threatnings as well as Commandments. Not to do evil meerly for fear of evil, or only for wraths ſake, is the fear of a Slave not of a Son; yet that fear of evil which helps to keep the heart and life clean, is a ſon-like fear. Fear is a grace as well as love, and works as purely in a gracious Soul. This fear doth not trouble us in our way, but ſtays us in it. Job was a man fearing God, and this fear wrought in his heart when he ſaid, What ſhould I do when God riſeth up, and when he viſiteth what ſhall I anſwer?

Timor hic non perturbat ſed confirmat. August.

Fourthly, Obſerve, God will call all to an account about what they have done, and puniſh all thoſe that have done wrong.

There is nothing paſſeth from man, but he muſt paſs an account about it ſooner or later. When the people of Iſrael were in hard bondage, God aroſe for them, and called Egypt to a reckoning (Exod. 3. 7.) I have ſeen, I have ſeen the affliction of my people, &c. And I am come down to deliver them, &c. And by Moſes he warns Maſters to uſe their ſervants well, leſt it go ill with themſelves (Deut. 24. 14, 15.) Thou ſhalt not oppreſs an hired ſervant that is poor and needy, &c. At his day thou ſhalt give him his hire, neither ſhall the Sun go down upon it, for he is poor, and ſetteth his heart upon it, leſt he cry againſt thee unto the Lord, and it be ſin unto thee; that is, leſt as it is ſin in its nature, ſo thou findeth and feeleſt it to be ſin in the effects of it. Thus the Apoſtle awakens the griping rich men of thoſe times, and of all times (James 5. 4.) Behold the hire of the labourers, which is of you kept back by fraud cryeth; And the cryes of them which have reaped, are entred into the ears of the Lord of Sabbaoth. (Pſal. 12. 5.) For the oppreſſion of the poor, for the ſighing of the needy; now will I ariſe, ſaith the Lord, I will ſet him in ſafety from him that puffeth at him. And when the Lord ſets the poor in ſafety, will not their rich oppreſſors be in danger? He that folds the ſheep, will deſtroy the Lions and the Wolves. Once more; If thou (ſaith Solomon, Eccl. 5. 8.) ſeeſt the oppreſſion of the poor, and violent perverting of Judgment and Juſtice in a Province, marvel not at the matter (that is, do not wonder that great men are ſo wicked, as to oppreſs thoſe whom they ought both to protect and relieve, neither do thou wonder that God ſuffers them to go on in their wicked oppreſſions, be confident that he will not always ſuffer them) for (as it follows there) he that is higher then the Higheſt (and who is that but the moſt high God) regardeth, that is, taketh notice what oppreſſors do, and what the oppreſſed ſuffer, and will in the fitteſt ſeaſon right, yea recompence the one, and reckon with, yea ruine the other. Therefore as the Prophet admoniſheth all men to be quiet and look to their duty, becauſe the Lord was riſen (Zach. 2. 13.) Be ſilent, O all fleſh before the Lord, for he is raiſed up out of his holy habitation; that is, he hath begun to ſhew himſelf in his mighty power and providences for the aſſerting of his peoples liberty, and the reſtoring of Jeruſalem to her ancient beauty; ſo we may admoniſh all men to be and do ſo, becauſe God will certainly riſe up to viſit and call every man to an account for what he hath done.

This call of man to account, may be conſidered in three periods.

Firſt, God doth it often in this life, he reckons with them by ſtroaks, he lays trouble upon their loins, and gives them up to as hard hands as ever they have laid upon others.

Secondly, God calleth men to an account at the hour of death; It is appointed for men once to die, and then cometh the Judgment. There is a perſonal particular judgment before the general Judgment.

Thirdly, God will ariſe to viſit and call all men to an account at the Reſurrection of the dead. Then every one muſt anſwer for himſelf, and for all that he hath done. No man ſhall eſcape that Judgment of God, nor can any thing in man eſcape that Judgment. In that viſitation day Chriſt will look thorough us, he will look thorough our works, and thorough our hearts. As we muſt all appear before the Judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to what he hath done whether it be good or bad (2 Cor. 5. 10.) ſo then it will appear not only what is good and what is bad, but how good and how bad every thing which hath been done is. In that great Audit and viſitation day, none but the righteous ſhall be able to anſwer. And though they will anſwer according to their own righteouſneſs, yet they cannot anſwer in it. As none but the righteous ſhall ſtand in that Judgment, ſo none can ſtand but in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt the Judg; and if none can anſwer then but in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is the righteouſneſs of God, what will become of them that are not righteous, ſo much as with the righteouſneſs of man? How will it fare with ſuch, we may learn in the next point, grounded upon thoſe words of Job in the former part of the verſe, What ſhall I do when, &c.

Hence Obſerve, Fifthly, Sinners of all ſorts, eſpecially oppreſſors, will be at their wits end, they will not know what to do, or what to ſay when God ariſeth and calls them to an account.

Who is able to expreſs, yea or conceive, with what confuſed horror the guilty ſons of men will cry out in that day, What ſhall we do? When the great day of the Lords wrath is come, who ſhall be able to ſtand; (Rev. 6. 17.) Now ſinners flatter and ſo acquit themſelves; they have many plea's and excuſes, to colour over their fouleſt actions and oppreſſions: But as the Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 2. 1.) Thou art inexcuſable, O man; that is, there is no excuſe, no Apology to be made for thee in this caſe by others, neither wilt thou at laſt have the confidence (though now thou haſt) to make any for thy ſelf; for (verſ. 3.) Thinkeſt thou this O man, that judgeſt them which do ſuch things, and doeſt the ſame, that thou ſhalt eſcape (by thy fine excuſes) the judgment of God? Yea though a man doth only that evil which he never judged or condemned; but applauded and juſtified others, yea and himſelf in, yet he ſhall not eſcape the Judgment of God. As in the buſineſs of Juſtification every mouth ſhall be ſtopped (one and other) and all the World become guilty before God; ſo the World of unjuſt and ungodly men ſhall ſtand guilty before God, and have their mouths ſtopt for ever. When the Lord came to view thoſe that were at the wedding (Matth. 22. 11.) What had the man to anſwer, who had not on a wedding garment? The Text ſaith, he was ſpeechleſs, he had not a word to ſay for himſelf. The Prophet repreſents the ſad condition of ſinners in this form (Iſa. 10. 1, 2.) Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievouſneſs that they have preſcribed (that is, who are not only ſo unjuſt as to give order for the doing of grievous things, but ſo impudent as to cauſe their orders to be entred and recorded as publick Monuments of their injuſtice and oppreſſion) to turn aſide the needy from judgment, and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherleſs. And what will ye do in the day of viſitation and in the deſolation which ſhall come from far? The Prophet ſpeaks of the ſame viſitation for kind that Job did, and he ſpeaks of the perſons to be viſited in the ſame words; What will ye do? And (as it follows) to whom will ye flee for help? As the poor have ſought help of you but found none, ſo you ſhall ſeek to others for help but ſhall not find it, And where will ye leave your glory? That is, your riches and worldly goods which you have ſcraped out of the bellies of the poor, and count your glory, or glory in them. This will be the general cry of ſinners when God comes to viſit, what ſhall we do? Who will help us? They who now will not do what they know they ought, or will do what they know they ought not, ſhall at laſt cry out in vain, woe and alaſs, what ſhall we do? We know not what to do. When God called Cain to account for his brothers blood, which cryed to him for vengeance, he had nothing to anſwer, but that which was no anſwer, Am I my brothers keeper? When God ſhall call the idle and unprofitable ſervant to account, who hath hid his Talent in a napkin or under ground, what will he anſwer? When God ſhall call the evil ſervant to account, who took his brother by the throat for an hundred pence, after himſelf had been forgiven all his debt, even ten thouſand Talents, what will he have to anſwer? There are many ſinners, who ſtand mute now, and will not confeſs their ſins, and in the great viſitation day, all ſinners will be forced to ſtand mute, as not being able to anſwer for ſo much as any one for their ſins. Unleſs now men get the anſwer of a good Conſcience purged by the blood and Spirit of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, their evil Conſciences will never be able to make any anſwer at his Tribunal. Let every impenitent ſinner put theſe Queſtions often to his own heart, What ſhall I do, when God riſeth up? And when he viſiteth, what ſhall I anſwer? He that ſeriouſly catechizeth his own Soul with theſe Queſtions, will either reſolve, in the ſtrength of Chriſt, not to continue in ſin any longer, or elſe he ſeems reſolved to ſit ſilent in darkneſs under the wrath of Chriſt for evermore.

This is the firſt reaſon which Job made uſe of to keep himſelf in a due temper and even carriage towards his ſervants, the conſideration of the account, that God would call him to, When he viſiteth, what ſhall I anſwer? He ſubjoins a ſecond reaſon why he did not deſpiſe the cauſe of his ſervant.

Verſ. 15. Did not he that made me in the womb make him, and did not one faſhion us in the womb?

This reaſon is taken from the oneneſs or likeneſs of ſervants and Maſters. There are three conſiderations under which Maſters and ſervants are all one.

Firſt, (which is the greateſt of all) as to Goſpel grace; a ſervant may as ſoon and as much be made partaker of the grace of the Goſpel as his Maſter, and a common man as ſoon as any Prince or King. In Chriſt Jeſus there is neither Greek nor Jew, bond nor free (Col. 3.11.) that is, Chriſt had as much reſpect to the one as to the other, in the laying down of his life, and ſtill hath in the offers of his grace. He doth not beſtow free-grace upon any man becauſe he is free, or free-born, nor doth he deny it any man becauſe he is bound, being either born or made a Bond man.

Secondly, The Maſter and the ſervant ſhall ſtand alike before the Lord in the Judgment at the great day (Rev. 20.12.) And I ſaw the dead ſmall and great ſtand before God, and the Books were opened: And another Book was opened which is the Book of life, and the dead were judged out of thoſe things which were written in the Books, according to their works. Great men and ſmall men are all men. Nor doth he mean it only (if at all) of great and ſmall in ſtature, but of great and ſmall in degree. Thus Lords and Maſters are great men, Subjects and Servants are ſmall men; theſe dead, that is, raiſed from the dead, John ſaw (in viſion) ſtanding alike (though much unlike in this World) before God to be judged at the end of the world. He had ſuch a viſion, though (as ſome interpret) not intending the ſame time or thing. (Rev. 6.15.) And the Kings of the Earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief Captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman and every free-man hid themſelves, &c. Why ſo? (v. 17.) For the great day of his wrath is come; that is, a day of great wrath is come upon the wicked of all ſorts.

Thirdly, They are alike in their original formation. This Job urgeth in the Text upon his own heart; Did not he that made me in the womb make him? He that made the Maſter, made the Servant. And he that faſhioned them, faſhioned them alike in the womb. Maſters and Servants were not made by ſeveral hands. Did the God of Heaven make Maſters and great men, Kings and Princes, and did ſome inferiour power make Servants, Plebeians and the poor? No; (ſaith Job)

He that made him, made me.] There is a great elegancy in the Hebrew, which tranſlations cannot well reach; He that made me, made him. We both had the ſame efficient, the ſame faſhioner.

Nota Eleganter dici עשהו עשני qui me fecit, fecit & illum. Merc. כון Elegātem et concinnam formationem & omniū membrorū aptam inter ſe proportionem, jam inde à matris utero elaboratam ſignificat.

Did not one faſhion us in the womb?

The word which we render to faſhion, ſignifies two things; firſt, the firmneſs of a work; and ſecondly, the fitneſs and exactneſs, the ſymmetry and (as it were) curioſity of it. Both which do wonderfully appear in the frame of mans body, (as Naturaliſts have obſerved with amazement) is the moſt proportionable and beſt faſhioned piece in the World; and the pattern of all Artificial proportions. How admirably is the body of man contrived and put together! How comely is the faſhion of it! Did not one faſhion us in the womb? As if Job had ſaid, God was as exact and curious, or (as I may ſay) he took as much pains in the forming and limiting the meaneſt ſervant as the mightieſt Prince in the World; and though the bodies of men have diſtinct and particular features, complexions, and favours (otherwiſe they could not be known from one another) yet they have all one common or general both faſhion and faſhioner. Did not he that made me in the womb make him? Did not one faſhion us in the womb?

Hence Note, God is as much the maker of every man who is conceived and born by natural generation, as he was the maker of man at firſt by Creation.

Moſes thus deſcribes the Creation of man (Gen. 2.7.) The Lord God formed man of the duſt of the ground, and breathed into his Noſtrils the breath of life: And man became a living Soul. Now what God did then immediately, he doth ſtill by means. Do not think that God made man at firſt, and that ever ſince men have made one another. No (ſaith Job) he that made me in the womb made him, David will inform us (Pſal. 139.14.) I am fearfully and wonderfully made, marvellous are thy works, &c. As if he had ſaid, Lord I am wonderfully made, and thou haſt made me, I am a part or parcel of thy marvellous works, yea the Breviate or Compendium of them all. The frame of the body (much more the frame of the Soul, moſt of all the frame of the new Creature in the Soul) is Gods work, and it is a wonderful work of God. And therefore David could not ſatisfie himſelf in the bare affirmation of of this, but enlargeth in the explication of it (verſ. 15.) My ſubſtance was not hid from thee when I was made in ſecret, and curiouſly wrought in the loweſt parts of the Earth. Thine eyes did ſee my ſubſtance yet being unperfect, and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were faſhioned, when as yet there was none of them. David took no notice of father or mother, but aſcribed the whole efficiency of himſelf to God. And indeed David was as much made by God as Adam; and ſo is every ſon of Adam. Though we are begotten and born of our Earthly parents, yet God is the chief parent and the only faſhioner of us all. Thus graciouſly ſpake Jacob to his Brother Eſau, (Gen. 33.5.) demanding, Who are theſe with thee? And he ſaid, The Children which God hath graciouſly given me. Therefore as the Spirit of God warns (Pſal. 100.3) Know ye that the Lord is God, it is he that hath made us and not we our ſelves. Which as it is true eſpecially of our ſpiritual making, ſo 'tis true alſo of our natural. And if ſo, Then,

Firſt, Give glory to God and acknowledg his hand in the framing of your bodies; and know that as your beauty is from him, ſo are your very blemiſhes. The faults and errata's that are in Nature, came not without a divine order, they are not meerly accidental but appointed.

Secondly, Take heed of pride in beauty or in any natural accompliſhments; What haſt thou that thou haſt not received? Is true of bodily endowments as well as ſpiritual, and doth equally caſt down pride in either. And if there be a blot or a diſproportion of parts in the compoſure of the body, yet ſeeing it comes by the hand of God, do not murmur, be not diſcontent. Woe to him that ſtriveth with his Maker, ſhall the clay ſay to him that faſhioneth it, What makeſt thou? (Iſa. 45. 9.) This argument both the Prophet and the Apoſtle after him (*Rom.*9.20.) makes uſe of to a higher purpoſe. The former to quiet the murmurings of men againſt Gods preſent providential diſpenſations. The latter to ſtop all diſputes and quarrellings about his eternal purpoſes and decrees in diſpoſing of men according to the ſoveraign pleaſure of his own will. And if this argument be enough to allay either of thoſe murmurings and diſputes, how much more thoſe diſcontents and impatiences which ſtir in and break out from ſome, becauſe their bodys are not better faſhion'd and more model'd to their own mind?

Secondly, If we are all made by God, and made as much now by him as at the firſt, take heed of perverting his work by putting that which he hath made to ſerve him, to ſerve againſt him. Our bodies are of him, therefore they ſhould be to him, The Apoſtle chargeth us (1 Cor. 6. 20.) to glorifie God in our body, and in our ſpirit, which are Gods by purchaſe or redemption: Our bodies alſo are his by Creation or formation, upon which account we are likewiſe bound to glorifie him by and in them. It is uncomely to uſe or employ any thing contrary to the end or uſe for which it was made. And it is not only uncomely but extreamly dangerous to employ it againſt its Maker. Though our obligation to God be greateſt for our ſpiritual making, or for making us Saints, yet there is a great obligation upon us for our corporal making, or for making us men. So then as Saints owe themſelves in ſpecial to God, becauſe he hath faſhioned them by his Word and Spirit, ſo all men owe themſelves to God, becauſe he hath faſhioned them in the womb. And as we are wholly made and faſhioned by God (we have not made ſo much as a little finger of our ſelves, no nor ſo much as a hair of our head) ſo let us give up our ſelves wholly to God; let us take heed of keeping back an ear, or an eye, or an hand from God, To keep any one member from God, or to give it up to any other, will be as dangerous as the ſin of Ananias and Saphira (Acts 5.) who kept back a part of the price, when they had dedicated it all to God. And know that we are not in our power, or at our choice (as they were before the dedication of their eſtates) whether we will dedicate our bodies with all their members, and our Souls too with all their faculties unto God or no, but it is as much our duty to dedicate them, as it is when we do ſo to dedicate them wholly unto God. Did not he that made me in the womb make him?

Secondly, Obſerve, God is as much in the making of the meaneſt Servant, as the greateſt Lord in the World.

Yea he hath beſtowed as much coſt on the out-ſide and on the in-ſide (as to naturals) of thoſe that are low as of thoſe that are higheſt in the World. The Body and Soul of a Servant is as good as his Maſters. Yea oftentimes a Servant hath a better Body, a more beautiful and comely Body, a Body better compact and conſtituted then his Maſters; yea and not ſeldom a better Soul, that is, a better judgment and underſtanding, he may be wiſer and more judicious then his Maſter. (Prov. 14. 31.) He that oppreſſeth the poor, reproacheth his maker. We may underſtand it both ways; the oppreſſour reproacheth his own maker, and ſo the maker of the poor man too, becauſe both have but one and the ſame maker. We have that ſence more fully (Prov. 22. 2.) The rich and the poor meet together, the Lord is the maker of them all. The rich and poor are at greateſt diſtance in their outward eſtate, yet in many things they meet. They meet both (as Job ſpeaks in the Text) in the womb; both being conceived and faſhioned there, and brought forth from thence. They both meet in one common Nature, being reaſonable Creatures, conſiſting of Soul and Body. They both breath in the ſame air, and dwell upon the ſame Earth. They both meet in the ſame Maker, and in the ſame Maſter; the ſame ſupream hand makes one man rich, and another man poor; the ſame alſo maketh the man that is poor and the man that is rich: Yea they both meet in this, that the rich man or the Maſter needs the poor man or a Servant as much as the poor man needs the rich or a Servant his Maſter. The one needs work as much as the other needs wages; the rich man ſtands in as much need of the poor mans labour, as the poor man doth of the rich mans relief. Whatſoever differences, or degrees there are among men, they meet and are alike in many, yea in moſt things. And that God who hath made both the Maſter and the Servant, the Rich and the Poor, can quickly make (as he hath often made) the Rich man Poor, and the Poor man Rich; the Maſter a Servant, and the Servant a Maſter.

Yet many act towards their Servants, and the poor, as if they were of another mould or Original; and keep at ſuch a diſtance as if they had never met in any thing, nor ever could. Though indeed (as one of the Ancients cenſure ſuch) He that contemns any man becauſe he moves in a lower worldly ſphere then himſelf, is himſelf not above but below all men; for he diveſts himſelf of his humanity, and doth not act like a man while he ſo proudly conceits himſelf unlike other men. They are men of no real worth or value, who value themſelves over-much beyond other men. What is there in the matter or the maker of one man more then of the other? And that any man is poor, or a Servant, doth not ariſe from his Nature, but from providence or divine diſpenſation. Heathens have ſaid, It is not Nature but Fortune that ſets a man in the ſtate of a Servant; Chriſtians ſhould ſay, it is not Nature but God that doth it. Auguſtine in his 19. Book of the City of God, hath an excellent paſſage to this purpoſe; At firſt (ſaith he) God gave man dominion over the irrational Creatures, not over men. The word Servant was not heard of early in the World. The firſt news we have of it was by Noah, (Gen. 9. 25.) Curſed be Canaan, a Servant of Servants ſhall he be. Servants came not at firſt from the inſtitution of God, but from the ſin of man. God did not impoſe the ſtate of a Servant upon man, till man by ſin refuſed the ſervice of God. When we look upon our Servants from whom we expect ſervice and obedience, it ſhould mind us of our diſobedience to our Lord and Maſter. And we ſhould often remember with much ſelf humiliation, that it was our rebellion againſt God, which hath brought man into this kind of ſubjection to man.

Rationalem hominem factum ad imaginem ſuam noluit niſi irrationalibus dominari, non hominem homini, ſed hominem pecori, &c. Nomen itaque ſervi culpa meruit non natura. Auguſt. l. 19. de Civ. Dei cap. 15.

Thirdly, from the connexion and ſcope of theſe three verſes laid together. Obſerve,

This conſideration, that Maſters and Servants have the ſame Maker, ſhould meeken and moderate the Spirits of Maſters towards their Servants, and keep all men in high place from high and ſwelling thoughts of themſelves, as alſo from contemning thoughts of thoſe who are of any lower form then they in the World. Job was confident (Chap. 14. 15.) That God would have a deſire to the work of his hands. Surely then all they that are the work of his hands, ſhould under that notion, both have a deſire and give a ſuitable reſpect to one another. God humbleth himſelf (Pſ. 113. 6.) to behold (that is, to take care of and provide for) the things that are in Heaven and in the Earth, and ſhall men be ſo proud as not to behold with a favourable regard thoſe who are (where themſelves are) on Earth. When the Apoſtle Peter ſaw Cornelius inclining to give him more honour then came to the ſhare of a Creature, he not only modeſtly but graciouſly declined it, ſaying, Stand up, I my ſelf alſo am a man (Acts 10. 26.) Now as we ſhould take heed of receiving more honour from any man then becomes us as men, becauſe this were to intrench upon Gods prerogative, and to take that from God, which he hath ſaid he will not give to any other (his glory.) So we ſhould take heed of deſpiſing the meaneſt men, or our meaneſt Servants, ſeeing they alſo are men, and men of the ſame make, having alſo the ſame Maker with our ſelves; becauſe in deſpiſing them we reflect upon God who made them, and deny them that reſpect which he hath commanded every man to give unto any other man. For as the Apoſtle ſaith of the members of the Natural Body (1 Cor. 12. 23, 24.) Thoſe members of the body which we think to be leſs honourable, upon theſe we beſtow more abundant honour, and our uncomely parts have more aboundant comlineſs ; for our comely parts have no need, but God hath ſo tempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part which lacketh, that there ſhould be no ſchiſm in the body, but that the members ſhould have the ſame care one of another ; As (I ſay) God hath ordered the members of the Natural body (which the Apoſtle there applies and makes uſe of with reſpect to the Spiritual body, the Church, which is a company of profeſſing believers gathered by their own free conſent into a holy fellowſhip) So alſo he hath ordered the members of that Civil body whether greater in Nations and Commonwealths or leſſer in houſholds and families, ſo that there might be no ſchiſm in them neither, but that the leſs honourable members might be both cared for and encouraged by fitting reſpects to do their duty for the good of the whole Body.

And if Maſters and Governours ought to carry it mildly, moderately and honourably toward their Servants, then let Servants and all inferiours under Government, remember it is our duty to carry it humbly and reſpectfully towards their Maſters, Superiours, and Governours. And therefore we find the Apoſtle Paul in his Epiſtles as ſtrict in giving charge to Servants to walk orderly and obey the commands of their Maſters in all things according to the will of God, as he is careful to moderate the rigour of Maſters in exerciſing their power over, and in giving commands to their Servants. And as he teacheth Maſters to uſe their Servants well, ſo he teacheth Servants to behave themſelves well towards their Maſters. And he urgeth this eſpecially upon Servants profeſſing Godlineſs, leſt they bring a ſcandal upon profeſſion (1 Tim. 6. 1.) Let as many Servants as are under the yoke, count their own Maſters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blaſphemed. And where thoſe Servants which being believers had alſo believing Maſters, might poſſibly by their oneneſs with them in ſpiritual priviledges forget the diſtance of their civil relation, and ſo grow more bold and familiar with them (becauſe Brethren in the faith) then became Servants in the family ; therefore he adds a ſpecial caveat in that caſe to prevent ſuch preſumption (verſ. 2.) which let the reader conſult. Thoſe families are happy, peaceable, and proſperous, where Maſters know how to command, and Servants how to obey out of Conſcience and in the fear of God.

If I have withheld the poor from their deſire, or have cauſed the eyes of the widow to fail.

Or have eaten my morſel my ſelf alone, and the fatherleſs hath not eaten thereof.

For from my youth he was brought up with me as with a father, and I have guided her from my mothers womb.

IN theſe three verſes, as alſo in thoſe following to the 24. verſe of this Chapter (all which make up one intire context) Job avows his care of and tenderneſs towards the poor. Which he makes appear ;

Firſt, By his readineſs to help them in their ſtraits, yea to help them out of their ſtraits, at the 16. verſe ; If I have withheld the poor from their deſire, or have cauſed the eyes of the widow to fail.

Secondly, He ſhews it by the comfortable proviſion he had made for them, or by their free admiſſion to and entertainment at his Table ; v. 17. If I have eaten my morſel my ſelf alone, and the fatherleſs hath not eaten thereof : And he ſeems to give a reaſon or proof of both theſe acts at the 18. verſe, For from my youth he was brought up with me as with a father, and I have guided her from my mothers womb.

Thirdly, He ſhews his care of and charity to the poor, as in feeding, ſo in clothing them at verſ. 19, 20. If I have ſeen any periſh for want of clothing, or any poor without covering : If his loins have not bleſſed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my ſheep,

Fourthly, He ſhews it by his forbearance of all rigorous courſes againſt them, though he had power and opportunity, yea poſſibly ſometimes a provocation to do it ; verſ. 21. If I have lift up my hand againſt the fatherleſs, when I ſaw my help in the gate, As if he had ſaid, I could have done it, but I did it not ; In all theſe particulars he exemplifies and gives inſtance of his tenderneſs to the poor. And this he he confirms two ways.

Firſt, By a dreadful imprecation upon himſelf in caſe he had not done ſo, at verſ. 22. Then let mine arm fall from my ſhoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone.

Secondly, he confirms it by the dreadful apprehenſions that he had of the majeſty of God, which kept him from doing ſo, at the 23. verſe ; For deſtruction from God was a terrour to me : And by reaſon of his highneſs I could not endure. Thus you have the ſcope of Job, as alſo the ſeveral parts of this context, from the 16. verſe incluſively to the 24. verſe excluſively, in which as in a glaſs we may behold not only the beautiful and lovely face, but the honeſt heart and working bowels of a well-grounded and rightly exerciſed charity.

Verſ. 16. If I have with-held the poor from their deſire.

This verſe contains the firſt point of Job's rich compaſſion to the poor. As if he had ſaid ; I was not only careful that they ſhould not want things of abſolute neceſſity, but gave them what they could reaſonably deſire. Mr. Broughton tranſlates ; If I ſtayed the poor from the wiſhed, that is, from the enjoyment of that good which they wiſhed. Others ſay, If I have forbidden the deſire of the poor. The word in the Hebrew ſignifies to hinder or ſtop, to forbid or to with-hold. (Prov. 23. 13.) With-hold (or forbid) not correction from the Child. As Parents are not to with-hold correction themſelves, ſo they are not to forbid others duly to correct their Children. If I (ſaith Job) have with-held or ſtayed the poor from their deſire, if I have forbidden their deſire, ſo that they could not have what they deſired, &c.

מנע Prohibuit, cohibuit, impedivit

The word rendred the poor, imports a perſon ſpent, utterly waſted and exhauſted ; ſuch indeed are the poor, their purſes are drawn dry, they have little or nothing left, to help themſelves and their families. If I have with-held the poor

From their deſire.] Deſire is the motion of the Soul after any apparent good. 'Tis not poſſible for any man to ſtop the deſire of another man in this ſence, to do ſo is the ſole prerogative of God, or only in the power of God ; he indeed can lock up the deſires of the Creature, even the fierceſt and moſt eager deſires of the Creature. Beaſts have a deſire in their kind ; God ſtopt the hunger of Lions, which is their deſire after food (Dan. 6. 22.) My God (ſaith Daniel) hath ſhut the mouths of the Lions. How did he ſhut them ? Not by muzling their mouths, but by abating the edge of their natural appetite or hunger. God commanded the Children of Iſrael to appear before him thrice in the year ; and leſt they ſhould ſay, what will become of our Houſes and Lands when we leave them empty and are gone up to the ſolemn feaſts ? Will not our enemies take that advantage to invade our Land and poil our Goods ? Fear not that, ſaith the Lord (Exod. 34. 24.) For I will caſt out the Nations before thee, and enlarge thy borders, neither ſhall any man deſire thy Land, when thou ſhalt go up to appear before the Lord thy God, thrice in the year. Their land was a pleaſant land, a land flowing with milk and honey, that is, abounding with all good things, and therefore a very deſirable land, yet the Lord when he pleaſed could with hold the deſires of all men from it ; this the Lord can do, he can with-hold the deſire of man, but man cannot with-hold his own deſire, much leſs the deſire of any other man. Now, though no man can ſtop another from deſiring any thing, yet many men can and often have ſtopt them from the having or enjoying of the thing which they deſire, and that is Job's meaning here : The act of the faculty is put for the object, deſire for the thing deſired. As faith is put for the Doctrine or truth believed, and hope for the thing hoped, ſo deſire for the thing deſired. But what is the deſire of the poor ? Surely the deſire of the poor is relief, and this relief is threefold ; or 'tis given three ways.

Firſt, By the purſe ; this relieves the poor againſt penury.

Secondly, By power ; this relieves them againſt oppreſſion ; the authority of a Magiſtrate delivers the poor out of the hand of their oppreſſors.

Thirdly, Relief is given the poor by counſel, that relieves their ignorance; counſel what to do is as valuable as money, and in many caſes a more deſirable charity. We may ſuppoſe Job's charity extended to the poor, in giving them their deſire in any of or in all theſe ways, he neither denyed them his purſe, nor his power, nor his counſel, when deſired, If I have with-held the poor from their deſire.

Job ſpeaks in a very great latitude, as though he had not ſtopped them in any of their deſires: He puts no expreſs limit to his charity, yet we may conceive a limit. He was a wiſer and a better man then to ſatisfie the poor, either firſt in their unreaſonable deſires of great things; or ſecondly, in their vain and wanton deſires of the leaſt things; or thirdly, in their deſires of a ſupply to pretended wants and feigned neceſſities: We ſhould carefully diſtinguiſh between the deſires of the poor, and their clamors, between their need and their luſt or humor. As there are many who feign piety, ſo there are ſome who can feign poverty, and whoſe very diſtreſſes are but artifices. When Job profeſſeth againſt with-holding the poor from their deſire, he intends it of real deſires ariſing from their wants, not of artificial or made deſires proceeding from wantonneſs or deſign. If I have with-held the poor from their deſire.

Nos omnibus quidem debemus miſericordiam, ſed quia pleriq; fraude eam quærunt et fingunt ærumnam; ideo ubi cauſa manifeſtatur perſona cognoſcitur, tẽpus urget, largius ſe debet profũdere miſericordia. Ambroſ. 1. Offic. c.30.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, It is a duty to relieve the poor, or to grant them their deſire.

To do acts of charity is a duty as well as to do acts of Juſtice; yea charity is alſo an act of Juſtice, and to with-hold the poor from their deſire, (as their deſire hath been ſtated and circumſtantiated) is to with-hold their right from them. Solomon calls for this duty in the expreſs word of the Text (Prov. 3. 27.) With-hold not good from him to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to do it. Good is ſo due to thoſe of whom we have borrowed it, that we cannot with-hold it at all without ſin when 'tis in our power to repay it. Good is ſo due to ſome who would borrow, that we cannot with-hold it without ſin, when it is in our power to lend it. And good is ſo due to many poor who crave it, that we cannot with-hold it without ſin, when it is in our power to give or beſtow it. And doubtleſs it is as much our duty to give ſomewhat to thoſe poor who ask, and to lend ſomewhat to thoſe poor who would borrow, as it is to pay all that we owe to thoſe of whom we have borrowed. Thus the Lord charged his ancient people (Deut. 15. 7, 11.) If there be among you a poor man, of one of thy brethren, within any of thy gates, in the Land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou ſhalt not harden thy heart, nor ſhut thine hand from thy poor brother. Where, to engage their charity, Firſt, The Lord calls the poor their Brethren; Secondly, He tells them the land wherein they dwelt was given them; they did not deſerve or earn it; they did not get or conquer it by their power, but God (whoſe the Earth is, and the fulneſs of it) gave it to them; therefore they ought to give ſome of the fruits of it to their poor and needy Brethren. And while the Lord warns them not to harden their heart, nor to ſhut their hands againſt them, his meaning is, that they ſhould be free and liberal to the poor, and with open heart and hand give them their deſire. Thus the Lord explains his own meaning (v. 11.) The poor ſhall never ceaſe out of the land: Therefore I command thee, ſaying, thou ſhalt (not only not ſhut but) open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy in the land. God could make all men rich, but he will have ſome poor, that the charity of the rich may be exerciſed. The grace of charity would be idle, and (as it were) have a perpetual vacation, did not the providence of God provide ſuch objects for it to work upon. And as God by Moſes in the Law told the Jews, The poor ſhall never ceaſe out of the Land, ſo Chriſt tells us in the Goſpel (Mark 14. 7.) Ye have the poor with you always, and whenſoever ye will, ye may do them good. God hath ſo ordered it, that we ſhall never want opportunity, though we often want hearts to expreſs our charity. And leſt any ſhould think the poor (becauſe poſſibly not of their kindred) un-related to them, therefore the Lord (in that place of Deuteronomy) calls the poor man our Brother, and our poor, Thou ſhalt open thy hand wide unto thy Brother, to thy poor, and thy needy in the land, which though it had (I grant) a peculiar reſpect to that people, who were Gods peculiar people, and all of Abrahams family, yet it reacheth all people, who are alſo to account the poor their Brethren, and ſo their poor, even as their neereſt Relations are theirs. Yea the Lord calls the poor our own fleſh (Iſa. 58. 7.) And that thou hide not thy ſelf from thine own fleſh, As if he had ſaid; do not withdraw, and pull back, do not diſappear when the poor man appears, for he is not only fleſh as thou art, but thine own fleſh. And ſo if thou ſuffereſt the poor to periſh, thou ſuffereſt thy ſelf, even thine own fleſh (in kind though not in number) to periſh. That Maxime of the Apoſtle (Eph. 5. 29.) is founded in nature; No man ever hated his own fleſh, but nouriſheth and cheriſheth it. Are not they unnatural, who refuſe to nouriſh and cheriſh the poor, whom the Spirit of God calls our own fleſh? And if ſuch declare againſt themſelves (according to this rule) that they are wanting as to nature or natural principles, how much more are they wanting to grace and ſpiritual principles? The Apoſtle John (1 Ep. 3. 17.) admoniſheth Saints to fill up their profeſſion with the ready actings of this love, and tells them the neglect of that duty would prove that they had little love to God; Whoſo hath this Worlds goods, and ſeeth his brother hath need, and ſhutteth up his bowels of compaſſion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? And as ſuch ſhew little love to God, ſo Solomon aſſures them they ſhall find little love from God. For God doth not barely propoſe this duty, but preſſeth us with the conſideration of our own danger if we neglect it (Prov. 21. 13.) Who ſo ſtoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he alſo ſhall cry himſelf and not be heard. There is nothing worſe to be feared, or which produceth worſe effects to be felt by man, then not to be heard by God. Therefore as Chriſt exhorts (Matth. 5. 42.) Give to him that asketh thee: And from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away. And is it not a reproach to Chriſtians, not to give to thoſe who ask, when ſome Heathens have been much troubled when nothing hath been asked of them? Again, Job ſpeaks of the deſire of the poor, and the Hebrews have a word, for a poor man, which in the Root ſignifies to deſire, implying that poor men who have little in poſſeſſion, are much in deſiring to have more.

Quid eſt? cur nihil petis? Lamprid. de Severo Imperat.

Hence Note, They who are full of wants, are alſo full of deſires.

As ſome who have no wants have many deſires; they are never ſatisfied how much ſoever they are filled. So they who are under real and ſenſible wants, cannot but have many deſires, and thoſe ſo ſtrong and ſtirring ſometimes, that 'tis not eaſie to with-hold them from their deſire; ſtrong deſires will hardly take a denial; poverty puts on to importunity, yea ſome under great wants, are ſo preſſed with deſire, that they take ſinful ways to have their deſires fulfilled. Agur feared this when he prayed, Give me not poverty, leſt I put forth my hand and ſteal (Prov. 30. 9.) The deſires of many are too ſtrong for their Conſciences, and then they quickly break the bounds of righteouſneſs and common honeſty rather then they will be with-held from their deſire. They that are under a ſence of their want in ſpirituals, of their want of grace, and of the favour of God, of the enjoyments of Chriſt, O what deſires, what ſtrong and vehement deſires have they? How will they break through all impediments to obtain what they deſire? The poor in Spirit have greateſt deſires and uſe the greateſt endeavours after ſpiritual things; they ſee they have but a little, and therefore they will be urging to have more, and when they have got more, though they are thankful for it, yet they will not ſit down in it, nor ſay it is enough, becauſe ſtill that which they get gives them a clearer ſight of more to be gotten. Their richeſt and fulleſt attainments in grace, do but diſcover their poverty and emptineſs, and therefore ſeeing themſelves always wanting, they are always deſiring; and ſurely the Lord will not with-hold theſe poor from their deſires, as Job profeſſed he did not thoſe who applyed to him for help and ſupply; If I have with-held the poor from their deſire,

Or have cauſed the eyes of the widow to fail.

Theſe words are near in ſence with the former. Mr. Broughton reads, If I have conſumed the eyes of the widow. Job did not with-hold any truely poor from their deſire, much leſs did he with-hold the poor widow from her deſire, he ſuffered not her eyes to fail; that is, he did not long defer to do that for her which ſhe deſired, nor weary her with waiting. Some do not totally deny, but they are full of delays, and they put off poor ſuiters ſo long, that both purſe and patience are quite ſpent. But (ſaith Job) I have not cauſed the eyes of the widow to fail by long delays, much leſs by denials. The paſſions of the mind are viſible in the eye; ſometimes we ſee joy ſitting there, and ſometimes we ſee ſorrow ſitting there, at one time we may ſee pleaſedneſs in the eye, at another time diſpleaſure and anger. Thus alſo (as here) we may ſee hope or expectation in the eye. The earneſt intentive look of the eye upon any man, hath (as it were) this voice in it, I deſire your help. He that looks much upon or to another, looks for ſomewhat from him. The look of the eye to God hath the force of a prayer in it, yea this is often put for prayer, becauſe in prayer uſually, the eye is lifted up to God (Pſ. 121. 1.) I will lift up mine eyes to the Hills from whence cometh my help. Again (Pſal. 123. 2.) Behold as the eyes of Servants look unto the hand of their Maſters, and the eyes of a maiden to the hand of her miſtreſs; ſo our eyes wait upon the Lord our God, untill that he have mercy upon us. That is, we will wait and pray, or pray waiting for his mercy. And as the eye waits on God, ſo in proportion upon man. When Peter and John came into the Temple (Acts 3.) there ſate a poor lame man asking an alms (*v.*2.) And Peter faſtening his eyes upon him, with John, ſaid look on us (v.4.) As if he had ſaid, you look upon many others as perſons able to relieve your neceſſities, but now look on us, and ſee what we will do for you; And he gave heed unto them, ſaith the Text (*v.*5.) expecting to receive ſomething from them; that is, he faſtned his eyes upon them, he beheld them as an expectant of relief. Thus the widow (we may ſuppoſe) came to Job and look't pitifully upon him, or gave him an humble look of expectation, as if ſhe had ſaid, Give me your aſſiſtance, do ſuch a thing for me; and when ſhe did ſo, he did not cauſe her eyes to fail, nor did he feed her with vain hopes, as they do who are forward to make promiſes, but ſlow to make performance. Every where in Scripture the fruſtrating of expectation, is called the failing of the eye, or is the cauſe of it. (Pſ. 69. 3.) I am weary of my crying, my throat is dryed; mine eyes fail, while I wait for my God; that is, God is pleaſed to put me to ſuch long waiting, and expectation, that my eyes are even worn with looking, and my heart with expecting (Pſal. 119. 133.) Mine eyes fail for thy ſalvation, and for the word of thy righteouſneſs; that is, for the receiving of the benefit, bleſſing, deliverance, or ſalvation, which that word of thy righteouſneſs hath promiſed to me, and made me to wait for. And as God, to try the faith and patience of his people, lets them wait till their eyes begin to fail; ſo men either through unfaithfulneſs, or weakneſs, oft cauſe the eyes of thoſe who wait upon them to fail utterly. (Lam. 4. 17.) As for us, our eyes as yet failed for our vain help; that is, we lookt for help, and no help came, and ſo our eyes failed in our expectation. But upon whom did they wait in this total fruſtration? The next words tell us, We have watched for a Nation that could not ſave us. The Hebrew is, In our watching we have watched, or (as that Elegancy imports) we have earneſtly watched for a Nation that could not ſave us; that is; for the Egyptians who promiſed us help, and upon whom we truſted for help, but all in vain. They proved a weak reed, upon which while we leaned we were not ſupported but wounded. Righteous Job dealt not thus with his expectants and dependants; he did not cauſe the eyes of the widow to fail, he did not let them wait till they were weary, or tired, or grieved. And this we may underſtand him ſpeaking in a two-fold reference.

Per aſpectu oculorum vivacem et intenſum in aliquid denotatur ſpes ardens rem quæ aſpicitur acquirendi, vel ab eo qui aſpicitur aliquod bonum reſpiciendi. Bold.

Si quis quod expectat non obtinet, id dicitur conſumptio oculorum. Si viduas lactavi vana ſpe. Tygur.

Firſt, As to delays of Juſtice; as if he had ſaid, I have not let them wait long for their right, I have not given them dilatory anſwers and put-offs, hoping to be ſpurr'd up with gifts and brib'd into expedition.

Secondly, As to delays of charity: As if he had ſaid, I have not let the widow wait long for my alms, what I gave her, I gave her ſpeedily,

In both theſe reſpects, or for both theſe helps, poor widows wait; and they are conſtrained to wait long for ſome mens charity, and longer for other mens juſtice; ſo long for both ſometimes that their eyes fail, and their ſpirits ſink in deſpair of either. In neither of theſe reſpects did Job grieve the widow. He neither wronged her himſelf, neither did he delay to right her when ſhe was wronged by others; He neither made her poor himſelf, nor did he delay to relieve her poverty. Thus he anſwers that which Eliphaz charged him directly with (Chap. 22. 7. 9.) Thou haſt not given water to the weary to drink, and thou haſt with-holden bread from the hungry, thou haſt ſent widows away empty, and the arms of the fatherleſs have been broken. No, ſaith Job, I have many witneſſes, and my conſcience, which is more then a thouſand witneſſes, tell me, that, I have not cauſed the eyes of the widow to fail.

And when he ſaith ſo, we are to expound it in a better ſence then his words expreſs; there is leſs in what he ſpake, then in what he did for the widow; for his meaning is this, I was ſo far from making her eyes to fail with waiting, that I made her heart glad, and ſent her away rejoicing, becauſe of her juſt and ſpeedy diſpatch. Expedition hath coſt ſome very dear; Job did not only not deny the widow his juſtice, or his charity, but diſpatch her quickly; none paid for expedition who appealed to his Tribunal, nor did the expectation of any periſh who applied to him for relief. If I have cauſed the eyes of the widow to fail.

Hence Note, We ought not only to help the poor, but to help them ſpeedily.

Speedy relief, is double relief; he that gives at once, gives twice. Therefore as Solomon adviſeth (Prov. 3. 28.) Say not to thy Neighbour, go, and come again, and to morrow I will give, when thou haſt it by thee. As we muſt not ſay, but do, ſo we ſhould not defer to do. 'Tis dangerous to ſay, we will give to morrow when we know not whether a to morrow ſhall be given us. If we have it now to give, let us give it now, for who knows whether he ſhall have any any thing to give hereafter. And if delays are not denials of help to man, yet they are of obedience to God; who as he commands us to give, ſo to give now. The poor are ready to ſtarve, and ſhall we be unready to give what we have ready by us? The poor may periſh to day, and what good will your Alms do them to morrow? As God will not bear it that we ſhould ſay to him we will obey him to morrow, when he calls for obedience to day (take heed of making the Lords eyes fail in waiting) ſo God will not bear it, if we ſay to the poor, Go and come again to morrow, he requires it to day, though the poor do only intreat it. The Apoſtles rule is (Rom. 12. 8.) He that ſheweth mercy with chearfulneſs. And again (2 Cor. 9. 7.) The Lord loveth a chearful giver. Now that which a man doth chearfully he will do it ſpeedily. And every good thing the ſooner it is done, the better it is done. Nor can that be done too ſpeedily, which ſhould be done preſently. To do a charity, or to do Juſtice late is next door to the not doing it at all. As he that asks faintly beſpeaks a denyal, ſo he that grants ſlowly, gives with a kind of denyal; and to be ſure ſo much of the beneficialneſs of any benefit is taken off from thoſe to whom 'tis given, as alſo ſo much of the thanks from thoſe who give it, as delay is made in the giving of it. As the Lord gives ſometimes preventingly (Iſa. 65. 24.) Before they call I will anſwer, or makes his grant contemporary, or beat the ſame date with our requeſts (as it follows in the ſame verſe) and whiles they are yet ſpeaking I will do; ſo ſhould we in our proportion do to thoſe who make ſuits and requeſts to us.

Tarde velle nolentis eſt: Proprium eſt libenter facientis cito facere. Senec.

Tu non intelligis tantum de gratia te demere, quantum moræ adjicis. Senec. de Benef. lib. 2. cap. 5.

How contrary to this rule of giving and doing good to others are they who ſeem to take a kind of pleaſure to put others to the pain of expectation; they love to be waited on. And they therefore hold petitioners upon the rack of expectation, becauſe they love to be waited upon; we may diſcover three ſorts of this humour.

Firſt, Some when they know the thing deſired is not in their power to do, yet they will not ſay plainly they cannot do it (to be ſpeedy in denying what we cannot do, is a favour as well as to be ſpeedy in granting what we can do, yet I ſay, ſome will not preſently ſay they cannot do, what indeed they cannot.) becauſe they have an ambition to be attended upon and much ſought unto.

Secondly, Others who from the firſt moment that a ſuit is made to them, are reſolved in their own breaſts or are fully intended never to do it,though it be in their power to do it; yet they will not ſay they will not do it, but hold poor ſuiters in a long ſuſpence. It is ſome courteſie to ſay we will not do,what we have no mind to do and are purpoſed not to do. But the policy of men is too great for this point of charity.

Thirdly, There are others, who are both able and willing, yea reſolved to grant the poor their deſire, yet for ſtate they make the poor ſtay and the widows wait till their eyes fail; and ſo do as much torment ſuiters with their delays, as they benefit them with their relief. They that take ſuch ſtate in doing courteſies, loſe their reward with God, and their reſpects from man. He that ſtays long for a favour, hath more then half deſerved and paid for it. 'Tis the priviledg of God to make man wait his pleaſure. Yet he never delays his people but 'tis in wiſdom, yea and in mercy alſo (Iſa. 30. 18.) The Lord is the God of Judgment, bleſſed are all they that wait for him. As God doth no man wrong how long ſoever he makes him wait, ſo how long ſoever we wait on him we loſe no time, nor will it be at all to our loſs. Waiting upon God in faith and patience turns always to a good account, and hath great reward. But let men take heed how they take ſtate upon them in making the pooreſt man wait for their charity, or any man for their Juſtice. They will be found failing in duty who thus cauſe the eyes of any, eſpecially (which Job here profeſſeth he did not) the eyes of the widow to fail.

Secondly, Obſerve, When ſuits are long deferred, and unanſwered, ſuiters are greatly afflicted.

The failing of the eyes is painful, and implies a decay in nature; the eyes fail through old age, or through much bodily weakneſs and want. 'Tis ſaid (Jer. 14. 6.) The wild Aſſes did ſtand in the high places, they ſnuffed up the wind like Dragons, their eyes did fail becauſe there was no graſs. Whatſoever makes the eyes fail is afflictive; therefore long delays muſt needs be a great affliction, ſeeing they make the eyes fail; yea delays do more then make the eyes fail, they make the heart fail too (Prov. 13. 12.) Hope deferred, makes the heart ſick; but when the deſire cometh, it is a Tree of life. 'Tis the word in the former part of this verſe, when the deſire cometh; that is, when the thing deſired cometh, it is as a Tree of life. A lingring Hope is like a lingring Conſumption, it weakens the whole man. Hope having conceived ſome probable good approaching, waits for the birth of it; and we are like a woman in travel till it be brought forth: Long travel in Child-bearing makes the mother ſick and faint, and ſo doth hope make us, when we travel long in the bringing of it forth. But as a woman forgets the pain of her travel for joy that a man is born, ſo doth he that ſees his hope, that is, the thing hoped for born. This Solomon expreſſeth to the life, when he ſaith, The deſire come is a Tree of life. As when Chriſt who is called The deſire of Nations (Hag. 2. 7.) ſhall come, he will be a Tree of life to all true believers; ſo in its degree and meaſure is the coming of any good thing which we deſire. The fulfilling of deſire is ſo great a relief that it is a kind of new life to the Soul, and cauſeth our dead hearts to revive. The hearts of many Godly men have been made ſick when God hath deferred their hope; David ſaid (Pſal. 69. 3.) Mine eyes fail while I wait for my God. And again (Pſ. 119 82.) Mine eyes fail for thy word; that is, in waiting to receive that good which thou haſt promiſed in thy word. Whether God or man keep us long at a diſtance from our hopes, we quickly meet with grief of heart and failing of eyes. Total denying and long delaying are not far aſunder.

Thirdly, Obſerve, The widows caſe and cauſe muſt not be delayed.

If widows are not ſpeedily relieved, they are double grieved. They are weak, and not able to bear much; they are under ſorrow already. To defer their hope, is to give them ſorrow upon ſorrow. She hath ſorrow enough for the loſs of her Husband, with whom ſhe had lived comfortably. Now every delay put upon her puts her in mind of that loſs and makes that wound bleed afreſh. It was not thus (ſaith ſhe) when I had a Husband, then I had no need to wait, now I wait and cannot get relief in my greateſt needs. Magiſtrates ſhould be Husbands to the widow, and eſpouſe their cauſe (according to Juſtice) with tenderneſs. God charged the Princes of Iſrael, with this ſpecial defect of duty (Iſa. 1. 23.) They judg not the fatherleſs, neither doth the widows cauſe come unto them; that is, they refuſe to receive and hear the widows cauſe, they will not admit it to come before them; ſhe cannot bribe it to a hearing, and therefore it ſticks by the way, and comes not to a hearing. But though men will not judg her cauſe, yet God will (Pſal. 68. 5.) A father of the fatherleſs, a Judg of the widows is God in his holy habitation. God is ſo much the widows Judg that he is ſpoken of as if he were a Judg for none but widows. And men are ſo little in judging their cauſe, as if they did not judg the widows cauſe at all. The widows cauſe (ſaith the Prophet) doth not come before them. How greatly do they fail in duty who cauſe the eyes of the widow to fail, and who add ſorrow to their ſtate, whoſe ſtate at beſt is a ſorrowful one. This cruelty Job at once denyed and abhorred, while he ſaid, If I have cauſed the eyes of the widow to fail. He proceeds to a further teſtimony of his tenderneſs to the poor in the words which follow.

Verſ. 17. Or have eaten my morſel my ſelf alone, and the fatherleſs hath not eaten thereof.

In this verſe Job ſhews both his charity, and his hoſpitality, charity may be exerciſed without doors, but hoſpitality is exerciſed within doors. And that hoſpitality is beſt which is alſo an act of charity; Job's was ſuch, He did not eat his morſelf himſelf alone, there was hoſpitality, and his gueſts were not, or not they only, his rich and wealthy Neighbours, but the fatherleſs, And the fatherleſs hath not eaten thereof, there was his charity.

If I have eaten my morſel my ſelf alone.

A morſel is proderly but ſo much meat as we may put into the mouth at once; by which diminutive word, a morſel or a mouth-full, the Scripture uſually ſets forth the ancient entertainments, which were as frugal as they were hearty. When Abraham invited thoſe three men, who indeed were Angels, and one of them (whom he called my Lord) the Lord of men and Angels, he only ſaid (Gen. 18. 5.) Reſt your ſelves under the Tree, and I will fetch a morſel of bread and comfort ye your hearts. Abraham was ſparing of his words, but not of his coſt; he invited them to a morſel, but provided them cakes made of three meaſures of fine meal, and a Calf tender and good with butter and milk; you may read his bill of fare (verſ. 6, 7, 8.) Thus Eliah when he had deſired the widow-woman to fetch him a little water (1 Kings 17, 10, 11.) As ſhe was going to fetch it, he called to her, and ſaid, bring me I pray thee a morſel of bread in thine hand; he did not deſire a feaſt, or a full Table, but a morſel. Thus ſaith Job, I have not eaten my morſel my ſelf alone; that is, what ever good chear I had, I had it for others as well as my ſelf and my family, I had a ſpare Room and a ſpare Trencher for a friend at my Table, eſpecially for the poor and fatherleſs; theſe were my welcome gueſts, as it follows;

פת ψῶμος Fruſtum rei eſculentæ quantum bucca ſemel capere poteſt. Druſ.

And the fatherleſs have not eaten with me.

By the fatherleſs, we are not to underſtand ſtrictly, ſuch as had loſt their parents, but any in want or diſtreſs, as hath been ſhewed from the ſame expreſſion in ſeveral other paſſages of this Book. When Job relieved the hungry bellies of the poor, he did not only ſend them a portion from his Table, but he gave them a place and a portion at his Table, the poor did not only eat of his meat but ſate at meat with him, he did not diſdain to have them at his Table.

Hence Note, Firſt, Hoſpitality is a duty.

As we make proviſion for our ſelves and family, ſo (if able) we ſhould make allowance for ſtrangers alſo. When David heard that Nabal ſheared his ſheep, he ſent out ten young men to greet them in his name, and gave them inſtructions; Thus ſhall ye ſay to him that liveth in proſperity, Peace be both to thee, and peace be to thy Houſe, and peace be unto all that thou haſt, &c. Let the young men find favour in thine eyes (for we come in a good day) give I pray thee whatſoever cometh next to thy hand unto thy Servants and unto thy Son David. Had David been at his mercy he could not have ſent him a fairer meſſage. Yet this covetous churl was ſo far from ſending him a liberal preſent, that he could not give him a good word, or a civil anſwer. But preſently falls a reviling him (1 Sam. 25. 10.) Who is David? And who is the Son of Jeſſe? There be many Servants now adays that break away every man from his Maſter. Shall I then take my bread, and my water, and my fleſh, that I have killed for my ſhearers, and give it unto men, whom I know not whence they be? As if he had ſaid, Shall I feed theſe vagabonds and beggers? The man was all in his poſſeſſives, my bread, and my water, and my fleſh, that I have killed for my ſhearers; he had not a morſel to ſend David, but ſent more then a mouth-ful of bad words. This mans name was agreeable to his Nature; Nabal was his name, and folly was with him. His folly was, he would ſend nothing to ſtrangers out of his Houſe; and theirs is like his, who have nothing for ſtrangers in their Houſes. Abraham ſtood in his Tent door, and no ſooner ſaw ſtrangers paſſing by, but called them in and gave them entertainment. The Apoſtle (Heb. 13. 2.) alluding to that act of Abrahams hoſpitality, gives believers this Admonition, Forget not to entertain ſtrangers, for ſo ſome have entertained Angels unawares. We are commanded (Rom. 12. 13.) not only to diſtribute to the neceſſity of Saints, but to be given to hoſpitality. And as this is charged upon all Believers, ſo eſpecially upon the Miniſters of the Goſpel (1 Tim. 3. 2.) A Biſhop (beſides many other Qualifications there enumerated) muſt be ſober, of good behaviour, given to hoſpitality, apt to teach, not given to wine. And again (Tit. 1. 5.) He muſt not be given to filthy lucre, but he muſt be a lover of hoſpitality; a lover of good men, ſober. Yet note, as in theſe Texts the Apoſtle commends hoſpitality to the Miniſters of the Goſpel, ſo he regulates it. They muſt be given to hoſpitality, yet ſober and of good behaviour; they muſt be given to hoſpitality, yet not given to wine, nor filthy lucre; they muſt be given to hoſpitality, yet apt to teach; their hoſpitality muſt not hinder either their private ſtudies or publick labours. That hoſpitality which is inconſiſtent with ſobriety, or unfits for duty, is uncomely and ſinful in any man, much more in a Miniſter of the Goſpel. Some are given to riotous Houſe-keeping, but few are given to true hoſpitality. The former is the abhorrence of a meer Civil man, the latter is both the duty and commendation of a Godly man. Moderate feaſting of friends is love, and feeding of the poor in charity, is an ornament to the Goſpel and a fruit of Grace. As their ſin is great who laviſh out the Creature in ſurfeting and drunkenneſs, or who make proviſion for the fleſh to fulfil the luſts of it; ſo alſo is theirs who baſely ſpare the Creature and will not make proviſion either for their friends to nouriſh love, or for the poor to relieve their neceſſities.

Secondly, Conſider who were Job's gueſts? Moſtly the poor and fatherleſs, and he names them only.

Hence Obſerve, The hoſpitality of good men is chiefly deſigned for the help of the neceſſitous, the poor and the fatherleſs.

'Tis moſt acceptable to God when we feed the poor, though it be not unlawful to invite and feaſt the rich. Indeed Chriſt being invited to eat bread at the Houſe of a Phariſee, ſaid to him that bad him (Luke 14. 12, 13.) When thou makeſt a dinner, or a ſupper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinſmen, nor thy rich neighbour, leſt they alſo bid thee again, and a recompence be made thee. But when thou makeſt a feaſt, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind. This is Chriſts rule, and Job's practice anſwered it; the fatherleſs did eat with him. Yet the Scripture laſt mentioned is not an abſolutely reſtrictive command to invite the poor and none elſe; for we are commanded to uſe hoſpitality one to another without grudging (1 Pet. 4. 9.) that is, to give reciprocal entertainments; he doth not only ſay uſe hoſpitality, but uſe it one to another, or mutually, which cannot be underſtood of entertaining the poor only; for they are not able to invite their inviters. Therefore as when the Lord ſaith (Hoſ. 6. 6.) I deſired mercy and not ſacrifice; he doth not prohibit ſacrifice, that is, outward performance of duties, or the performance of outward duties, but ſhews that he is more and rather pleaſed with mercy then with ſacrifice, or that ſacrifice without mercy doth not pleaſe him at all. So when Chriſt ſaith call the poor not the rich to thy Table, he doth not forbid the bidding of the rich, but chargeth us rather to bid the poor, and if we have not enough for both, then, what we have to ſpare muſt be for thoſe who have nothing, not for thoſe who have enough already. We muſt prefer the doing of charities, before the doing of courteſies. It is recorded by Mr. Fox in the Book of Martyrs, concerning that eminent Servant and Witneſs of Jeſus Chriſt John Hooper Biſhop of Worceſter, that he kept a conſtant Table for the poor, or his Board of Beggars, who were daily ſerved with whole and wholeſome meats, before himſelf ſate down to dinner. There are great Houſe-keepers who are not good Houſe-keepers, becauſe their Houſekeeping is for the great not for the good, not for the houſehold of faith, eſpecially not for the poor of that houſe-hold. Bleſſed are thoſe feaſt-makers, who make the bowels of the hungry to bleſs them. Solomon's good direction falls in with this good practice, as ſome expound it (Eccl. 11. 1.) Caſt thy bread upon the water, that is, upon the poor, or upon thoſe to whom thou haſt no more expectation to receive any thing again, then thou canſt rationally expect thy bread again when thou haſt caſt it upon the water, or that thou ſhouldeſt reap a plentiful Harveſt of that ſeed which thou haſt caſt upon the waves of the Sea, not into the furrows of the Earth. The holy Prophet aſſures us, that this feeding of the poor is more acceptable from God then our own abſtaining from food (Iſa. 58. 6, 7.) This is the faſt that I have choſen, that thou deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are caſt out to thy Houſe. When thou ſeeſt the naked, that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thy ſelf from thine own fleſh. This is the Lords faſt, and the Lord accounts no faſt holy, but when 'tis followed with ſuch a feaſt; and therefore that cuſtom in the Churches of making a Collection for the poor in the cloſe of a day of faſt and ſolemn humiliation, is not to be reckoned a formality, but an eſſential part of that great and important duty. To comfort and refreſh the bodies of the afflicted, is as pleaſing to God, as the afflicting of our own Souls. 'Tis ſad to ſee the poor neglected at any time, but eſpecially at that time. And 'tis as ſad to ſee how the practice of moſt, at all times, runs quite contrary or croſs to the rule of Chriſt given us in the Goſpel, that ſaith, Invite not thy brethren, nor the rich, but the poor; whereas uſually the rich are invited and not the poor. And whereas (in ſpirituals) God fills the hungry with good things, but ſends the rich empty away; moſt men (as to corporals) fill the rich with their good things, with the fat and the ſweet, but ſend the poor either quite empty away, or only a little relieved (to keep them from ſtarving) with the refuſe of their Table. Which latter practice is alſo reproved by the practice of Job in this Text.

For, ſaith he, If I have eaten my morſel my ſelf alone, and the fatherleſs hath not eaten thereof.

Hence Note, A good man will give the poor ſuch things as are good, to eat, yea ſometimes as good as he eats himſelf: He doth not think it below him, that they ſhould eat with him, and of what he himſelf eats.

Job did not put off the poor with ſcraps only (though I do not ſay 'tis ſinful to give broken meat to the poor) yet 'tis plain he did not put off the poor with ſuch poor reliefs, nor ſhould we. Some think any thing they have, the worſt they have, good enough for thoſe who have nothing. But as Chriſt ſaith concerning ſpiritual bread (Matth. 15. 26.) It is not meet to take the Childrens bread, and to caſt it to Dogs; So I may ſay in reference to material bread; It is not good to take Dogs bread, and to give it to the Children; that is, to give corrupt or unſavory bread and meat to the poor. The beſt which we have is but given us, or indeed lent to us, and therefore what we give to the poor ſhould be good, eſpecially ſeeing what is given to the poor, is lent to the Lord, from whoſe hand we receive all our riches. And ſhould we lend baſe money, or mouldy bread to the Lord? Again, when we feed the godly poor, we feed Chriſt himſelf (Matth. 25. 35, 40.) and ſhall we not feed Chriſt our Lord and Maſter with that which is good? Alms is a ſacrifice (Heb. 13. 16.) Now as the Lord did highly diſguſt it and took it very ill at the hands of the Jews, when they offered the blind, and lame, and ſick for ſacrifices; Is it not evil (ſaith the Lord, Mal. 1. 8.) Offer it now unto thy Governour, will he be pleaſed with thee, or accept thy perſon? Yea he adds (v. 14.) Curſed be the Deceiver that hath in his flock a male, and voweth and ſacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing; for I am a great King, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts. Now, I ſay, as the Lord took it ill, when the proper ſacrifices were of corrupt things; ſo he will not take it well when theſe metaphorical ſacrifices are no better. Indeed if we have no better, if we have but a cup of cold water only to give, we (giving it to one of thoſe little ones in the name of a Diſciple) ſhall not loſe our reward (Matth. 10. 42.) But the deceiver is curſed who giveth that which is bad, when he hath good or better to give. There is (I know) a great fault among ſome poor, they will ſcarce be contented with any thing but what is fine, and of the beſt; when they have had good wholeſom food give them, they will throw it behind the door, or upon the dunghil. There is a fault alſo among ſome rich men, who give that to the poor which is fitter for the dunghil, then for the body of man.

Illud non ſolum charitatis ſed urbanitatis etiam et inſignis animi demiſſionis et modeſtiæ eſt, Quod Buccellam dicit, cum ingentibus beneficiis et minimè parco victu de orphanis bene mereretur. Pined. Cum Lacedemonianii Smyrnæis egentibus ingentē commeatum miſiſſent, Nihil magni eſt (inquiunt) hæc enim collegimus unius diei prandio nobis et jumentis detracto. Plutarch.

Laſtly, Job ſpeaks not here of any feaſt he made the poor, but only of a morſel, I have not eaten my morſel my ſelf alone, yet doubtleſs he had plenty at his Table, and did (as the Lord doth the rich) even load the poor with his benefits and beneficences daily.

Hence Note, A gracious heart counts that but a little that he hath done and given.

He ſaith not I have made the poor a feaſt, but I have given them a morſel; nothing makes our charity greater in the eye of God, then when 'tis little in our own; when we call a feaſt a morſel, and a full dinner a bit. Plutarch ſaith, that the Lacedemonians gave not only a charity, but a liberality and a bounty to the diſtreſſed Smyrnians; they ſent them a very full ſupply, yet gave their Meſſengers inſtruction to tell them, that they had only ſpared them a meals-meat from themſelves, and a foddering from their Cattel. As it was the ingenuity of that Heathen people to put a ſmall value upon a great benefit; ſo alſo it is the piety of Chriſtians to do ſo; as they ſhould not at all blow a Trumpet, or ſpeak much of what they give; ſo they ſhould not think it much; as this is the ſin of ſome, they think much (as we ſay, that is, they grudg) to give any thing; ſo the ſin of others is this, they think what they have given to be much. The leſs we eſteem our good deeds, the more God eſteems them; the lower our charity is rated in our own Book, the higher it is in Gods Book; we ſhall not need to fear our works ſhall not be enough rewarded, unleſs we ſay much or the moſt of them; if any thing bring them a low reward from God, our over-rating them will. Job having thus ſhewed the openneſs of his heart and hand and houſe for the free entertainment of the poor and fatherleſs, gives us an account of the time how long or ſince when he had grown into this neerneſs of a gracious and diſcreet familiarity and freedom with them, in the next words.

Verſ. 18. For from my youth he was brought up with me as with a father, and I have guided her from my mothers womb.

Quia ab infantia mea crevit mecū miſeratio, et ab utero matris meæ deduci eam. Vulg. Videtur legiſſe כאב dolor. Druſ.

There is another reading of theſe words, which I ſhall ſpeak a little to before I open our own. 'Tis that of the vulgar Latine, which tranſlates Job's Text thus.

For from my youth compaſſion did grow up with me, and I did bring her up even from my mothers womb.

Theſe words which we render, as a father, conſiſting of a particle of likeneſs, and Ab, ſignifying a father, ſome conjoin into one word ſignifying ſorrow or grief of mind, ariſing either from our own troubles and ſufferings, or from the ſufferings and troubles of others, which we properly call compaſſion. From my youth, compaſſion (or trouble of mind for the troubles of others) did grow up with me. The mind of this reading is to ſhew the connaturalneſs of Job's practice with his Spirit; as if he had ſaid, I have not been forced, or unwillingly drawn to this courſe of charity; but have been moved to it by an inward principle, and as naturally, as it is natural for a Hound to hunt his prey, for a Bird to fly in the air, or for a Stone to fall down-ward to the Earth. I have an intrinſecal tendency to this great duty, and am led, not driven to it. Not that it was natural to him, in oppoſition to that which is by grace; but it became connatural to him by grace. Job knew that as he had his being from God, ſo much more his gracious being. He did not make himſelf in his mothers womb, much leſs did he make himſelf merciful in his mothesr womb. That was a ſpecial work of God upon him, framing his heart to ſuch works from the womb. He attributes nothing to himſelf but all to God; for as he knew he was not made man in the womb by his own power, ſo he knew he was much leſs made a good man from the womb by any power of his own. This tranſlation thus expounded carrieth a pious ſence.

Jobo naturalis videtur fuiſſe miſericordia, à qua ſe ad levandas miſerorum ærumnas impellebatur intrinſecus, ſicut ad venandum Canis, &c. Sanct.

Conſtat quia ſuæ virtuti nihil tribuit, qui profecto teſtatur, quod hoc ipſum conditoris munere accepit. Quia ſicut ſuo opere in utero conditus non fuit; ita nec ſua virtute ab utero pius fuit. Gregor. lib. 21. cap. 12.

But moſt of the learned Hebricians render the Text as we do; For from my youth he was brought up with me; he? Who was that? the fatherleſs.

And I have guided her from my mothers womb; her? who was that? The widow. So that Job gives an account of his charitable practice, as that which he had not lately taken up, but was long accuſtomed to;

For from my youth he was brought up with me.

As if he had ſaid: No ſooner was I able to look or ſtep into the World, but I became a friend to the fatherleſs, and a patron and protector of the poor. I quickly or very early took notice of their condition, laid it to heart, and gave them my beſt aſſiſtance. The word which we render, He was brought up with me (for theſe words are there knit up in one) ſignifies to grow and wax great, or to be great. Indeed the poor (as we ſay in our language of an inward boſom friend) were great with Job, when he was greateſt. And he as a father brought up the poor, when himſelf was young, or before he was a father.

à גדל גדלני Magnus fuit, crevit, adolevit, nutritus enutritus fuit, pueri enim dum nutriuntur augmentum capiunt.

Hence Note, Grace works betimes in ſome.

As there is a ſeed of ſin and corruption in all Children, ſo we may ſee the fruits of the Spirit in ſome Children.

From my youth, he was brought up with me.

The Apoſtle Paul ſaith of Timothy (1 Tim. 3. 5.) From a Child thou haſt known the holy Scriptures. His firſt acquaintance was an acquaintance with God in his word. How ſweet is it to ſee vertue bloſſoming when nature doth? And the puttings forth of faith contemporary with the firſt puttings forth of reaſon; or to ſee thoſe acting ſpiritually, who have but begun to act rationally. The Lord ſhould have our firſt fruits, yea as the old Law commanded, our firſt firſt fruits; they are bleſſed who remember their Creator indeed in any of their days, but 'tis our duty to remember him in the days our youth, and to dedicate our firſt firſt fruits unto him. And though ſome are afraid to preſs good things upon their Children, leſt they ſhould over-burden them; yet Solomon a wiſer then they, yea the Spirit of God, a wiſer then Solomon gives us better advice. (Prov. 22. 6.) Train up a Child in the way he ſhould go, and when he is old he will not depart from it. Though ſome Children have gone out of the way in which they were trained, and their golden youth hath concluded in an Iron old age; which poſſibly gave occaſion to that reproaching Proverb, A young Saint, an old Devil: Yet of this we are ſure, that few who continue in the Devils power til they are old, become Saints. And there is no more reaſon to ſtop any from training up a child in the way he ſhould go for fear he hold not on to old age, then there is to ſet a Traveller in his right way in the morning for fear he ſhould miſs his way before night. Uſually they who begin well, end well, and they who begin in true grace, ſhall certainly continue in it, and end in Glory. A Heathen ſaid, 'Tis a great matter to accuſtom any one from his youth to any thing. And another, That ſent with which a new Cask is ſeaſoned, and ſo thoſe principles with which a Child is influenced, holds long. Cuſtom hath a great power whether in good or evil. Thus they ſpeak in Nature; and 'tis

A teneris aſſueſcere multum eſt. Quo ſemel eſt imbuta recens ſervabit odorem teſta diu.

'tis moſt true in grace; that tincture of true holineſs which the Soul receives, though never ſo early, abides for ever. The Prophet ſaith (Lam. 3.27.) It is good for a man to bear the yoke in his youth; What yoke? There is a twofold yoke; firſt, the yoke of ſuffering; ſecondly, the yoke of doing: He there ſpeaks of the yoke of ſuffering; but it is as true of the yoke of doing; it is good for a man to bear that yoke in his youth. Some have never met with a croſs in their youth, and how doth it trouble them to meet with it in their old age? Many have never done good in their youth, and how reprobate are they in their old age to every good work!

Caput rei eſt, hoc vel illo modo hominem aſſueſieri. Ariſt. l. 2. Eth. cap. 1.

Secondly, Obſerve, A gracious heart is full of compaſſion to thoſe that are in want.

They who have experienced the compaſſions of God to themſelves (as every gracious Soul hath) cannot but be moved with compaſſion to others. Compaſſion to and upon a right object, is an eminent act of grace. We carry a great burthen upon our ſelves, when we bear compaſſion to others. As we partake with others in the good things they enjoy by rejoycing with them; ſo we partake with others in the evils which they ſuffer by compaſſionating them. When the Apoſtle Paul had reckoned up his ſufferings or paſſions (2 Cor. 11.24. &c.) Of the Jews five times received I forty ſtripes ſave one, &c. In wearineſs, in painfulneſs, in watchings often, in hunger and thirſt, in faſtings often, in cold and nakedneſs: Having, I ſay, thus ſpoken of his perſonal paſſions; he preſently reports the heavy burdens of compaſſion which lay upon him (v. 28, 29.) Beſides thoſe things which are without (ſaith he) that which cometh upon me dayly, the care of all the Churches; who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not? As if he had ſaid, whatſoever the afflictions or infirmities of others are, I have my ſhare with them. And as it is the ſupport and comfort of the whole Church, as alſo of every believer, to remember that Jeſus Chriſt bears their burthen with them, that he ſuffers with them now, as once he ſuffered for them (we may indeed ſay of Jeſus Chriſt, that all the poor and afflicted Saints, that ever were, are, or ſhall be in the World; have been brought up with him as a father, and he hath had compaſſion of them in meaſure, now (I ſay) as it is the joy of all ſuffering Saints, that they are brought up with Chriſt as with a father) ſo it is a great ſtay and comfort to ſuffering Saints, that their fellow-Brethren are affected with their condition, and take compaſſion of them.

Non eſt mediocris in adverſitate conſolatio quod ex cõmunione ſanctorum certi ſumus in afflictionibus noſtris totã eccleſiam imo et Chriſtum nobiſcum pati. Brent.

Again, In that Job ſaith, From my youth he was brought up with me,

Note, A gracious heart perſeveres in doing good.

Job doth not ſay he did it in his youth only, but from his youth; ſome have great appearances of goodneſs in their youth, but goodneſs doth not grow up with them; yea as they grow their appearances of goodneſs decay, and wither, and come to nothing. I ſay, their appearances of goodneſs, for (as was toucht before) we cannot be too confident of the earlieſt appearances of real goodneſs. As Job began in his youth, ſo he continued, and grew up in this ſpirit, principle and practice all his days.

Fourthly, In that Job ſaith, He was brought up with me as with a father from my youth.

Obſerve, A gracious heart hath a fatherly reſpect to the fatherleſs.

He not only doth for them as a friend, but as a father; or he hath not only a reſpect to them but a fatherly reſpect. The heart and ſpirit with which we do a thing, is, more then the thing we do; can you do good as a father? You may do good as a man, but can you do good as a father? To do ſo is moſt pleaſant to God our father, who as he doth good, ſo he doth good as a father. Thus we read (Pſal. 68.5.) A father of the fatherleſs, and a Judg of the widows is God in his holy habitation. And if God be a father to the fatherleſs, doubtleſs he acts with the heart and in the ſpirit of a father toward them; and ſo ſhould we. Further as Job was like a father to the fatherleſs, ſo he was a Counſeller to the widow, as he ſhews in the cloſe of this verſe.

And I have guided her from my mothers womb.

That is, the widow; how did Job guide her? With his counſel and advice; guides ſhew the right way; that's the buſineſs of a guide, Job was the widows guide, not to ſhew her the way to this or that place, but to ſhew her the way of this or that buſineſs, and to help her out of this or that diſtreſs. When ſhe poor Creature was intangled, and in a maze, not knowing what to do, or which way to ſet a ſtep forward in her affairs, then he directed her. And (ſaith he) I have been a guide to her

Dux ei fui non tam Itineris quam rerum agendarum. Druſ. Ducebam, i. e. dirigebam ejus negotia. Merc.

From my mothers womb.] This is a high or hyperbolical ſpeech, importing that he had been both early and conſtantly the widows guide. As the fatherleſs were brought up with him as with a father, ſo he had been the widows guide from his mothers womb.

Hence Note, To give good counſel and inſtruction to the ignorant, is a work of great mercy, even as great a work of mercy as to give bread to the hungry, or cloathing to the naked.

We may do a diſtreſſed widow as good a turn by opening our mouths to her, as by opening our purſes to her. Good counſel is a good Alms; and though the Apoſtle reproves thoſe who give no Alms but in words (James 2. 15, 16.) If a Brother or a Siſter be naked, and deſtitute of daily food, and one of you ſay unto him, depart in peace, be you warmed and filled: Notwithſtanding ye give them not thoſe things which are needful to the Body, what doth it profit? Bare words will not ſatisfie hunger, nor will they make a covering for the naked; yet words may procure bread for the hungry, and cloathing for the naked; and in many caſes we may relieve the neceſſities of others with our tongues as well as with our hands. It is a great mercy in God, to guide man (Pſal. 32. 8.) I will inſtruct thee and teach thee in the way that thou ſhalt go; I will guide thee with mine eye. And ſo the promiſe runs in the Prophet (Iſa. 58. 11.) I will guide thee continually. Now as it is a great favour from God to good men, to guide them in their way (the way of man is not in himſelf, (Jer. 10.23.) ſo it is a great favour from man to man, eſpecially to a poor man, moſt of all a poor widow, to guide and direct her in her way, to ſhew her what courſe ſhe muſt ſteer and take for the right ending of any intricate buſineſs, or for the attainment of her righteous ends. And if to guide others in civil and outward affairs and concernments be a great charity, then how great a charity is it to guide poor Souls in ſpirituals, and ſhew them their way Heaven-ward? To give anſwer to that queſtion, what ſhall I do to be ſaved? Or to thoſe, how have I walked to all well-pleaſing? How may I keep my Conſcience in all my ways without offence toward God and toward man? to anſwer theſe queſtions, to give counſel in and reſolve theſe caſes is (I ſay) the beſt charity in the World, infinitely better (which yet muſt not be neglected) then all worldly charities. Soul-guides are the moſt uſeful and neceſſary guides; and doubtleſs Job was well skill'd and practiſed in this ſort of guiding as well as in the other; for ſo Eliphaz doth at once upbraid him, and inform us (Chap. 4. 3, 4.) Behold thou haſt inſtructed many, and thou haſt ſtrengthned the weak hands, thy words have upholden him that was falling, and thou haſt ſtrengthned the feeble knees. Job had been every way a guide, and he had always been the widows guide; I (ſaith he) have guided her from my mothers womb.

Laſtly, Note, A godly man is not ſatisfied with doing good once or twice, in a little matter, or for a little while, but he would do good in all matters and always (as Job did it) even from his mothers womb.

To ſin or do evil once or at any time is too much and too often, becauſe we ought not to ſin or do evil at all; but as we cannot do good too often, ſo unleſs we do it often, it will be to us as if we had not done it at all, becauſe we ought to do it always, Some who began late to do good, have been accepted and rewarded, but how ſoon ſoever we begin to do it, we ſhall neither be accepted nor rewarded, if we ceaſe or give over doing it. How much are they miſtaken, who if they have done a poor Soul good once, think themſelves diſcharged for ever from doing any more? Once in their days, they think enough for all their days: Yea they will repeat and report what they have done, as an argument why they ſhould do no more. He did good from Deſign not from Nature (I mean renewed Nature) who ſaith, he hath done enough, and will do no more, when 'tis in the power of his hand to do more. He that is good, will according to his ability and opportunity, according to time and talent, do good once and again, more and more, often and ever, As he that ſate on the white Horſe (Rev. 6. 2.) went forth conquering and to conquer, that is, with a purpoſe never to leave conquering while there was an enemy to conquer; ſo a good man goes forth doing and to do good, as long as there remains any good undone which he can and is called to do.

VERS. 19, 20, 21.

If I have ſeen any periſh for want of Clothing, or any poor without Covering.

If his loins have not bleſſed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my ſheep.

If I have lift up my hand againſt the fatherleſs, when I ſaw my help in the gate.

JOB proceeds in the vindication of his charity toward the poor, his failing in that point of duty having been objected againſt him in the 22. Chapter, that he had hardened his heart and ſhut up all bowels of compaſſion to thoſe who were in diſtreſs; yea that he had not only not ſupplyed their wants, but taken what they had from thoſe that wanted (verſ. 6.) Thou haſt ſtripped the naked of their cloathing. And therefore as in the former Context, he denyed that he had with-held the poor from their deſire, or had cauſed the eyes of the widow to fail, ſo in theſe words he affirms that he had been ſo far from ſtripping the naked of their clothing, that he had Clothed and Covered them.

Verſ. 19. If I have ſeen any periſh for want of Clothing.

The eye affects the heart, Job's eye did ſo much affect his heart when he ſaw the naked, that he could not but put forth his hand to put a covering upon them: His own Cloths did not ſit eaſie, nor keep him warm, while he ſaw the poor cold and naked.

Si deſpexi pereuntem, &c. Vulg.

The vulgar Latine reads the Text, If I have deſpiſed him that was ready to periſh for want of Clothing. As we are apt (ſo the Apoſtle James tells us, Chap. 2. 2, 3.) to have reſpect to a man with a gold ring, that wears goodly apparel, or gay clothing; ſo a man in brave and rich apparel, is apt to deſpiſe the poor in rags. This verſion carries a clear ſence, but our own is clearer to the letter of the Text. If I have ſeen

Any periſh for want of Clothing.

That is, ready to ſtarve and die with cold and nakedneſs; Job doth not ſay, if I have ſeen any want gay Cloths (which are often but flags of vanity) he did not ſupply the pride of any, but the neceſſities of all. Charity is diſcreet as well as pitiful, and as it is ready to relieve the wants, ſo it will not nouriſh wantonneſs in any. They were periſhing perſons, not vain nor proud perſons whom Job's charity clothed. If I (ſaith he) have ſeen any periſh for want of clothing.

Hence Note, Firſt, Dying is periſhing.

Thus the Prophet phraſeth it (Iſa. 57. 1.) The righteous periſh and no man layeth it to heart. Death is not a periſhing as to our future eternal being, but as to our preſent temporal being: Natural death is our periſhing to all worldly comforts; eternal death is our periſhing to all comforts. The worſt death and the worſt of death is but the periſhing of our comfortable being, not of our being.

Secondly, Periſhing is here ſuppoſed the effect of want.

Hence Obſerve, Nakedneſs or want of Clothing, is a killing want.

The body cannot bear nakedneſs long and live: The body can no more bear the want of Clothing, then it can bear the want of bread; cold kil's as well as hunger. See in this, the bitter fruits of ſin: It is ſaid (Gen. 2. 25.) The man and his wife were both naked, and were not aſhamed. There was no matter of ſhame in nakedneſs, when there was no matter of ſin in it. And as man was not aſhamed, ſo he was not cold by reaſon of his nakedneſs, the air was not then injurious nor afflictive to his body; whereas now Clothing ſerves not only to hide ſhame, but to keep us from periſhing. There are two great uſes of Clothing; firſt, to cover our nakedneſs; ſecondly, to preſerve our lives: As death is an uncloathing, ſo we die if we are not Clothed. And here let me mind you, in a ſpiritual ſence, of another Clothing, which if we want we muſt indeed periſh, and periſh for ever; O how many are there that are ready to periſh for want of that Clothing! What's that? Why, it is Chriſt, they that are not clothed with him ſhall periſh eternally, not only in Body, but in Soul (Rom. 13. 14.) Put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Cloth your ſelves with him; Chriſt is our ſpiritual Clothing: Firſt, in his righteouſneſs to juſtifie us; ſo he is our Clothing to cover our ſin-guiltineſs; ſecondly, in his graces to ſanctifie us; ſo he is our Clothing not properly to cover, but to cleanſe us from our ſin-filthineſs and pollution. (Eph. 4. 24.) Put on the new man; that is, Chriſt in his Graces, or the Graces of Jeſus Chriſt. (Coloſ. 3. 12.) Put on as the elect of God bowels of mercy, loving kindneſs, humility, &c. Here's Clothing indeed; and remember how much ſoever you are Clothed, you will periſh for want of Clothing, unleſs you be Clothed with Chriſt, both to Juſtifie and to Sanctifie you. Remember that warning of Chriſt to the Church of Laodicea (Rev. 3. 18.) I counſel thee to buy of me Gold tryed in the fire, that thou mayeſt be rich, and white Raiment that thou mayeſt be Clothed. If I (ſaith Job) have ſeen any periſh for want of Clothing;

Or any poor without covering.

Conſider both in this and the former part of the verſe how univerſally Job ſpeaks; he doth not ſay, if I have ſeen this or that man periſh for want of Clothing, but, If I have ſeen any periſh for want of Clothing, or any poor without Covering.

Again, Whereas Job ſaid before, If I have ſeen any periſh for want of Clothing; he ſaith here, if I have ſeen any poor without Covering: Though they were not ready to periſh for want, yet if they being poor wanted, or were without a covering, he gave them wherewithal to cover them. And poſſibly, this covering in the latter part of the verſe may be extended further then clothing in the former part of it. A Houſe is a covering as well as a Garment. And the poor many times are naked not only of cloths, but of Houſes, they have not a Houſe, nor a hole in a Houſe to hide their heads. We may well ſuppoſe Job's charity ſo large, that when he ſaw the poor want any thing needful for them, whether clothing or houſing to cover them, he provided for them, and did not ſuffer them to be naked, either clothleſs or harborleſs; he did not let them lie in the ſtreets or open air, but gave them convenient ſhelter from the injury of the weather. Chriſt, who endured more then all afflictions for our ſakes, endured this alſo in particular. The Foxes have holes (ſaith he, Matth. 8. 20.) and the Birds have neſts, but the Son of man hath not whereon to lay his head. Chriſt was poor without this covering: And ſo are many poor at this day, who find not a Job to give them a covering.

כסות Operimentū à כסה texit operuit.

Further, The root of the word here uſed for a covering, is applied in Scripture to the pardon of ſin, (Pſal. 32. 1.) Bleſſed is the man whoſe iniquity is forgiven, and whoſe ſin is covered. When ſin is pardoned 'tis covered, God ſees it no more with a vindictive eye. Excuſes are Garments of our own making to cover ſin; woe unto thoſe whoſe ſins are thus covered. Pardon is a Garment of Gods providing and making to cover ſin with, bleſſed are they whoſe ſins are thus covered. Thoſe poor who are without a covering for their Bodys, are to be pitied, but with what tears ſhould we lament thoſe (how rich ſoever they are in this World) who are without a covering for their Souls! And ſo ſtand naked in the ſtorms and under thoſe dreadful droppings of the wrath of God. But to the ſcope of the Text, Firſt, In that Job ſaith not only, If I have ſeen any periſh, but, if I have ſeen any poor without covering.

Obſerve, We ought not only to help the poor againſt deſtroying and killing wants, but even againſt pinching and afflicting wants.

What though the poor be not quite ſtarved with cold and hunger, yet if they are ſo preſſed with theſe wants, that their lives are made altogether uncomfortable, and as it were a continual death, our neglect of them is inexcuſable. As God gives the rich not only enough for their neceſſities, but for their moderate delight; ſo the rich ſhould at leaſt give to or provide for the poor enough to ſatisfie their neceſſities, and fit them for the duties of this life.

Secondly, As to the particular charities here Inſtanced in.

Note, To cloath the naked, to provide covering for the harborleſs, are ſpecial remarkable acts of Charity.

The latter of theſe acts of charity is reckon'd up among many acts of righteouſneſs (Ezek. 18. 7.) If a man be juſt, &c. If he hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a Garment. We have both put into the deſcription of a true faſt (Iſa. 58. 7.) Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are caſt out to thy houſe; when thou ſeeſt the naked that thou cover him. Jeſus Chriſt will ſay to the ſheep on his right hand in that great day, I was a ſtranger and ye took me in, I was naked and ye clothed me: And (ver. 43,) he will ſay to the Goats on his left hand, I was a ſtranger and ye took me not in, naked and ye clothed me not. When Dorcas died the widows ſhewed the Coats and Garments which ſhe had made while ſhe was with them (Acts 9. 39.) What Coats were theſe? And for whom? They were Coats for the poor and needy; ſhe did not ſpend her time and eſtate in making rich apparel for her ſelf, but convenient Coats for the poor; and it ſeems ſhe had a ſtore of them ready made as the needs of the poor appeared. That good Woman was full of charity, and as charity will cover a Multitude of ſins (1 Pet. 4. 8) that is, it will not ſtrictly take notice of, but in ſilence paſs by the faults and failings of many when they are againſt our ſelves eſpecially (as charity, I ſay, thus covers a multitude of ſins, which are the ſpiritual nakedneſs of others) ſo it will cover the bodily nakedneſs of as many as it can; and provokes us rather to have but few cloaths our ſelves, then that the poor ſhould have none. When the people (Luke 3. 10, 11.) ſaid to John Baptiſt, What ſhall we do? He anſwered and ſaid unto them, He that hath two Coats let him impart to him that hath none, and he that hath meat do the like. How unbecoming is it that any ſhould have not only Food and Rayment, but full Tables and wardrobes, variety of meats and many changes of apparel, and yet ſee the poor ſtarve and go naked! Yet ſome let their old Clothes lie by them till they are moth-eaten, while others are naked, and ſuffer time to wear them out rather then the poor. The Apoſtle James ſaith (Chap. 5. 1, 2.) Go to now ye rich men, weep and howl for the miſeries that ſhall come upon you, your riches are corrupt, and your Garments Moth-eaten; you make ſo many for your ſelves, that you cannot wear them out, only the moths eat them out, and yet you make none for the poor, nor will you let the poor have any of them which you have made, the Moths ſhall have them firſt. The ſame Apoſtle (Chap. 2. 15, 16.) ſhews us with what cold Garments ſome cloath the naked, and cover the poor, even with a few good words and wiſhes, that's thin clothing indeed, and very cheap; yet they who cloath the poor only with complements, with breath and air, will find it very coſtly to them, when Chriſt ſhall ſay, I was naked and ye cloathed me not, depart from me. Let them who will not give the poor any but thoſe cold coverings of words, tremble to think what cold comfort thoſe words will be unto them. They will pay dear for it at laſt, who now think it good huſbandry to ſpare their purſes, and beſtow as little coſt as they can, or none at all (willingly) upon the poor; Job did cloath or cover them with good words (which is more then ſome beſtow upon them, yea ſome cover them with bad words, with rebukes and ſcorns, with revilings and reproaches, it may be with blows; But as Job did not cover the poor with bad words, ſo he did not cover them only with good words) but where we ſaw any periſh for want of clothing, or the poor without covering, he really or with good deeds cloathed and covered them.

Thirdly, Job had before ſpoken of the exerciſe of his Charity in feeding the poor, yet that did not ſatisfie him, he alſo clothed and covered them.

Hence Obſerve, They who have ability ought to abound in all kinds of Charity.

He that is truely charitable, doth not only give bread to the hungry, but Clothing to the naked. As wants multiply, ſo his ſupplies are multiplied. It is not enough to act Charity of one ſort, or to do it in one point, we muſt be ready to act it in all. Few (I grant) have eſtates like Job, he was a man of great ſubſtance, he had many thouſands of ſheep, many hundreds of Oxen, &c. All cannot equal him, yet all muſt imitate him, and do as he did, though they cannot do as much as he. The note intends only, that every man ought to do according to his proportion, and not ſay, I have done ſuch a good work to this poor man, therefore I need do no more, I gave him bread when he was hungry, therefore I need not or at leaſt I am not bound to give him clothing for his nakedneſs. If we can expreſs our charity but once or one way, that once and one way are accepted. But how often or how many wayes ſoever we have expreſſed it, we are not accepted, if we can but will not expreſs it any more. The widow (Luke 21. 42.) gave but two mites (ſcarce enough to keep a man one day from ſtarving, much leſs to provide a man dayly food and clothing) yet Chriſt ſaith, She hath caſt in more then they all; and the reaſon was, becauſe ſhe had caſt in her all. A little from thoſe who have little, is looked upon by God as a great deal; but do not think it enough to do a little, when you have ability to do much; Charge them that be rich (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Tim. 6. 18.) that they do good, and to ſhew that it is not enough for them to do a little good, he adds, that they be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate. Do not diſcharge your ſelves you that are rich from doing again, becauſe you have once done; ſay not you need not cloath the naked, becauſe you have fed the hungry; They who think they have done enough, loſe the thanks of all they have done. For as the Apoſtle (2 Pet. 1. 6, 7.) ſpeaks of adding one grace to another, to vertue knowledge; and to knowledge patience, and to patience brotherly kindneſs, and to brotherly kindneſs charity. Now (I ſay) as we are to add the acts of ſeveral graces, ſo ſeveral acts of the ſame grace together; as you muſt add to your vertue charity, ſo you muſt add charity to charity; one way of charity to another, and one work of charity to another in the ſame way. Charity to men is the Lords work, both becauſe the Lord works it in us, and becauſe the Lord commands us that work. Now we muſt be (as the Apoſtle exhorts, 1 Cor. 15, 58.) Stedfaſt and unmoveable, alwayes abounding in the work of the Lord. To do this work of the Lord a little, is far from abounding in it, and to do it once or twice, is as far from doing it alwayes. We never abound in any work of the Lord, if we ſet our ſelves any other bounds in doing it, then the Lord hath ſet us. The bounds which the Lord hath ſet us are only theſe two; firſt, As we have opportunity (Gal. 6. 10.) Secondly, As we have ability (2 Cor. 16. 2.) We muſt alwayes relieve the wants of others as we are able, and ſometimes (as it was with the Churches of Macedonia, 2 Cor. 8. 2, 3.) above what we are able.

Fourthly, Job doth not ſay, if I have ſeen this or that man periſh, or this or that man without covering, but, if I have ſeen any periſh, any without covering: As he was exerciſed in all ſorts of charity, ſo his charity was exerciſed towards all ſorts of perſons; As he did not excuſe himſelf from clothing the naked, becauſe he fed the hungry; ſo he did not excuſe himſelf from feeding and clothing this poor and naked man, becauſe he had fed and clothed that or another. 'Tis our duty (ſo far as we are able) not to ſee any want, not to ſee any periſh for cold or hunger, both good and bad muſt be kept alive; we muſt act the grace of charity toward them who have not the grace of faith. The Scripture is plain, (Gal. 6. 10.) As we have opportunity, let us do good to all, eſpecially unto them who are of the houſhold of faith; We muſt put a difference between men upon whom we beſtow our charity, but we muſt not reſtrain it from any men, let them be what they will, they muſt have relief as men; Though they differ from us in religion, yea though they are irreligious, yet ſomewhat muſt be done for them if they are in want. Though all men have not the renewed Image of God, yet all men, even the worſt of men, have ſomewhat of his Image. Though all men have not received Grace, yet all have received the ſame common nature. Again, we muſt do to others as we would they ſhould do to us. There is no godly man, who if he ſhould fall into extream diſtreſs, but would be glad to receive help and relief, though at the hand of a wicked man, and therefore the godly ought to do good to the wicked in their diſtreſs. Beſides, the hardning of our hearts againſt them that are wicked, may harden them in their wickedneſs, and bring a ſcandal upon the profeſſion of Religion. God himſelf hath given us his own example to do ſo (Matth. 5. 44, 45.) Do good to them that hate you, that ye may be the Children of your Father in Heaven (that is, that you may evidence and declare your ſelves to be ſo) for he maketh his Sun to riſe on the evil and on the good; and ſendeth rain on the juſt and on the unjuſt. Holy Job was of this Goſpel-ſpirit, though he lived long before the height of Goſpel-times; he would not ſee any periſh for want of cloathing, nor any poor without covering. Charity is never compleat, nor full handed till we do all acts of charity, and act charity unto all, in one degree or other; If I have ſeen any periſh for want of cloathing, &c.

Verſe 20. If his loins have not bleſſed me, if he were not warmed with the fleece of my Sheep.

To bleſs, as mans act, is to wiſh or pray for a bleſſing. Man cannot bleſs man but by wiſhing him well, or praying for a bleſſing upon him. 'Tis God who bleſſeth man by beſtowing a bleſſing upon him; if he do but pronounce a bleſſing upon us, we are certainly bleſſed. Man ſometime bleſſeth thoſe whom God abhorreth (Pſal. 10. 3.) and often abhorreth thoſe whom God bleſſeth. To bleſs unerringly and effectually is only in the power, or 'tis the prerogative of God alone.

But why is it ſaid here, If his loins have not bleſſed me? Are our loins the inſtruments of bleſſing? I anſwer, Firſt, Some take the words figuratively, as if Job had ſaid, If there had been a tongue in the poor mans loins, had his loins been vocal, he would have ſpoken a bleſſing with his loins. We find frequently in Scripture ſpeech aſcribed to ſpeechleſs things, to things which have no power of ſpeaking. Thus Chriſt rebukes the envious importunity of the Phariſees for the ſilencing of his Diſciples, who cryed Hoſanna, bleſſed be the King that cometh in the Name of the Lord (Luke 19. 40.) I tell you, that if theſe ſhould hold their peace, the ſtones would immediately cry out.

Secondly, Rather the loins are here put ſynecdochically for the perſon, If his loins have not bleſſed me; that is, if the poor whoſe loins I covered have not bleſſed me. 'Tis uſual in Scripture to put a part for the whole, and a member moſt concerned for the man. Here Job repreſents the poor mans acknowledgment or thanks, becauſe his loins were cloathed and warmed with the fleece of his Sheep.

Thirdly, Which further heightens the ſenſe, when Job ſaith, If his loins have not bleſſed me: It may imply the ſtrong, hearty, and affectionate deſires of the poor for a bleſſing upon Job: As if he had ſaid, The poor man bleſſed me with all his might, and ſtrength. The ſtrength of a man (as it is ſaid of Behemoth, Job 40. 16.) is in his loins. And therefore as a man is ſaid to do that with his heart which he doth very ſincerely; or to do that with his ſoul which he doth very affectionately; ſo a man is ſaid to do that with his loins wherein he puts forth his ſtrength to the utmoſt. The loins are the ſeat of ſtrength; and hence among the Latines, a weak man is thus expreſſed, A man without loins. And in Scripture to have our loins girt, is to do a thing with readineſs and with all our might (Luke 12. 35.) ſo here, If his loins did not bleſs me; as, if he did not bleſs me feelingly and ſtrongly.

Fourthly, (If his loins have not bleſſed me) may ſignifie, that Job's work of charity in clothing the naked, did it ſelf (as it were) ſpeak for, or beſpeak a bleſſing at the hand of God for him. As the blood of Abel is ſaid to cry to the Lord for a curſe or for vengeance upon his brother Cain (murder is ſo foul and ſo unnatural a work, that though none complain of it, yet it will cry out of it ſelf) ſo every act of charity hath a tongue in it, and cryeth to God for a bleſſing upon the charitable. The warmth which we give to the loins of the naked, and the refreſhing which we give to the bowels of the hungry, theſe very acts of love and compaſſion, pray or cry to God for good to us, though men ſay nothing of us. This is both a ſpiritual and an incouraging ſenſe of the Text, If his loins have not bleſſed me.

Hence Note, Firſt, It is the duty of thoſe who are relieved, to pray for and wiſh a bleſſing upon them who are the Inſtruments of their relief.

Job ſpeaks here not only the practice, but the duty of the poor, and tells us as much what they ought to do, as what they did. From whomſoever we receive good, to them we owe (at leaſt) thanks and good wiſhes. The Goſpel teacheth us to pray for thoſe who deſpitefully uſe us and perſecute us; how much more ſhould we pray for thoſe who uſe us kindly, and provide for us? The Goſpel bids bleſs thoſe who curſe us; How much more ſhould we bleſs thoſe who bleſs us, or are a bleſſing to us? An unthankful receiver renders himſelf altogether unworthy of what he hath already received, much more to receive any more; our loins ſhould bleſs him that hath covered them, and our bowels thoſe who have refreſhed them. And if ſo, O how ſhould our loins bleſs God who hath warmed and refreſhed both loins and bowels with ſo many bleſſings! How ſhould we trumpet forth his praiſes who loadeth us with his benefits daily! If a poor man ought to bleſs his Benefactor for any morſel of bread to ſtay his hunger, for any caſt garment to cover his nakedneſs; what ſhould we do, who receive all our bread, all our clothing, all our comforts, all our graces from the hand of God! How ſhould we bleſs Jeſus Chriſt, who ſatisfieth the hunger of our ſouls with his own fleſh, who clothes and warms our loins, with that Golden fleece of his own everlaſting Righteouſneſs!

Secondly, Obſerve, If they who have received good by us will not be thankful, the very good which they have received, will thank, yea, commend and praiſe us.

If we do good, we cannot loſe our thanks for it, though no man thank us. As the very doing of good is a reward to it ſelf; ſo it ſelf will one way or other procure us a reward. Who would not be alwayes doing good, ſeeing we are aſſured that the good we do, will do us more good then thoſe to or for whom we do it? If the poor whom we have fed will not bleſs us, yet their hungry bellies will; if the naked whom we have cloathed do not bleſs us, yet their warmed loins will bleſs us, whether they will or no. That good which we have done will bleſs us, though they do not to whom we have done it. Let us not be weary in well-doing (ſaith the Apoſtle, Gal. 6. 9.) for in due ſeaſon we ſhall reap if we faint not. Is man ungrateful to us? Will he not give us ſo much as a good word, for whom we have done much good? Yet while he carrieth his belly and his loins about him, they will bleſs us. No ſooner is that deſcription of a vertuous Woman and of her vertuous works concluded, but preſently follows (Prov. 31. 31.) Give her of the fruit of her hands, and let her own works praiſe her in the gate. Suppoſe ſhe hath no Orator to praiſe her there, yet her works will praiſe her; vertuous actions are the moſt eloquent Orators. They ſpeak beſt who do beſt. And as our good works will praiſe, commend, and bleſs us when men do not; ſo our evil works, or our neglect of good works will diſpraiſe and complain of us when men do not; though the poor, who ask food and rayment of us and have been denied do not cry againſt us, nor wiſh a curſe upon us, yet their naked loins and hungry bellies will. It is ſaid (Hab. 2. 11.) concerning houſes built by violence and oppreſſion (many have raiſed their own houſes upon the ruine of others) The ſtone ſhall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber ſhall anſwer it: As if the Prophet had thus expreſſed it, All the materials of the houſe from ſide to ſide, from room to room, from the foundation to the roof, ſhall agree in this doleful ſong, we were built by blood, and woe will be the portion of our builder. It may be a poor oppreſſed man knows not how nor where to complain, yet the ſtones out of the wall know. Every work doth either curſe or bleſs us. The good or evil which we do, will ſpeak good or evil of us. It is an extream miſery if our works are evil, though all men ſpeak well of us. And it is a great mercy if when no man ſpeaks good of us, our works are good. That the loins of the poor bleſs us, may ſatisfie us when we miſs the bleſſing of their lips. If (ſaith Job) his loins have not bleſſed me,

If he were not warmed with the fleece of my Sheep.

We are not to take the fleece properly, as if Job wrapt a fleece about the loins of the poor; but, by his fleece, he means garments made of his fleece; or cloth to be made up into garments.

If he were not warmed.] Job did not only give the poor man ſomewhat to cover his nakedneſs, or to hide his ſhame, but he gave him that which was comfortable to him, that which was a defence againſt the wind and weather: He was warmed (ſaith he) with the fleece

Of my Sheep.] Not with the fleece which I took from other mens Sheep. Job was as honeſt as he was charitable: He cloathed the naked with his own fleece. The word here uſed for a fleece, ſignifies any thing, that being cut is ready to grow again: 'Tis applyed in Scripture, Firſt, To the mown graſs: Secondly, To the ſhorn fleece. Graſs is, as it were, the fleece of the earth; and wooll is the graſs of the Sheep. That Prophecy of Chriſt (Pſal. 72.6.) which we tranſlate, He ſhall come down like rain upon the mown graſs; others tranſlate, He ſhall come down like rain upon a fleece of wooll. Yet, I conceive, the former verſion moſt proper in the Pſalm, becauſe of the words which follow, And like ſhowers upon the earth. But in Job the Text reſtrains us to the latter ſignification, A fleece of wool, which is the natural matter of cloathing; If he were not warm with the fleece of my ſheep.

Hence Note, Firſt, We ſhould give the poor not only that which is for bare neceſſity, but for their comfort.

Job did not cloath the poor with Sheep skins when he had taken the fleece off from them, but he cloathed them with the fleece. God began the cloathing of man with matter of the loweſt rate (Gen. 3. 21.) with Coats of skins; but God taught Job to make the poor Coats, not with the skins of the Sheep, but with the fleece. The people of God are deſcribed in their perſecuted ſtate (Heb. 11.37.) Wandring in Sheeps-skins and Goat-skins. Thoſe Worthies in the faith had much ado to ſave their own skins, or (as Job ſpeaks) to eſcape with the skin of their teeth from the rage of cruel Tyrants, and therefore glad of the bare skins of beaſts to cover or diſguiſe their own. Our charity is a kind of perſecution, if it puts the poor into no better a habit then perſecution did thoſe bleſſed Martyrs. I know good cloathing may be made of skins well wrought without the fleece; yet Job's charity giving the fleece not the bare skin to the poor for cloathing, teacheth us to be ſomewhat liberal when we are charitable; and to give the needy, though not the beſt, yet not the worſt for their relief.

Secondly, In that he ſaith, With the fleece of my Sheep;

Note, We muſt be ſure that what we give to the poor, whether in food or rayment, be of our own.

Job gave them of his own morſel to eat (ver. 17.) and here of the fleece of his own Sheep to wear (Prov. 3.9.) Honour the Lord with thy ſubſtance. We cannot honour the Lord in giving that, which we have gotten by diſhonouring the Lord; that is, by tranſgreſſing the Commandment of the Lord. Do you think you can fulfil the law of Love or Charity, by breaking the law of Juſtice or righteouſneſs! Nathan ſpake a Parable of this import to David, when he would convince him of and reprove him for his ſin (2 Sam. 12.) He tells him of two men in one City, the one rich and the other poor, &c. and there came a Traveller to the rich man, to whom indeed he gave, 'tis like, free welcome and entertainment; But at whoſe coſt? He had ſtore of his own; But (ſaith Nathan, ver. 4.) he ſpared to take of his own flock, and of his own herd to dreſs for the wayfaring man that was come unto him, but took the poor mans Lamb and dreſſed it for him that was come to him. He was hoſpitable at his Neighbours charge. David was ſo ſcandaliz'd at this parabolical hiſtory, that his anger was greatly kindled, and preſently ſwore a ſentence of death againſt the man that had ſo done. And ſurely if David was ſo offended with that mans hoſpitality, God will not be pleaſed with thoſe mens charity, who give relief out of that which they have wrongfully gotten. To feed the hungry and cloath the naked at other mens coſt, is not to honour God, but to mock him. 'Tis a great wickedneſs to do injuſtice that we may do acts of charity: And when men have deſerved the curſe of many by griping, then to hope for the bleſſing of ſome by giving. We muſt not be charitable with other mens fleeces, nor fleece others (as we ſay) that we may be charitable. Shall we furniſh our ſelves by cruelty to perform works of pity? And when we have fleeced others by harſh, rigid, extorting courſes, ſhall we then hope to make amends for all, by ſending a part of our fleece to the poor? How unacceptable ſhall I ſay, or rather how abominable is this charity to God! Take heed of cloathing any by making others naked: Give not that bread to the poor, which you have unduly gained, though from the rich. What is wrongfully gotten muſt be reſtored; and if we can neither find thoſe whom we have wronged, nor their heirs to reſtore it to, then the poor are their heirs, as was ſhewed at the eighteenth verſe of the twentieth Chapter. And what (in that caſe) you give the poor, muſt not be given to them as an Alms, but as their dues; not at all in a way of charity, but of juſtice. Or not as that which you have a liberty to give, but as that which you have no liberty to keep. Look then that the fleece which warms the loins of the poor man comes from the back of your own Sheep. See how exact this holy man was in all his wayes; he gave all manner of charity, and he gave to all; and it was pure charity, he gave his own. To clear which yet further, Job having thus proteſted for his charity to the poor, proteſts againſt all manner of injuſtice towards the poor.

Verſe 21. If I have lifted up my hand againſt the fatherleſs, when I ſaw my help in the gate.

To lift up the hand in Scripture is taken ſometimes in a good, and ſometimes in an evil ſence; there is a lifting up of the hand for; and there is a lifting up of the hand againſt.

More diſtinctly: Firſt, In a good ſenſe: To lift up the hand is a geſture of praying, or of praiſe; I will (ſaith the Apoſtle) that men pray every where, lifting up pure hands (1 Tim. 2. 8.) Prayer in the eſſence of it is a lifting up of the heart to God, and in ſignification of that 'tis accompanied with the lifting up of the hand to God. Secondly, To lift up the hand, is a geſture of ſwearing, or taking a ſacred Oath. Thus Abram anſwered the King of Sodom when he offered him the ſpoils (Gen. 14.22.) I have lifted up my hand to the moſt high God (that is, I have ſworn) that I will not take, &c. And thus the Lords lifting up his hand is his ſwearing (Ezek. 20. 5.) Thus ſaith the Lord God, in the day when I choſe Iſrael, and lifted up my hand (or ſware, as we put in the Margin) unto the ſeed of the houſe of Jacob, &c. Thirdly, It is a geſture importing readineſs, and ſpecial intention in doing a thing (Pſal. 119 48.) My hands (ſaith David) alſo will I lift up to thy Commandments; as a man that is willing to do a thing, and addreſſeth himſelf to the doing of it, lifts up his hand; ſo a godly man is deſcribed lifting up his hand to fulfil and obey the Commands of God. Fourthly, Lifting up of the hand is a geſture intimating our deſire to call or invite another to come to us, or do ſomewhat for us (Iſa. 49.22.) Thus ſaith the Lord, behold I will lift up my hands to the Gentiles; that is, I will call them into the fellowſhip of the Church, and admit them into the Commonwealth of Iſrael who have all this while been Aliens from it.

Again, To lift up the hand is taken in a bad ſenſe; and ſo it muſt be underſtood here, as that addition neceſſitates it, againſt the fatherleſs. Thus to lift up the hand againſt any one, notes, Firſt, A preſent purpoſe to hurt or vex. Secondly, It ſignifies a menace or threat; 'tis ordinary to ſhake or lift up the hand at thoſe with whom we are much diſpleaſed, Thirdly, It notes actual rebellion and oppoſition, or revenge (2 Sam. 20. 21.) A man of Mount Ephraim, Sheba by name, the ſon of Bichri, hath lift up his hand againſt the King, even againſt David; that is, he hath done wickedly againſt David, or ſet himſelf againſt David, to raiſe ſedition and ruine him. We may expound it in any of or in all theſe three notions, as uſed by Job, If I have lift up my hand againſt the fatherleſs; that is, if I have done any thing that bears the ſignification of an ill intendment, or of a threatning againſt the fatherleſs, much more if I have uſed any violence againſt the fatherleſs, to oppreſs him in his right, then, &c. Some expound that of the Prophet (Iſa. 58. 9.) If thou take away from the midſt of thee the putting forth of the finger, and ſpeaking vanity, as a threatning both by word and geſture, and ſo in tendency to ſmiting with the fiſt of wickedneſs, of which the Prophet ſpake at the fourth verſe foregoing. It ſeems the Jews were wont to deal rigorouſly in urging the Law upon their debtors, much more upon ſuppoſed malefactors, even to violence and ſtriking. So they dealt with Chriſt (Math. 26. 67.) Then did they ſpit in his face and buffeted him, and others ſmote him with the palms of their hands. Which uncivil uſage he doubtleſs received either by the command, or at leaſt by the connivence of thoſe in power: And ſo 'tis ſaid expreſly of the High Prieſt Ananias, that he Commanded them that ſtood by Paul to ſmite him on the mouth (Acts 23. 2.) Againſt all theſe rigorous courſes Job proteſts while he ſaith, If I have lifted up my hand againſt the fatherleſs: As if he had ſaid, I have neither threatened, nor have I actually vexed the poor and fatherleſs; I have neither given a ſign or intimation to others, by lifting up my hand to afflict them, nor have I done it my ſelf. I conceive alſo we may thus take it in a way of diminution, as denying the leaſt hurt, or appearance of hurt to the fatherleſs: As if he had ſaid, I have been ſo far from oppreſſing them, or laying my whole weight upon them, that I have not ſo much as lifted up my hand againſt them, or touched them with a little finger. The Phariſees (as Chriſt chargeth them in the Goſpel) laid heavy burdens upon others, which themſelves would not touch ſo much as with a little finger; Job was ſo tender-hearted and compaſſionate, that he would not lift up his hand, no nor wrongfully lay the weight of his little finger upon the fatherleſs.

Placet ut iſta manus elevatio fieri intelligatur modo imperativo, qua ſolent impii principes elevato manu ſuis ſatellitibus ſignum dare, ut in aliquem irruant, illumq; aut vulnerent aut perimant. Bold.

Si inhumanè repuli, cecidi aut interminatus ſum. Jun.

Laſtly, Becauſe they were wont in Ancient times (and 'tis a uſe in theſe times) to give their vote by lifting up the hand when matters came to the queſtion, therefore ſome interpret theſe words, If I have lifted up my hand againſt the fatherleſs, as a denial that he had given his ſuffrage or voice againſt them. According to all theſe interpretations, eſpecially the two laſt, Job repels and denies that Charge of harſhneſs and ill dealing with the poor to the utmoſt; he had neither heart nor voice, neither hand nor tongue to do them wrong, either by himſelf or by the agency of others. If I have lift up my hand againſt the fatherleſs,

When I ſaw my help in the gate.

Etiam cum viderem me in porta ſuperiorem. Vulg.

Job puts this as a ſpecial note of his Integrity; the Vulgar Latine renders very ſignificantly, Even when I ſaw my ſelf of greateſt power in the gate. By the Gate here underſtand (as often before) the place of Judgment, which according to the manner of the Jews, as alſo of other Nations, was wont to be in the gate of the City: Now, ſaith Job, I have not oppreſſed or cruſhed the fatherleſs, when ſitting in the place of Judicature, I ſaw all that were about me ready to aſſiſt me, and take part with me in any matter, if I had but deſired it. I had authority enough in my own hand to order what I would have done, and I had the ſtrength of hands enough to execute my orders; none durſt oppoſe or contradict me, the Judges themſelves would have complied with me, had they ſeen me inclining to ſuch a Judgment: yet though I had all theſe advantages on my ſide, I have not made uſe of them to the wrong of the pooreſt Orphan; If I have lifted up my hand againſt the fatherleſs: Thus Job ſeems to ſay, I might have had what I would, if I had but lift up my hand, I could have done what I liſt, and none on earth could hinder me, no man durſt complain; or if any had, how would he have mended himſelf? The Judges were for me, I had help in the gate; if I had trampled upon my oppoſers, and thruſt their cauſe out of the Court, they had been, as to me, remedileſs, though I had not been guiltleſs; but I have not only forborn, but from my very heart abhorr'd to do ſuch unworthy things. This ſurely was his ſenſe, or to this effect, when he ſaid, If I have lift up my hand againſt the fatherleſs, when I ſaw my help in the gate.

Hence Note, Firſt, To do any thing which hath in it but a ſhadow of oppreſſing the poor is very ſinful.

The putting forth of the finger, the lifting up of the hand, a ſignification of our conſent to afflict the fatherleſs, is an high offence, both againſt God the righteous Judge, and againſt man, whoſe right is overthrown. The rule is expreſs (1 Theſ. 5. 22.) Abſtain from all appearance of evil.

Secondly, Obſerve, To have power in our hands to do wrong, is a great temptation to do it.

He that hath ability to oppreſs, ſeldom wants opportunity to do it, and 'tis more ſeldom that he wants a mind to do it. Laban told Jacob (Gen. 31. 29.) It is in the power of my hand to do thee hurt; he could have cruſhed Jacob, And what hinder'd him? Surely not a principle of love to righteouſneſs, nor a holy fear of wronging him, but a divine rebuke (as himſelf acknowledged in the ſame verſe) The God of your Fathers ſpake unto me yeſter-night, ſaying, Take thou heed that thou ſpeak not to Jacob either good or bad. Jacob alſo told him as much (ver. 42.) God hath ſeen mine affliction, and the labour of mine hands, and rebuked thee yeſter-night. As if he had ſaid, Unleſs God had ſtopt and checkt thy power from doing me a miſchief, thy own heart, thy conſcience had not. Solomon adviſeth (Prov. 3. 28.) Say not unto thy neighbour, go, and come again, and to morrow I will give thee, when thou haſt it by thee; that is, when it is in the power of thy hand to do it. As we have all need to be excited to do good, though we have power in our hands to do it; ſo when many have power in their hands to do hurt, they can hardly be diſſwaded or kept off from doing it. That we have a power to do good, doth ſcarce tempt or ſtir us to do it; but the very having a power to do evil, tempts us as often as the occaſions of it are preſented to us. Nothing hinders ſome from doing evil, but the want of worldly power: O what a world of evil would theſe do if they had power! And the beſt of men, the greateſt lovers of righteouſneſs, find work enough ſometimes with their own hearts to keep clear from acts of unrighteouſneſs, when power and occaſion, joyning with their own intereſt, meet together.

Hence Note, Thirdly, It is an argument of much grace, not to do evil when we have power and opportunity in our hands to do it.

That man gives a ſtrong teſtimony of his own integrity, who hath not a heart to do that evil which the power in his hand enables him to do. It cannot be denied, but our refuſal to do any evil which we have humane help enough to do, ſhews the prevalency of divine help. Then Grace is mighty in us, or as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Col. 1. 29.) Worketh in us mightily, when we are weak as to thoſe ſinful works, for which we have the greateſt either natural or civil power. Paul could ſay (2 Cor. 13. 8.) I can do nothing againſt the truth, but for the truth. Paul could have ſet his wits againſt the truth, and plaid the Sophiſter as well as any other man; but he had no heart to do any thing againſt the truth. This is an infallible Argument, not only of the truth, but of the ſtrength of grace (2 John 3.9.) He that is born of God cannot ſin (Why not?) Not becauſe he hath not a natural power, not becauſe he hath no civil power, not becauſe he hath no corruption ſuiting ſin, not becauſe he hath no temptation provoking him to ſin, not becauſe he alwayes wants opportunity to ſin; he that is born of God hath moſt of theſe advantages to ſin alwayes, and he ſometimes hath all of them, ſo that none of theſe are the proper reaſons why he cannot commit ſin. The true reaſon is, becauſe his heart is turned and ſet another way, or becauſe (as that Scripture expreſſeth the reaſon) The ſeed of God remaineth in him. When a godly man hath as much power and opportunity as others to ſin, yet he doth not ſin as others, becauſe the power of grace not only reſtrains and ſuperſedes, but changeth and altereth the powers of Nature. We ſhould alwayes do the ſame things, if we were alwayes the ſame men. We ſhould all do alike, if we were all alike. How glorious is that grace of God in man, which gives him a power not to ſin, how much ſoever it is in his power to ſin: And ſtill the glory of that grace is the greater in keeping us from ſinning, by how much our power to ſin is greater for a Magiſtrate who ſeeth (as Job did) his help in the gate to afflict the fatherleſs, or ſubvert any man in his cauſe, and yet not to lift up a hand or a finger, not to contribute the leaſt appearance of his power to do it, but (as doubtleſs Job alſo did) to contribute all his power againſt it. This is Juſtice in triumph.

Further, For as much as Job ſaith, that he ſaw his help in the gate, > Obſerve, Men in great power and place cannot want help to carry through the moſt unjuſt and oppreſſive actions, if they do but deſire it.

When Jezabel the Queen had a mind to murder Naboth, ſhe ſaw her help in the gate, ſhe wanted neither falſe Witneſſes to accuſe him, nor ignorant or unrighteous Judges to condemn him. When Abſalom was reſolved to ſlay his Brother Amnon, he did but make his mind known, and he had help enough. How many have been thus incouraged to adventure in a bad cauſe? O, ſay they, we ſee our help in the gate; 'tis but bribing ſuch a one, and the match will be quickly made up, a preſent will win ſuch a mans heart, and he will win us two or three more, and we have a way to get a fourth, and if we get but a fifth, or a ſixth, we ſhall carry it againſt all the world; let our cauſe be what it will, we ſee our help in the gate. Thus Judgment is bought and ſold without reſpect either to honour or honeſty. There hath been ſuch corruption in all ages, it were indeed the glory of our age if no ſuch corruption were to be found among us. But are there not ſome whoſe office it is to relieve the oppreſſed, who have lent a helping hand to their oppreſſors? The fatherleſs rarely find help in the gate; but they who lift up their hand againſt the fatherleſs find too much help there. How ſad is it when they that ſhould help the fatherleſs in the gate, ſee the fatherleſs trod under foot in the gate, and give them no help! Woe to thoſe who help the mighty againſt the weak in a wrong cauſe, or who will not help the weak againſt the mighty in a right cauſe. How ſhall ſuch ſtand before the juſt God in the gate of the great Judgment, who have overthrown the cauſe of the poor in the gate unjuſtly; eſpecially conſidering how oft their ears have been beaten with theſe admonitions, and in what light they live.

> Fifthly, Note, Righteous Magiſtrates will not uſe their power to oppreſs others, how much opportunity and advantage ſoever they have to do it, though they ſee their help in the gate.

Id tantum poſſumus quod jure poſſumus.

A righteous Magiſtrate knows, That he only can do that which he can lawfully or rightly do. As the Law gives him no power; ſo he is convinced, that he hath no power beyond, much leſs againſt the Law; and therefore concludes, I can do no more then I ought to do; he had rather be accounted weak then unjuſt, and impotent then oppreſſive; yea, he counts this his ſtrength, and power, not to oppreſs, not to be unjuſt.

Laſtly, In that Job would not lift up his hand againſt the fatherleſs, when he ſaw his help in the gate.

> Note, Men in power ſhould not ſatisfie themſelves with what will paſs among, or be countenanced by men, but conſider what is right in it ſelf, what is right in the ſight of God, and that they are in the ſight of God.

A bad buſineſs may paſs very well among men, and we may have Advocates who will anſwer for us, and ſtop the mouths of all gain-ſayers; But can they ſtop the mouth of Conſcience? Can they blind the eyes of God, or impoſe upon him? God is the Judge of all the earth, and he will at laſt ſit in Judgment upon all the Judges of the earth: Now, as Moſes pleaded with God about his threatned and intended Judgment upon Sodom (Gen. 18. 25.) Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? Doubtleſs he will, though all the Judges of the earth ſhould do wrong. And as he will do them right, whom the Judges of the earth have wrong'd, ſo he will pronounce a righteous Judgment upon all unrighteous Judges. The Judgment of God will be very terrible upon thoſe who have done any thing (and not repented of it) againſt the Law; but his Judgment will be moſt terrible upon thoſe who have Judged againſt the Law, and either for fear or favour, for the ſatisfying of their coveteouſneſs or revenge have perverted Juſtice, and overthrown the righteous cauſe of the poor and fatherleſs in the gate. Jehoſhaphat ſaid to his Judges (2 Chron. 19. 6.) Take heed what ye do, for ye judge not for man, but for the Lord; that is, ye do not ſo much fill my place who am your King, as Gods place who is King of Kings. How ſeverely therefore will the Lord proceed with unrighteous Judges, ſeeing, as much as in them lyes, they make or render God himſelf an unrighteous Judge?

Therefore to ſhut up this point, let men in power diligently attend the end for which they have received their power, and then they will not eaſily go out of their way in the exerciſe of it. Surely what the Apoſtle aſſerts concerning the end of that power which the then Apoſtles did receive, and all the Miniſters of the Goſpel ſince, in their capacity, have received (1 Cor. 13. 8.) is true in the general concerning the end or ſcope of all Magiſtratical power, It is for edification, and not for deſtruction. Magiſtrates ſhould more attend building then pulling down, and be more in protection then puniſhment. Magiſtrates are ſaid to bear the Sword, not to be Swords; and they are ſaid to be Shields (Pſal. 47. 9.) not to bear Shields; and all to ſhew that protection and preſervation are more eſſential and intrinſecal to their office then deſtruction and puniſhment are. Protection is the moſt proper work of Magiſtrates. Indeed deſtruction is their work too, but that is a by-work, that comes in a way of conſequence, as it doth alſo in the Miniſters work. The word is the ſavour of death as well as the ſavour of life; but that which is or ſhould be chiefly aimed at in both theſe great Ordinances of Magiſtracy and Miniſtry, is edification and protection, not deſtruction; and if at any time deſtruction, yet only the deſtruction of the wicked and evil doers, yea, only of wickedneſs and evil deeds. What ſhall we ſay then either of or to thoſe Magiſtrates, who in the exerciſe of their power aim at deſtruction rather then at protection, yea, at the deſtruction of the poor and fatherleſs, rather then of the proud and mercileſs. Is there any honour in ſuch a victory? Let all who are inveſted with a lawful power, take heed they uſe it lawfully. The worſt uſe power can be put to, is the oppreſſion of the poor, and the bearing up a bad cauſe. Theſe were the abhorrence of Job's ſoul; If I have lift up my hand againſt the fatherleſs, when I ſaw my help in the gate.

Then let mine arm fall from my ſhoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone.

For deſtruction from God was a terror to me: and by reaſon of his highneſs I could not endure.

IN the former verſe Job earneſtly proteſted his integrity, yea, and his tenderneſs toward the poor and fatherleſs, even when he had the faireſt opportunity to cruſh and oppreſs them; when he ſaw his help in the gate.

He now binds that proteſtation by a ſolemn and ſacred imprecation, calling down a dreadful judgment upon himſelf if it were not ſo. I have met with matter of this nature more then once before; Job imprecating vengeance upon his own head, to aſſure the truth of what he had proteſted. How and in what caſes imprecations may be made, hath there been ſhewed. And therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it here, but only a little open the matter of this imprecation.

Verſe 22. Then let mine arm fall from my ſhoulder-blade, &c.

שכם Juxta Hebræos eſt propriè tota latitudo humeri, quæ extat à collo ad brachium, utrinque. Merc.

The Hebrew is, Let mine arm fall from my ſhoulder. The word rendred ſhoulder-blade, notes all that breadth of the body, from the neck to both the arms. And 'tis uſed metaphorically by the Prophet (Zeph. 3. 9.) to expreſs that oneneſs of heart and ſpirit, which ſhall be among the people of God in the latter dayes, Then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may call upon the Name of the Lord, to ſerve him with one conſent, or, with one ſhoulder (as we put it in the Margin) Which is an alluſion either to oxen drawing unitedly and at once in the ſame yoak, or to ſeveral men unanimouſly joyning their ſtrength to bear the ſame burden. 'Tis tranſlated back, (Pſal.21.12.) Therefore ſhalt thou make them to turn their back, or their ſhoulder; we put in the Margin. Thou ſhalt ſet them as a But, when thou ſhalt make ready thine Arrows upon thy ſtrings, againſt the face of them; we render clearly to the ſcope of this place in Job, as well as the ſenſe of the word, The ſhoulder, or the ſhoulder-blade; the next clauſe is of the ſame ſenſe.

And let mine arm be broken from the bone, Or, From the chanel bone.

The Word ſignifieth a Reed or a Cane, as alſo a ſpeare, which is long and ſlender like a Reed; the bone in the arm reaching from the ſhoulder to the elbow, or rather to the hand-wriſt, reſembles alſo a Cane, both as to the length and hollowneſs of it, Let mine arm be broken from the bone.

This imprecation may be conſidered, either with reference to all that Job ſpake in the former Context, or more particularly, to the twentieth verſe, to which 'tis moſt ſutable, hitting the point fully according to the Law of retaliation; If mine hand (ſaith he) hath been lifted up againſt the fatherleſs, then let mine arm fall from my ſhoulder blade; As if he had ſaid, let God puniſh me in that very member and part, which may moſt evidently point out my ſin. Let him even write my ſin upon my judgment; which cannot be done more viſibly, then when a man who hath unjuſtly lift up his hand againſt the fatherleſs, feels his arm falling off from his ſhoulder blade. Let mine arm fall from my ſhoulder-blade, &c. Hence (paſſing by the doctrine of imprecations before handled) we may obſerve,

First, The loſs of an arm or limb of the body, is a grievous loſs.

God hath ſo compacted and built up this houſe of clay, mans body, he hath put it in to ſuch an exquiſite frame, that if any one member be wanting, or but out of order, the whole is diſabled; if any one member be loſt, it is a loſs to the whole body. The Apoſtle treating of that ſpiritual body or corporation, the Church (1 Cor. 12.26.) ſhews what a ſympathy there is or ought to be among the members, and that in the ſuffering of any one of them, they all ſuffer, the whole ſpiritual body ſuffers in one member, even as the natural body doth. The eye ſees for the whole body, and the ear hears for the whole body, and the hand works for the whole body; and therefore the loſs of any one member is a great loſs, becauſe 'tis both the pain and loſs of the whole body. And if ſo, then

Firſt, Let us be ſenſible of their affliction, who ſuffer the loſs of a limb or bodyly member.

Secondly, Let thoſe be thankful who enjoy the uſe and benefit of all their bodyly members; a man that wants the uſe of his arm, O how thankful would he be, to have it reſtored again? Yet while we enjoy the uſe and ſervice of all our bodily members, we ſeldome take notice of the mercy, or are truely thankful for it.

Thirdly, Let us be admoniſht, to imploy every part, and member of the body well; let us uſe our hands, our feet, our eyes, our tongues to the honour of God. That's the Apoſtles advice (1 *Cor.*6.20.) Ye are bought with a price, therefore glorifie God in your body, and in your ſpirit, which are Gods. God hath a title, a right to the ſervice of both, not only by creation becauſe he made them, but by redemption, becauſe he hath bought or paid for them. Let all our bones honour the Lord, as David reſolved his ſhould (Pſal. 35. 10.) All my bones ſhall ſay, Lord who is like unto thee? Thoſe bones which God hath compacted, and joyned together in that admirable ſtructure of the body, ſhould joyn in his praiſe, and all the members of the body ſhould be yielded as inſtruments of righteouſneſs unto God (Rom. 6. 13.) Take heed of abuſing ſo much as a little finger, do not give up a hair of your head to the ſervice of ſin, for it is the Lords; let us take heed of mis-imploying our bodily members, leſt we provoke God to deny us the comfortable uſe of them. For,

Secondly, Note, It is juſt, that they who abuſe the members of their body, to the hurt of man, or the diſhonour of God, ſhould loſe the uſe of them.

He that lifts up his hand unrighteouſly, forfeits the uſe of it, and God hath ſometime taken the forfeiture. We take a knife out of a Childs hand, when we ſee he doth hurt with it; much more a Sword out of a mad-mans hand, who is bent to do hurt with it. Surely as we take artificial Inſtruments of hurt out of their hands who abuſe them, ſo God may juſtly take away the the uſe of any natural Inſtrument which we abuſe. Thus the Juſtice of God over-took Jeroboam (1 Kings 13.4.) who when he lift up his hand againſt the Prophet that propheſied againſt his Idolatrous Altar, preſently his hand withered, and he was not able to draw it in, or to bring it back, till the Prophet prayed for the reſtoring of it. God can quickly wither a hand or an arm that is ſtretch out to do miſchief. 'Tis a righteous thing for God to ſmite an abuſed eye with blindneſs, to ſmite an abuſed ear with deafneſs, an abuſed arm with lameneſs, and an abuſed tongue with an inability of ſpeaking. 'Tis fit that ſhould be deſtroyed which perverts the end for which it was made; and an equal thing, that God ſhould recal his favours when we fight againſt him, or act croſs to our duty with them.

Juſtum eſt ut homo mēbris privetur quibus ad injuſtitiam utitur. Aquin.

Job having given us an aſſurance of his integrity, by imprecating this penal evil upon himſelf, proceeds to give us a rational accouut of it, or to ſhew us what it was, that ſtopt him from acting that ſinful evil of oppreſſing the poor, the fatherleſs, and the widow.

Verſe 23. For deſtruction from God was a terror to me: And by reaſon of his highneſs I could not endure.

The Word rendred deſtruction, ſignifies properly any noyſome killing vapour; Such are the wrathful diſpenſations of God to man: As if he had ſaid, I was not afraid of any trouble, or deſtruction from men, but deſtruction from God was a terror to me.

The vulgar Latine tranſlates well to the ſenſe, though wide from the letter of the Text, For I alwayes feared God as the waves of a raging and tumultuous Sea, ready to overwhelm me; As if he had ſaid. I ſaw a Sea of wrath, into which I ſhould plunge my ſelf, by ſuch unrighteous actings. Such viſions or apprehenſions of an angry God, to ſee him as a raging Sea ready to ſwallow us up, or as a conſuming fire to devoure us when we ſin, are great effects of a lively and working faith. But I ſhall not ſtay upon that verſion, becauſe 'tis rather Rhetorical then literal.

Semper enim quaſi tumentes ſuper me fluctus timui Deum. Vulg.

Mr. Broughton renders, The Omnipotents feared woe held me; that is, it took hold of me, and withheld me from oppreſſing wayes.

We ſay, Deſtruction from God; Some more cloſe to the Grammatical ſtrictneſs of the text; Deſtruction of God, where the Genitive caſe notes the efficient cauſe, not the ſubject of deſtruction; that is, firſt, ſuch deſtruction as God uſes to ſend upon oppreſſors, or ſecondly, ſuch deſtruction as eminently and evidently declares the power of God, and that God is the author of it, was (ſaith Job) a terror to me; I by faith did apprehend that deſtruction which God in his Word threatneth ſinners, eſpecially oppreſſors with, as If I had already felt it. Deſtruction from God

Was a terror to me.] There is a two-fold terror; Firſt, that which doth ariſe from a meer ſlaviſh fear of God as a Judge or avenger; Secondly, there is a terror, which ariſeth from a Child-like fear, at once looking upon God as a Father, and as a righteous Judge. This terror was upon Job; he knew that (though a ſon, though a Child) if he ſhould take liberty to break the bonds of duty, and tranſgreſs the Law of God, he ſhould ſmart for it; his Father would not be a cockering, or an indulgent Father to him, but he ſhould feel the ſmart of his rod, and feel it the more, by how much he was the nearer to him. Thus the Lord told his own people (Amos 3. 2.) You only have I known of all the families of the earth, therefore I will puniſh you for all your iniquities. Deſtruction from God was a terror to me.

Hence Note, Firſt, God is mighty to deſtroy, as well as to ſave.

There is one Law-giver (ſaith the Apoſtle, James 4. 12.) who is able to ſave, and to deſtroy; he can as eaſily deſtroy thoſe who violate, as ſave thoſe who obey his Laws. There is the ſame power of God in both, and God is honoured in the exerciſe of both theſe powers. That Title by which God is ſo often expreſſed El-ſhaddai, imports the deſtroying, as well as the preſerving, ſaving, and nouriſhing power of God. As God hath declared himſelf, ſo we ought to honour him, to own him, to ſtudy him, and to know him; know then, there is deſtruction from God, as well as ſalvation from God. And, as to the Lord our God belong the iſſues (or out-gates) from death, that is, God hath choice of wayes to deliver his Servants from the extreameſt dangers of death; So to the Lord our God belong the entrances unto death; that is, God hath infinite wayes to lead his Enemies into the chambers and ſnares of death.

Secondly, If we conſider who are the objects of this deſtruction, even they who are guilty of oppreſſion; or in what caſe Job feared it, namely, if he had lift up his hand violently or unrighteouſly againſt the fatherleſs.

Obſerve, They who deſtroy men unjuſtly, may juſtly expect deſtruction from God.

God is a God of deſtruction, but he is deſtruction to the wicked only, or to unjuſt deſtroyers. God is a God of ſalvation to his own people; a Believer needs not fear deſtruction; I (ſaith Chriſt John. 10. 31.) have given them eternal life, and they ſhall never periſh. Indeeed while a Believer acts unlike a believer, God may deal with him, as he doth with unbelievers, he may deal with him in outward diſpenſations, as he doth with the World, while he conforms to the World; but take him under the notion of a Believer, he is not within the compaſs of deſtruction: God is to him, only a God of ſalvation. The deſtruction of God is the proper portion of men-deſtroyers. The wicked are ſons of perdition (ſo Judas was called (John. 17. 12.) And ſo Antichriſt is called (2 Theſ. 2, 3.) the wicked, I ſay, are ſons of perdition) in a double notion; Firſt, they are ſons of perdition actively, they make it their work ſometimes to deſtroy others, and the deſtruction of others is often the conſequent, yea the proper effect of their work; Secondly, they are the ſons of perdition paſſively, that is, they ſhall certainly be deſtroyed; and ſo 'tis expreſly propheſied concerning the latter of thoſe ſons of perdition, (2 Theſ. 2. 8.) Whom the Lord ſhall conſume with the ſpirit of his mouth, and deſtroy with the brightneſs of his coming.

Thirdly, Note, A Believer hath, and may have dreadful apprehenſions of the deſtroying power of God.

As he makes God his fear (Iſa. 8. 13.) in oppoſition to the fear of mans deſtroying power, ſo it is good for him to fear the deſtroying power of God, and often to conſider the wrath of God againſt ſinners, to keep himſelf from ſinning againſt God. For though a Believer obeyeth and keeps off from ſin upon higher and nobler terms then wrath, yet he makes a good improvement of thoſe terms; wrath and deſtruction from the Almighty are ſuch a terror to him, that as he will not, ſo he dares not ſin. As we are delivered by Jeſus Chriſt out of the hands of all our enemies, that we may ſerve him in holineſs and righteouſneſs without the fear of man, ſo in the fear of God all our dayes. All Believers are warned to work out their ſalvation with fear and trembling (Phil. 2. 12.) that is, they ſhould fear and tremble to do any thing which doth not (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Heb. 6. 9.) accompany ſalvation while they are working it out. Princes muſt be juſt ruling in fear of God (2 Sam. 23. 3.) The Kings of the earth are called, (Pſal. 2. 10.) To ſerve him with fear, and to rejoyce before him with trembling, to kiſs the Son leſt he be angry, Deſtruction from the Almighty ſhould be a terror to them againſt doing evil, who by their office are a terror to evil-doers. It was the unjuſt Judge who neither regarded men nor feared God (Luke 18. 2.) God delights to ſee the ſons of men honour him in all that he is, he delights to ſee them honour him in his Juſtice, and in his wrath, as well as in his love and mercy. When Chriſt ſaw his Diſciples daunted with the fear of men, (Luke 12. 4, 5.) He ſaith, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, &c. But I will forewarn you whom you ſhall fear; fear him; which after he hath killed hath power to caſt into Hell, yea, I ſay unto you, fear him. While he takes them off from the fear of man, he doth not take them off from all fear, yea he urgeth them with the fear of God; he would have deſtruction from the Almighty a terror to them. And, ſuch is the proneneſs of man to ſin, that he needs all manner of help, and the ſtrength of all ſorts of arguments to keep him from it.

Idonea, ratio, à principibus ſemper recolenda, ut Dei timore coerciti nihil injuſtum, nihil violentum attentant. Merl.

Laſtly, We may take this counſel from Job's profeſſion, when we are about to do any thing, let us examine and conſider, whether God allow it or no; if he diſallow it, let us forbear and fear to meddle with it, though men flatter us or give us liberty, yea though they aſſiſt and give us help. The reaſon why ſo many break the rules, both of piety towards God, and of honeſty towards man, is becauſe they have laid by or aſide, all fear of deſtruction from the Almighty. Deſtruction from the Almighty was a terror to me;

And by reaſon of his highneſs I could not endure.

The root of the word here rendred Highneſs, ſignifies two things; Firſt, to lift up; Secondly, To bear. Upon which ground this Text is diverſly tranſlated; Some thus, by reaſon of his weight or burden I could not endure; or, I could not bear his burden. But what was this heavy burden? The wrath of God is a burden, and the only burden which man cannot bear. I, ſaith Job (according to this tranſlation) was preſſed in my ſpirit with a ſenſe of the wrath of God. The weight of Divine diſpleaſure is intolerable, who can bear it? That's a good ſenſe; and therefore threatning Prophecies in Scripture (which are manifeſtations of the wrathful diſpleaſure of God againſt men or Nations) are often called burdens. Thus we read (Iſa. 13. 1.) The burden of Babylon which Iſaiah the ſon of Amos did ſee. And (Iſa. 15. 1.) The burden of Moab, Becauſe in the night Ar of Moab is laid waſt. Once more (Iſa. 17. 1.) The burden of Damaſcus; behold Damaſcus is taken away from being a City, and it ſhall be a ruinous heap. See the like, Chap. 19. 1. and 21. 1. 11. and 22. 1. and 23. 1. All theſe Propheſies declared heavy Judgments ready to fall down upon the head of Babylon, Moab and Damaſcus, &c. to cruſh and ruine them, to break and deſtroy them. Thus Jehu ſpake when he had executed the ſentence of God upon Jehoram, (2 Kings 9. 25.) Then ſaid Jehu to Bidkar his Captain, take up and caſt him in the porton of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite: For remember, how that when I and thou rode together after Ahab his Father, the Lord laid this burden upon him; that is, paſſed this heavy doom upon him. There is one very obſervable Scripture (Jer. 23, 33.) where the people are charged with mocking the Lords Prophet for their frequent uſe of this word, The Burden of the Lord: And when this people, or the Prophet (that is, falſe prophet) or a Prieſt (that is, a prophane Prieſt) ſhall ask thee, ſaying, what is the burden of the Lord? Thou ſhalt then ſay unto them, what burden? I will even forſake you ſaith the Lord; when they ſhall ask, that is, when they ſhall ſay in ſcorn, or ſcoffingly, what is the burden of the Lord? We know you have ſome burden for us, we uſe to hear nothing but burdens or threatnings you, as if you were born with the word burden in your mouths (So they derided the Prophets, and their threatning Propheſies, called burdens) what is the burden of the Lord? Thou ſhalt ſay unto them, I will even forſake you, ſaith the Lord. That's your burden, and that's enough to break your backs for ever. And to ſhew how highly the Lord was diſpleaſed with their abuſing his Prophets for the frequent uſe of this Word; he tells them (ver. 34.) And as for the Prophet, and the Prieſt, and the people that ſhall ſay, the burden of the Lord, (that is, if any one ſhall ſay it with ſcorn or deriſion to the Prophet) I will puniſh that man and his houſe, I will be a burden to him, ſaith the Lord; Yea the Lord was ſo offended with their abuſe of this word burden, that he commanded it ſhould be no more uſed (as many words which men have corrupted, are diſ-uſed by men) (ver. 35.) Thus ſhall ye ſay every one to his neighbour, and every one to his Brother, what hath the Lord anſwered, and what hath the Lord ſpoken: As if he had ſaid, Be ſure you uſe this ſcorning word no more, but if you enquire of the Prophet, you ſhall ſpeak thus, What hath the Lord anſwered and ſpoken, (ver. 36.) and the burden of the Pondus ejus ferre non potui. Vulg.

Lord ſhall you mention no more; for every mans word ſhall be his burden; for you have perverted the words of the living God, of the Lord of hoſts our God. (ver. 37.) Thus ſhalt thou ſay to the Prophet, what hath the Lord anſwered? And what hath the Lord ſpoken? Thus he repeats it again. And whereas notwithſtanding this prohibition, the people continued to uſe this word, The burden of the Lord; Mark what the Lord ſaith at the thirty eighth verſe; Becauſe you ſay this word, the burden of the Lord, and I have ſent unto you, ſaying, ye ſhall not ſay the burden of the Lord; therefore behold I even I will utterly forget you, and I will forſake you, and the City that I gave you, and your Fathers, and caſt out of my preſence: And I will bring an everlaſting reproach upon you, and a perpetual ſhame, which ſhall not be forgotten. I have inſiſted upon this notable Scripture only to ſhew, how famous that word was, The burden of the Lord, importing a Propheſie that carried the ſignification of the foreſt diſpleaſure of God in it againſt a provoking people; as alſo how that word became infamous when the people abuſed it, ſaying in ſcorn, The burden of the Lord; as they alſo in ſcorn abuſed that moſt precious word, The Holy One of Iſrael. For, becauſe the Prophets were wont to preface their Sermons, with, Thus ſaith the holy One of Iſrael, or ſometimes to conclude them, with, The holy One of Iſrael hath ſaid it; Therefore the prophane ones among that people ſaid in deriſion (Iſa. 5. 19.) Let him make ſpeed and haſten his work, that we may ſee it; and let the Counſel of the Holy One of Iſrael draw nigh that we may know it. Thus they in Iſaiah made a jeſt of that moſt excellent Name of God, The Holy One of Iſrael, as theſe in Jeremy derided thoſe dreadful Meſſages of God by his holy Prophets, called, The burden of the Lord. But to return from this digreſſion, occaſion'd by the correſpondence of many Scriptures with this verſion of Job's Text, I could not bear his weight or burden.

Now from this reading of the words, By reaſon of his burden or heavineſs I could not endure.

Obſerve, The wrath of God is very burdenſome.

'Tis a burden too heavy to be born; Man cannot bear it; The Apoſtatizing Angels could not bear it; yea Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, when he undertook the redemption of fallen man ſweat drops of blood in bearing it. David confeſſed (Pſa. 38. 4.) Mine iniquities are gone over my head: as an heavy burden, they are too heavy for me. But what made his iniquities ſo heavy? doubtleſs it was his apprehenſion of the wrath of God which his iniquities had deſerved, and by their guilt ſubjected him unto. Carnal men have mountains of iniquity upon them, yet are not burdened with them, but make light, yea a ſport of them, becauſe they are not ſenſible of that wrath which is due to them. Moſes in his prayer (Pſal. 90. 11. That's the Title of it) cryed out, Who knoweth the power of thine Anger? Even according to thy fear, ſo is thy wrath. There is a power, and a weight in the anger of the Lord, which no man (who apprehends it) is able to endure or ſtand under; yea, no man is able fully to apprehend it. As there is an incomprehenſible love of God; even a height, and breadth, and length, and depth, which man is not able to comprehend; ſo is his anger, ſo is his wrath incomprehenſible. They who apprehend the leaſt of it, are preſſed with its weight beyond enduring. As glory which is the full manifeſtation of God to the ſoul, in his love, and goodneſs, and holineſs, is called a weight, (2 Cor. 4. 17.) what weight? not a burdenſome weight, not an oppreſſing weight but an honorable weight, it is called a weight, becauſe of the greatneſs, and excellency of it, and becauſe it makes thoſe who have it weighty and honourable. Now as there is a bleſſed weight, or a weight of bleſſedneſs in Glory; ſo there is a miſerable weight, a weight of miſery in that wrath of God, which is ready to be poured down upon the head of ſinners. 'Tis ſuch a weight of miſery as will cruſh the ſtrongeſt Giant like a Moth. And unleſs God put forth a power in man to bear him up under the power of his anger, it would ſink him to nothing. The Apoſtle (Heb. 10. 31.) gives warning to all, leſt they come under this weight. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God; that is, to fall under the weight of his diſpleaſure. When David had ſaid (Pſal. 32. 4.) Day and night thy hand was heavy upon me; he preſently tells us what ſad effects he found of it; My moiſture (ſaith he) is turned into the droughts of Summer. The weight of Gods hand is heavy upon his own people, in time of affliction, and deſertion, when he at once chaſtens them and hides his face from them. But what is that to the hand of God that ſhall be upon the wicked for ever? If that anger of God which doth but purge and cleanſe the Godly be ſo heavy, O how heavy is that anger of God which reprobates and conſumes the ungodly? When, they falling into the hand of God, the hand of God falls upon them, it will fall heavy upon them indeed. The Prophet ſpeaks of the lighting down of the Arm of God with the indignation of his anger, and with the flame of a devouring fire, with ſcattering, and tempeſt, and hail-ſtones (Iſa. 30. 30.) When the power of God (called by the Prophet his Arm) cloathed with the indignation (that is, with the very ſpirits) of his anger, like a devouring fire, or a ſcattering tempeſt ſhall light down or reſt upon ſinners (in which ſenſe Damaſcus is called the reſt of the burden of the Word of the Lord, that is, of his wrath declared in that burdenſom word, Zach. 9. 1. When, I ſay, the wrath of God ſhall thus light down and reſt upon ſinners) O how reſtleſs will they be for ever!

Perpendere ſūmopere debemus, quomodo feratur illa ira quæ reprobat, ſi ferri modo vix valet ejus ira quæ purgat. Greg. l. 22. cap. ult.

But I will not ſtay any longer upon this verſion of the Text, though it be a profitable one, and ſutable enough to Job's ſcope. Our rendring is clear and proper,

By reaſon of his Highneſs, I could not endure.] The root of the Word which we tranſlate Highneſs, ſignifies to elevate, or, lift up; and it imports both Highneſs of place, and Highneſs of power and dignity, local Highneſs, and civil Highneſs. And therefore Princes are expreſſed by this Word, becauſe they are high, or perſons lifted up above the reſt of the people; by reaſon of his Highneſs (of his Princely Highneſs or Majeſty)

I could not endure.] The Hebrew is only thus, by reaſon of his Highneſs I could not, leaving us to conceive what he could not do, by reaſon of the Highneſs of God; and hence the ſupplement is variouſly made to this, I could not; and it may be queſtioned what was it that Job could not by reaſon of the Highneſs of God? Firſt, Some read, I could not withſtand or reſiſt, he would be too hard for me; Secondly, Mr. Broughton reads (which reacheth the ſame ſenſe) I could not ſtand before his Highneſs. A third makes the ſupplement thus, I could not eſcape, nor get out of his hand; his Highneſs is ſuch, that if I had done wickedly, there had been no avoiding or fleeing from his revenging hand. We make up the ſenſe with the Word Endure, By reaſon of his Highneſs I could not endure. And indeed as he could not ſtand nor withſtand, nor fly from him, ſo it is as true that being under the hand of God he could not endure his Highneſs. The power and Greatneſs, the excellency and Highneſs of God, daſheth man out of countenance, and confounds him.

Nunquam me parem exiſtimavi ad repugnādum Deum & ſuſtinendam illius impetum in me currentem. Pined.

But why could not Job endure the Highneſs of God, ſeeing the Prophet ſpeaks of thoſe who rejoyce and triumph in it (Iſa. 13. 3.) I have commanded my ſanctified ones, I have alſo called my mighty ones for mine anger, even them that rejoyce in my Highneſs.

I anſwer, The Lord in that place deſcribes thoſe Worthies to whom he had lifted up his banner (ver. 2.) and whom he had fitted for that great ſervice of his anger, the overthrow of Babylon; and therefore he terms them ſanctified ones (that is) men ſpecially prepared and ſet apart for that work, as well as mighty ones for his anger, that is, mighty to execute his anger upon Babylon; now they whom God doth call and ſpirit for any noble undertaking in the execution of his anger againſt Babyloniſh Enemies, have much cauſe to rejoyce and exult in the Highneſs of God, or that they therein ſerve the high God. But when any man inſtead of being the inſtrument, is the object of Gods anger, how can he then rejoyce in his Highneſs? Yea then he muſt ſay (as Job here did upon ſuppoſition of Gods anger againſt him) By reaſon of his Highneſs I cannot endure.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Highneſs belongs to God.

God is often in Scripture called, The high God, the moſt high God, and unto God Highneſs and power properly belong; power and Highneſs are originally and fundamentally in God; all the power and Highneſs that are in the creature, flow forth and are derived from him. As God is the fountain of all the Goodneſs, ſo of all the Greatneſs that is in man. There are high ones among men, but Highneſs is the Lords, yea the high ones are the Lords; He conſtitutes them, and he rules them at his pleaſure, and for his pleaſure. (Pſal. 135. 5.) Our God is above all Gods. There are Gods many, and Lords many, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 Cor. 8. 5.) that is, (as himſelf explains it) there are many that are called Gods. All Magiſtrates are called Gods; and God gives them leave to wear that Title, yea himſelf hath put that Title upon them; yet to us there is but one God the Father, of whom are all things, and we by him. The God of Heaven is infinitely above all the Gods of the Earth, Kings and Princes; and what is the Highneſs of Idols; or dung-hill Gods to him. when the Gods upon the Throne are nothing unto him? Our God is above all Gods: Or, As Solomon expreſſeth it (Eccl. 5. 8.) He is higher, then the higheſt. As in nature there is nothing greater then the Greateſt, ſo none higher then the Higheſt. There is no Degree beyond the ſuperlative. This maxim holds univerſally in things of the ſame kind; but there may be ſomewhat of one kind greater then the greateſt and higher then the higheſt of another kind. There is no man higher then the higheſt man; but God is infinitely higher then the higheſt of men. Yea as all the wiſdom of man is folly to the wiſdom of God, and all the ſtrength of man weakneſs to the ſtreugth of God, ſo the Highneſs of the higheſt men is lowneſs and baſeneſs to the Highneſs of God. This ſuper-ſuperlatve Highneſs of God appears,

Firſt, In the extent of his Juriſdiction. The ſoveraignty of God hath no bounds nor limits; it reacheth to all places, and to all times; men who have great power in ſome place, have none in other places: Men, who are high at one time, are low at another time; but the Lords Highneſs and power are alike at all times, and in all places. Thou Lord (ſaith the Prophet, Pſal. 92. 8.) art moſt High for evermore.

Secondly, This his Highneſs appears in the abſoluteneſs of his Juriſdiction; he governs by no Law but his will, nor acts he by any rule but his pleaſure. Our God is in the Heavens (ſaith the Church in anſwer to that feared reproach of the Heathen, Pſal. 115. 4. Where is now their God?) and hath done whatſoever he pleaſed. And thus much a Heathen Prince. The Higheſt then on earth, after ſeven years baniſhment among beaſts was convinced of (Dan. 4. 34 35.) And at the end of the dayes, I Nebuchadnezzar lift up mine eyes unto heaven. and mine underſtanding returned unto me, and I bleſſed the Moſt High, and praiſed and honored him that liveth for ever; whoſe dominion is an everlaſting dominion, and his kingdom from generation to generation; And all the inhabitants of the earth, are reputed as nothing, and he doth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can ſtay his hand, or ſay unto him, what doſt thou? Here's abſolute Highneſs or Soveraignty; God doth what he will and he cannot be ſtopt or ſtayed in what he will do: and as none can ſtay his hand from what he will do, ſo none can queſtion or call him to what an account for what he hath done. And here I might ſhew the Highneſs of God in the abſolute exerciſe of a ſixfold power; Firſt, in commanding; Secondly, in forbidding; Thirdly, in permitting; Fourthly, in rewarding; Fifthly, in puniſhing; Sixthly, in ſetting up and pulling down, what and whom and how he will. He doth all theſe things (and theſe are the flowers of his Crown) according to the pleaſure of his own will, and who may ſay unto him, what doſt thou?

Take three or four Inferences or Corollaries from the conſideration of this Highneſs of God.

Firſt, If God be ſo high, Then walk humbly before him, and keep your ſpirits low, that is, lowly. The Prophet propoſeth the peoples Queſtion (Mich. 6. 6.) Wherewith ſhall I come before the Lord, and bow my ſelf before the high God? Shall I come before him with burnt Offerings, with Calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleaſed with thouſands of Rams, or with ten thouſand Rivers of Oyl? Shall I give my firſt born for my tranſgreſſion, the fruit of my body for the ſin of my Soul? As if they had ſaid, If any of theſe things will pleaſe the Lord, the moſt high God, he ſhall have them with all our hearts; yet they would not give God their hearts, which was the thing he looked for. Thus they hankerd and beat the buſh, deſiring to put the Lord off with ſhadows and Ceremonies, with Sacrifices and Oblations. But ſtill they kept cloſe to their ſins, and their hearts were far off from him. They would be very profuſe, ſpare for no coſt, make hyperbolical offers of thouſands of Rams, and ten thouſands Rivers of Oyl, yea if God would have (which of all outward things were moſt dear and precious to them) their very Children in ſacrifice, he ſhould have them, yet in the mean time, that which was the true ſacrifice and only acceptable to God (Pſal. 51. 17.) their hearts or themſelves (Rom. 12. 1.) in a way of ſpiritual obedience, they would by no means offer unto God. And therefore to ſhew the vanity and hypocriſie of all theſe fair and formal flouriſhes; the Prophet comes plainly to the matter (ver. 8.) He (that is, God) hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do juſtly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God? As if he had ſaid, Away with theſe flattering pretenſions; you do but ſhuffle and trifle with God in all theſe things; you need not make ſo many queries about what will pleaſe God, he hath ſpoken his mind clearly; Do juſtly, and ſhew mercy, there's the all of ſecond Table duties; walk humbly with thy God, there's the ſum of firſt Table duties. Surely, to walk humbly and with a lowly mind before the high God, is the beſt of, yea all ſacrifices; a ſubmitting ſpirit is moſt ſutable in all our approaches to the ſupream power. The high God expects our ſpirits ſhould comply with what he will have us do, and with whatſoever himſelf is pleaſed to do with us. There's nothing in man ſo anſwerable to the Highneſs of God as ſubmiſſion. The Apoſtle James comprehends the whole of our duty in two things, whereof the firſt is ſubmiſſion, the ſecond is reſiſtance (James. 4. 7.) Reſiſt the Devil, and ſubmit to God. This poſture of mans ſpirit is intended in that of his body (Lam. 3. 28.) He ſitteth alone, and keepeth ſilence, becauſe he hath born it upon him; that is, he who is under the yoak of God, (He had ſaid a little before, it is good for a man to bear the yoak in his youth) ought to be quiet, he muſt not make either a ſtir or a clamour about the dealings of God with him. As it is our ſtrength to ſit ſtill in dependance upon God for his help (Iſa. 30. 7. 15.) ſo it is our wiſdom to ſit ſtill in ſubmiſſion to the hand of God. The high God looks that every high imagination, every thought exalting it ſelf whether againſt any of his ſtanding laws and ordinances, or temporary diſpenſations and providences, ſhould be brought down (2 Cor. 10. 5.) 'Tis all the reaſon in the World that the will of the high God ſhould be above our wills, that his will ſhould be uppermoſt, who himſelf is ſo.

Secondly, The Highneſs of God, ſhould lead us to give him high ſervices; we ſhould ſerve the Lord in lowlineſs of mind, but not with low minds; our minds and hearts ſhould be exceedingly lifted up in the ſervice of the high God. That was a very holy as well as a noble reſolution of Solomon about the building of the Temple (2 Chron. 2. 5.) The houſe which I build is great, for great is our God above all Gods. Solomon would proportion a houſe for God, according to the God of the houſe, he is a great God (ſaith he) and therefore he muſt have a great houſe; he is a high God (ſaith the Scripture) therefore he muſt have high ſervices, he muſt be ſerved with a heart lifted up. The heart of good King Jehoſhaphat was lifted up, or incouraged and ſtrengthened in the wayes of the Lord (2 Chron. 17. 6.) As he was ſerving the high God, ſo his heart went high in his ſervice. When we pray, our prayers ſhould be high prayers, or prayers lifted up to the high God; I lift up my ſoul to thee, ſaid David (Pſal. 25. 1.) Such was the deſire of King Hezekiah, in his Meſſage to Iſaiah the Prophet, in that day of rebuke and blaſphemy (Kings 19. 4.) Wherefore lift up a prayer for the remnant that is left. Thus alſo the praiſes of God, ſhould be high praiſes, (Pſal. 149. 6.) Let the high praiſes of God be in their mouth; yea all our thoughts and words concerning God ſhould be high (Exod. 15. 11.) We ſhould both ſay, and think, think and ſay, Who is a God like unto thee?

Thirdly, The conſideration of the Highneſs of God, ſhould make all other things low in our eyes. As he that hath low or little thoughts of God, will quickly have high and great thoughts of himſelf, yea he will think every thing great; ſo he that hath great and high thoughts of God, thinks nothing great or high but God. How little are the greateſt dangers, and the greateſt enemies, in our eyes, when once God is great there? We ſhall ſay (as Zech. 4. 6.)

Who art thou, O great Mountain before Zerubbabel (that is, the power and ſtrength of the high God in Zerubbabel?) thou ſhalt become a plain: God never makes Mountains plains for us, till he hath made Mountains plains to us, or in our eſtimation. The Apoſtle having a high eſteem of Chriſt, Accounted all things, but dung, and droſs, (Phil. 3. 8.) The reaſon why any over-rate the things of this World, why they reckon their Gold and Silver, better then Gold and Silver, and their honours better then honour, is becauſe they under-rate Chriſt, they account Chriſt leſs then Chriſt, his blood lower, then his blood is, and his ſufferings of a ſmaller value, then his ſufferings are. They make Chriſt leſs then he is, elſe they would never make the things of the world greater then they are. What a nothing is all in our ſelves to us, and all in others to us, yea all other both things and perſons to us, when we have ſeen God in Chriſt our all, or our allneſs in God through Chriſt! Did we converſe with God by faith in his Highneſs and greatneſs, what could be high or great in our eyes in compariſon of him? We commonly ſay, Nothing is high or great to a high or great ſpirit; how much more may we ſay, nothing is high or great to a ſpirit heightned and greatned in God?

Animo magno nihil magnum.

Fourthly, The remembrance of Gods Highneſs is very comfortable to all that are in a low condition, they having an intereſt in him, or being (through grace) related to him. The high God ſets the poor on high (Pſal. 107. 41.) For as another Scripture aſſures us, Though our God be high, yet he hath regard to the lowly (Pſal. 138. 6.) Here is comfort to thoſe that are low and lowly, who are low in eſtate, and lowly in ſpirit, who have the grace of lowlineſs in a condition of lowneſs; they have a friend on high, and he being higher then the higheſt, can raiſe thoſe on high, who are lower (in their own ſight) then the loweſt.

Laſtly, If the Lord be moſt high, then let us make the Lord our higheſt end, and exalt him, not only in, but above all our ſelf-aims and deſigns. The beſt way to ſet forward or attain to our own ends, is to make God our higheſt end. While we ſincerely advance the name of God, we need take no care of our own advancement; let God alone with that. But if any man ſets his own ends above God, let him know, he ſets himſelf above God too, yea he makes himſelf his God; which is at once the height of ſin, of madneſs, and of preſumption.

Again, When Job ſaith, By reaſon of his highneſs I could not endure; Conſider Job was a man in high place himſelf, Job held the height of the Hill, others were but in the valley, in thoſe times to which theſe words refer. And yet, ſaith he, By reaſon of his Highneſs I could not endure.

Hence Note; Secondly, They that are higheſt have reaſon to tremble at the Highneſs of God.

They who are Cedars for height, and Oaks for ſtrength, cannot endure by reaſon of his Highneſs, yea the Lord who is high loves to ſhake the high ones, and to caſt them down. (Iſa. 2. 11, 12.) The day of the Lord of hoſts ſhall be upon every one that is proud, and lifted up upon all the Cedars of Lebanon, &c. And at the nineteenth verſe the Prophet tells us, The high ones ſhall go into the Holes of the Rocks, and into the Caves of the Earth for fear of the Lord, and for the Glory of his Majeſty, when he ariſeth to ſhake teribly the earth. As Satan hath a ſpiteful ambition to be dealing with thoſe who are moſt eminent for grace in the Church; this Chriſt told Peter (Luke 22. 31.) Simeon, Simeon, behold, Satan hath deſired to have you, that he may ſift you as Wheat; So the Lord hath (if I may ſo ſpeak) an holy ambition to be dealing with thoſe who are moſt eminent for power in the world; I mean with thoſe, who as they are high in place, and power, ſo high in their own thoughts. The Lord hath no quarrel with thoſe that are high, becauſe they are high, but becauſe they carry themſelves proudly in their Highneſs (Exod. 18. 11.) In the thing wherein they dealt proudly, God was above them; God did not oppoſe them becauſe they were high, but becauſe they were high minded. The high Arm (with a high mind) ſhall be broken (Job 38. 15.) And hence that caution to the high ones of the Earth (Pſal. 75. 4, 5.) Lift not up your horns on high, ſpeak not with a ſtiff-neck; for promotion cometh neither from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, nor from the South; But God is the Judge, he putteth down one and ſetteth up another. This conſideration, that 'tis the high one in Heaven who makes men high or low on earth, ſhould keep their ſpirits lowly who are higheſt here on earth. To every high-minded one the Lord will ſay, as (Jer. 49. 16.) Thy terribleneſs hath deceived thee, and the pride of thy heart, O thou that dwelleſt in the clefts of the Rocks, that hideſt thee within the Holes, though thou ſhouldeſt make thy neſt as high as the Eagle, I will bring thee down from thence. The Eagle flies high and builds high, yet her neſt is not out of Gods reach; nor in the neſt of any metaphorical Eagle. How often hath God pull'd down the throne of Princes, or Princes from their thrones (Jer. 13. 18.) Say to the King, and to the Queen, humble your ſelves, ſit down for your principality ſhall come down, yea even the Crown of your glory. The Lord puts the Queſtion to the higheſt and the ſtrongeſt (Ezek. 22. 14.) Can thy heart endure, or can thy hand be ſtrong, in the day that I ſhall deal with thee? As if he had ſaid, How ſtrong and high ſoever thou art, yet when I the moſt high one ſhall deal with thee, thy ſtrength will ſtand thee in no ſtead; it will be inconſiderable, and ſhrink to nothing. That's the ground of the Apoſtle objurgation, Do ye provoke the Lord to jealouſie? Are ye ſtronger then he? (1 Cor. 10. 22.) Can you ſtand it out with him? Are ye his match? Is a Thiſtle any match for the Cedar, or a Whelp for a Lion? Much leſs, infinitely leſs is man for God. How eaſily can the Lord thunder down from his highneſs, and from his high places, upon the heads of the talleſt Anakims and mighty Nimrod's in this lower world! And if they who are high, cannot endure nor ſtand before the highneſs of the Lord, what ſhall become of them who are low; As the Apoſtle Peter argues in another caſe (1 Pet. 4. 18.) If the righteous ſcarcely be ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly and the ſinner appear? So I may in this, if the ſtrong cannot at all ſtand before him, how ſhall the weak and poor? And if the weak and poor ones preſume to ſin, and provoke the Lord, they ſhall find his highneſs as terrible to them, as to the higheſt, richeſt, and greateſt in the world.

Thirdly, From that other reading of the words, By reaſon of his Highneſs I could not eſcape.

Obſerve, As no man is able to bear the wrath of God, ſo no man is able to flee or get away from it.

And how ſad is it when a man cannot eſcape from that, which he cannot endure! If the diſpleaſure of God were ſuch as we could avoid or run from, ſuch as we could get out of the reach of it, ſinners had ſomewhat to bear themſelves upon; but as we are not able to ſtand in his hand, nor endure his hand, ſo we cannot get out of his hand. Now, as no man, no nor the Devil with all his powers of darkneſs is able to pluck a Believer out of the protecting and ſaving hand of God (John 10. 29.) ſo no man is able to deliver himſelf, nor can he be reſcued by any other, out of the puniſhing and revenging hand of God. And as there is no getting out of his hand, ſo no keeping out of it; we can neither flee nor hide our ſelves from him who is every where. 'Tis grievous, when a man falls into the hand of his conſcience, becauſe he can neither flee, nor hide himſelf from his conſcience; every man carrieth that about him, whereſoever he goeth. This (I ſay) makes a mans caſe unſpeakably miſerable, when he falls into the hands of his own conſcience. And is it not much more ſad, when a man falls into the hands of God, who can be infinitely more terrible to us then our conſciences, and who only makes our own conſciences at any time a terror to us? Remember ſinners, you can no more (no nor ſo much) get out of the hand, or clear from the hand or preſence of God, then you can from the hand or preſence of your own conſciences. Whitherſoever you go, God is with you, whether you will or no. Whither ſhall we go from his preſence? If we aſcend up into Heaven, he is there; and if we make our bed in Hell, he is there, &c. (Pſal. 139. 8.) And whereſoever we are (ſuppoſe we could be in Heaven, yet) if an angry conſcience and an angry God be with us, we make our bed in Hell, or our bed is a Hell to us. How can Creatures comfort thoſe to whom God is a terror? Woe to ſinners, who provoke that God, whoſe preſence they can neither abide nor avoid.

Thus Job hath given an account both of his integrity (in thoſe particulars opened) and likewiſe of the reaſon why he kept his integrity. Deſtruction from God was a terror to him, and by reaſon of his highneſs he could not endure. As Job would not ſin againſt God becauſe he loved him, ſo he durſt not ſin againſt God, becauſe he feared him.

He now proceeds to give a further account of himſelf, by ſhewing that as he had not gotten riches by unrighteouſneſs, ſo he had uſed and diſpenſed them righteouſly; for ſuppoſe a man hath not pulled his riches out of the mouths and bellies of the poor, nor hath wronged any man by open violence, or ſecret fraud, to advantage his own eſtate; yet he may be an unrighteous Steward, or a covetous retainer of his eſtate: His heart may go out ſinfully upon that which came in without ſin; againſt this Job proteſts in the next words.

VERS. 24, 25,

If I have made Gold my hope, or have ſaid to the fine Gold, Thou art my confidence.

If I rejoyced becauſe my wealth was great, and becauſe mine hand had gotten much.

IN the former Context Job cleared himſelf (which aſperſion had been caſt upon him by his friends more then once) from any unlawful or oppreſſing wayes of gain, He had not lift up his hand againſt the fatherleſs, though he ſaw his help in the gate. In this twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth verſe, he clears himſelf from any undue frame of ſpirit in reference to what he had gotten lawfully, or was lawfully poſſeſſed of. Now, he that can profeſs before God and men, that he hath not uſed any undue means to get riches, and that his heart is not in any undue frame towards riches duely gotten, this man is a man of men, A man after the heart of God. And this Job doth, in the words before us three wayes, Firſt, He profeſſeth that he had not made worldly things, no not the beſt of them (Gold) his hope.

Secondly, He profeſſeth that he had not made the beſt of Gold, (fine Gold) his confidence. The fineſt Gold was not the object of his truſt.

Thirdly, He profeſſeth he had not made the abundance of Gold his joy, nor the muchneſs of it the matter of his rejoycing; If I rejoyced becauſe my wealth was great, and becauſe my hand had gotten much, &c. Thus Job diſclaimeth joy, hope, and confidence in the creature, therefore as his hand was clean in the getting of it, ſo his heart was clear in the uſing of it.

Verſe 24. If I have made Gold my hope, &c.

That's the firſt thing. He doth not ſay, if I have hoped for Gold, But if I have made Gold my hope. Gold is the choiſeſt of earthly things. 'tis that refined earth which moſt men hope for, and very many covet after. And here Gold is put (by a Synecdoche of the part for the whole) for all earthly things. So that, when Job ſaith, If I have made Gold my hope, his meaning is, if I have made any good thing on Earth my hope. One of the Greek tranſlators renders; If I have made Gold my ſafety, my ſecurity; or the cauſe why I was not afraid. As if he had ſaid, I did not put fear away from me becauſe I had much Gold, or worldly goods about me. I did not think my ſelf ſafe or out of the reach of danger, becauſe I was rich. The Septuagint have an elegant and a very ſignificant rendring, though not ſo clearly complying with the original Text as ours; If I have made Gold my Wife, Or, If I have married Gold. Such is the ſpirit of a worldly man towards worldly things, that he doth not only love them, but is in love with them. As a man doth not only love her whom he would marry (ſo he doth any Friend) but he is in love with her and is reſtleſs till he enjoyeth her. Yea I may ſay, worldly men are married to worldly things, not only as to a Wife (who ſhould be in ſubjection to her husband) but as to their husband to whom they are ſubject. They may juſtly be called, Wives to riches, and riches their husband, who are at the will and command of riches. Worldly men are ſo, more then the Wife is or ought to be at the will and command of her husband. But I ſhall not ſtay upon that tranſlation, which though it depart not from the ſcope of the Text, yet from the words it doth. And therefore I ſhall follow our own which is clear to both.

Ἀφοβίαν ſecuritatem meam, i. e. cauſam cur minus pavetem. Symach.

If I have made Gold my hope.] The Word rendred hope or expectation, ſ[illegible]ifies alſo the Reins or Bowels. One of the Rabbins gives this reaſon of it, becauſe the Bowels or Reins are the ſeat of the affections, from which as our fears ſo our hopes are formed. (Pſal. 7. 9.) The righteous God trieth the hearts and Reins, that is, the whole inner man of every man, his thoughts and deſires, his hopes and aims. David begs of God to make this diſcovery of him in the ſame words (Pſal. 26. 2.) Examine me O Lord, and prove me, try my Reins, and my heart; As if he had ſaid, Lord I am willing to be tryed to the utmoſt, and that the bent and inward motions of my ſoul may appear to (from which I know they are not, cannot be hid) thine all-ſeeing eye. Nor is there any thing which lies more cloſe and ſecret in the boſome of man then his hope doth; and look what any man earneſtly hopes for, his mind is often turning to, if not alwayes fixed upon. If I (ſaith Job) have made Gold my hope; that is, if my mind hath been upon it, or in the longing expectation of it.

כסל Eſt proprie ile & כסלים ilia & renes ubi ſedes affectuũ; inde fit ut כסל pro ſpe & fiducia ſumatur. Merc.

Hope is an affection of the mind put forth or acted upon good, future and poſſible. The object of hope (according to this definition) is good under a twofold notion; hope looks to that which is good; no man ever did or can hope for that which is evil in it ſelf, and to him, if it appeared ſo to him, though many have hoped for that which indeed is ſo, and hath proved ſo to them in the event. And as the object of hope is ſome good thing; ſo it is good, Firſt, as future and to come; for that which a man hath in his poſſeſſion, or doth already injoy, he cannot hope for: Injoyment ſwallows up hope, or rather perfects it. Secondly, the object of hope is ſome poſſible good, or ſuch a good as we have grounds to attain. Impoſſibles are rather the object of deſpair then of hope. But though this be the nature of hope ſtrictly taken, that it reſpects only good future or attained and poſſible or attainable: Yet Gold already attained and poſſeſſed is as much the object of hope in the ſence of this Text, as that which is only attainable and unpoſſeſs'd. And as men hope to get Gold, ſo they make the Gold which they have gotten their hope.

There is a great difference between hoping for Gold, and making Gold our hope. We may hope for Gold or any of the good things of this life, but we muſt not make Gold or any thing of this life our hope.

To make Gold either gotten or to be gotten our hope, implyeth theſe four things.

Firſt, An high eſtimation of it, as that which can do great things for us, or ſtand us in ſtead beyond any other thing, to make us happy.

Secondly, A longing deſire after it; there is alwayes ſo much deſire of that we hope for, that the thing hoped for is ſometime expreſſed by deſire (Prov. 13. 12.) Hope deferred maketh the heart ſick, but when the deſire (that is, the thing hoped for) cometh, it is a tree of life.

Thirdly, Utmoſt earneſt endeavours to obtain it; that which a man makes his hope he will make his work, and never ceaſeth working, either till he hath attained it, or is convinced that there is no poſſibility of attaining it.

Fourthly, To make Gold our hope, implyeth much trouble and anxiety of mind, when once we ſee our endeavours ineffectual and unſucceſsful about the attaining of it. If hope deferred (as Solomon ſpeaks in the Scripture laſt named) maketh the heart ſick, ſurely then when hope dies, or (as Zophar ſpeaks, Chap. 11. 20.) is as the giving up of the Ghoſt, the heart muſt needs dye too.

Now, when Job ſaith, If I have made Gold my hope, &c. He utterly diſclaims, as any ſuch eſtimation of it, that it could do great things for him, or make him a happy man, ſo that he had any longing deſire after it, or that he uſed any extream earneſtneſs of endeavours to attain it, or that he was vext and troubled in mind when by his moderate endeavours he could not attain it. Job underſtood well enough the worth and uſe of Gold, he well knew how many advantages it brings, yea how potent it is in the affairs of Sates and Kingdoms as well as beneficial to private families; yet he knew he ſhould have made more of it, then it is worth, or can be worthy of, if he had made it his hope, and therefore he profeſſeth; If I have made Gold my hope, &c.

He would live to grow rich, an[illegible]de himſelf with thick clay. What this godly man profeſſeth he did not, that a natural man doth, and [illegible] his nature to do it. He that is of the earth is earthly, and ſpeaketh of the earth (John 3. 13.) For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh. The words of a man are the image of his thoughts; that the thoughts of natural men are earthly, or ſmell of the earth, we learn from another Scripture (Pſal. 49. 11.) Their inward thought is that their houſes ſhall continue for ever, and their dwelling places to all generations, &c. And what are their houſes but heaps of earth, and the beſt furniture of them, Gold and Silver but refined earth? The Apoſtle (1 Tim. 6. 9.) gives the ſame character of the natural man; he will be rich; That's his reſolve, and the bent of his ſpirit, that he lives to and lives for. What he hath is little or nothing to him, unleſs he hath more; and that more ſatisfieth him no more when he hath it, then the little did which he had before. Believers have another bent, We, ſaith the Apoſtle (2 Cor. 4. 18.) look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen, that is, not at naturals and temporals, but at ſpirituals and eternals; theſe, not thoſe are our aym or the mark (ſo the word ſignifies) at which we ſhoot and level all our deſires and indeavours. But worldly men (who are the oppoſites to we in the Text) they look at the things which are ſeen, and they look chiefly at them; as for the things that are not ſeen, they know not what to make of them. Godly men have their eye upon inviſibles, they expect not their happineſs in this world, but in that which is to come (1 Cor. 15. 19.) If in this life only we have hope in Chriſt, we are of all men moſt miſerable. How miſerable then are they who make the things of this life their hope! Who look for nothing but what the eye of ſenſe or carnal reaſon may look upon? How many are there, who if they may have Gold and Silver enough, Houſes and Lands enough, then they think they ſhall have enough. Though indeed when they have as much as they at preſent deſire, the mouth of deſire is not ſtopt, nor do their hearts ſay, it is enough.

Secondly, Note, To make Gold our hope is exceeding ſinful.

As every man who hath in him a real hope of glory, purifieth himſelf from ſinful acts and deſires (1 John 3. 3.) ſo he purifieth himſelf from this hope. The hope which we have of heavenly things is pure and it purifieth us; but the hope of earthly things is uſually impure, and to make earthly things our hope cannot but be impure, therefore we have great need to purifie our ſelves from all ſuch hopes. God only is to be made our hope, and to make him ſo is both our duty and our intereſt. Hope is a part of that honour and worſhip which is proper to God; and 'tis worſhip required in the firſt Commandement; hope in God is natural worſhip, that worſhip which the bare diſcoveries of God, though he had never made a law about it calls for. The knowledge of the excellency and all-ſufficiency of God commands us to hope in him. And to ſhew how much God ſhould be hoped for and hoped in, yea and made our hope, the Scripture more then once calls him our hope (Jer. 14. 8.) O the hope of Iſrael, the Saviour thereof in time of trouble. And as God is the hope of Iſrael, taken collectively for all the people of God, ſo he is the hope of every Iſraelite indeed. Upon this ground the Prophet makes that deprecation (Jer. 17. 17.) Be not thou a teror unto me, thou art my hope in the day of evil. And therefore David inhibits his ſoul all other hopes but God (Pſal. 62. 5.) My ſoul wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from him. As if he had ſaid O my ſoul, I give thee this counſel, yea this charge, I lay this holy command upon thee, do not wait upon any Creature (as making that thy hope) let thy expectation be from God alone. He urgeth the ſame reſtriction by way of aſſertion in the next verſe; He only is my Rock and my ſalvation. As this Scripture ſhews the entireneſs of a Saints hope in God; ſo that other is like unto it (Pſal. 73. 25.) Whom have I in Heaven but thee? And there is none upon earth that I deſire beſides thee. As if he had ſaid, I neither know of nor depend upon the help of any but God alone; and what he denies as to perſons he denyeth alſo as to things on this ſide God. Hope is the anchor of the ſoul, but this anchor muſt not be caſt as the Mariner caſteth his; who that his Ship may be ſtayed in a Storm caſts his anchor downward to take hold in the earth: We muſt caſt the anchor of hope upwards and faſten it in Heaven. So the Apoſtle directs (Heb. 6. 19.) which hope we have as an anchor of the ſoul, both ſure and ſtedfaſt, and which entreth into that within the Vail, whither the fore-runner is for us entred, even Jeſus, &c. Our hope muſt enter into Heaven and fix there. The beſt of the earth is not ground good enough, nor ſure enough for our anchor hold. Whatſoever we make our hope, we make our God and is there any thing on earth good enough to be our God? Moſes complains to God bitterly of the people of Iſrael (Exod. 32. 31.) O this people have ſinned a great ſin, and have made them Gods of Gold. They indeed formally made a Golden Calf and worſhipped it; this act of Idolatry was their ſin, and their ſmart; in ſo much that it was a ſaying among the Jews when ever they were preſſed with any grievous affliction; This is ſomewhat of the Golden Calf. That which was their ſin groſly, is in a more ſpiritually ſinful way the ſin of thouſands every day, They make Gods of Gold, or a God of Gold. This is done as often as any man makes Gold his hope; and this the worldly man doth dayly, or all his dayes. Yea ſo far as any godly man is carried out inordinately after Gold, he in ſome degree makes Gold his hope, and in the ſame degree his God. It is ſinful to hope for Gold immoderately, but to make Gold our hope in the leaſt degree is abominable. And they who make it their hope, will quickly make it their confidence, which is a further height of this ſin, renounced expreſly by Job in the next words.

Or have ſaid to the fine Gold, Thou art my confidence.

But is Gold to be ſpoken with or ſpoken to? it ſeems the heart hath a tongue, it ſpeaks to Gold. As the Fool hath ſaid in his heart there is no God (Pſal. 14. 1.) So in his heart he ſaith, Gold is his God, while he ſaith in his heart it is his confidence. Moſt worldly men ſay this in their heart only (there are but few ſo wicked as openly to profeſs with their mouths that Gold is their confidence) Yea many who profeſs highly that God is their confidence, will be found upon ſearch to make Gold their confidence.

If I (ſaith Job) have ſaid (with heart or tongue) To the fine Gold, &c. As Gold is the fineſt metal, ſo there is ſome Gold more fine then other Gold. Some Gold is nothing but Gold, it hath not the leaſt droſs or alloy in it. Gold is uſually minted out with an alloy. Job had no confidence in fine, none in the fineſt Gold. The Septuagint render, If I have truſted in the precious ſtone. As if in the former part of the verſe he had diſclaimed his hope in gold, and here in gems. But it is better to keep to our tranſlation. The Word ſignifying Gold of the higheſt price; from this word we have that Title of ſome of the Pſalms, Michtam, a Golden Pſalm. If I have ſaid to the fine Gold, Thou art κ̀ λίθῳ πολυτελεῖ ἐπεποίθησα. Si in lapide pretioſo fidebam.

My confidence.] Confidence is the higheſt act of faith; what we confide in we ſettle upon. Confidence is the fulleſt reſt of the ſoul. An act of recumbence gives ſome reſt to the ſoul, but confidence is the ſecureſt reſt of the Soul. So much the Word here implies, even ſuch a confidence as leaves not ſo much as a jealous thought in the mind. Thus David confeſſeth (Pſal. 30. 6.) In my proſperity I ſaid I ſhall never be moved, Lord by thy favour thou haſt made my Mountain to ſtand ſtrong. The rich man was riſen up to this confidence while he ſaid (Luke 12. 19.) Soul thou haſt much goods laid up for many years, take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry. Then we have made Gold or the things of the World our confidence, when we find an acquieſcence flowing from our recumbence upon them. What is faith but a going out of ſelf and a reſting upon Chriſt? And what is aſſurance but the ſouls reſt in Chriſt? The heart of a carnal man ſits down and reſts upon worldly things, as a godly man ſits down upon and reſts in Chriſt.

Again, While Job profeſſeth he had not ſaid to the fine Gold, Thou art my confidence, He is brought in perſonating the counterpart of a carnal covetous man, entertaining ing diſcourſe or talking to his Gold. He no ſooner enters his Cloſet and openeth his Cheſt, but he falls into a Colloquy with his gold. As a man meeting a dear ancient acquaintance, preſently ſalutes him, with O my friend, I am glad to ſee you! So ſaith he to his gold, to his fine gold; O my friend, my love, my joy, my hope, my confidence, I am glad to ſee you ſafe, you will ſtand by me when all friends fail, you will not ſee me want, nor ſuffer me to be wronged, as long as you laſt, and that I wiſh may be for ever. Yea he ſpeaks to his gold not only with a kind of blandiment and adulation, as his choiceſt friend, but with a kind of Adoration as his chiefeſt good. We commonly ſay, A penny in our purſe is better than a friend at Court. But ſome are apt to think the Gold in their purſe better to them than the God of Heaven. Doubtleſs that man doth ſo, who ſaith (which Job did not) to the fine gold, Thou art my confidence.

Verba illa, ſi obryzo dixi fiducia mea blandimentum quoddam præ ſe ferunt & quandam velut adorationem auri, quam ægre fert deus. Merl.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Man is apt to grow in confidence upon the account of worldly abundance.

Thus the Scripture every where deciphers the ſpirit of worldly men (Pſal. 49. 6.) They truſt in their wealth, and boaſt themſelves in the multitude of their riches. Here we have the rich man truſting and boaſting, ſurely that is very confident truſting, which iſſues it ſelf into boaſting. That man is aſcended to the higheſt ſtep of faith in God, who makes his boaſt of God; ſuch faith have they in fine Gold, who boaſt in it. David having ſhewed the wicked man, by the righteous judgment of God, rooted out of the land of the living; ſhews us in the next verſe the righteous man at once fearing and laughing at this ſight, as alſo pointing at him, ſaying, (Pſal. 52. 7.) Loe this is the man that made not God his ſtrength; The words are a divine but cutting ſarcaſm. The Original is Geber, which ſignifieth a ſtrong valiant man; As we ſay in Engliſh, Loe, This is the brave and gallant man, you wot of. But who was this for a man? He was one (ſaith he) that truſted in the abundance of his riches. O 'tis hard to abound in riches, and not to truſt in them. Hence that caution (Pſal. 62. 10.) If riches increaſe, ſet not your heart upon them. Now what is the ſetting of the heart upon riches, but our rejoycing and truſting in them. And becauſe the heart of man is ſo eaſily perſwaded into this ſinful truſt upon riches, therefore the Apoſtle is urgent with Timothy to perſwade all rich men, not only meer worldly rich men, but godly rich men againſt it; yea he urgeth Timothy to perſwade rich men againſt two ſins, which are worſe than all the poverty in the world, yet the uſual attendants of riches, Pride and Confidence (1 Tim. 6. 17.) Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded. As chaſtity or the purity both of mind and body is indangered among the pleaſures and delights of the world: ſo is humility among the wealth and riches of the world. Therefore charge them that are rich, and charge them home with this thing, that They be not high-minded. How apt are men to be lifted up with the things of this lower world! Riches at once ſink the mind down-ward in covetous cares, and lift it upward in proud conceits. A little of the world will make ſome men great in their own eyes; and others deſpicable in their eyes; They will not look upon or ſpeak to a poor man, ſcarcely to any man that is not as rich as themſelves; They carry it as if they were men of another world, or made of another mould, if they have got but a ſtep in worldly things beyond their neighbours. Yea ſome, who are counted the only wiſe men; pride themſelves (like that fooliſh bird) while they look upon their painted feathers, and think they are of more worth, becauſe they are worth more than their brethren. Many (ſaith Mr. Calvin) who boaſt now a dayes of riches, are as if a man ſhould think himſelf greatly preferred, when he is but mounted upon the blade of an onion, and when they have only got upon a mole-hil, they bear themſelves as if they were carried in the Chariot of the Sun. To ſee a man rich in purſe and poor in ſpirit is a great wonder. Now becauſe men are thus endangered to pride by riches, Therefore (ſaith the Apoſtle) Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded. And charge them ſecondly, That they truſt not in uncertain riches, but in the living God. There's the rich man's temptation. Riches are a temptation two wayes eſpecially; Firſt, they tempt men to do unrighteous things, or to go unrighteous wayes for the getting of them. Secondly, they tempt to vain confidence as ſoon as they are gotten. Let me give you three brief demonſtrations, to ſhew there is an extream tendency in riches to work up the heart to a confidence in them.

Firſt, Riches, gold and ſilver have a ſtrength in them; This tends and invites to a confidence in them; And though the ſtrength of riches is greater in opinion than in reality, yet it cannot be denied, but there is a great deal of ſtrength in riches. (Prov. 10. 15.) The rich mans wealth is his ſtrong City, the deſtruction of the poor is their poverty. The rich man ſecureth himſelf againſt all aſſaults; and doubts not but he ſhall endure the hardeſt and longeſt ſiege in this well-fortified and well-garriſon'd City, and therefore like a man gotten into a ſtrong Hold or City, he is apt to ſcorn and bid defyance to all his enemies, to all wants and dangers. Whereas the poor mans poverty is his deſtruction; that is, he being poor lyes open like a City without walls and gates to every approaching and invading evil. Now if riches be, eſpecially if men judg them to be their ſtrength and fortification, their ſafety and protection, no marvail if they put confidence in them.

Secondly, As they have a ſtrength in them, ſo an anſwerableneſs to, yea a command upon all outward good things. Solomon ſaith (Eccl. 10. 19.) Money anſwereth all things. There is (as ſome conceive) an elegant Proſopopœia in the words; ſuppoſing ſpeech in all things, or all things ſpeaking and calling aloud to money, and money ſpeaking, yea giving a ſatisfactory anſwer to all things that ſpeak to it; nor can it be denied but that money (in ſome ſence) gives anſwer to all things. Firſt, ordinarily and honeſtly it anſwereth all our bodily wants, and obtaineth all bodily ſupplies. A man may have any ſuch thing for money, that will buy whatever is needful for or contentful to this preſent life. Secondly, Money will procure aſſiſtance or the help of any man's labour and pains, of any man's art or skill. Thirdly, Money will buy our peace and pacifie the wrath of man. Jacob ſaid (Gen. 32. 20.) I will pacifie him with the preſent that goeth before. And ſo Solomon tells us, (Prov. 21. 14.) A gift in ſecret pacifieth anger, and a reward in the boſom, ſtrong wrath. The paſſions of men are charm'd with gold and ſilver. And there are few ſo angry with the perſon of a man, as to be angry with his gift; eſpecially if it be given (as the text ſaith) in ſecret, and tell no tales. If you can put a reward cloſely into the boſom, it will be too ſtrong for ſtrong wrath and drive it out of the boſom. Money makes all friends again. Not a word more with many, when once that hath ſpoken and done its errand. Fourthly, if men will uſe their gold and ſilver diſhoneſtly, they can break the golden bars of Juſtice and Righteouſneſs (Prov. 17. 23.) A wicked man taketh a gift out of the boſom to pervert the ways of Judgment. Gold and Silver pervert many things, eſpecially matters of right, and often obtain a covering for the greateſt acts of unrighteouſneſs. Money hath a great power with thoſe who are in power. Thoſe powers which we ought to be ſubject to, are too ſubject themſelves to the power of it. Fifthly, a golden key will open any priſon door, and caſt the watch-man into a deep ſleep. Gold will break open gates of iron, as well as ſilence the Orator's tongue, and blind the Judge's eye; it will bind the ſtrong man's hands, and blunt the edg of the ſword; it makes war, and makes peace; what almoſt can it not do with corrupt minds? Is it then any wonder that a meer natural man ſhould ſay to the fine gold, Thou art my confidence?

Aurum præſtat plurima quæ hominum admiratur ſtupor & appetit immoderata cupiditas. Maxime tamen valet in Judiciis, ubi venalia ſunt omnia & perquam raro pecunioſus homo inventus eſt nocens. Sanct.

Thirdly, Gold is the worldly man's Idol god. The Apoſtle (Eph. 5. 5. Col. 3. 5.) calls Covetouſneſs Idolatry, and the covetous man an Idolater, therefore Gold muſt needs be his Idol, and riches his Deity. As among the Heathens, ſo among ſome Chriſtians, in name, money hath devotions paid it as to a goddeſs. And if there be this wickedneſs and madneſs in the hearts of men to eſteem riches as their god, no marvail if they put their truſt in them. 'Tis natural for every man to truſt in that, which he accounts his god, whatſoever it is; Though but a leek or an onion, the old Egyptians would confide in it; Though but a dunghil-god, or a devil god, though a new god, a god but of yeſterday, as Moſes ſpeaks (Deut. 32. 17.) yet degenerate Iſraelites will ſacrifice to him. Therefore let me add theſe three words of advice.

Firſt, When God gives you riches, gold and ſilver, ſuſpect what your hearts may do with them. It is good to fear alwayes, eſpecially, when we have what we moſt deſire. To be jealous over our own ſouls is one of the beſt means of ſafety.

Secondly, When you have gold in your hand, pray that it may not get into your heart, but be kept under your feet, as the Church is deſcribed (Rev. 12. 1.) having the Moon (that is, all worldly things) there. How much ſoever you have of the world it cannot hurt you while you keep it under your feet; but if the leaſt of it get up into your hearts, it will undo you.

Thirdly, Pray for a right judgment above riches. We ſeldom err in our affections, till we err in underſtanding; and we cannot but over-love that which we over-value. They only truſt in God, who truly know him (Pſal. 9.10.) and they who truly know what Gold is, will never either make it their truſt, or truſt in it.

Again, Why doth Job diſclaim this confidence? Surely, becauſe ſuch confidence is as vain as it is ſinful.

Hence note, It is a very vanity to put confidence in riches, in Gold or fine Gold.

For, firſt, riches cannot make us either better or wiſer. Solomon ſaith indeed (Prov. 14.24.) The crown of the wiſe is their riches. But riches never crowned any man with wiſdom; riches are a crown to the wiſe, becauſe they as Kings rule over them and command them; They command them at their pleaſure, and uſe them for their honour. Wiſdom makes riches a crown; but riches cannot make a man wiſe. Wiſdom guides a godly man to the true uſe and improvement of riches, and ſo they adorn him and make him very uſeful. But (as it follows in that text of the Proverbs) the fooliſhneſs of fools is folly, that is, let a fool have never ſo much riches, he will diſcover his folly and ſhew himſelf by ſo much the more fooliſh, by how much the richer he is. Riches in the hand of a fool are but (as we ſay) a Fool's-Bauble, with which he makes himſelf a little ſport; or they are there, like a ſword in the hand of a Mad-man, by which he doth both himſelf and others hurt. Wiſdom is good with an inheritance (Eccl. 7. 11.) that is, an inheritance enables a wiſe man to do good, and to ſhew that he is good; But an inheritance is bad with folly, that is, it doth but enable a fooliſh man to do miſchief, and publiſh his own folly; which though it had not been leſs had he been poor, yet it had been leſs known and ſeen.
